MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

THURSDAY, October 17, 1968

(1)

The Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts met this day at 10.40 a.m. for organization purposes.

Members present: Messrs. Anderson, De Bané, Fairweather, Gervais, Guibault, Hymmen, Matte, McCleave, McGrath, Mongrain, Osler, Reid, Rose, Schumacher, Stanbury, Stewart (Cochrane)—(16).

The Clerk attending, and having called for nominations, Mr. Gervais moved, seconded by Mr. McCleave, that Mr. Reid be Chairman of the Committee.

There being no other nominations, the Clerk declared Mr. Reid elected Chairman and invited him to take the Chair.

Mr. Reid thanked the Committee for the honour conferred on him.

On motion of Mr. Anderson, seconded by Mr. De Bané, Mr. Mongrain was elected as Vice-Chairman.

On motion of Mr. Rose, seconded by Mr. De Bané,

Resolved,—That the Sub-Committee on Agenda and Procedure be comprised of the Chairman, the Vice-Chairman and three other members appointed by the Chairman after the usual consultation with the Whips of the different parties.

Mr. De Bané proposed that both the English and French proceedings of this Committee be printed in one bilingual issue.

After discussion, on motion of Mr. Rose, seconded by Mr. Anderson, it was agreed to refer this matter to the Sub-Committee on Agenda and Procedure who would report back to the Main Committee at its next sitting.

On motion of Mr. McCleave, seconded by Mr. Stanbury,

Resolved,—That the Committee print 750 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence relating to the Estimates of the Department of Secretary of State.

On motion of Mr. Anderson, seconded by Mr. De Bané,

Resolved,—That the estimates of the Secretary of State be printed as an Appendix to the proceedings of the Committee (See Appendix A).

The Committee discussed future business and offered suggestions for consideration by the Sub-Committee on Agenda and Procedure.

At 11.00 a.m., the Committee adjourned to the Call of the Chair.

M. Slack,
Clerk of the Committee.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

The Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films, and Assistance to the Arts met this day at 11:25 a.m. The Vice-Chairman, Mr. J. A. Mongrain, presided.

Members present: Messrs. Dinsdale, Gervais, La Salle, Matte, Mongrain, Osler, Rose, Schreyer, Schumacher, Stafford, Stewart (Cochrane) (11).

In attendance: From the Canada Council: Messrs. Jean Martineau, Q.C., Chairman; Jean Boucher, Director; Peter M. Dwyer, Associate Director, André Fortier, Assistant Director and Treasurer; Frank A. Milligan, Assistant Director.

The Vice-Chairman read the First Report of the Sub-Committee on Agenda and Procedure as follows:

Your Sub-Committee recommends that the Committee seek permission to print its Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence in parallel columns of English and French.

On motion of Mr. Osler, seconded by Mr. Gervais,

Resolved,—That the First Report of the Sub-Committee on Agenda and Procedure be now concurred in.

Copies of the schedule of witnesses for the next two weeks were distributed to members of the Committee.

The Committee proceeded to the consideration of the estimate for Canada Council and the Vice-Chairman called Vote 25, Grant to the Canada Council, within the meaning of section 20 of the Canada Council Act, to be used for the general purposes set out in section 8 of the Act.

The Vice-Chairman called Mr. Martineau, who after introducing his colleagues, made an opening statement.

Mr. Boucher made a statement relating to the budget of the Canada Council.

Messrs. Martineau, Boucher, Dwyer and Fortier were examined on various aspects of the Canada Council and supplied additional information thereon.

The examination of the witnesses being concluded, approval of Vote 25 was deferred until the next sitting as the quorum had dispersed.

At 1:20 p.m., the Committee adjourned until 11:00 a.m., on Thursday, October 24.

M. Slack,
Clerk of the Committee.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Tuesday October 22, 1968.

● 1123

The Vice-Chairman: Gentlemen, now we have a quorum and I will open the meeting.

It is my pleasure to introduce to you, gentlemen, the members of the Canada Council who are here as our witnesses this morning. I will ask Mr. Martineau to introduce his colleagues in a few minutes.

Mr. Reid is absent today. He is representing the Minister somewhere and he has asked me to take his place.

Your Steering Committee had a meeting the other day and I have been asked to give you the first report of the Committee on Agenda and Procedure, which reads: (See Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence).

I ask for a formal motion to approve this report.

● 1125

Mr. Osler: I so move.

Mr. Gervais: I second the motion.

Motion agreed to.

The Vice-Chairman: As I told you a few minutes ago, today we are considering with the present delegation the estimates of the Canada Council.

I have another announcement. Your Steering Committee has prepared an agenda. On Tuesday, October 22, today, the Canada Council will be our witnesses. On Thursday, October 24, we will have the National Arts Centre. On Tuesday, October 29, and Thursday, October 31, we will have the Minister, Mr. Pelletier. I think you have a copy of this agenda as well as some literature which has been distributed to you on the Canada Council.

I will now call on Mr. Martineau to please introduce his colleagues to this Committee and then make a general statement.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Jean Martineau (Chairman of the Canada Council): Mr. Chairman, Gentlemen, we are very happy of this opportunity to meet with you and to explain to you in as much detail as you wish the extremely interesting work we are performing, interesting but difficult. But before doing so, may I introduce my colleagues...

[English]

To my right is Mr. Boucher, the director. Then Mr. Peter Dwyer, the associate director. Then the assistant director, Mr. Milligan, and Mr. Fortier, who is the assistant director and treasurer.

It may be difficult to tell you exactly what the Council does. It seems that at times there are misunderstandings as to its function. This is why we always look forward to meeting all of you and trying to explain as best we can—and I think we can do it quite well—the way we proceed, what we do and the aim we try to attain.

We missed the annual meeting last year, for reasons which you may be able to guess, but before that we attended every year and I think the meetings were most satisfactory on both sides. One reads this or that in the newspaper but one does not really know how the thing is done, and this is what we would like you to find out today.

May I ask the director, who knows more about these figures than I do because he spends his life with the Council, to tell you in a few words about our system.

The Vice-Chairman: Go ahead, please.

Mr. Jean Boucher (Director, The Canada Council): Mr. Chairman, I thought it would be helpful for you if we quickly situated the amount of the present vote—the $20,600,000 which is requested from the House—in the total financial picture of the Council, because the Council by no means uses only that amount. If I may just briefly take you back to what has happened over the past two or three years.

First of all, perhaps I should tell you that the Council has two major financial operations. One is being wound up at the moment and it was a program of capital grants to universities. This was a separate account in the Council and this program is being completed in these years. Actually, all the decisions have been taken in the Council and it is mostly now a question of making final payments.

Apart from this program, which was to subsidize the physical development of Canadian universities, and this was started 12 years ago, also when the Council was established a $50 million endowment fund was given to the Council to foster the growth of the arts on the one hand and the humanities and the social sciences on the other hand. What the Council does for the humanities and social sciences is expected to be roughly what the National Research Council and the Medical Research Council do for the physical and the medical sciences. So we are, if you like, the parallel organization to the NRC and the MRC for the social sciences and the humanities but we are something very different when it comes to the arts because we are by ourselves in this field.

For something like eight years the Council lived on the yield of the $50 million endowment fund. That takes us to something like three or four years ago when, after representations were made to the government on the ground that the Council could not be expected to sustain growth if it had to live with a fixed income, the government eventually recommended a first parliamentary vote to the House and $10 million was voted, of which both capital and interest could be used. So, in 1965-66 our budget went up. We started by using one third of that amount in the first year and in the second year we went to the government and asked them whether they would be prepared in the following year to recommend a second parliamentary vote on the understanding that in that year we would use up the remaining two thirds of the $10 million, which we did.

So, in 1964-65 we were spending something like $3.5 million; in 1965-66 we were spending almost $7 million; in 1966-67 we were then spending $10.8 million, or roughly this amount, and last year we received from parliament a $17 million vote for that single year.

This obviously means that throughout that period the Council has developed a quite different kind of approach to its constituency, and the government and parliament have been prepared to take the Council to the level of financial capacity where it could start supporting, let us say, the social sciences and the humanities somewhat on the same level as is being done for the physical and the biological sciences. This was very largely the argument behind this. So that gradually the part of the Canada Council budget which is devoted to aid to research in the social sciences and humanities has grown to take a more important share of the Council's budget. Four years ago the money was almost equally divided between the arts and research. It is now more like two thirds for research and one third for the arts. When we were discussing these things with the government, we had made a forecast of what we thought we would need, what we thought we could use, what we thought the government could recommend for us.

It was, of course, a mixed forecast because it was not just straight requirements, and we asked for 17 million for last year, and at that time we suggested that $21 million could be requested this year.

Last year the government agreed to recommend this $21 million which is now in the estimate book minus the 2 per cent, I think, which at the last minute was deleted from all votes.

On the other hand, it is a fact that this year the National Research Council and the Medical Research Council will have amounts recommended for them in the House which represent not a 20 per cent increase, as is the case for us, but more like a 33½ per cent increase, so that we are falling slightly behind in this respect because of the prior understanding the government had of our requirements.

So this year in the light of that we decided to pace our expenditures last year, and we decided to withhold an amount of $1.25 million which we shifted to this year. So actually this year, if we secure the $20.6 million from the House, we have on top of that our usual yield from the endowment fund, which is now around $4 million a year.

We will have the amount of money that we saved from last year in order to level the decrease in our growth, and we also have additional programs which are financed separately. For example, we run a program of cultural exchanges with countries abroad for the Department of External Affairs; we have a very substantial program now that is financed by the Killam Foundation, which has provided us with an endowment bequest of some $17 million which will eventually yield an additional $1 million a year for subsidies to research. Roughly our budget with the $20.6 million vote would be more of the order of $28 million, so what the House is asked to vote, is a portion of the money that the Council will require this year.

This $28 million could be compared, if you like, with the some $88 million that will be provided, possibly, by the House for research in the physical and biological sciences plus the fact that apart from research aid, we also have to look after the growth in the performing and creative arts.

I do not know that it would be useful to go much further than that, but we would be only too glad to have questions.

The Vice-Chairman: Are there any questions for these gentlemen? Mr. Stewart?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Boucher, I think perhaps members of the Committee would find it helpful if you could give us some idea of how you go about making a grant. If a group of singers or an orchestra comes to you, what do they have to go through, and so on, in order to get a grant, and how you would consider giving them such a grant?

Mr. Boucher: We have, of course, two major divisions in the Council and each has its adjudication system. You are referring to applications in the field of the arts, and I think perhaps Mr. Dwyer could best explain the system.

Mr. Peter M. Dwyer (Associate Director, Canada Council): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The first requirement from the Council when it receives a request from an organization is a financial statement showing the general level of its operations over the previous two or three years, together with a statement and an outline of the work that it is doing and what it hopes to do, and a budget for the period for which the grant is requested.

When that is received, it is looked at by the officers of the Council and sent to a number of consultants, usually three consultants in the case of a new organization, who are experts in the particular field with which the organization is dealing. This inquiry is designed primarily to establish the standard and the level of the operation. When we have the reports from the advisers, we then examine the budget as carefully as we can and determine, from the funds available to us how much the organization would need to carry out its plans. Then a recommendation goes forward to the Council which considers this and makes the final decision.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Now specifically, Mr. Dwyer, do you wait for people to apply in all cases, or do you ever look at an area—for example, a culturally sterile area—and say, “Well, we should perhaps give some cultural aid in that particular part of the country”. Do you ever consider that at all?

Mr. Dwyer: Normally the grants that we make are made in response to requests that we receive, as you suggest. The Council does look at the country as a whole and say, perhaps not on a geographical basis but on an artistic basis, “There is a bad weakness in this particular area,” and it may, therefore, launch a project of its own or use an existing organization to do things that nobody else seems to be doing and for which there seems to be a real requirement.

We are conscious of what one might call the areas in the country that are deprived, and we will frequently make grants in those areas to something that appears to have some life in a way which, perhaps, we would not do in the areas where the arts are more virile.

• 1140

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): For example, if “Jeunesses Musicales” is starting up in a small area of Northern Ontario under great financial difficulty, would you consider that as a special thing to help out, or would you say, we helped the “Jeunesses Musicales” in general and therefore we would not consider a smaller arm of it?

Mr. Dwyer: In cases like that and in the case, for instance, of the Dominion Drama Festival which bears perhaps some slight comparison to it, we make very substantial grants indeed on the basis of the requirement of the headquarters of the “Jeunesses Musicales” and this means, in fact, that the four concerts that are sent out on circuit to most of the "Jeunesses Musicales" clubs are offered to the clubs at a cost which, of course, could not possibly be done without our grant.

Therefore, since we are giving all that we can to the head organization, we do not, in fact give grants to the regional clubs.

Mr. Stewart (Cohrane): I see. Naturally when we read the sensational stories in the papers that have something to do with the Canada Council, these are things that are perhaps on our minds when you come before us and I would like to ask, Mr. Boucher, about our separatist friend in France who was studying on a grant from the Canada Council. I would like to know what he went there to do and what is your feeling regarding the political opinions of such people?

Mr. Boucher: You are referring to Mr. Dorlot, I presume.

Mr. Stewart (Cohrane): Yes.

Mr. Boucher: I have to say that Mr. Dorlot applied in a competition for doctoral fellowships that are open to all Canadians who are pursuing studies leading to a Ph.D. in the social sciences and humanities. He was one of some 2,500 applicants, I believe. His application was supported by two or three—I remember two—Canadian historians of outstanding repute who certainly are not generally identified with the separatist movement; if anything, the reverse.

His proposal was to go and study in France. He was accepted as a student by one of the better known French historians who is particularly conversant with Canadian history. The subject of his thesis was a study of the reality of financial encouragement that came from France to develop commercial traffic between the Channel ports and the St. Lawrence in those days, the 17th Century.

This, as a topic, is not likely to lead to a demonstration of the soundness of the separatist thesis. There was nothing in that application that would make anyone suspicious that there was any faking in this application. The student was regarded as particularly competent from his academic record. Actually, he was rated in the top 25 per cent of those who received awards and there was no problem whatsoever about his being recommended for an award. So, he indeed received an award and this was made last spring. Of course, there was no reason at that time why anyone in the Canada Council should have taken notice of something which was not known to any of us.

The question then is, having made an award to a person like that, on what grounds should the Canada Council withdraw it? The only thing that we know at the moment is that it has been said in the papers that Mr. Dorlot may have separatist leanings because at one stage he worked with René Lévesque and he worked part time for the B and B Commission. That is all we have; it is from reading the papers we know that. The question then is should the Canada Council start an investigation to find out whether indeed it is faced with an applicant who could be regarded as being engaged not only in separatist activities, or having separatist preferences, but is engaged in some criminal activity. If we instituted any system which would presume to bring this out, I think that we would have to establish a complete system of investigation of the political leanings of all applicants. This is not regarded as a proper factor in the adjudication.

This does not leave out the fact that if we were faced with an award which was obviously used to subsidize political activities, whether they were acceptable or not acceptable to the general public, we of course would have to withdraw the award because this would not be the purpose of the award. But at the moment I do not know that we are equipped for or expected to set up a system which would resolve the problem in this instance, which remains simply a matter of doubt.

Mr. Martineau: May I add one word, Mr. Chairman, to what Mr. Boucher said? On that question we depend very largely on the three or four people who make the recommendation, people who are known to us as being actually reliable. So, when they say so and so is a great student, he is all right, he has every quality, he can do his work well, we then send his name to the judges of the competition and they take the applications and look at them and then they write out all the applicant's names, and if one man comes within the number of grants that we make, then he gets it.

Mr. Stewart (Cohrane): I appreciate that, but if he happened to be someone who was a known separatist, this would then be a different story, would it not?

Mr. Boucher: What do you mean by a known separatist?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Someone who is obviously working against the unity of Canada, such as René Lévesque.

Mr. Boucher: Yes. If he asks for support from the Canada Council to pursue that very activity he would not get it.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Not necessarily to pursue that activity, for any reason, even to go and study music.

Mr. Boucher: I think on this ground you are asking a hypothetical question.

Mr. Martineau: Then let us face it.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): It is not as hypothetical as all that, because two years ago we had a fellow who received through the Centennial Commission a grant to write a book who was a known communist. So, it is not all that hypothetical.

Mr. Boucher: I do not mean by that that it cannot happen, but you are not referring now to Mr. Dorlot.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): No, no, no.

Mr. Boucher: I would say that in all likelihood the application would be first judged on its professional merit, and the question of whether the award would be withheld on the sole ground that there might be some political implications is one problem that the Canada Council has not really considered up to now.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I understand that you would not have the staff to be able to do that either.

Mr. Boucher: Certainly not.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): You would have to have some kind of an investigation, and so on. I agree that this would be entirely out of your field but I certainly feel, as a personal opinion, that the Canadian taxpayers' money should not be used for people who are working against the country, whether it be separatism or communism, or whatever it might be.

Mr. Boucher: You will grant, though, that family allowances could be used for that purpose and unemployment insurance could be used for that purpose.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): It is not quite the same thing; everybody receives that. It is not everybody who receives a grant from the Canada Council. I would love to have one myself!

Are we going to continue all of the questioning or will we have supplementaries in the middle?

The Vice-Chairman: It is up to the Committee to decide. I have three names on the list now: Mr. Schreyer, Mr. Dinsdale and Mr. Matte.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I have a few other questions I would like to ask.

The Vice-Chairman: And also Mr. Osler. The usual procedure, if I understand it correctly, is that each questioner poses the questions he wants to ask and then we pass to another questioner, unless there is a point of order or a question of privilege. Is this agreeable to the Committee? You may continue, Mr. Stewart.

• 1150

[Interpretation]

Mr. Stewart: We might continue in French. I believe that most of us here are French speaking. Normally we do everything in English but I think we should use both languages.

Now there is another question—I am sure that you will be ready for that one—I am thinking of this destructive character who went out West with an axe to break up the piano on the stage.

The Vice-Chairman: Mr. Dwyer.

Mr. Peter M. Dwyer (Associate Director): I think I might take refuge in my mother tongue at this point. Please excuse me. Would you put that question in more accurate terms Mr. Stewart. Do you want to know how or why this grant was given?

Mr. Stewart: I think almost every honourable member has received letters on this subject from their electors. They were wondering why it was that the Canadian government was paying for the transportation costs for this fellow who was coming to Canada to give a "pseudo concert".

The Vice-Chairman: I think you are asking the witness what standards were used in the granting of this grant.

[English]

Mr. Dwyer: Perhaps I might first say that the request for a travel grant for this American artist, Ralph Ortiz, was made in the normal way from a reputable art gallery—one of the best, a private gallery—in Vancouver. When the request for a travel grant was received it was treated as all such requests are treated, it was sent to three consultants who are experts in the particular field of the visual arts for an opinion as to whether assistance would be justified. These were two quite distinguished artists in the Vancouver community and the curator of a major public gallery elsewhere in the country. All three of them recommended that this grant should be made. Consequently, since the sum was modest—and of course the Council and the officers at that time had no way of knowing exactly what form this manifestation would take—the grant was given.

If I may anticipate what I think must lie in the minds of the hon. members, the question would be why was this advice given to us? Perhaps I might also say that one problem of the Council is that it is, as it were, a servant of two masters. It has a responsibility to the interested public to see that it is provided with the things that it likes and enjoys and, of course, a vast amount of our funds are used for that particular purpose. But I think the Council also does have laid upon it by Parliament a responsibility to the artists themselves, and this will mean that from time to time we must take into account the avant-garde, experimental, controversial and sometimes bizarre things which are being done. This particular manifestation was one of those. From time to time, it seems to us, that if we are to fulfil our function in permitting these experiments to be tried, as they have been in the past, we shall from time to time do things which are not appreciated, not understood and which appear very disagreeable.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Could it be that there are many people attached to the arts who feel that if they do not go along with something that is avant-garde that they are being old-fashioned and therefore they must permit all kinds of art. Does this enter into it?

Mr. Dwyer: I think there is a measure of progress in the arts as there is in all of life.

But I think in this particular case people felt quite generally that something which had been done quite extensively in London, in England, in the United States, in New York and Berkeley, California, could be tried here so that people here could test the validity of the kind of thing that was being done.

I wonder, if the Chairman would permit me, if I might just read two very brief things which I think might interest Mr. Stewart as a musician because they give an example of the problems of the avant-garde. Here are two very brief phrases from criticism about avant-garde music. Here is the first one:

All impartial musicians and music lovers were in perfect agreement that never was anything as incoherent, shrill, chaotic and earsplitting produced in music. The most piercing dissonances clash in a really atrocious harmony, and a few puny ideas only increase the disagreeable and deafening effect.

And now another very brief quotation of avant-garde music criticism:

In search of ear-rending dissonances, tortuous transition, sharp modulations, repugnant contortions of melody and rhythm, he is quite indefatigable. All is brought forward to produce the effect of bizarre originality, the strangest tonalities, the most preposterous combinations.

I quote those because the first one was written in Vienna in 1806 and describes the first performance of Beethoven's overture of "Fidelio", and the second one was written in Berlin in 1933 and describes a concert of Frédéric Chopin playing his mazurkas. With those in the back of our minds, I think that perhaps we neglect the avant-garde at our peril.

• 1155

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Your point is very well taken, Mr. Dwyer, but I would like to register my feeling. It is sometimes difficult to recognize what art is, but I do not think it is ever difficult to recognize a "nut" and I think that is the category that fellow would fall into. However, that is a personal opinion.

Mr. Dwyer: Well, we will accept that.

Mr. Martineau: May I interject one word here? No one, I think now, or very few, contest that Henry Moore is a great sculptor. His sculptures sell for maybe $40,000 or $50,000 each. We have two in Montreal. One is a woman cut in three parts. I walk by every day and there is one part that I cannot place yet and I have been looking at it practically every day. Now that is one Moore. There is another of Moore's which is right in front of a museum and it is a woman who suffers from atrophy of the left breast, hypertrophy of the right breast, and she has an enormous umbilical hernia. Now, this girl is very sick, she ought to be in the hospital and not walking the streets. But this is Henry Moore so what are we to do with this avant-garde which seems to be more and more recognized as we live. It is very difficult to draw the line, Mr. Stewart. We try, but it is difficult.

[Interpretation]

The Vice-Chairman: Excuse me, Mr. Martineau. Normally, the Chairman should not take part in the discussion, but what you call "avant-garde"... in this specific case, that is knocking a piano apart with an axe and pouring bags of animal blood does not look very much "avant-garde" to me. It looks more like "arrière-garde" action. I am pretty sure—and a lot of my fellow-citizens will agree with me—that it looks far more like some primitive tribal practice than it looks like music. I believe that in areas of music or sculpture, we might have cases where appreciation is difficult to give. But like Mr. Stewart, I am still waiting for some praise with regard to that specific case coming for any artist. I understand that it may not be you that has decided.

Mr. Martineau: But in that instance, the recommendations have been made by three trustworthy people. We did not know exactly what was going to happen. We took their word for it. They told us it might be interesting.

Mr. Mongrain: If you allow me to interrupt. Did these three people, who decided, know that Mr. so and so would come to do that particular demonstration?

Mr. Martineau: They knew that it was going to be Mr. so and so but were not quite sure of what was going to happen. I might ask Mr. Dwyer to correct me if I am wrong, but we were trying to see how the artists present would react to this destruction.

According to them, it was something they should have known and that could be of some use to them. They said to us: "We would like to see that". And we should have, I think, some confidence in those people. The amount in question was very minimal, so we felt we could not say "no", and we did answer "yes" without knowing exactly what would happen.

[English]

Mr. Rose: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, will the Chair permit a supplementary question?

The Vice-Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Rose: I wonder if I might be permitted to ask—since we have heard mention of various juries, panels that decide on the various disbursements for various things—whether it is fair to say, or to ask if, perhaps, this does not indicate a certain incestuousness, almost an inbreeding of the kind of people who pass opinions on other people in the same line. In other words, it seems to me that certain people can achieve a certain recommendation because they happen to know someone of a certain reputation in an equivalent field or a closely related field, which no one else has reasonable familiarity to deal with.

It reminds me somewhat, Mr. Chairman, of a situation in which I borrowed some money one time and had a backer back a note and I, in turn, backed his note. It appears to me that there is some equivalence here. I would just like to ask you about this. Because I think it applies not only in this instance, but I think it applies perhaps in the areas of the doctoral fellowships and this kind of thing in which you are engaged.

Mr. Martineau: No, sir, it is just the contrary. That is what we are trying to keep away from, absolutely. We ask people across the land and we ask people in the United States when we do not have the expert here. When we say "expert", in this case it was an expert in piano breaking. It was completely different with us.

Mr. Rose: If I could be permitted a further supplementary. It would be perhaps difficult to find such an expert in piano breaking, I realize that. At the same time I also am aware that people in certain fields—artistically—in North America and Europe know one another extremely well and the fact that they are separated geographically is irrelevant.

Mr. Martineau: Perhaps Mr. Dwyer could satisfy you, sir.

Mr. Dwyer: The suggestion is perhaps that we might be in the hands, as it were, of an artistic establishment, an elite which scratches backs and has its back scratched in return. I think it would be foolish to pretend that where limited advice is available, this is not always a constant concern, but it is one of which we are aware. We try to avoid this by ensuring that every year our advisory arts panel changes its membership by one third; that our juries are not repeated but chosen from different groups of people. Consequently there is a constant movement in turn. There is no one group, I think, which gives consistent advice on any one subject over a period of time.

[Interpretation]

The Vice-Chairman: If I may now, I might give the floor to somebody else so that everyone gets a chance...

[English]

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I just have three very short questions.

The Vice-Chairman: All right, make it short then.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I do not like to take up all of the time. I was wondering, gentlemen, what is going to be your involvement in a national symphony? Is it included in your estimates this year, for how much, and so on?

Mr. Dwyer: Would this be the orchestra at the National Arts Centre?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Yes.

Mr. Dwyer: Well, that would be treated, I assume, like anything else at the National Arts Centre; on its merits in this case, as any other orchestra in the country. On the assumption that it will be a good orchestra and asks for assistance, then I would assume the Council would react and give it help.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Then there is nothing at the moment, as far as this coming season is concerned, in your estimates for this?

Mr. Dwyer: I think we have set aside a sum of money, as we often do in cases, to be prepared to be able to react if and when an application is received.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I see. Second, I notice that the Calgary Philharmonic received $22,350 last year. I am wondering if it is going to be more this year and also, if the acquisition of José Iturbi as their conductor means that extra money is going to be supplied by the Canada Council?

Mr. Dwyer: I think that the grant to the Calgary orchestra for the coming season was $20,000. This is not really a falling off because in the previous season, because the orchestra was looking for a conductor, we gave it supplementary amounts of money so it could invite other conductors in. It was, of course, the orchestra's own decision to choose José Iturbi.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, the preliminary series of questions that Mr. Stewart asked were important and the answers we got were also very informative, but it seemed to me we stopped short of drawing any conclusion and so I would like to ask Mr. Boucher if it would be correct to say that in determining the eligibility of an application for a grant, the Council makes this determination exclusively on the basis of the artistic merit or academic merit of the project proposed and as a matter of policy, deliberately ignores the political background of the applicant provided there is no connection between this applicant's political background and the project in question?

Mr. Boucher: The answer to that would be, yes.

Mr. Schreyer: I am reassured by that answer, Mr. Chairman. I go on to the next question. In view of dollar depreciation with inflation, is the Council making any effort to increase its principal of the endowment proportionately? Do I make myself clear?

Mr. Boucher: Well, I am afraid I missed that.

Mr. Schreyer: In view of dollar depreciation as the result of inflation, is the Council making any effort to increase the principal of its endowment in inverse proportion to the inflation factor?

Mr. Boucher: Oh, yes, we do, sir. The portfolio of the Endowment Fund is treated exactly like any other portfolio. In fact, we increase its value with the years and also the yield, but we are thinking of increasing its value and it has increased, I think, to $4.5 million. We think of it very much. Now we try to invite gifts, also, to increase our Endowment Fund.

Mr. Schreyer: I think I heard it said in the opening remarks by Mr. Martineau—or perhaps it was Mr. Boucher—that there was an increase in the amount of yield last year. Was this due primarily to changes in portfolio holdings or mainly to an increase in the principal invested?

Mr. Boucher: Well, perhaps Mr. Fortier could answer that. It is due to the fact also that we have invested more money. We have had more money in the course of the 12-month period invested. Being not really a government department, we invest the money the government gives us and we get some return on it. When we received $17 million a year ago, I think we received that money in a lump sum.

Mr. Fortier: No; in instalments.

Mr. Boucher: In any case it was invested with the rest of the money so there is a yield on that. Therefore, the base having increased, the yield also increased. Perhaps Mr. Fortier could add something.

Mr. Fortier: Well, perhaps I should say that our investments are a composite of three things, a composite of the $50 million principal—I am talking of the Endowment Fund—paid by the Government back in 1957, the profits realized on that endowment since, which I said were about $4.5 million, and the level of what I call unpaid grants.

As the Council approves a grant, we do not make the payments right away; we wait until the project is advanced enough and we make the payments by instalments if the grants are large enough. Therefore, last year as a result of our larger budget, we had an unpaid grant level of about $13 million on March 31 as opposed to $6.8 million in the March previous year, as you see, we had $6 million more to invest and this, of course, has a high yield.

Now, the yield on the Endowment Fund increased from 5.76 per cent on March 31, 1967, to 5.98 per cent on March 31, 1968, and this increase in the year, of course, was a result of the high return on short-term investments. Does that answer it?

Mr. Schreyer: Yes, thank you.

Mr. Osler: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Chairman. I would like to know, roughly and quickly without too much detail, what is your investment policy as laid down by your Board, presumably? Can you invest in anything? It would seem to me from what you have just said that you have two requirements; one is a long-term investment requirement in which you can afford to be fairly locked-in and the other is a fairly liquid situation. Could you comment on that?

Mr. Martineau: I think I can take this one, Mr. Osler. The Council also created an investment committee, two members of which are from the Council and three from outside. Last year it was Mr. Hungerford who was Chairman, there was Arnold Hart, Louis Hébert, Trevor Moore and myself.

We meet regularly and we decide but we afterwards submit our decision to the Council, so as I said before, we treat this as if it were the portfolio of a bank or of an investment trust, and we have changed our policy from time to time. For instance, now we think and have thought for over a year that it was time to move more into equity, and we have shifted to equity, and we intend to keep on doing so for the moment. Maybe we will change in a month or two, but we are trying to keep up with the market, always thinking of increasing the capital and yield.

Mr. Osler: Have you any guidelines laid down that you have to adhere to, or are you able to do what you like, pretty well?

Mr. Martineau: No, we decide how it should be invested. So far it is a general portfolio invested in bonds and equity, but we are shifting with the authorization of the Council.

[Interpretation]

The Vice-Chairman: Mr. Martineau, I believe the members of the investment committee are bank presidents...

Mr. Martineau: Ah! Yes.

The Vice-Chairman: ...they are well aware of...

Mr. Martineau: Yes, yes.

The Vice-Chairman: ...the money market.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Hungerford was the chairman of the Montréal Trust, Mr. Arnold Hart is president of the Bank of Montréal, Mr. Trevor Moore is the vice-chairman of Imperial Oil and Louis Hébert is the chairman of "La banque canadienne nationale".

[English]

The Vice-Chairman: Mr. Schreyer?

Mr. Schreyer: To continue, Mr. Chairman, since we have reached that point now where I understand three-quarters of the monies available for grants are voted by Parliament and one-quarter is received from the Council's investments, I would like to ask whether the Council follows the practice of earmarking grant money. For example, do you earmark the money from your investments to be given as grants to the arts, and that received from parliamentary votes earmarked for grants to the social sciences?

Mr. Boucher: No, sir. We have a total budget and then we say, so much for the arts, so much for the humanities and social sciences.

Mr. Schreyer: The reason I asked that question, Mr. Chairman, is that it seems to me the Canada Council is moving into stormy waters in the years ahead because more and more dependence will be placed on parliamentary votes and the Council will be giving grants to the fine arts, to artists for purposes or projects or works to which, I am afraid, large numbers of people will object.

I am in agreement with Mr. Dwyer that we ignore, at our peril, avantgarde art but it seems to me that as parliamentarians, we will find ourselves under quite a bit of pressure to at least make objection known to such works as the examples that have already been given—the destructive art type in Calgary, the court jester in Vancouver, and one or two other examples.

I close with this question. Does the awarding panel have in mind some kind of criteria or standards in judging an application as to whether or not it is obviously aesthetic, whether or not there is literary or artistic value, or does it simply pass on applications as to whether or not the artist is well known?

Mr. Martineau: Mind you, this 2 per cent is very much in our minds and if you look through the annual report you will see that most of our money is spent on what are called the classical arts, and there can be no question at all about it that the majority are in favour of it. Only a very, very small part goes to the avant-garde. We believe that we cannot prevent that. There are certain chances which we must take but we are not making mistakes such as have been made in the past. No doubt, we will make mistakes. We have made some but they were not costly ones; far from it. And they do not count, Mr. Schreyer, when you put them on a balance and you look at this small thing on one side and the enormous good we do on the other, but with an operation of this magnitude it is difficult to prevent it.

Mr. Schreyer: I wanted to ask if you might not agree that it would be more beneficial—perhaps "easier" is the correct word—if moneys for granting to artists which you might call avant-garde could be provided from a fund that does not come from parliamentary appropriation. After all, you have your earnings from your investments.

Mr. Martineau: It is an idea.

Mr. Boucher: We could always make this distinction. I think it would be largely fictitious. Actually, four years ago the Council had to decide whether it would go on being relatively poor and proud, but poor at the expense of its parish and proud for its own benefit. We have decided to take the risk. I think it is impossible to manage an operation like the Canada Council and only make safe decisions. It is just not possible.

On the other hand, on the whole, when Mr. Martineau says the majority, I would say almost the total of our decisions are noncontroversial; something like 99 per cent of what we do is noncontroversial. There is a fringe that is controversial. If you take the Ortiz case, for example, that award was not given to stage a public event. That award was given to take an artist from New York to meet other artists in Vancouver. The fact that this spilled all over the place, and was represented in the light of whether it would be attractive to the public in Vancouver, is something which of course is not of our making. I turned out that way and we have a problem. We probably spent a great deal more money on salaries and so on in discussing this issue in the Canada Council than we have awarded to Ortiz, and one can ask if it is worth it. Of course, it is a problem for us.

However, these things are minimal and form an agency that deals with quite possibly the more controversial segments of the Canadian public, namely, the academics and the artists. I think that one would have to say that the Canada Council has had remarkably little trouble and, on the other hand, has been able to give these two constituencies the feeling that they were understanding and generally on their side. It is difficult to avoid having some problems, but I do not anticipate that in future the Canada Council will have more and more troubles of this nature.

I think, for example, the Canadian public will come to realize that the arts of this country involve almost as many people as professional sports, and that politicians will also come to realize that they may be dealing with almost as wide a public when they show concern for the development of the arts as they do when they deal with other segments of national activity. The arts have become a very important element of our national life. Certainly in 1967 and at Expo they were not an insignificant part. The success of 1967 was very largely due to the contribution of Canadian artists. So they are not a negligible segment, and I think they will become—even from the point of view of Canadian politics—accepted as a significant part of our national activity.

Mr. Martineau: May I add one word, Mr. Schreyer. As I sit here I can see myself sitting at the Canada Council table—it is a place much like this—and we discuss these things in the very same way as we discussed them today. I am satisfied that when the 21 of us go over something and agree, that we can generally have the same agreement at this table with the parliamentarians. We may disagree between ourselves on a few things, but on the whole we do not, and I am sure that we can satisfy you every time we come here. You may not be completely of our opinion but I am sure you will be satisfied that we are trying to do our best and that we make a minimum of mistakes and that nobody could do better.

The Vice-Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt this interesting discussion for a moment, but I would first invite you to speak as closely as possible to your microphone. Second, we want to give everybody a chance. I think from now on I will allow two or three questions and then we can come back if you have some other questions.

Mr. Rose: I had a supplementary on this particular one but I can come back to it.

The Vice-Chairman: Mr. Rose, we will not recognize supplementary questions from now on but I will put your name on the list so you can ask your questions. There are a few members who have not had a chance to question yet, so we will give them a chance now.

Mr. Dinsdale: I think I should also have equal time, Mr. Chairman. I do not see why the restriction should apply at this particular stage.

The Vice-Chairman: If you want to sit here for hours, I do not care, but...

Mr. Dinsdale: No, but I had my hand up at the beginning and I do not think we should change the rules in the middle of the game.

The Vice-Chairman: Should I come back to Mr. Schreyer, then? Go ahead, Mr. Dinsdale.

Mr. Dinsdale: I wanted to get back to some fundamental issues here. I was interested in the Canada Council when it was first formed. It endured great travail when it was being born, as the gentlemen before us well know. Canada was very late in recognizing the special needs of the social sciences, the arts and the humanities. While I was interested before and at the time of the establishment of the Council in the cultural frontiers, in recent years I have been involved in physical frontiers rather than cultural frontiers and I often wondered whether the Canada Council was deliberately heading into some of the pitfalls that were talked about when it was first discussed in Parliament. For example, it was anticipated that with the formation of a council of this kind, detached—or at least partly detached—from the direct functions of government, that we would avoid the obvious problems that envelop government when it becomes involved in social sciences, social planning, et cetera, because in the final analysis governments must always be responsive to public opinion. It was anticipated that because of this fact and with the generous donation from the Sir James Aikins estate, I think it was, that there would be similar endowments and the financing of the operational part, as well as the capital aspects of the Canada Council program, would come from private endowments.

As I listened to the report of budgetary policy this morning it seemed to me that government is stepping more and more into the field of financing and private endowments are a decreasing aspect of the whole financial policy of the Canada Council. Could it be that the lack of response from the public is due to the fact that over the years the Canada Council has not sold the importance of its programs in terms of the cultural development of Canada, or could it be that the programs and projects that come into the limelight of publicity are those that we struck out on this morning—the so-called oddballs or eccentrics. I know in this Parliament up to the present time the only comment on the Canada Council has been the avant-garde operations of the Council and these situations are hardly likely to encourage Parliamentary enthusiasm, or public enthusiasm for your functions. I was disturbed, Mr. Chairman, when Mr. Boucher said he compared the functions of government fiscal policy with respect to Canada Council to those of the family allowance. I do not think there is any comparison at all. You are dealing in the social sciences, the arts and the humanities, which involve social policy, and this is a very delicate area for government.

Now, out of that, the first question, why do you think there has not been the response that had been anticipated from the private sector in financing?

Mr. Martineau: We have had that question, Mr. Dinsdale, many times and I can answer only for myself. I think it is because generally we are known to be a government organism, and giving to us is just like giving to the government. A few have realized that it is not so and have given, but I think the general public does not know how independently we operate. That would be my view. Now it may not be the view of Mr. Boucher but this is my view.

Mr. Boucher: I would like to add something to that. I think it is quite correct to say that in 1957, when the Canada Council was created, the government obviously did not think that the Council would need a great deal more money than what was provided. If you look for bearing in those days you would have to recall that for the National Research Council, which included in those days the Medical Research Council, all that was provided to subsidize research on the other side, the physical, was probably just a few million dollars. I do not think I am wrong in saying it probably was less than $5 million. So the disproportion was not that great.

If you look now at the proportion of our endowments and private gifts to what we are now soliciting from the House, of course, it becomes less and less important. This has been created very largely by the fact that the Government of Canada, with the endorsement of Parliament, has decided to provide a great deal more support for such things as research as a national operation. Now, as soon as it did that, it also realized that it could not support developments in the physical and medical sciences without supporting, at the same time, free research undertaken on Canadian campuses in the social sciences and the humanities. It has tried, over recent years not to enlarge the gap too much between the funds provided for the two.

With regard to support from private endowments, in the light of that, I think private bequests in the early days could have been significant. If they are given in the form of a bequest to be invested and only the interest to be used, it takes pretty wealthy Canadians to leave money to the Council, the interest of which would make a significant difference in our present budget. We are getting $17 million from the Killam Estate and $17 million will yield $1 million, and that $1 million is now $1 million to $28 million. So there are not many Canadians who could leave $17 million to the Canada Council.

Mr. Dinsdale: Sir James Aikins.

Mr. Boucher: Then it is very important to realize that the Council did get a number of private donations. They were generally of the order of a half a million or something like that and again there is not that much money lying around in Canada. However, the Council was always faced with the question of whether it should stage an active campaign of solicitation. Every time that issue was debated in the Council, the Council ran into the problem of whether its constituents would resent such an operation because the Symphony Orchestra in Winnipeg, the National Ballet, Queen's University, the University of Alberta, all our clients, are seeking funds from these private bequests. The question is: if the Canada Council sought the same kind of money would it be regarded by our constituents as taking money away from them, when actually they are receiving a great deal of private support. So we have intended to look at the over-all financial situation, with our budget being part of the total arts budget of this country, with private donations flowing in, not necessarily in the coffers of the Canada Council but flowing into the coffers of your client organizations, and the same with regard to research done in universities. This does not quite answer your questions but I think this gives you the...

Mr. Martineau: Right, but we have received fewer you see—we received $600,000 from the Molson Foundation $16 million from the Killam estate and we have just received $735,000 from another estate which I would ask you not to ask me to name now because it is not announced yet. But large bequests in Canada cannot be expected because it takes a very rich man to leave half a million dollars to an institution.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I take it then that the Council has now reconciled itself to the fact that it will have to depend on support from public funds.

Mr. Martineau: Mostly, yes, but we are expecting and we hope that in the years to come we will get more of these bequests. We just received one, as I said of $735,000 and now we need about $2 million.

Mr. Dinsdale: Well does this not mean that we are facing the problem that was debated so sensitively in 1957 that the Canada Council is becoming more and more an arm of government? Therefore, I think this has been demonstrated by the questions this morning, it is in that very sensitive and delicate area of public opinion, and its deliberations and its awards and its decisions will have to be taken on the basis of public response. I would say these three recent episodes have done considerable damage to the reputation of the Canada Council far out of proportion because it is the eccentric situations that seem to hit the headlines and all the other policies and projects that are outlined in the book do not get into the limelight of publicity at all. But now, Mr. Boucher said you have decided to take the risk. You have decided to take the risk, you are going to have to face the situation where you will come more and more under public scrutiny. I think you will find with budgets for cultural affairs going up and budgets for other items going down that you are not going to get the sort of encouragement from the public that you might otherwise receive.

Mr. Martineau: May I say...

Mr. Dinsdale: Let me say, let me just finally make this statement. I was strongly in support of the Canada Council when it was established because the physical sciences were receiving assistance, the social sciences were not. We are still out of proportion in this respect but the physical sciences are not as controversial as the social sciences, and this is a very important decision.

Mr. Martineau: That is right. We have to start thinking of that and we are, sir. But, if I may say for the gentlemen of the press here, when the Ortiz matter or another one came out in one newspaper in Ottawa it was on the first page in red; on the third page there was a series of gifts and grants given by the Council in the Ottawa region for hundreds of thousands. That rated only the third page but this small incident was in red on the first page. So what can we do?

• 1235

Mr. Boucher: No, I think we are quite conscious of that. It is healthy for us to appear before a committee of the House because this is really the ultimate control. We have to report to the House and we have to sense the disposition of the House to vote more money for these purposes. I think also you have to realize that we are not terribly easy about these last incidents. We are not happy about them; we caught up with them after they had occurred; they made a big splash in the papers. We do not know what we can do to stop that forever, but we certainly are determined not to place ourselves in the position of having too many repetitions of these unfortunate incidents. But having said that I think I have to say that there is still the possibility that it will again occur. We are certainly not inviting these things to happen, and we are as conscious as you are that they do not help the over-all cause we are serving.

[Interpretation]

The Vice-Chairman: If this happens too often, Mr. Boucher, we will contract the habit...

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate those sentiments from Mr. Boucher and I think by counselling together we might have resolved part of the difficulty because I was very disturbed by your statement comparing public expenditures of this kind with family allowances which seemed to miss the point of responsiveness to public opinion in this delicate and sensitive area and, secondly, when you said you decided to take the calculated risk. Now, if you do this you can bring down all the good works that the Canada Council is doing. For example to encourage a piano smasher to come to Canada under the auspices of the Canada Council. I am sure there are many worthy projects that would bring credit to the function of the Canada Council outside of avant-garde, eccentricities or odd-ball activities of this kind.

Mr. Boucher: Could I make two comments, Mr. Dinsdale? I would like to correct the impression I left by this reference to family allowances. I had in mind unemployment insurance. The only thing I meant by this was that when the Canada Council provides money to somebody to study abroad, the connection with subsidizing political activity may be less evident than when a politically active artist or whatever he is in Canada receives unemployment insurance precisely not to work while he is doing that. If you wanted to establish a system by which you would have to eliminate certain people from the enjoyment of public benefits, this would be very difficult to establish in unemployment insurance and it would be difficult to establish in our instance too.

With regard to taking a calculated risk, I certainly did not mean to say that the instances that have been quoted this morning were the kind of risk we were seeking. The major risk that the Canada Council decided to take, and I think it is all to its honour to have taken it, is that it decided not to stand so much as it did earlier on its autonomy. Also, the fact that it could not really have had any closer relationship with Parliament than it had in the first years, that it would be prepared to meet Members of Parliament and talk over this problem in order to get more money was, of course, to some extent, a risk for an agency that is defined as not being an agent of Her Majesty. Yet, I think this is the kind of relationship that we think can be developed with Parliament by which we will be able to appear before Members of Parliament and describe in broad terms what we are doing and convince Parliament that the funds requested would be well spent. I hope we can do that on the whole.

Mr. Schreyer: Yes, I have just one brief supplementary. One would hope that the Canada Council would not back away from its support for avant-garde art, but does the panel ask itself this one question? Does the art form, no matter how avant-garde, have any redeeming social or aesthetic value? I ask that simply to come back to this one incident where I defy—I put it that way—I defy anyone to say that there was the slightest amount of redeeming social or aesthetic value in the case of that one project for which a grant was given. Now is it put as starkly as that? Is the question asked by the awarding panel—by the Council—"Is there any amount of redeeming social or aesthetic value no matter how avant-garde the art form may be?"

Mr. Dwyer: This is a very pertinent question because it is extremely difficult, particularly in dealing with the avant-garde and in the field of the arts generally, to find any absolute standards of judgment. I think if you are dealing with the humanities and the social sciences where you are dealing perhaps with individuals there is a certain level of achievement which is perfectly clear on the person's records. In the case of artists particularly with young artists this does not always exist. We found that the best we were able to do was to take a consensus of informed people and base our actions and our grants on the advice in any given case of a person's peers or with the young people, of his betters. If any member of this Committee has a suggestion on how to improve that we would be very interested to hear it.

Mr. Rose: I had a further supplementary, Mr. Chairman, on that. I would like to ask it now because it deals with the same topic and because I was declined a supplementary a little earlier. Certainly my heart goes out to those members of the committee who are called upon to make such evaluations as the one that is the subject of our discussion. I think it is equally easy to say that there are much more readily available standards from which a person can make a judgment on the matter of something conventional such as the social sciences as opposed to the arts where there really are no boundaries to what is artistic. Referring to Mr. Dinsdale's question, I think in Canada the public is generally quite willing to support art, but it has a great reluctance to support artiness and I think this is one of the difficulties with the public image of the Canada Council. I asked that question in relation to an earlier supplementary which I asked. Certainly I think that some attempt should be made to develop a kind of an equivalent in the criteria used for awarding various sums of money in the area of social sciences as is true in the arts. I have the distinct feeling that someone can do quite ordinary work in the social sciences—quite conventional work—and receive some substantial support whereas the money available to the artist frequently is for those who are either professional or those who have, perhaps, the kind of standing and economic situation in Canada where they may not even need it as greatly.

Mr. Boucher: The artist may not need it?

Mr. Rose: No, I am suggesting that the person who is likely to achieve the grant in the arts is often a person more able to provide the kind of backing that he needs in himself than, perhaps, is true of the student of the social sciences pursuing post-graduate studies.

Mr. Martineau: I think that this is not so. I think that most of those—I would say the immense majority—are the ones who need it and the success we have had in the arts is quite extraordinary.

Mr. Rose: How do you explain, sir, then that 50 per cent of your budget for music goes to provide employment for professional musicians?

Mr. Martineau: Yes, I will tell you why. Our budget has never been big enough to provide help at all levels. We thought that with our budget we would keep the professionals first; that the lower level could be taken care of by the provinces and then lower again—the very beginners—by the municipality. We did not have enough money to cover everything so we had a choice. Were we going to put our money where it really counted or were we going spread the butter so thin all across that it would really help no one? This was a very difficult matter to decide and it still is. We try to make it worthwhile in every way, but we cannot.

Mr. Rose: Would it be fair to say that your policy is to support the professional musician and the amateur scholar?

Mr. Boucher: It certainly would not be fair to say that.

Mr. Martineau: We support the scholars very much.

Mr. Boucher: Are you assuming that our scholars are more amateur than our—

Mr. Rose: No, I did not suggest that. What I am suggesting is that I feel, because of your report, there is more attention paid to those people who are going on for further training in the humanities and social sciences than is true in the arts where your money is devoted, as Mr. Martineau suggested, to the maintenance of the professional.

Mr. Martineau: Or to making professionals.

Mr. Boucher: These two programs, of course, are developed according to the logic of each area. What we can do, or what we are expected to do in the humanities and social sciences for scholars is not quite the same thing as what we can do and what we are expected to do for artists in the artistic community. What appeared to be more significant on the arts side was to support major organizations which would provide employment to professional musicians. It is true that in this process we have been led to share in maintaining professional musicians, which we are not really doing on the university side. We are not contributing to a share of the salary of scholars we are paying expenses for research projects.

On the arts side we are maintaining institutions which are dependent on the box-office, on private donation to some extent, and on government support—Canada Council, provincial, municipal.

If you look at how these institutions can develop and what would be the expected share of the various partners in this, the public paying at the box-office, the private donors and the government, you will see that it is very difficult to imagine a situation where the Canada Council would not be involved in subsidizing the employment—partial or full employment—of the artists working in these organizations.

This has never struck us as something which would be particularly disturbing. We would look at this the way one would look probably at the way governments support hospitals. It is quite obvious that hospitals cannot exist simply on the payments made by patients; they have to be supported by public funds because it is a nonpaying proposition.

Major art organizations are a non-paying proposition in the sense that the box-office cannot possibly look after all the expenses. Therefore, the other partners, either the private donors or the public donors, have to pay a share of the costs.

Mr. Rose: Thank you.

[Interpretation]

The Vice-Chairman: Mr. Matte.

Mr. Matte: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to return to the problem which was raised by Mr. Stewart, at the outset. It appears to me that because of the political situation that exists at present in this country, we should have a more precise answer, if not a more radical one.

Are those Quebecers who are recognized independantists automatically eliminated as far as getting grants from the Council is concerned?

Mr. Martineau: I can answer for myself because I can not speak for all twenty one (21) members. As far as I am concerned, no. They would not be automatically eliminated if they were great artists or great painters, for example, because I believe Canada would gain if they became even greater. I would not take their political opinion into account. I really do not know what my colleagues feel about it though.

Mr. Matte: I thank you very much for your answer, because it is an important problem. The recent founding of the Parti québécois, the existence of Le Rassemblement pour l'indépendance nationale in Quebec, are facts that might be minimized, but it remains that in Quebec 23,000 people are members of the Parti québécois, approximately 18,000 are members of the RIN, without counting those people who without being members are still in support of those parties. If we said that because a person is an independantist or a separatist, he could not obtain a grant from the Council, I feel this would be discrimination.

My second question is this: Does the Council meet any difficulty with the Government of Québec?

Mr. Martineau: That is a very delicate question.

Mr. Boucher: You could reverse the question.

Mr. Martineau: As far as we are concerned, Mr. Matte, all the information we have is at the disposal of the Province of Quebec. We want to work hand in hand with the Government of the Province of Quebec. We want them to work hand in hand with us. I cannot state really that we have difficulties, but we have been, however, working each in our own way towards the same goal. We would like our relationship to be closer.

Mr. Matte: Can we say there is no strong cooperation between the Department of Cultural Affairs in Quebec and your Council?

The Vice-Chairman: Somebody noted that the reverse might be true. This might enlighten you.

• 1250

Mr. La Salle: Here is another question to follow Mr. Matte's question. Do you think that Quebec is depriving herself of the services you may give to her?

Mr. Martineau: I think we could be of much greater service to Quebec, and I think that the Province of Quebec should ask for it.

The Vice-Chairman: Mr. Osler.

[English]

Mr. Osler: While I sympathize with those who decided on our axe-swinging friend, for instance, I cannot help but feel that type of thing is highly regrettable, and as Mr. Dinsdale pointed out, it can become the type of thing that will do you a lot of harm in the future. Now I am a great backer and supporter of the Canada Council so I am trying to be constructive in what I say.

I submit that to raise such a matter in Parliament is being constructive, because I think when that kind of thing happens you have to have your ears pinned back. The volume of mail I got before and after would indicate it is a very hot subject.

I would say, on that specific thing, for instance, if you boil down the facts your donation was $294 or something, that is one thing and it is very small. However, if you look at it the other way and say that 84 people went to this performance, it is something like $3.50 a ticket that you have picked up. I would suggest that if there really are 84 or 100 people in Vancouver who feel desperately that they want to talk with this fringe-type of so-called artist they could find the $3.50 each and bring him in as a public service to their own community.

Having said that it leads me to thoughts that are not in any way concrete; I just want to throw them at you and see if they are worth digesting or thinking about. I noticed on the CBC board that one of the great difficulties, which I do not think they have solved but which I think they are addressing themselves to, was to reconcile a large national organization, centrally controlled, with regional demands and problems.

It seems to me you are running smack into the same problem. Whether you are, in fact, running into it or not is beside the point; from the point of view of the public you are going to be running into it. Things like this stir up a hornet's nest. In Winnipeg, for instance, where I come from they immediately say: Damn it, we cannot get anything for the Rainbow stage, the musical festival is going to be thrown out. I saw in Montreal, when there was there a couple of weeks ago, some serious discussion in the newspaper about whether the Feux Follets, which I happen to think are terrific, were going to be able to keep going at the level they have reached because of monetary problems.

So a thing like this is bound to have reactions (a) in Winnipeg (b) in Montreal (c) somewhere else and really damage it. Is there any way in which you can bring local or regional representation to bear not on your individual judgments, but on your setting of criteria and your long-term planning, say? Is this practical in any way? I do not know what the quality of your board is, or how big a job they play, but the Canada Council must not be allowed to develop into any more of a remote ivory tower in Ottawa. Is there any way you can get nonestablishment in Winnipeg, Vancouver, Montreal and places to make more of a part in your long-range planning or your long-range criteria-setting? Not on your individual judgments, this would be suicide.

Mr. Dwyer: May I reply, Mr. Chairman?

The Vice-Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Dwyer: We try to do this, we are very conscious of this. We have had a very small staff and it has been difficult for us to be as omnipresent as we would have liked. We have now established an advisory arts panel of 15 members and these are from right across the country; they are some of the most distinguished artists in the country. They meet regularly—they were meeting last week-end here—and there are representatives, of course, from Winnipeg and Vancouver, across the country. From them we try to obtain a consensus of opinion about our general policy standards.

The second thing is that now we have rather larger funds we have been able to develop with a modest staff and it is now possible for the head of our theatre division, literature and of the visual arts and so on, to go to other parts of the country and to talk at length with people who have concerns. I hope that we shall be more present in that way.

And the third attempt we make is what we call "Soundings" in which we invite together a dozen or fifteen artists from across the country with a particular interest to sit down for a day and a half with us around a table and discuss their problems, their needs and their requirements, and we do react to this. Many of the suggestions which have been made at small meetings of this kind have resulted in very considerable changes in our policy and our method of giving assistance to individuals, and so on.

I think, though, what Mr. Osler said is very true and it is something that we must guard against—becoming an ivory tower—and I would have hoped that the artists would know that that was by no means our wish.

Mr. Martineau: If I may add something, Mr. Osler, we have what we call competitions and let us say one is in music. Every application is sent to the three or five judges across the country, who hear the voice or the instrument of the artist, and then they get together and rank them. After that the result is sent to the Advisory Arts Panel and again it is reviewed. After that our officers take them and then they make their recommendation to us and it is discussed before the Council. As you can see, there are four stages. So far that is the best arrangement that we have been able to work out. I do not pretend it is perfect. There is no doubt that it could be improved.

Mr. Boucher: I suppose that you would say that this is typical of any ivory tower, but I cannot really think of myself as living in an ivory tower. I have never been in an agency which was less of an ivory tower than the Canada Council. We are in touch with all imaginable segments of our public all the time, and if there is any problem with that decision on Ortiz it is not that it was decided in an ivory tower manner, but that it was very largely determined by our constituency in the field. The problem is more that it was done in a remote fashion. It is not that it is a decision which is decided in the abstract here in Ottawa. People in Vancouver who want something are very largely influenced in their decision by the nature of the applicant and the fact that two of the assessors come from the community, and there is no reason, if artists in Vancouver want this, why we in Ottawa should not agree. This is really what happened in the Ortiz decision. It is not that this was a decision concocted in an ivory tower in Ottawa. If there is any trouble with the system it is that possibly it is too decentralized in this respect.

Mr. Schumacher: May I ask a supplementary on this matter. Does the application not give some description of the type of art that is going to be performed and does the staff in Ottawa not think that it has some discriminatory role to play, so that in this particular case it should not even have been sent out to this review board in Vancouver, or wherever it was.

Mr. Martineau: It was not, either. It was a small grant, Mr. Schumacher, and people from Vancouver asked to have this man brought to Vancouver and pay for his expenses. This was a group, a very commendable group, good people from Vancouver who asked this, and we accepted their word that it would be interesting for the artists if they saw this chap perform.

Mr. Schumacher: I thought I understood at the beginning, Mr. Chairman, that the procedure was that an application was received in Ottawa and then it was referred to the local group to see whether or not it would be a worthwhile thing.

Mr. Martineau: Yes, and you are right. This is what happens generally, but in a special case like that, no. It is too small.

Mr. Boucher: I wish we would not be asked to defend, ad nauseam, the decisions in all cases. We do not really want to. However, in this case I think that an additional comment may be useful. At one stage the Canada Council after securing more money, decided to offer more programs, and in those days we were thinking purely in terms of annual competitions. The thing that struck us was that everybody would have to apply and fill out long forms. These would go into an adjudication machinery and three months later they would end up by being assessed, everyone competing against the other, and they would be submitted to panels and then all candidates would be compared as to merit. We realized very soon that if indeed we had somewhat more resources, one service we could render to the artists of Canada would be to also have a more flexible system to respond more quickly to small requests for emergency assistance.

Here is an example. When we talk of an application in this case we really mean either a telephone call from Vancouver or a short letter from a gallery saying, "You know Ralph Ortiz in New York. We would very much like to have him in two weeks. Can you provide air transportation for Ortiz?" There is not really a great deal more than that on the application. Then there are two or three more telephone calls from our office to three assessors to say that we have a request from a gallery; what do you think of it? Then they would say yes or no, that it is a great thing or that they think it is dubious. Then I would ask if they could put this in writing while we process it, and letters would come from these assessors while we were deciding whether we would issue the cheque. This is precisely what is done in order to achieve some flexibility to meet these urgent needs.

Mr. Schumacher: Are these assessors on an annual retainer or are they paid per referral or how are they paid?

Mr. Boucher: They are not paid at all for it.

Mr. Osler: Could I ask a supplementary about this, Mr. Chairman. I am primarily interested in keeping the heat off the Canada Council, as Mr. Dinsdale said. I think you are going down a sticky road and I can see where we on the other side of the fence are not going to be able to help you too much on these things. Is it not possible if everybody agrees that generally speaking 95, 98 or 99 per cent of what the Canada Council does is wonderful—and we are not talking about whether it is avantgarde or whether it is reactionary, or what it is—is there no way whereby you can inform the public of the exact percentage of your budget that is laid aside for experimental work? In fact, come out and say, "That thing in Vancouver is of no significance. It comes out of a $5,000 slush fund that we have every year for this kind of thing, and the people of Vancouver wanted it." I think that takes heat off you and it does not make the people in the rest of the country feel resentful.

• 1305

Mr. Dwyer: Then we might have, as it were, some mad money set aside.

Mr. Osler: It is set aside.

Mr. Dwyer: I think that is quite true, is it not? It is from the Endowment Fund.

Mr. Osler: It does not get mixed up with the backing of the symphonies and the serious art galleries?

Mr. Boucher: Yes, I would like to think not.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have a supplementary. Perhaps this is not quite a fair question, but I was wondering if the court jester in Vancouver is on the board of assessors?

The Vice-Chairman: Gentlemen, I have two more names on my list. If you do not mind, we will try to finish our business so that we will not have to call the witnesses back. The next questioner is Mr. La Salle.

[Interpretation]

Mr. La Salle: Thank you Mr. Chairman. Two brief words and a question. I am thinking of this funny chap from Vancouver. If you ever hear that there is a piano to demolish, let me know. I have a girl who has been wanting a piano for two years, so do not break it up, send it to me.

Now there is another thing with regard to the grants you spoke about a while ago and the political affiliation of the grantee. To reassure the Committee I might say that if ever a separatist obtains a grant from the Canada Council, according to the experience I have, he comes back far less a separatist than he was before he left.

However I have a question which is of some interest to my own constituency but I believe it is a question which could be put, I think, in respect of most Canadian constituencies. In our constituency we have a fifty-voice choir which over the last ten years, has been giving wonderful concerts throughout the area. These people of course have financial trouble like most associations of this type. I wonder if groups of singers who are recognized regionally like this one may ask for and obtain a grant proportioned to its work.

The Vice-Chairman: What is the name of that group?

Mr. La Salle: The Chanteurs de la Place Bourget.

Mr. Dwyer: Our policy with regard to choral-groups is as follows: we have an amount of twenty five thousand dollars for choirs this year, which was available to those choirs who want to put a request with regard to the performance of difficult works, requiring a considerable amount of rehearsals or requiring the services of a larger orchestra than is usually the case. We need only receive the request, however, the grants are made to those who want to present works of exceptional interest.

Mr. La Salle: Considering this. Does this mean that a group which gives concerts in schools and colleges throughout the area—this is an extremely good thing for young people—would appear not to be eligible to a subsidy from the Canada Council?

Mr. Martineau: Unfortunately, Mr. La Salle, chances are not too good. The reason being that there are a large number of these groups throughout Canada, not only such groups but small local orchestras as well. They might be good but they are of local interest. If you want us to give them the money we will do it, but it would take a considerable amount. However, we are ready to do so if you give us the money.

Mr. La Salle: Thank you for the information.

[English]

The Vice-Chairman: Mr. Rose, I still have your name on my list. Do you have some other points to make?

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I have had an opportunity to discuss a number of the points. I will attempt to be brief, however, this is our only opportunity. For that reason there are a number of things that I would like to bring up.

First of all, I would like to join with the members across the table and also on this side in indicating that I support the concept of the Canada Council and am very interested in protecting its good name if I can do this in any way.

I, also, am concerned, as was mentioned by Mr. Dinsdale and others, that its name and reputation are not besmirched at all. Each of us, though, has his own—no pun intended—particular axe to grind and I have no particular concern about the government playing a larger role in Canada Council because I feel it is inevitable. I think we have moved away from the 18th century concept of the prince or the church being the patron of the arts. It is time that it was put on a much broader base. I feel, though, that there has been enough snobbishness associated with some of the decisions that have been made that perhaps rules out the Canada Council for a great number of people. I think this was referred to by Mr. Osler when he suggested that certain things in Winnipeg had failed to receive the support that perhaps the citizens there would have appreciated on the grounds that it was not suitable, therefore, not artistic. It was cultural, but perhaps not artistic nor falling within the criteria—whatever they are for an art—because we have to depend on the concept of connoisseurship and that inevitably means you have to go to the artist to decide what is art. I do not think history has shown that to be necessarily the most reliable form of making a judgment.

We have noticed that the Catholic Church has broadened its grounds to include, say, lay government within the churches and we notice an approach, too, on the part of the students for more decision-making on the part of campus activities of one kind or another. Perhaps the Canada Council might benefit from some sort of assistance from people who although not normally artistic decision makers, perhaps would be more in a position to gauge the kind of thing that might be supported generally and broadly by the general public.

I am also—I have forgotten the gentleman's name across the table—concerned because of my background which has been in education, by the fact that a number of the juvenile, amateur or school groups have not received the support that I anticipated when the Canada Council first came into existence. When I compare the average kind of performance emanating from most groups, the standards of which in Canada compared to, say, the United States, I think that by and large we suffer. If we regard the kind of assistance given to the social sciences in terms of supporting scholars, scholarships and fellowships as being self-generating, therefore there seems to me—this is really my first question—as I look on page 54 at your doctoral fellowships, graphically, at least—I have not examined the figures—to be a very small proportion of this devoted to music, fine arts and architecture. The rest of it might be described as aid to the humanities, the social sciences and other things. History, English, economics, political science, philosophy, sociology, French, social psychology, anthropology—you can read this as well as I can—but from this list you see that the efforts directed to the doctoral fellowship students are not weighted in favour of the fine arts which happens to be a particular interest of mine. There may be good reasons for this; maybe there are not that number, in proportion, of qualified applicants.

To get back to the educational side of it, going through your grants to various people and their various areas of interest, I do not see anyone here who has received a grant to pursue further training in, say, a doctoral study in the field of education even though it may deal with the arts. My previous colleagues used to say that in order to get a Canada Council grant, if you were in education, you had to disguise it in some way. You had to dress it up so it did not appear—

The Vice-Chairman: Mr. Rose, may I interrupt you to remind you that there is a traditional way of proceeding in these committees. You are allowed to make a preamble and then you ask your questions, but your preamble is rather long. You are giving a testimony here.

Mr. Rose: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. May I ask then, does the graph on page 54 indicate a policy on the part of Canada Council in favour of doctoral fellowships in the humanities and social sciences as opposed to, say, in the arts?

Mr. Boucher: If I could answer briefly. You made a reference to our not assisting popular things in the arts. I think I will answer that question. This is not the test. We do not refuse to support.

The Vice-Chairman: Before too many members leave, I think I will have to ask if Vote 25 is carried, so that we will not have to bring it back here. Vote 25 is the grant to the Canada Council within the meaning of Section 20 of the Canada Council Act to be used for the general purposes set out in section 8 of the Act, that is part of the budget. Do I understand that it is carried?

Mr. Osler: Less $295?

The Vice-Chairman: Carried.

You may keep on, Mr. Boucher.

Mr. Boucher: The test of our making a grant or our not making a grant is not whether the art is popular or unpopular obviously, it is whether it is professional—it has to be professional—and whether it requires subsidy. A great deal of the popular arts are commercially viable, so they do not really require assistance.

With regard to music and fine arts, among doctoral fellowships the problem is that in the fine arts very few persons pursue studies beyond a Master's degree—there are very few who seek a Ph.D. so really few of them are eligible for a doctoral program. The answer would be that the ratio of awards to applications in the fine arts is certainly comparable to the ratio of awards to applications in any of the other disciplines. It is because there are few applicants from this particular area of studies.

With regard to education, it is true that for a long while the Canada Council declined to encourage applicants in the field of education, on the ground very largely that the Canada Council was not prepared to accept sole responsibility, to the exclusion of agencies like NRC and MRC, for the pursuit of studies in education. We were not quite prepared to say that education was exclusively a social science which would have to be supported by the Canada Council. This is a very wide field with very large departments across Canada, and as the funds available to us increased we began to open up and we have now amended his previous exclusion of studies in education over se, that is in pedagogy. People are beginning to apply and awards are being made now in education; this is recent.

Mr. Rose: Well, I am pleased to hear this, Mr. Chairman, because I felt this really was an oversight. I think all of us could agree that those people who are going on for advanced degrees in the various social sciences and humanities are ultimately going to be teaching, perhaps in a college—most of them anyway—and whether or not they have a Ph.D. or an Ed.D. is really a hairline distinction. I probably had another question or two, but I can see the mood of the committee at the moment, and so I will not prolong it. I would like to close by saying that I hope this policy will be expanded to include those people who are perhaps interested in pursuing a degree that is not necessarily a Ph.D. but perhaps an Ed.D. or some other degree, doctor of musical arts or something like that, so that we can— to return to my original point—continue this regeneration, perhaps at the amateur level, which it appears to me provides the foundation for the future audiences which your professionals will be playing to.

• 1320

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, a moment ago we purported to pass this vote. I do not think we can, we have no quorum.

The Vice-Chairman: I will ask somebody to move, when I am finished with my remarks, that we adjourn to the next meeting, and we will come back to this voting at the next meeting. Is that all right?

Mr. Osler: We do not have a quorum.

The Vice-Chairman: No, we do not.

[Interpretation]

I might put a slight suggestion forward. Following what was said by Mr. Dinsdale a moment ago, and the answer given by your colleague that you were not particularly anxious to go out soliciting funds and deprive other organisations of these sources of funds, could it not be possible for you to inform the public in general that you do exist, that your purposes are what they are, and that you are disposed to accept donations? I think this is not well known by the public general.

Mr. Boucher: We have done so and we have put literature into the hands of all trust companies, brokers and so on, regarding the transmission of bequests or gifts to the Canada Council.

The Vice-Chairman: I would therefore thank Mr. Martineau and his colleagues for having met with us this morning. Their evidence was extremely interesting.

[English]

Would somebody move that we adjourn now?

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, before this happens may I say just a few words?

The Vice-Chairman: Yes, go ahead.

Mr. Martineau: Just to assure you that we welcome this opportunity of meeting you and being here. It is not something that frightens us, it is something which we are happy about because we know we can be helped by the very questions which you put to us or the doubts which you express.

May I thank you for the way you questioned us and expressed your doubts, and for your great courtesy to us all.

The Vice-Chairman: You are welcome. Is there anybody to move that we adjourn?

Mr. Rose: I so move.

Mr. Osler: I second the motion.

Motion agreed to.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

The Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films, and Assistance to the Arts, met this day at 11:10 a.m. The Chairman, Mr. John Reid, presided.

Members present: Messrs. Corbin, Dinsdale, Fairweather, Gervais, La Salle, McCleave, Mongrain, Reid, Rose, Schreyer, Schumacher, Stanbury, Stewart (Cochrane) (13).

Also present: Mr. Duquet, M.P.

In attendance: From the National Arts Centre: Messrs. Hamilton Southam, Director General; Jean-Marie Beaudet, Director of Music; and Robert Montpetit, Director of Finance.

The Chairman announced the composition of the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure as follows: Messrs. Reid, Mongrain, Dinsdale, Rose and Matte.

Item 25 of the Canada Council was approved on the understanding that capital grant payments relating to Canada Council would be discussed when the Secretary of State appears before the Committee.

The Committee proceeded to the consideration of the estimates for the National Arts Centre Corporation.

The Chairman called Item 50, Payments to the National Arts Centre Corporation to be used for the purposes set out in the National Arts Centre Act, and then asked Mr. Southam to make an opening statement.

Mr. Southam, after introducing his officials made a statement relating to various aspects of the National Arts Centre including plans for artistic programs.

Mr. Southam was examined on his statement and supplied additional information.

The examination of the witness still continuing, the Chairman undertook to ascertain if the Secretary of State could delay his appearance scheduled for October 29 in order that examination of Mr. Southam could be concluded.

At 1:00 p.m., the Committee adjourned until 11:00 a.m. on Tuesday, October 29.

M. Slack,
Clerk of the Committee.

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I see a quorum. I think the first item of business should be that the cameras be removed. Thank you very much.

First of all I would like to announce the composition of the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure made up of Mr. Reid, Mr. Mongrain, Mr. Dinsdale, Mr. Rose and Mr. Matte.

At the last sitting the Committee examined officials of the Canada Council on Item 25 and the quorum dispersed near the end of the sitting and I would like to call for approval of Item 25 of the Canada Council now.

• 1110

Mr. Dinsdale: Before we give final approval, Mr. Chairman, there is one specific question I think should be brought before the Canada Council. I think perhaps the Secretary of State could deal with it when he is before the Committee. It is with reference to the capital grants program. Now with the proviso that we can discuss the capital grants program of the Canada Council when the Minister is before the Committee, I think we can pass Item 25 at this stage of our proceedings.

Mr. Stanbury: If Mr. Dinsdale is moving a motion to that effect, I will second it.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: Today we will consider the estimates of the National Arts Centre Corporation and I will now call Item 50.

H—National Arts Centre Corporation
50. Payments to the National Arts Centre Corporation to be used for the purposes set out in the National Arts Centre Act $1,078,000.

I would like to ask Mr. Southam, the Executive Director, to make an opening statement and to introduce his officials with us today.

Mr. Hamilton Southam (Director General of the National Arts Center): Mr. Chairman, gentlemen, I am very happy at this opportunity of meeting a second time with this Committee. The first time was on June 13, 1966, more than two years ago, with regard to the estimates for 1966-1967.

Unfortunately, the opportunity of meeting with you once again last year was not offered. We now have before us the estimates for 1968-1969. I do hope, if I may say so, that it will be possible for us in the future to meet more regularly. It is extremely important for the National Arts Center to establish and to maintain with you, Members of Parliament, a relationship based on understanding and confidence.

[English]

Gentlemen, judging from the newspapers recently, you have many questions to ask. I shall therefore keep my opening statement as brief as possible, but I will be asking for your patience for some 20 minutes.

The purpose of this statement is simply to up-date the information which I gave the Committee in June 1966, and the more recent information contained in my Chairman's Annual Report to the Secretary of State for the year ending, March 31, 1968. I see that the membership of this Committee has greatly changed since June 1966, but I understand that you have all received a copy of our Annual Report.

In any case I shall begin with a few remarks about the National Arts Centre building, but most of what I have to say will relate to the Centre's artistic program for which I have a more direct responsibility.

I shall commence with the building. As you will appreciate, it is being constructed under the direction of the Department of Public Works. It will be handed over to the National Arts Centre Corporation only after completion at the end of this year or early next year. It is proving to be very costly—more costly than any of us had supposed at the beginning.

The cost was given as $43 million in our Annual Report, and this was certainly the correct figure as at the end of March this year.

However, as you were recently informed by an answer to a question in the House by the Minister of Public Works, the present estimate—and we are now so near the end of the construction effort that we all believe this is the final estimate—is $46.4 million. This latest of a series of increases in the capital cost is cause for a very natural concern which we all share. I would ask, however, that any detailed questions about the cost of the building be directed to the Department of Public Works.

Lest you should think that I am passing the buck to another department on this sensitive issue, I do want to say that I take full responsibility for two important elements in the construction program: the original statement of requirements from the performing arts on the basis of which the building was designed, and the program of purchasing or commissioning of works of art to embellish the building. I would like to say something about each of these in turn. Let me explain also that I accept responsibility for them, not as Director General of the National Arts Centre, because these matters were settled before the Board of Trustees first met and appointed me to my present office in March 1967, but rather in my former office as Coordinator of the project from 1964 to 1967, during which time I reported to an inter-departmental committee.

First, about the design requirements. It is important to underline the fact that there has been very little change in the requirements for this building from the artistic point of view since the project was first put to the government in October 1963 by the National Capital Arts Alliance. One major additional requirement was for an underground garage and an underground tunnel thereto made necessary by the change of site from Nepean Point to Confederation Square. But there has been no essential change or addition to the artistic requirements. The project as stated in 1963 in The Feasibility Study, which was then put to the government, called for an opera house of 2300 seats, a theatre of 1100 seats, a studio seating 300, a salon seating 100, plus a restaurant and so on. From 1964 through 1966 these requirements were gone over by a group of government-appointed advisory committees but in that process they were merely confirmed and refined in detail. The theatre committee actually reduced the size of the theatre from 1100 to 800 seats. I can assure you that today, five years after the project was put to the government, that the building we shall soon be getting conforms almost exactly to the original requirements.

I must also say that it will realize our requirements splendidly. The National Arts Centre, as a place of performance for music, drama and the dance, will be a building which the world will admire, and of which all Canadians can be justly proud. This result has been achieved, as you will recognize when you visit the completed building, without ostentation or lavishness. The simple elegance of the exterior is matched by the sober good taste of the interior décor. I think that the Department of Public Works can assure you that the greater part of the cost of the building has gone into meeting the high technical standards we set for ourselves.

We were right to set these standards high. In this building, for the next century or more, performances can be given in the excellent conditions which should obtain in the capital of a great country. Last Monday evening l'Orchestre de Paris—now one of the world's great orchestras—gave a concert in the Capitol Theatre, and perhaps some of you were there. Gentlemen, not to speak of the acoustics, there was no room on the stage for ten of their musicians—a disgraceful situation in our capital city. The National Arts Centre will establish Ottawa at last as a capital city worthy of the name. I am not saying that it will enable Ottawa at a stroke to match London or Paris—I am saying that Ottawa will be able to look Helsinki, Warsaw or Brussels in the face. Two or three weeks ago I had the pleasure of showing the building to Monsieur Huisman, the Director of the Théâtre de la Monnaie in Brussels, which is the leading Belgian opera house. Like other visiting professionals from Europe, he found the National Arts Centre splendid, and has gone home to say so.

So much for the design of the building. Turning now to its embellishment, this too is a matter for which as Coordinator I was more responsible than the Department of Public Works. When the government decided to build the Centre, it decided to provide an amount of 3 per cent of its capital cost for its embellishment by the addition of works of art. As the construction cost rose, the amount available for the visual arts program rose also, until Treasury Board decided to cut it off at an amount of $500,000. The allocation of this sum for the purchase or commissioning of works of art has been decided over the last few years by one of the government-appointed advisory committees which I mentioned. This advisory committee, by the way, is the only one still in existence—the others were thanked for their pains and dissolved in September 1966. Our Annual Report describes the works which are or have been carried out by nine Canadian, two American and two French artists. I should be glad to answer any questions you may have about this matter. There appears to have been some concern that any foreign artists were invited to participate. To this I can only say that art knows no frontiers—there is no more reason to keep the French sculptor Zadkine out of the foyer than Verdi out of the opera house or Ibsen out of the theatre. Anyway, I am happy to inform you that the embellishment of the Centre with works of art will be completed on time and within budget.

Before leaving the building I would like to suggest that seeing is believing. Should the committee so wish I would be delighted to ask the Department of Public Works whether a tour could be arranged at your convenience, perhaps before you get down to detailed questions about construction costs, if that is what you plan to do.

Mr. Chairman, with your permission, I should now like to turn from the building to the artistic programs which we are planning to carry out within it, and which are, as I have mentioned, more directly my responsibility.

With regard to what might be called the artistic philosophy of the Centre there has been an important change since I last appeared before you in June 1966. That was before the National Arts Centre Act was passed and our board of trustees appointed. I then told the Committee that it was the intention:

...that the management organization of the Centre should be responsible only for the administration of the Centre, that it should not be directly involved in artistic production. We consider that in the first stage at least, artistic activities within the Centre should be carried on by other organisms, primarily by resident artistic organizations. We hope that it will be possible to revive a society to sponsor an orchestra, to create another society that will be responsible for professional theatre in English and in French and a third society, which will be responsible for the organization of a national performing arts festival to be held every year or so within the Centre.

At its first meeting our board of trustees decided otherwise. As you will read in the fifth paragraph of our Annual Report:

The Board immediately tackled, as a matter of first priority, the question of the proper way to organize the Centre's artistic programs. It had to choose between two concepts. Under the first, all artistic activities within the Centre would be managed by independent tenant organizations, each having its own board of directors, staff, policies and budget.

That was the concept which I told the Committee was the one that we would probably adopt.

Under the second concept, all artistic activities would be run by the Centre's own Board of Trustees who would recruit the musicians and actors required, and accept full responsibility for planning and financing the Centre's musical and theatrical life. Conscious of its responsibilities under Section 9 of the Act, the Board opted in favour of the second concept.

There has been one consequence of this decision which should be noted. It was a certain increase in the cost of the building, in an amount difficult to calculate exactly, but which I would reckon at something less than half a million dollars, to cover the cost of certain stage, office and musical equipment that the Centre must now provide for its own resident companies, which might otherwise have been supplied and brought into the building by tenant organizations.

In line with its decision to assume full and direct responsibility for organizing the artistic life of the Centre our board of trustees has taken four major decisions concerning respectively English theatre, French theatre, an orchestra, and the annual national festival. These decisions are explained in our annual report, but I would like to touch on each of them briefly, and bring the committee up to date on certain developments in the last few months, since the report came out.

Dealing with theatre first, more particularly English theatre, our negotiations with the Stratford National Theatre are continuing. While this internationally famous company will continue to have its residence in Stratford, it is now quite clear that it will come to Ottawa for an extended winter season every year beginning in the autumn of 1969. During its Ottawa season it will probably present six productions in our 800-seat theatre, two before and four after Christmas, each running for two weeks. In addition, the company will mount workshop productions in our studio theatre, and develop program for bringing theatre into the schools of the National Capital region.

[Interpretation]

With regard to our French-speaking company, which will be established in the National Arts Center and is now being constituted, it will be called "Le Théâtre du Capricorne, centre dramatique français du Canada".

Its general orientation was dictated, on the one hand, by the cultural needs of the national capital area and of the French-speaking people throughout this country, and on the other, by the requirements which are peculiar to a theater company which is called upon to maintain and develop the quality of French-speaking dramatic production in this country. These requirements and these needs will make of the Théâtre du Capricorne a permanent company which will operate throughout the capital area and also will travel throughout the country.

● 1125

As does the Stratford company, it will perform both for children and adolescents and for adults. The Théâtre du Capricorne will develop along a quinquennial line which, during the first three years, will be designed to develop actors and to foster cultural animation. It will increase its production and its trips throughout the country as it develops.

While I am at it, I might add that auditions for the recruiting of actors have now started in Hull, Montreal and Québec City. The first regular season of the company will begin in the fall of 1969.

Already, this year, the Théâtre du Capricorne was asked to carry on the production of the itinerant theatre of the National Arts Centre, "Le Portage", which had its first season this year. A musical pantomime, an entirely Canadian production, was presented by "Le Portage" in 40 parks of this area to more than 20,000 young people.

Next season, this theater, Le Portage will again come under the Théâtre du Capricorne.

[English]

Perhaps I may now turn to the National Arts Centre orchestra. As was mentioned in our Annual Report, this is to be a classical orchestra of approximately 45 musicians. Its conductor will be the distinguished Canadian musician, Mr. Mario Bernardi, presently one of the artistic directors of the Sadlers Wells Opera in London, England. Ours will be the only major Canadian orchestra with a Canadian conductor. We are planning to recruit the musicians on a forty-three week contract, calling them together for the first time in September next year. The process of auditioning is now in hand: auditions have already been held in Canada, and more are to come in this country, but there will also be auditions in the United States and in Europe in the next few months. To the maximum extent possible, consistent with quality, we plan to recruit Canadian musicians, not only those presently in this country but those who have had to expatriate themselves to find employment, and the outlook is distinctly promising. However, I would not like to rule out the possibility of the recruitment of a few foreign musicians resident in Canada, provided of course that they have met all the immigration and union requirements involved.

In any case we are aiming at an orchestra of superb quality, that will rapidly match the artistic quality of the Toronto and Montreal Symphony Orchestras, though only half their size. The present plan is that it should give two series of concerts, one orchestral, mainly with instrumental soloists, and another with vocal soloists and chorus when required. It will also give special concerts of chamber music and programs for children both in the Centre and in the schools of the national capital region. We hope, too, that it will very soon, with the assistance of the provincial authorities involved, be visiting various centres in Eastern Ontario and Western Quebec. Indeed, if and when it achieves the high artistic quality we are aiming at, we hope it will be invited in due course to tour Canada, the United States and Europe. Its size will enable it to travel with greater ease, and at less expense, than our large symphony orchestras, and perhaps even more than they it will bring the excellence of Canadian music to the attention of the world. Because more Canadians will be guest-conducting, more Canadian soloists will be singing or playing with this orchestra, and more Canadian works will be performed and even commissioned by this orchestra than has been the custom of most other Canadian orchestras heretofore.

A few words, Mr. Chairman, about our plans for an annual national festival of the performing arts. As you may remember, when the government announced its decision to build the Centre in December 1963, it also announced that a national festival would be held within it every year. After some study, our board of trustees concluded that in order to offer the Canadian public a diversity of entertainment, involving the best artists and companies available at home and abroad—I am now quoting from paragraph 13 of our annual report—a festival should be held in May of each year, alternating annually between a Canadian and an international festival, with the first or opening festival next year essentially Canadian. The festival theme, in both its Canadian and international manifestations, would be the encounter and mutual enrichment of the French and English cultures in North America. While never entirely excluding established works, the festival would be primarily a creative one, presenting and even commissioning new works.

The opening festival is planned to get under way on Saturday 31 May next with a hand-over ceremony at which the Centre will be thrown open for public inspection. On the following Monday, 2 June, a two-week festival will begin, running to Saturday, 14 June, in which some of our leading Canadian orchestras, and theatre and dance companies, and many other Canadian artists will participate. I am not in a position to give details of the program unfortunately because a few of the contracts have not yet been signed. However, we are planning to announce the program next month, and I am sure when you hear about it that you will find it as exciting as we do, and in every way worthy of what will be a great occasion.

• 1130

Our annual report mentioned that the following year's festival in May, 1970 would be international in scope. Our board of trustees has since decided, however, that in view of the present period of financial stringency, of which you are all aware, it would be prudent to postpone the development of an international festival. Hopefully—this is now under study—the same sort of national Canadian festival we are planning for next June can be held every May or June thereafter for the next few years. If not—if the money needed is simply not available—then at least every two years. It seems to us that the Centre will be making a major contribution to the arts in Canada, and to Canadian unity, in bringing together every year or two our best artists in their best performances.

This mention of Canadian unity brings me to conclude this opening statement by quoting from a speech which I gave to the Canadian Club here last March. If you will forgive me for quoting myself.

At the heart of the National Arts Centre,

I then said—and I think the thought is relevant to today's proceedings—is a deep desire to foster the right kind of patriotic sentiment in the right way, through the encouragement of art and music in this country, the recognition of native worth and talent...the Arts Centre will be a failure—they will have laboured in vain that built it—if it does not prove a rallying point, in our national capital, for the composers we need, the playwrights in both our languages, to show us how to understand and love this country as it deserves.

Mr. Chairman that is all I have to say just now. But by coincidence, yesterday afternoon I received in my office a letter from an expatriate Canadian artist now living in the United States which so well expresses the kind of ideas of the National Arts Centre which I have always tried to get across. With your permission, I would like to read it to the Committee. I think you might be interested.

I could identify the artist, it is Mr. Gene Lees who is a lyricist and lives in the United States and he is writing to a member of my staff who showed him around the Centre two or three weeks ago.

Dear Ken:

I want to thank you for showing me the National Arts Center. As an expatriate Canadian artist and critic, I found myself curiously moved by the experience. In my opinion, the Arts Center is going to alter the artistic atmosphere of Canada.

Some years ago, I met a representative of the Canadian government in Louisville. He said that I was the kind of person they were worried about—that I was part of the "brain drain". I told him, "I'll go home anytime. Just make it possible for me to make a living there."

One of the most deadly problems facing the Canadian artist is the condescension of his own countrymen. I remember that I once shared this distrust of things Canadian. It seemed that everything worthwhile came from the United States, England, or France and, like most people around me, I wouldn't patronize Canadian theater (not that there was much of it) or music.

Only in the graphic arts have Canadians been able to forge ahead. And there's a sound economic reason for it. The painter requires only one purchaser, and since there were, presumably, as many wealthy people per capita in Canada as anywhere else, the Group of Seven was able to happen early in the century. Composers, musicians, novelists, playwrights, actors, dancers, are in a different position. They require many buyers, since each buyer contributes only a few cents to the artist's survival. Because our population was small, and because the Canadian actor or musician could not get even his fair share of what audience there was—the audience being too busy patronizing American art—artists have been fleeing from Canada all through this century. Ironically, once the Americans or the British put their stamp of approval on the artist, it then becomes possible for him to make a living in his own country. Canadians (English Canadians, anyway) have just that much lack of faith in themselves and their own judgment. I have no doubt that Glenn Gould and Oscar Peterson would not have been as widely accepted as they are in Canada if they had not achieved triumphs in the United States first.

The list of artists lost to Canada because of the apathy and even suspicion they faced at home is very long. I am today considered a major lyricist by the Americans, but whenever I am interviewed, I insist on being identified as a Canadian artist. Maybe some kid in North Bay or Kamloops, cherishing ambitions like those I had, will say, "See, it can happen to a Canadian. We are not a dull and untalented people," and he will thereby skip those years of inferiority complex, in the face of British and American competition, that so damaged my early work. And yet I wonder how many Canadians know I am Canadian? How many of them know that Robert Farnon, one of the major film composers and one of the most imitated of orchestrators, is a Canadian? How many people know that the great American motion picture tradition of slapstick comedy had a good strong root in Canada, because Mack Sennett was a Canadian? Then there's Raymond Massey, Glenn Ford, Christopher Plummer, the late Jack Carson, Walter Pigeon, Alexis Smith, and God knows how many more—Canadians all. When the Academy Award was given to In the Heat of the Night last year, who knew that Norman Jewison, who produced and directed it, was Canadian? That's where our theatrical tradition has gone: to the States.

How many people know that Gil Evans, surely the most admired jazz composer since Duke Ellington, was born in Toronto? That Maynard Ferguson, who revolutionized jazz trumpet, was born in Verdun?

All of these people left because nobody cared and there was therefore no place for them to do their work. Henry Mancini has asked me to become his collaborator, to write songs for films and probably the theater. How much better it would be if, instead of moving to Los Angeles, I were returning to Canada and Robert Farnon were coming home from the Channel Islands to work on a show, a show that could be mounted in Canada and then exported?

I simply do not accept the thesis that Canada is too small a country to produce and support a distinctive and viable national body of art. And it is in its art that a nation finds its identity, the very thing so many people pay lip service to in Canada. Sweden has a population of only about six million people. We have twenty million. Why, then, does Sweden have a distinctive and successful film industry and we don't? It's simple: Sweden kept Igmor Bergman at home, and we let Norman Jewison escape.

There are economic implications to this situation that few people grasp. When you consider how much entertainment modern man consumes, and when you consider that Canada's entertainment is almost entirely imported, you see that this has significance to the balance of payments. Every time a Canadian buys a phonograph record, a royalty is paid to the songwriters and the publisher. Every time a record is played on the radio, a royalty is paid. Most of that money ends up in American banks. I myself draw a fair amount of money out of Canada every year for Canadian performances and sales of my songs. Think how much money flowed out of Canada for In the Heat of the Night. Yet if Jewison had been able to finance and produce the picture as a Canadian work, the money would be flowing into Canada. I don't think anybody realizes how much money it's costing Canada to keep driving its artists out.

I don't think anyone can foresee the impact the Arts Center is going to have on Canadian art. I only know that it will be enormous. It is startling to realize that the atmosphere of arty amateurism that has so long pervaded Canadian art should soon be dissipated, and the real professionals will be able to develop their skills at home, because the Arts Center has all the facilities they need, rather than running off to London or New York. I think the center is going to have its main impact on the next generation of artists. But it may accomplish its purpose in time for some of the members of my generation of artists, a generation now in its young maturity, to come home and complete our work on Canadian soil, where it always belonged.

The Canadian Pacific Railway was built because Canada needed it; despite the economic problems of building so long a line through so thinly populated a country, it was done, because a few visionaries saw that the country could not grow without a good railway system. Time has corroborated their judgment.

In my opinion, Canada is in the same situation now in terms of spiritual growth. We have a divided country. Something must make the people of Canada feel that they are one, with common interests and values that outweigh their differences. Only the arts can do that, and the Arts Center constitutes a major step toward the body of national art we have so long needed. I doubt that the average businessman will ever be made to see that, but it is so. The United States did not produce a Kern, a Gershwin, an Aaron Copland, a Hemingway, a Dos Passos because it had a strong sense of national identity. It has a strong sense of national identity because of Kern, Gershwin, Copland, Hemingway, Dos Passos and all the rest. This is why I think there is a strong parallel between the building of the Arts Center and the building of the CPR. We need it.

• 1140

I must add one more thing: I think the building is beautiful. Generally, I dislike modern architecture. I must say that on the whole, the modern architecture appearing in Canada is better than most of what I see in the States. And this building is a triumph. With its great gray masses and rugged surfaces, it reminds me of the outcroppings of rock in Northern Ontario or along the north shore of Lake Superior. Thank God it isn't Rockpile Federal, or Imitation American, but something truly grand and truly Canadian. It gave me pride.

Forgive this long letter.

And Mr. Chairman, forgive me for reading such a long letter...

but I did want to express some of my thoughts after seeing the project. Thank you again for showing it to me.

Mr. Chairman, that is all I have to say just now.

[Interpretation]

I would now be happy to attempt to answer as best I can questions which might be put to me.

[English]

The Chairman: Perhaps, Mr. Southam, you might introduce the gentlemen you have with you.

Mr. Southam: I would like to present Mr. Jean-Marie Beaudet, who is our Director of Music, and Mr. Robert Montpetit who is our Director of Finance.

I have other colleagues sitting nearby but I anticipate that most of your questions will relate to these two fields.

Mr. Mongrain: That is what I wanted to ask.

The Chairman: Fine. I have Mr. Stewart listed as the first questioner. Is there anybody else who would like to ask questions? Mr. Dinsdale.

Mr. Dinsdale: On the point of questioning, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we could proceed topically. We ran into trouble the other day when we were jumping from person to person, rather than topic to topic, and the discussion became less clear than it might otherwise have been. So that, if a questioner starts on one particular aspect on the presentation here this morning, perhaps others might be allowed to participate on a supplementary basis.

The Chairman: It would be fine as long as the Committee agrees that I can judge as to whether a question is a supplementary or not.

Mr. Dinsdale: And we would hope to exhaust each topic as we proceed rather than leaping backwards and forwards.

The Chairman: Is that agreeable to the Committee? Fine. The first questioner I have is Mr. Stewart.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I would like to make an observation regarding the estimates. In the estimates that were given to us—the blue book estimates—we have two figures for the National Arts Centre. I think that for the general interest perhaps that is sufficient, but for a Committee such as this I believe this is most inadequate. I feel that we should have a complete list of estimates and I hope there will be a complete list given to each member of this Committee. Is that possible?

The Chairman: Well, if you will check your estimates, the Revised Estimates in the first section, page 444, under the Department of the Secretary of State, you will find:

Vote 2—Construction or Acquisition of Buildings, Works, Land and Equipment—National Arts Centre

This will come under the jurisdiction of the Minister, who will be appearing next Tuesday and Thursday, and both questions relating to those aspects can be asked then. In the meantime, we will have to limit our discussion of the National Arts Centre to those items which Mr. Southam indicated.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Yes, that is fine, except that for our own personal knowledge it would be better—for example, administration and operating expenses are almost $1 million, and it is one figure. I would like to know all of the details of that, and I am sure all members of the Committee would, and similarly with the other. There is over $1 million here in the two items. I think it would be well to have that in detail.

The Chairman: Would you be able to provide that?

Mr. Southam: I would like, Mr. Chairman, some guidance from my Board on that question of what appears to be a question of principle—the budget. I take it that Mr. Stewart is asking us to produce the budget, the detailed budget of the National Arts Centre, which is approved each year by our Board, and which is simply resumed in the figures that you have before you.

You want precise details on how much is spent on the activities of each department, I take it?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I would not want to have every figure that you have in your bookkeeping system, but I think we should have topics such as for example salaries—what the salaries are of the officers of the National Arts Centre. We should know how much money is spent on travel and that kind of thing. Of course we can always ask these questions of Mr. Montpetit in the Committee anyway, but I think it would be much handier if members had this kind of information available.

The Chairman: Perhaps it would be agreeable if the Chairman were to meet with Mr. Southam afterwards and perhaps even, if necessary, go to the Board to work out some form of agreement which would provide this information to you.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): The annual report of the Canada Council gave us some very detailed information in this regard, and it was very helpful.

I would like to day, first of all, Mr. Southam, I do not think there is anyone who would disagree that there is a great need for an Arts Centre, and I do not think anyone would disagree that it will be a splendid Arts Centre in Ottawa. However, what is bothering so many people is that it would have to be very splendid even at half the price. I understand that the actual cost of the building and so on does not come under your jurisdiction. I am wondering, however, if there are other related things that perhaps you might be able to clarify.

One of the main charges from the public has been that there has been waste and extravagance. It was stated, for example, that the Centre is built to produce something as sophisticated and elaborate as Lincoln Center, and that the elaborate and sophisticated equipment that is going to be required for staging and so on, will come at high cost and therefore the maintenance will be at high cost, as will be the specialists involved. Therefore, it is not only a question of the cost of the equipment and so on that is going to go in there, but also the maintenance. Therefore, we are going to be faced with high costs every year in the operating of the centre.

I wonder if you could tell us something about that. Does this come under your field?

Mr. Southam: Yes, Mr. Stewart, it does. The Centre is well equipped and a good deal of the cost of the building, as the Department of Public Works will confirm, has been for excellent, even sophisticated, equipment for the stages, the lighting, the sound system, and so on. But I do not think that is what you are after. You are talking about high operating costs in later years.

We feel that the better the equipment, the more economical the operation is. But the cost of installation and the cost of operation is meant to express our feelings, and the feelings of the advisory committees that helped us, that Canadian artists ought to have as excellent performance conditions as are available. The size of the stages, the excellence of the lighting and sound equipment, are of the best standard available. We think this is an essential development, if our Canadian artists are going to realize their full potential.

For too long our actors and singers and dancers have been performing in the kind of conditions that obtain in the Capitol Theatre here, or in certain of our high schools. This has been one of the reasons the best of them have had to leave the country. We consider that by spending admittedly more money to build as perfect halls as we could, we are doing a great deal to put the emphasis where it ought to be, which is not on the physical elements but on the performances.

The Canadian artists who come and visit the Centre and who know what is being done for them are enthralled at the prospect that at last, at one place in Canada, they will be able to realize, to the full, their talent.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Fine.

The Chairman: Mr. Rose has a supplementary.

Mr. Rose: It is a supplementary to the question posed by Mr. Stewart. Mr. Southam, looking at the last page of your report, one is impressed by the size of your budget for an operation that has not yet really begun, in the sense of any performance. Your building and Centre has not opened yet. It comes to nearly $1 million—$808,000. That is quite an impressive figure, since many municipal communities of 10,000 people would perhaps be operating on a budget similar to this.

I think the question that I would like to have you enlarge on is that this is an operating budget for a venture that has yet to begin, really. What kind of operating budgets do you anticipate once you are in full swing?

Mr. Southam: I am quite happy to talk about this year's budget of $1,078,000, I think it is. The budget estimates for the first year of operation which is 1969-70 are presently being prepared in my office, but have not yet been discussed with the Treasury Board and I think until the estimates of 1969-70 come down I will not be in a position to discuss them. If you have questions about this year's budget which is before you, the $1,078,000 I would be quite happy to answer them. You would like to know why already $1,078,000 before we open?

Mr. Rose: That is essentially my question.

Mr. Southam: It does seem a lot and yet the Centre is a federal institution of the kind of the National Gallery, the National Library, the National Museum and so on, and our budget is in line with those of other federal institutions. It is high this year because we are about to open. We are recruiting our staff. If we waited to recruit our staff on the first of April next year we would simply not be ready for the opening on June 2. We are already recruiting and training staff for a smooth opening of the Centre on June 2 next. I can assure you that the staff is not very large. I think the total number is something of the order of 35 and they are all fully employed in preparing for the opening. However, part of that covers at least salaries which is an important element in this year's budget. Another element is the fact that we are already operating; we have already been bringing to Ottawa certain theatrical and musical productions—

Mr. Rose: You mentioned that in your report.

Mr. Southam: Yes, that is right—playing in the Capitol Theatre. We are already serving the Canadian Government, the Canada Council, the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Trade and Commerce, as a kind of government impresario. We are already organizing tours for them. I mention these two facts to indicate that although the building is not open we are now carrying on the kind of business that we will be doing after the building is open.

The Chairman: A supplementary, Mr. Dinsdale?

Mr. Dinsdale: In the financial statement on the back page, Mr. Chairman, there is one item, employees' travel, of some $55,000. That does not involve the transportation for performing groups or any activity of that kind. I presume that is the travelling of the employees who are directly associated with the Centre and I believe you stated they were some 35 in number.

• 1155

Mr. Southam: Mr. Dinsdale, that amount covers not only the travel of our own staff, but a great deal of travelling that was carried out for the Centennial Commission last year in connection with Festival Canada. We organized the Festival Canada last year for the Centennial Commission. We did an enormous amount of travelling across Canada on their behalf and, in fact, recovered some of this expense from the Centennial Commission at the end of the year.

I think that accounts for the greater part of the sum, but I must say our staff has also been travelling. We have gone—not we, in the sense of all of us—but members of our staff have gone across country to the United States and to Europe to audition as well as on business connected with the organization of our opening program and on business in support of activities of External Affairs and Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Dinsdale: Then the term "employees' travel" would be somewhat of a misnomer. It does not apply only to the immediate employees of the Centre.

Mr. Southam: No, it was travel by our employees, Mr. Dinsdale, but a lot of it was done on a commission basis for other government departments and to a certain extent we are a service organization. We do travelling and we perform other activities for other government departments.

Mr. Dinsdale: I think the point that Mr. Stewart raised might be helpful in this regard if there was a further breakdown just to see some of the specifics. It might take the "heat" off the Centre to a certain extent.

I have a supplementary, while I have the floor, Mr. Chairman. While it is impossible to estimate in terms too specific the operating budget for next year, would you think it would be smaller or larger than the figure that we have before us? Now, you say this is a particularly heavy operational year because you are anticipating opening. Is it possible to estimate what an operational budget would be on a continuing basis?

Mr. Southam: Yes, it will certainly be considerably greater. I would say between $2 and $3 million.

The Chairman: A supplementary, Mr. Schreyer?

Mr. Schreyer: I notice that the item of salaries is a major part of this first year's operating budget and I recall you said that about 35 people were employed in preparation for the official opening. I am rather curious to know what there needs to be done that would require 35 people to be preparing for a period of six or seven months. I can understand that there is a certain amount of preparation necessary, but 30 or 35 people so occupied for so long a period leaves me rather curious. Are they engaged at all in last-minute work on the building itself, the interior?

Mr. Southam: No. My staff is entirely concerned with the program of activities of the Centre and I have tried to explain that with regard to some of those programs we are already in business for other government departments and the Canada Council. Others are fully employed on preparing the programs for our own activities after we open. There is annexed to the report a sort of organogram of the Centre which shows you how it is broken down into six departments and I would be glad to explain what work each of those departments carries out, if you would like.

Mr. Schreyer: Perhaps just a little later. I have one other supplementary, Mr. Chairman.

In connection with the item "advertising and promotion" I notice an allowance there of very close to $100,000. Do you not use the services of the Queen's Printer at all in this connection? If not, do you place this account with one advertising agency or how is this arranged?

• 1200

Mr. Southam: No, we have no contact with any one firm for advertising and publicity. Our publicity is arranged on the basis of each part of the program that it relates to and I do not think we have turned to the Queen's Printer in the course of this year. Most of it has been carried out by a commercial printing establishment. But even if we did use the Queen's Printer we would have to pay for it of course.

The Chairman: A supplementary—Mr. Mongrain and then Mr. Rose.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: I would like to say that all these questions we are putting to you have nothing of a witch hunt about them. We are very proud of this national undertaking. In fact, we are very enthusiastic in some instances. I believe you deserve some congratulations for the work done so far.

I would, however, like to pursue the question put by Mr. Dinsdale a moment ago. I see that your expenses for the fiscal year ending March 31 are approximately $800,000. You noted that next year it might be $2 million. Do you foresee that your expenses over a five-year period will be increasing in the same proportion, or that there will be some stabilization around $1 million?

Mr. Southam: The answer to that is that our expenditures have increased very rapidly last year and this year, and they will increase again next year. But next year will be the first year of operations. I think that we will reach a normal level for the operations of such a centre. And when I say $2 or $3 million I hope and I really believe that we will be able to stay at that level for five years. It depends, of course. We cannot foresee now all the programs that the government will be asking us to organize in the future and all the work that we will be asked to do. But apart from that, I think that we can limit our needs for subsidies between $2 and $3 million for the coming years.

Mr. Mongrain: I also presume that your income for the financial year ending March 31, 1969, will increase next year and over the years, over a five year period, let us say. Do you have any idea, a vague idea at least, what would be your average income over this five-year period?

Mr. Southam: This week we are working on all the estimates for the next year and the five coming years, and if you let me have another few weeks to work on this, I will be able to give you more details. But it would be quite useless for me to try and guess.

Mr. Mongrain: When you say a few weeks, would it be possible for this Committee to expect some kind of a general estimation before we are called upon to discuss your next budget in the House, in two or three months, perhaps?

[English]

The Chairman: Yes, when the new estimates are tabled in the House of Commons.

Mr. Mongrain: Do you have any idea when that will be?

The Chairman: I have no idea at all.

Mr. Mongrain: Anyway, the sooner the better, I suppose.

The Chairman: That is right.

Mr. Mongrain: I think the Committee would be interested in having your reaction to this.

• 1205

[Interpretation]

We certainly have no intention of asking you for accurate figures over a five-year period, but even if these were part figures, I think it would be helpful to us if it were possible for you to do so.

[English]

That is all for the time being.

The Chairman: Mr. Rose, have you a supplementary?

Mr. Rose: I would like to identify myself with the remarks made by Mr. Mongrain. I hope that our questions will be searching but certainly not unfriendly. We represent constituencies and people whose priorities might be quite different from the priorities that perhaps are expressed in this meeting.

I would like to return to the question of the advertising and promotion figure of $98,000 which seems to me rather large since at the moment there has been very little that has been advertised and promoted—at least to my knowledge. I would like to have some detail on that. I realize that you have had some concerts and theatrical productions and that it reflects an income of some $35,000 but unless there is money spent on other types of promotion it seems, at least to this member of the Committee, that to spend $98,000 to advertise and promote something that brings an income of $35,000 perhaps requires some elaboration on your part, sir.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Rose, at this stage in the development of the National Arts Centre we have really two responsibilities in the field of publicity and information. One is the promotion of the few attractions that we have brought to Ottawa, whether theatrical or musical, and those are the ones you have mentioned. But the expense for that type of publicity is the lesser part of what we have been doing.

We have also the responsibility to explain as best we can the National Arts Centre to the people of Ottawa and to the people of Canada. To do this we have been producing a brochure and a quarterly bulletin called "Prologue" which is going out to a rapidly rising mailing list. I think the expenses for publicity cover both these fields of activities. But if I could say anything it is that we are continually receiving complaints that we are not advertising or explaining sufficiently well the National Arts Centre, and I think that is quite correct. I am very conscious of the fact that our public relations effort to date has been unsatisfactory and I take full responsibility for that. Not enough people in Ottawa know what we are doing and not enough people across the rest of the country know what we are doing. The reason why, I think, is that we are only now in the final stage of preparing our program. I felt that it was undesirable to rush into print—a glossy print across the country before we knew exactly what we were about to do. We now do, and as our Annual Report explained, and my remarks, we are now practically certain of the kind of programs we are going to carry out for Ottawa and for the country. I think the money that we will be spending on public relations will now increase.

There is another reason for our tardiness in this regard.

Mr. Rose: May I interrupt you here, Mr. Southam?

Mr. Southam: Certainly.

Mr. Rose: You keep using the word "explain". Do you really mean "justify"—

Mr. Southam: To explain is to justify.

Mr. Rose: I felt that you were under some pressure to justify by your remarks and this is why I wondered why you avoided the word.

Mr. Southam: I would be quite happy to swap words and to say "to justify" because it can be justified, Mr. Rose.

• 1210

As I was going to say, apart from the fact that we have held upon our program of justification until now, there has been a staff problem. We lost our very talented Director of Public Relations in June and it was only this week that we were able to replace him and our public relations staff really has not been properly organized. The two young people who filled in the gap did extremely well but until our new Director of Public Relations arrived early this week, they were not operating at full potential.

The Chairman: Were there supplementary? Mr. Schreyer and Mr. Mongrain.

Mr. Schreyer: I heard you say, sir, that during construction, the decision was taken to reduce, by 300 or 400, the seating capacity of the opera house or the theatre, I am not sure which.

Mr. Southam: The theatre.

Mr. Schreyer: Was this decision taken reluctantly and at what saving? Can you give us some idea as to the saving involved?

Mr. Southam: No, the decision was taken on the grounds of artistic policy. When the National Capital Arts Alliance initially put up this project to the government in 1963, the artistic advisers they had at that time suggested the theatre should seat 1,100 people because most of the theatrical activities would be by visiting companies—companies from Montreal, Toronto or elsewhere—and companies who are travelling require larger theatres to help them meet the added expense of travelling. But when the government decided to go ahead with it and set up advisory committees—there was one on the theatre chaired by Jean Gascon together with other distinguished artistic directors—they said this building should have resident theatre companies to give it, as Mr. Gascon expressed it, a heart that beats and a resident theatre company mounting one production, not just for one night, but maybe for a week or two, requires an ideal sized theatre in the order of 800 seats.

Mr. Schreyer: So that it was not a construction cost-cutting operation at all?

Mr. Southam: No, I would suppose that the cost was reduced somewhat by the decision, but the exact amount, I think, would have to be reckoned for you by the Department of Public Works.

Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: I suppose that you do not foresee the day when you will have sufficient income from your activities to cover your everyday expenses; I am not talking of mortization and such other matters but of our everyday expenses. I suppose that you do not see that you will be able to meet them some day?

Mr. Southam: No, I am afraid we will never be able to do so.

Mr. Mongrain: Then, may I...

Mr. Southam: Could I explain this never?

Mr. Mongrain: Yes, that is what I am asking you.

Mr. Southam: We will have our orchestra and our two theatre companies. There is no orchestra in Canada and no professional theatrical company in Canada or elsewhere that can cover its expenses from the income at the box office. And that is why the Canada Council decided to subsidize orchestras, theatrical companies and dancing groups as they do in Europe and the United States.

Mr. Mongrain: And of course, it is up to the Canada Council to do that, but are you able to foresee what would be the proportion of incomes? Do you think it could be 20, 25 or 30 per cent of the expenses?

Mr. Southam: I apologize once again, but if you will give me a week or two to finish the work, I will then be able to answer your question; and it interests me as much as it does you.

Mr. Mongrain: The reason we ask these questions is that some Canadians throughout the country do not really know what you are doing and are not well informed about your activities. We hear comments that are not always very favourable because they are made by people who are not fully informed about things and therefore, we are most anxious that the entire Canadian people should realize the value of what you organize. Your programs are very exciting for all Canadians, when looked at closely, and this is why we ask all those questions.

[English]

Mr. McCleave: The item of rent, $63,046, will that be a recurring item or a non-recurring item?

Mr. Southam: This will be non-recurring. We are presently in rented premises at 151 Slater Street. We hope to move into this new building in February or March and, therefore, this item would not recur.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, if this question is not in the general stream, perhaps it could be answered later. Will there be opportunities for local theatrical groups such as The Neptune in my own city and, I am sure, the theatres in Vancouver, Winnipeg and the like to come and show their wares in the National Arts Centre?

The Chairman: Perhaps we could hold that until later.

I have one question I would like to ask. There have been some fears that the Arts Centre will be a "white elephant", that the people of Ottawa will not come out in sufficient numbers to support it and that there will not be sufficient audiences at many of the productions mounted. We are a reasonably small area around Ottawa. What were the Centre's thoughts on that problem?

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I probably speak as a partial witness on this. I am from Ottawa and I have a very high opinion, indeed, of my city. Ottawa is a city which has unusual advantages for this kind of operation. It is true the metropolitan population here—when I say Ottawa, I mean Ottawa and Hull—is in the order of half a million at the moment, but it is, I believe, the most rapidly growing city in eastern Canada, proportional-wise. It will reach a million within our generation—the next 30 years. I think this is the NCC prediction, but it is not only numbers that count.

The educational standards in this city, with respect to other cities, are the highest in the country. The proportion of university educated or high school educated people in this city is the highest in Canada. The average family's income, I believe, is very nearly the highest in the country. We have no concentration of industrial or private welfare which bigger cities may have and I think that is one reason the National Arts Centre here is being built by the government, our chief employer, and not by a growing company or a wealthy patron of the arts. They just are not here. But the fact is that average incomes are high here. I am giving you the profile of Ottawa which I think is very encouraging for an enterprise of this kind, but the figures are also encouraging.

Last year, as I explained to the Committee, we organized the Festival Canada program for the Centennial Commission. This was a touring of some 15 or 20 Canadian companies right across Canada. Naturally, we followed the box office figures with great interest. In Ottawa they were higher than in any other city. I am not counting Montreal which was in a rather exceptional condition last year, but the proportion of seats sold for Festival Canada programs throughout the year was something over 80 per cent. And this is continuing this year.

As I explained, we have been bringing some attractions to Ottawa, occasionally, to the Capitol Theatre and to mention only one of them, we brought Stratford here for a week in March. They had played previously, I think, for two weeks in Montreal, box office in the order of 60 per cent. Here in Ottawa, for a week, it was 92 per cent in a 2,300 seat theatre. They will be playing, when they come here, in our 800 seat theatre.

This week on Monday night I went to the Orchestra de Paris. Mr. Crowe's Tremblay series brought it to the Capitol Theatre Monday night and it was sold out. Last night I went back again—another symphony orchestra, the Montreal Symphony Orchestra—and I think it was something in the order of three-quarters filled. This series had been filled. The Montreal Symphony Orchestra last year had been sold out. This year it was somewhat reduced, as you may remember there was a threat of a cancellation of the season owing to union difficulties which were only cleared up at the last moment. I believe that is the explanation why this opening night was not sold out as it had been last year.

I have every confidence we will be developing programs which will be supported by the Ottawa public.

The Chairman: Your calculations are that the productions mounted here will be seen by the people in the city, that there will not be a great number of empty seats and it will not become a white elephant.

Mr. Southam: Yes. This, I might add in conclusion, is the experience of every centre of this kind. I think if there are any Montrealers here they can bear me out that the creation of the Place des Arts and the three theatres there—the great hall and the two theatres—has led to an enormous increase in audiences for the Montreal Symphony and for the Théâtre du Nouveau-Monde and for the Rideau Vert.

Mr. Mongrain: Maybe you have 265 boosters in the House—do you know that? They will bring you people from all over.

The Chairman: A supplementary from Mr. Dinsdale?

[Interpretation]

Mr. La Salle: Do you feel that from an economical point of view, it would have been better to build the Centre in Montréal or Toronto?

Mr. Southam: Place des Arts is already built. The idea of building another one in Montréal seems to me little...

Mr. La Salle: I said Montréal or Toronto.

Mr. Southam: O'Keefe Centre is already there with three thousand seats; and Massey Hall, in Toronto already has the facilities we are putting up here.

[English]

The Chairman: Do you have a supplementary, Mr. Dinsdale?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, Mr. Chairman. You did not mention the prospects of patronage from the influx of tourists who come to Ottawa to visit the nation's capital. We also have all sorts of protest groups that come here from time to time looking for entertainment in the evening. Have you tried to project the percentage of patronage that you might derive from that group? I am sure that tourism in Ottawa is one of the great industries as witness the Changing of the Guard attendance every morning, and there is a ready-made audience. Have you any idea how deeply you can tap that population?

Mr. Southam: We are very conscious of the different audience that comes here in the summer and we are making plans to measure our strength with it next summer. It is true, I think, that Ottawa expects to receive...I think it received this last year something like 800,000 visitors and the number is expected to increase this year. It is also true that having seen the Changing of the Guard ceremony in the morning and having visited the National Gallery in the afternoon, there is nothing else for them to do. We think there is an enormous potential there.

We plan a summer program next year, which will be the first summer we will open, to cater to their tastes. We take it that their tastes being on holiday as they will be and with the children along, will be for a lighter form of entertainment. We propose offering an interesting program of entertainment for them during this summer. That program, too, will be announced next month when we announce our opening program.

I do not know whether you have heard about the Ontario theatre study, but the Ontario Council of the Arts and the Canada Council have organized a year-long study of theatre in Ontario which is about to be published. I do not think it will be indiscreet of me to mention one or two things that it is going to say.

One is that they draw particularly to the attention of the National Arts Centre this summer audience. They recommend that really, from the vantage point of Toronto, we would be better advised to develop a summer program than a winter program. We happen to disagree because we live here. But I think what we are trying to do is produce a winter program of activities by our resident companies aimed at the metropolitan area of the national capital region, and quite a different summer program for these tourists.

As for protest groups, Mr. Dinsdale, I would prefer them, as I think they would prefer, to be left to you and the other side of Parliament.

The Chairman: Mr. Rose and Mr. Schreyer.

Mr. Rose: I would like to comment on the Chairman's question. Whether or not this building or centre is a white elephant, or whether it is likely to be, is irrelevant, is it not, because it is here. It would appear to me that regardless of anything else it would depend upon the production standards and the attractiveness really to a large extent.

I hope I misunderstood you though, Mr. Southam, when you said that you based your predictions of possible audience acceptance on the fact, or at least partially, on the acceptance of your programs to date, which have been put on in the Capitol Theatre or some other centres. I would like to ask whether or not you might feel this is a bit of the well-known Hawthorne effect. In other words, because it is new it will therefore be attractive, and that this venture runs a possibility of losing or withering away its local interest as time goes on.

Mr. Southam: Well, Mr. Rose, that has not been the experience in Montreal at the Place des Arts, as I think the Montreal Symphony could testify. It is quite true, there is a lot of excitement generated by a new building and we plan to cash in on that. But during the same period—the first two or three years—we will be engaged in a very professional audience-building program for our music and theatre on a long-term basis. We believe there are excellent techniques for building and maintaining audiences for a musical theatre, beginning with children and young people, reaching not only the black tie set and Members of Parliament, but all groups in the...

The Chairman: I do not think we qualify under that.

Mr. Southam: ...community; the unions, the groups in the suburbs and so on. These techniques are well known and well proven. We have every reason to hope, I think, that by the time the first flush of enthusiasm is over, these programs will be coming forward to take up the slack.

Mr. Rose: You mentioned the income and educational level of the general area, and you based some of your predictions on those figures or those facts. As you have no possible way of comparing theatre attendance here, have you compared the interest shown in Ottawa in related cultural things; such as art gallery, library, and museum attendance by the same group of customers. It seems to me that would be one way of possibly predicting the acceptance, if, for instance, the use of the art gallery here was greater than it was, say, in an area of lower income or lower educational standards.

Mr. Southam: That is an interesting suggestion which we will take account of. We have not done that yet but that is something which I think we would like to look into.

Mr. Rose: I think it would be more accurate perhaps, or would add to the accuracy.

Mr. Southam: Yes. I could say one thing about the National Gallery and that relates a bit to the choice of site for the National Arts Centre. I think everyone is aware that when the National Gallery was moved, from the bottom end of Elgin Street, from the old and quite unsatisfactory building, up towards the centre of town—just across the street from us, by the way—into a building which is by no means perfect, but which has represented a great improvement, the Gallery attendance rose dramatically as you can verify for yourself any day that you go there.

The Chairman: Mr. Schreyer and then Mr. Stewart.

Mr. Schreyer: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, my question should be directed to Public Works at some other time, but I would invite Mr. Southam's comment. I believe it is a widely held impression in the minds of many people, when one brings to mind the relative sizes of the new art centres in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and this one, bearing in mind, too, such factors as acoustics, the whole aesthetics of the structure and so on, the suitability for the performing of arts, bearing all this in mind, that the cost of the construction of this building is disproportionately more expensive.

• 1230

The Chairman: I am going to rule that question out of order on two grounds. First of all, it is a new subject when we are dealing with the supplementaries and, second, I think that properly comes under Public Works. The Minister will be appearing on Tuesday and since the estimate comes under him, I think you could appropriately ask it of him.

Mr. Schreyer: I am not questioning your ruling, but do you not agree that it would be helpful to have the comments of Mr. Southam on this?

The Chairman: Well, perhaps you could ask it after Mr. Stewart and Mr. Dinsdale, who want to introduce new subjects, and I will mark you down next.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Chairman, I think the idea of supplementaries is a good one but I think we have gone on for an hour and a half on things that have nothing to do with the original question I asked.

The Chairman: You asked about financing and most of the questions have dealt with this.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Finance is a very broad subject. I should like, as somebody brought it up and as there are a number of observers here from the local area, to go into the subject of local involvement because this is something that is very interesting to everyone. From the very beginning of the organization of the Arts Centre and even before it had its beginnings in the National Capital Arts Alliance there has always been this question of local involvement, and the impression that has been left with some of the people locally is that they were not wanted in the new Arts Centre. In fact, I recall three years ago the impression that was left with me was that the Arts Centre was going to be of such excellence that none of the local things, such as the Little Theatre, and so on, would be worthy of it. Whether this is rightly or wrongly interpreted, it is an interpretation that is quite widespread in Ottawa and I think it would be well if we could perhaps clear this up.

I know, for example, Mr. Southam, that your assistant did a study a few years ago on government help and interest in culture in other countries, which is something that I believe was quite pertinent because the history of other governments—in Europe particularly—involving themselves in the art and taking in the local scene is very important to us. I wonder if that study is still available or if it was just a personal document which is not around.

Mr. Southam: I take it you are referring to a study by Mr. Kidd who was then on my staff?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Yes, I believe you had asked him to do a study.

Mr. Southam: That is right. It was intended at the time for the guidance of the co-ordinator's office, as it then was, and it was helpful in that connection. There was no thought at the time of publishing it, but I cannot for the life of me think why it should not be made available.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I am just wondering if perhaps it contains some of the things that would be pertinent regarding this local involvement.

Mr. Southam: I have not read it these last three years and at first blush I do not think I could tell you how relevant it would be. I would have to look at it again.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I know that some time ago it was discussed at a meeting of the National Capital Arts Alliance, and then in February of this year a letter was sent to the local organizations—I received one—together with a form to fill out to see how many productions would be put on a year, and so on; what it would cost, and all the rest. I do not know what has become of that survey. I understand that another survey was going to be done and I see in your annual report that there is mention of this local involvement. My specific question would be this. What action have you taken over the years to implement participation by local groups?

Mr. Southam: First of all, the whole idea for a national centre for the performing arts came from local groups. The National Capital Arts Alliance, which raised $25,000, and had this feasibility study made, consisted of representatives of 55 or 60 local groups. Their report recognized, however, that the kind of building they felt was necessary for the community could not be financed by the community's own resources, and this is why we decided to present it to the federal government as an appropriate centennial project for the national capital region. The government accepted it on those terms. Then there was a period of three or four years, which is now drawing to a close, when in the nature of things the building had to be built by the federal government and it is quite true that the National Capital Arts Alliance then drifted off into a dormant state while the federal government and the Department of Public Works was getting on with the project.

I recognize the need, and I have all along, to re-involve the community and we are about to do so, and I do not think we could have done so before now. As I have tried to make clear not only to this Committee, but any time I have had the pleasure of meeting local groups, this is a building for artistic activities of the best Canadian standard, which is a professional standard. This is not essentially a building for amateur activities in the artistic field. It is for this reason that we are creating a professional orchestra and two professional theatre companies as the essential part of the program. It is for this reason that perhaps as a second priority we plan to invite other professional Canadian orchestras and theatre companies from across the country to come here. We have something in our budget for the first year, and for later years of operations, to allow us to invite these companies. I think that answers the question from the other side of the table.

In the third place, and I am not establishing these as rigid priorities, but we believe that professional impresarios such as the Tremblay Concerts Ltd. series, and there are two or three other impresarios here and in Canada, the United States and in Europe, who will be bringing professional artists in various fields from other countries. We have been looking at our program and it is really only in the last few weeks that we have been able to get to the stage of beginning to program activities on certain dates within our halls. We are beginning to doubt if there will be much time left over for local groups; nevertheless we plan to do this, although it may be difficult to allow such time. It was for this reason that we sent out a questionnaire to local groups earlier this year about their activities.

Some local groups, you know, are not interested in appearing in the Centre. You mentioned the Ottawa Little Theatre. Oddly enough, the Ottawa Little Theatre never joined the National Capital Arts Alliance and despite repeated invitations never took part in this project, and for a very good reason. They have a theatre of their own of which they are justly proud. I happen to be a supporter of the Ottawa Little Theatre and I recognize that they were probably right about that.

We have been in touch with other organizations; with the Theatre Foundation of Ottawa, for example. We have had a kind of up and down relationship. If you judge by the papers, they are not very pleased with us at the moment, but the record shows that they have been involved in the project from the beginning. We have been in touch with them. We have been helping them in various ways. They did come forward with a proposal for a summer theatre program which we are still discussing with them, and we are reserving time for the Theatre Foundation of Ottawa during next summer's program for some light summer theatre. We have not heard from them recently but the offer is there.

The Orpheus Operatic Society of Ottawa Inc., which produces a couple of musicals a year, I hope will also appear if they—I almost say if they dare—take the challenge to move out of a high school auditorium into our hall. I am sure time can be made available for them. Obviously they will be matched against very high standards of performance and I hope they take the dare.

The Ottawa Choral Society and various church choirs, if they want to and if we can find time, will be programmed in the Centre.

There is the Pro Musica Society of Ottawa which brings, as you know, chamber groups here. We have been in discussion with them and time is being allowed for them in the theatre. Do I answer your question or...

• 1240

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Yes. You said it was professional people that we wanted in the Centre and that if there is any room left over perhaps local amateur groups could be accommodated if they wish to take the chance. Is that correct?

Mr. Southam: Yes, that is correct. I might say we would encourage them to take the chance.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Yes. Now supposing local groups wish to take that chance. Can you tell us at this stage of the game how much it would cost them? Would it be feasible from the financial point of view? As you know, most of these organizations run on a shoe-string anyway and cannot afford large sums of money for a hall. Would the hall be out of their reach from that point of view?

Mr. Southam: The policy on hall rentals—the price that we will be charging for the Centre, for the opera house, the theatre and the studio—has not yet been approved by my Board. I hope it will be settled at the Board meeting in December, and I would then be glad to give you the specific answers.

I can already tell you what our thinking is at the staff level, and that is that we ought to charge all comers the same rental for our halls. And this is part of the challenge for an organization like the Orpheus Society—I do not know what they pay at the technical school or Fisher Park or whatever it is. We will be asking them to pay, I think, what professional companies would, but we also think that if they raise the extra few hundred dollars per performance they might increase their audiences by an amount which would help them pay that off.

This is the line we are taking for music groups. They are sure that once their performances are carried on within the Centre, their membership will increase by an amount which will cover the extra cost.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): So you will not grade it. You are not likely to grade it for the amateur groups.

Mr. Southam: I think that would be wrong in principle, and I emphasize I am speaking for the staff, for myself. My Board has not looked at this, and my Board has representatives of the local community on it and they may over-rule me on this, but this is a building which is built by our taxpayers from coast to coast as a national showcase of the best kind of performance of which this country is capable—and that is a very high standard indeed—and I would think it would be wrong if local organizations here were given facilities within it that are denied to local organizations in other Canadian cities.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I see. I think it is well to mention that local groups who do not use the Capitol Theatre—of course, the Capitol Theatre is most inadequate in any case—do not use it because it costs $1,000. And to give some idea of the kind of figure we are talking about, because most people on this Committee are not from Ottawa, the comparative figures in the High School of Commerce, for example, which has a superior auditorium, is something like $100. It is $85 plus $25 for rehearsal and so on.

In other words, it would appear to me that if these local groups cannot afford to go into the Capitol Theatre, inadequate as it is, they certainly would not be able to afford to go into the National Arts Centre.

Mr. Southam: I think the situation varies from group to group. When I think of the Orpheus Society I have in mind what happened in Los Angeles when the music centre was built there. There is an organization in Los Angeles, a bit like the Orpheus Society, which has had 50 or 60 years of producing musical comedies.

When the music centre was built they took the grave decision to raise their standards, hire a professional as a permanent director and they moved into the music centre and they are doing extremely well there. But it was really by graduating into a higher class of performance, and I think this is in the interest of the Ottawa public.

I do not think that the local organizations here represent the interests of the entire community. I have a high respect for amateurs—I am an amateur musician myself. I play the piano badly and the recorder worse, and as a recorder player I have been a member of a little group of amateurs who meet occasionally and play rather squeakily together, but it would never enter our heads that because we were a worthwhile group of recorder players we demand the facilities of the National Arts Centre.

Now, some of the local groups at the top level, like the Orpheus Society, the Pro Musica Society, the Ottawa Choral Society and so on, I think are within jumping distance of that kind of standard. I hope they make it, and we will encourage them. We may charge them the same rentals but I think there are other ways in which we can help them. We have a number of professionals on our staff, people who are skilled in productions, people who are skilled in public relations, and I hope that if they decide to rise to the National Arts Centre standard that we can help in other ways than in subvention.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I agree, Mr. Southam, that you would not want to make the Centre available to every Tom, Dick and Harry simply because he wants to perform something. But I think on the realistic side of things, do you not agree that there are half a million people in this area who are interested in hearing and seeing local things? And more practical than that, the half million people of this area are the people who are going to be going to that place, who are going to be filling the auditoria, and if indeed we want the auditoria filled, do you not agree that your policy will have to be fairly large in order to satisfy the public?

Mr. Southam: I think, Mr. Stewart, that the public generally wants to see, and is prepared to pay for, very good performances. With all respect to amateur performers, professionals perform better, and I think we owe it to this community to produce in these excellent facilities excellent performances, and I am sure the public will come to them.

As for amateurs, I am sure there always will be, if they are not prepared to improve their standards, other halls available, and the small audiences of friends and well-wishers which they usually attract will continue to be attracted to those other facilities.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Fine. Well, it will be interesting to see if the hall will indeed be filled.

You mentioned on two occasions, Mr. Southam, and therefore I come back to it, the impresario function of the Arts Centre, and as you explained earlier, the original idea was that the Centre would not be an impresarios but would make use of other impresarios in the area, and that was changed because the Board of Directors decided that you would go ahead as an impresario organization as well and hire various things.

As is pointed out in the report, and you mentioned it as well, you have already brought some organizations, theatre and music, to Ottawa yourselves. I would like, and I think members of the Committee would find it interesting, if we were able to have a comparison between the cost of what the Arts Centre brought here under their own aegis, and what was done, for example, in Festival Canada during centennial year? I know that Festival Canada, for example, was able to do a very good job at a reasonable cost.

I have the impression that things that have been brought here under the aegis of the Arts Centre cost much, much more and I should like to know how much more, and this Committee would like to know that. If the Arts Centre would be so kind as to give us a brief on this, a study of this, I think it would be most helpful.

I will give one example in order to illustrate why I think the Committee should have these comparisons. I believe that the impresario function is not a function that should be within the Arts Centre and I think that this is being proven. I think, for example, that the National Youth Orchestra, which played to a full house in Montreal, came to Ottawa and played to half a house, went to Toronto and played in a full house, and yet every other year has played to a full house in Ottawa.

I wonder if this is not significant because it is the Arts Centre that did the impresario work in bringing the National Youth Orchestra to Ottawa. Do you think, Mr. Southam, you could give us something that will allay our fears in this regard, either convince us the Arts Centre should be an impresario or otherwise?

Mr. Southam: Yes, Mr. Stewart, I will do my best to answer that question. Our impresario function—and I do not know that impresario is the right word, there may be a better one—is a double one. Apart from the activities of our own resident companies, part of this function will consist in bringing other Canadian attractions into the Centre and in many cases these are attractions that are not interesting to a commercial impresario. Le Théâtre du Nouveau Monde and Le Théâtre du Rideau Vert had not been here for years. They were unable to come on their own, and no commercial impresario was interested in bringing them.

Stratford asked us to arrange their appearance here in the Spring, and again we took it on. I am unaware whether they asked a commercial impresario to do it or not. Generally speaking we are interested in bringing into the National Arts Centre when it is built Canadian performances even if they cannot pay their way commercially. We believe that the National Youth Orchestra and these theatre companies should come here at our invitation and if there is a loss involved it should be charged to our budget as part of our responsibility to develop the performing arts here, and in assisting The Canada Council elsewhere in the country.

I have not got before me the statistics for each of the performances that you mentioned. I did explain that when we brought Stratford here the box office was 92 per cent as against 60 per cent in Montreal. I believe it is incorrect to say that the National Youth Orchestra played to full houses everywhere except here. The National Youth Orchestra, which is a splendid orchestra, had a rather bad time this year everywhere it went, and the situation in Ottawa was as good as it was elsewhere. There will probably always be, as I said in answer to a question of Mr. Mongrain, an element of subvention in our activities in presenting Canadian attractions until the Canadian public grows to appreciate them as much as it does some American touring productions.

That is one side of our impresario function—bringing things into the Centre here. The other is as the servant of the Canadian government. The Centennial Commission asked us to organize a Festival Canada tour last year. You seem to compare the figures for last year favourably with those this year, but we organized them both. If there is any credit to be given to the success of the Festival Canada program last year, I think our Program Department deserves it.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I think it should be noted, Mr. Southam, but...

Mr. Southam: May I complete my remarks, Mr. Stewart? The other part of the impresario function is when the Canada Council invites us to tour attractions across the country. This year, for instance, we are sending Les Jeunes Comédiens, the young troupe of Le Théâtre du Monde, through the Maritime Provinces and the Western Provinces, and the results have been extremely good to date.

We also serve, on request, the Department of External Affairs. Three years ago at their request we organized the Canadian participation in the Commonwealth Arts Festival in London. We sent four major Canadian companies to London. This year we organized a very successful tour of Les Feux-Follets in Europe; next spring, again for External Affairs, a tour of Les Grand Ballets Canadiens in Europe. The Department of Trade and Commerce, which is responsible for participation in world fairs, has invited us to organize the Canadian participation in Osaka in 1970 and we have this in hand too.

This is our impresario function; partly the showcase function within the Centre inviting Canadian attractions, partly the function of sending Canadian companies across the country or abroad at the request of other government agencies and departments.

The Chairman: We have time for one more question, and I shall recognize Mr. Dinsdale.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): There is a mise au point I would like to put there if you do not mind.

The Chairman: Well, so long as it is very brief because we have only five minutes.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Southam mentioned that I was comparing something that had been done both by the Arts Centre in that on the one hand there was a professional impresario looking after it, on the other hand there was not. That is the difference I was trying to make. The point is that I believe professional impresarios should be looking after them. That is why I put it in that context. Now, it is very true that it was done under your aegis, but the point is that on the one hand it was done with a professional; on the other hand, it was not.

An hon. Member: May I make a mise au point to a mise au point?

The Chairman: Yes, you may, and then I am going to recognize Mr. Dinsdale.

Mr. Mongrain: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized when Mr. Southam has finished.

Mr. Southam: I think what you are referring to is the success of Festival Canada in this area last year. The arrangement for Festival Canada was that our responsibility was to find local sponsors across the country, and this we did. The local sponsor here was the Canadian Festival of the Arts, a local group, and it is quite true that they had the advice of a professional impresario in this city, and he did an extremely good job, and so did the local group.

Other sponsors across the rest of the country perhaps were less successful, but we had a professional staff which organized these appearances everywhere and I think where these performances were successful, our professionals deserve as much congratulation as local professionals and where they failed, well, we failed too. But all in all, the Festival Canada program was a professional one at our level and at the local level and was a success.

Mr. Mongrain: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I should like to move that we beg permission from the House to sit this afternoon. This is very interesting and I do not think we should rush to close this meeting without giving a chance to all members to ask their questions. If I have a seconder, I would like to move that.

Mr. Dinsdale: We cannot move anything; we do not have a quorum.

Mr. Mongrain: Well, if we do not move anything at least let us make up our minds to come back.

Mr. Dinsdale: I would like to speak to the point of order. We have been meeting for almost two hours here, and I thought we had decided at the commencement of our deliberations this morning that we would exhaust each topic subject by subject and pass along the privilege of introducing topics between the members as they indicate their desire to question.

Now, only one member has had the opportunity this morning to ask any questions and the rest have had to sneak in on supplements and, as a result, we have lost our quorum. I think this situation is going to persist unless everybody finds it possible to participate.

Unfortunately we cannot function as a Committee now because we have lost our quorum and we cannot deal with resolutions.

Mr. Mongrain: We have got to decide something; are we going back to our offices now and let the matter stand? Of course, I do not know whether these gentlemen are available this afternoon.

Mr. Dinsdale: We have to continue this. I agree we have to continue this; we are just beginning.

The Chairman: Would the members of the Committee, subject to Mr. Southam and his officials being available, agree to meet tomorrow at 9:30 a.m.?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Is it not true, Mr. Chairman, we are going to have other days?

The Chairman: Yes, but there is a program.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, like you I want to go on with this. I have a small problem tomorrow because I have a meeting of my Executive Committee which is bringing to Ottawa some people from out of town. My first duty is to you and if you wish I will be back here at 9.30 tomorrow morning, but if it could be next week or...

Mr. Mongrain: Well, Mr. Chairman, I will change my suggestion. Let us alter our program and invite the gentlemen to our next meeting next Tuesday. Do you think the Minister would agree to that?

The Chairman: Would Tuesday next be suitable for you? I will take this up with the Minister. I think he will be accommodating and we will send out announcements either today or tomorrow, if you agree.

Mr. Dinsdale: I presume, Mr. Chairman, you will be calling the agenda committee together so that we might sort out our procedures?

The Chairman: Yes, I was just going to suggest that we shall have to work out some other basis of asking questions. The present system seems to have broken down. I shall recognize Mr. Dinsdale who would like to ask one more leading question. Perhaps we could take another ten minutes or so.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I have an appointment at 1 o'clock and I am afraid if we get into a new topic now we will be here too long.

The Chairman: That is fine, then. I would like to thank Mr. Southam and his officials for their attendance and their courtesy in their answers. We have tentatively scheduled Mr. Southam to return on November 5, now and we will try to arrange either Tuesday or Thursday of Next week for them to return in advance since they have proved to be such popular witnesses. Thank you.

REPORT TO THE HOUSE

TUESDAY, October 29, 1968.

The Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts has the honour to present its

FIRST REPORT

Your Committee recommends that it be given leave to sit this afternoon while the House is sitting to conclude its deliberations on the Revised Estimates 1968-69 of the National Arts Centre Corporation.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN REID,

(Note: This Report was concurred in this day).

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

TUESDAY, October 29, 1968.

(4)

The Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts met this day at 11.10 a.m. The Chairman, Mr. John M. Reid, presided.

Members present: Messrs. Corbin, Dinsdale, Fairweather, Gervais, Guilbault, La Salle, Matte, McGrath, Mongrain, Osler, Reid, Rose, Stafford, Stanbury, Stewart (Cochrane)—(15).

In attendance: From the National Arts Centre Corporation: Messrs. Hamilton Southam, Director General; Jean-Marie Beaudet, Director of Music; and Robert Montpetit, Director of Finance.

The Chairman advised that after consultations with Mr. Speaker and officials of the House, this Committee will print its Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, on an experimental basis, in two columns as follows: on the left hand side, the language of the floor; and on the right hand side, the interpretation by the interpreters.

The Committee resumed discussion of the Estimate of the National Arts Centre Corporation, Item 50, and Mr. Southam was further examined, assisted by Mr. Beaudet, and both supplied additional information on various aspects of the National Arts Centre.

On motion of Mr. Mongrain, seconded by Mr. Osler, the Committee agreed to seek permission to sit this afternoon while the House is sitting to conclude its deliberations on the Revised Estimates 1968-69 of the National Arts Centre Corporation.

The examination of the witnesses still continuing, the Committee adjourned until 3.30 p.m. this afternoon provided the House grants permission.

AFTERNOON SITTING

The Committee resumed at 3.45 p.m. The Chairman, Mr. John M. Reid, presided.

Members present: Messrs. Corbin, Gervais, Givens, Guilbault, La Salle, Matte, McGrath, Mongrain, Osler, Reid, Rose, Stafford, Stewart (Cochrane)—(13).

In attendance: (Same as at morning sitting)

The Committee resumed consideration of Item 50 of the Estimate of the National Arts Centre Corporation.

Mr. Southam was further examined on matters relating to the National Arts Centre, including the National Orchestra; Mr. Southam was assisted by Mr. Beaudet.

The examination of the witnesses being concluded, the Chairman thanked Mr. Southam and his officials.

At 5.00 p.m., the Committee adjourned until 9.30 a.m. on Thursday, October 31.

M. Slack,
Clerk of the Committee.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Tuesday, October 29, 1968

• 1119

The Chairman: I think perhaps we should open the proceedings now. Mr. Southam and his officials have returned and we will continue with Item 50.

I recognize Mr. Dinsdale at this time.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, the...

Mr. Mongrain: Could I raise a point of order, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Mongrain.

Mr. Mongrain: If I remember well, when we adjourned the other day we were discussing mostly local participation in the activities of the Arts Centre. Are we going on discussing that now or have we changed the subject?

• 1120

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale, you indicated that your questions were on this aspect as well as others.

Mr. Mongrain: I have a few questions.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, I can pursue this line of questioning to provide continuity. I will not be dealing with the Ottawa scene as such; I will be dealing with other parts of the country, but there is also another line of questioning that I want to get on to.

How are we going to handle this, now? I will have to relinquish the floor as soon as this subject is exhausted and it is not the subject that I have initiated. So perhaps we will pursue the subject that was introduced by Mr. Stewart and my question will be in the form of a supplementary question.

The Chairman: Fine. Then I will recognize you at the conclusion of that subject matter.

Mr. Dinsdale: That is right.

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Dinsdale: Then I think everybody will be happy.

By way of a supplementary, with your permission, Mr. Chairman, I am interested in the services that the National Arts Centre will be able to perform in terms of artistic and cultural development in other parts of the country. I presume from Mr. Southam's statement that this is regarded as a part of the legitimate functions of the National Arts Centre.

During Centennial Year, many communities across Canada undertook as a centennial project the establishment of a centre for the performing arts. In Manitoba we have two such major developments: one in the city of Winnipeg, as Mr. Southam knows, and one in my own city of Brandon which, we trust, will be opening this fall.

Now, what sort of services would the National Arts Centre and its staff be able to provide to these art centres in various provinces on a continuing basis—I think in terms of travelling companies, of impresario know-how, in advice of various kinds, because it is a major undertaking for a smaller urban community to launch into this field where there has not been too much background?

The Chairman: Mr. Southam?

Mr. G. Hamilton Southam (Director General, National Arts Centre): Mr. Chairman, the National Arts Centre Act as I explained last Thursday charges our Board of Trustees with the responsibility for assisting the Canada Council in the development of the performing arts throughout Canada.

One of the subparagraphs in that section on our aims says that the Centre, at the request of any government department or agency, can help to arrange the tours of foreign companies in Canada or Canadian companies in Canada or abroad. This means, we believe, that the machinery of the Centre must be activated by the Canada Council or by a government department or agency; not only activated, but the program must be paid for by the Canada Council or another government department.

We do have a department of programming which has collected all the material that was developed during the Centennial Year in the course of the Festival Canada program. We know, probably more than anyone else in Canada at the moment, just what theatre and concert hall facilities are available across the country: the actual physical dimensions, the staff arrangements, their program interests. If the Canada Council, for example, wants us to organize a tour of a Canadian company we can do that, I think quite rapidly and efficiently provided the Canada Council puts up the funds for the tour in question.

• 1125

We are doing that. For instance, at this moment the company of Les Jeunes Comédiens, which is the young company of Le Théâtre du Nouveau Monde, is in fact touring Western Canada this autumn and will be touring the Atlantic Provinces next spring. That is an example of the kind of program you have in mind.

I am glad you mention these centres outside Ottawa. It is quite true that there have been centres built from St. John's, Newfoundland to Vancouver in the last 10 years. I had the curiosity to tot up the total capital cost of all of those, quite apart from the Ottawa one, and the members of the Committee might be interested to know that our generation has spent $125 million on building centres other than this one that we are concerned with here in Ottawa and there are something on the order of a dozen of them from one end of the country to the other.

One of the things I would like to recommend to our Board of Trustees shortly is that we invite the Canada Council to call a meeting of the representatives of these centres. There never has been such a meeting. They all have the same kind of problems of operation and programming that we have and I think if the Canada Council would agree to call a meeting here—and perhaps representatives not only of the centres but of our leading professional companies, orchestras and theatre companies—that out of such a meeting some kind of concept could emerge of the kind that I think you are interested in; that is to say, co-operation would develop between these centres in programming.

But to get back to where I started from, we do not feel we can take the initiative in that field, because we serve the Canada Council in this field.

Mr. Dinsdale: I take it from Mr. Southam's answer, Mr. Chairman, that Canada Council will retain this function, and as the program unfolds, the National Centre for the Performing Arts will come closer to an advisory or consultative basis. Now, by the same token—perhaps the other side of the coin—what opportunity will there be for local performing groups, other than those groups in Ottawa, to perform at the National Arts Centre; for instance, dramatic groups for the Manitoba Theatre Centre or any other groups of that kind of a very high calibre? What will be their opportunity to perform at the National Arts Centre?

Mr. Southam: We have two programs that would interest other professional companies across the country. You mentioned the Manitoba Theatre Centre, and there are the Royal Winnipeg Ballet and the Winnipeg Symphony Orchestra. There is the Manitoba Concert. I am just mentioning the ones in your area. First of all, we will be having—as I think I explained on Thursday—an opening two-week festival here which will be put together by contributions from visiting companies. We had hoped to make it a national festival one year and an international festival next, and back to a national festival, and so on.

For economy reasons our Board has decided to put off the international festival for the time being, so we hope at least we will have an annual national festival of two weeks—i.e. successful it might go a bit longer—using primarily the visiting companies. But apart from that, our programming department has in its budget a sum of money to enable us to invite visiting companies to the National Arts Centre during the rest of the year on an occasional basis.

The Canadian Opera Company, for example, is not active at the time of our annual festival. Its season is in Toronto in the autumn. Hopefully we would have sufficient money in our programming budget to cover the cost of a visit from them in the autumn, or it might be that Les Grands Ballets Canadiens could come at another time of the year. So we have the big festival, and there are occasional invitations during the rest of the year within the limits of our budget.

• 1130

Mr. Osler: May I ask a supplementary?

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Osler.

Mr. Osler: It is not clear to me yet, Mr. Chairman, and it strikes me that there is an impresario type of role here in the National Arts Centre. It is not just an informational exchange; it is an impresario type of role, to a certain extent. Could you take as an example the Royal Winnipeg Ballet, because Mr. Dinsdale and I both know something about it. For several years they have been successful in having Hurok look after them and others, and they have good tours in various places. They are off to Russia I think next week, and what can you do for them that they are not doing for themselves, apart from inviting them to come and play here which is really a local impresario's role? I am not trying to be rude; I just wanted to use them as an illustration.

Mr. Southam: I think we all recognize that the Royal Winnipeg Ballet deserves full marks for its energy and skill in developing touring programs on a commercial basis.

Mr. Osler: It is only semi-commercial. They are getting a big subsidy from the Canada Council. But I want to know where you get into the act.

Mr. Southam: Any Canadian company, the Royal Winnipeg Ballet or any other, is free to make its arrangements as to touring. As far as we are concerned, companies do not address us directly. As I wanted to explain, if the Royal Winnipeg Ballet wants a tour it goes to the Canada Council, and you have already mentioned that they have money for touring. It is then up to the Canada Council or the Royal Winnipeg Ballet to ask us to handle them.

Mr. Osler: But why would they do that?

Mr. Southam: I do not know why the Royal Winnipeg Ballet has not. I know we have supplied them with advice, for example, on the occasion of their Russian tour. They have not asked us to. All I can say is that we are handling the National Ballet. We handled them last year in Festival Canada. We are handling Les Grands Ballets Canadiens for External Affairs who are arranging their tour in the spring.

The Royal Winnipeg Ballet has exercised its prerogative in not asking us to handle them, but I think possibly the reason is that the Royal Winnipeg Ballet is a smaller company than the National Ballet or Les Grands Ballets Canadiens and its movements are less complicated. Also, they have had a much longer experience than the other two bigger companies in travelling and I think they are doing splendidly. But we stand ready to act for them if they or the Canada Council asks us to do so.

Mr. Osler: A further supplementary, and again I am not trying to be rude, but you say they are smaller and I would agree. You also say they have been longer in the field and have had more experience. I would then say the National Ballet has had more experience than you have. In other words, relatively speaking, as far as age is concerned, you are the junior group and this is why I find it difficult to see how, other than in a co-ordinating role, you can give anyone top advice. There must be many people in the country who know more about it than you do.

Mr. Southam: If you are speaking of me personally, Mr. Osler, you are absolutely right.

Mr. Osler: No, I am not speaking of you personally.

• 1135

Mr. Southam: We are now getting into the field of personalities. You are absolutely right. As far as I am concerned, I am a novice in this field and our institution is a very new one, but we have recruited. The director of programming for our Centre is Mr. Haber. He had many years of experience with the William Morris Agency in New York before he came back to be one of the responsible officers for the World Festival at Expo last year.

I do not think that anyone in the National Ballet or Les Grands Ballets Canadiens—possibly not even in the Royal Winnipeg Ballet—could rival his experience. The institution is new, but we have some old hands at the game. I think their merit is recognized by the fact that our relations with the National Ballet and Les Grands Ballets Canadiens are excellent. They have asked that we handle them. We are handling them, and they seem to be quite satisfied with the way we are handling them.

The Chairman: Mr. Mongrain?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: My supplementary question is directed to Mr. Southam. However, before posing it, I would, as a preamble, quote the Minister's words, which I take from this morning's "Le Devoir" and which reads as follows:

Whichever way culture can be defined, culture has never been and can never be the exclusive jurisdiction of any level of government in particular.

On the other hand, we do have the clear impression that the Minister's counterpart in Quebec has asked for exclusive jurisdiction within the bounds of Quebec in regard to everything which relates to culture.

My question is this Mr. Southam; have you so far had the occasion to collaborate with the Government of Quebec or has the Council sought this co-operation? I would like Mr. Southam to tell how his requests for co-operation—assuming that there have been any—have been received by the Government of Quebec. I am not speaking here of private bodies.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, the answer to the question is, yes. Over two years at least we have had contacts and exchanges of correspondence with the Minister and the Department of Cultural Affairs of the Province of Quebec. We felt it was proper to inform the Department in Quebec of our plans.

As you probably know, Mr. Mongrain, a large theatre in Quebec will be opened at just about the same time as ours, if I remember correctly. This correspondence began when I wrote Mr. Tremblay to make him aware of our own plans.

Since that time, as our program plans developed, we have had exchanges with the Department. We have invited the Deputy Minister of Cultural Affairs here; and we invited him to visit our Centre. We had a conversation with him. Subsequently, we went to Quebec City, approximately six weeks ago. When I say "we", I mean that I was accompanied by Mr. Beaudet, our musical director, and by Mr. Sabourin and Mr. de Margerie, representing Le Théâtre du Capricorne.

• 1140

We took that opportunity to explain that our program plans were increasingly firming up.

We stated that these programs would be of interest to the western part of the Province of Quebec as well as to the eastern part of the Province of Ontario. We said that we would like to discuss our program policy with them. We were very courteously received.

We told them, for instance, that we would like our orchestra to move about throughout western Quebec. We said, too, that we would like Le Théâtre du Capricorne to travel throughout little towns and villages, in the Gatineau area, for example.

Our conversation, of course, could lead to no conclusion. It was merely an exchange of information. It was decided that as our programs developed they would be communicated to them through the good offices of the senior official of the Department of Cultural Affairs in Quebec. That is what we have done.

Does that answer your question?

Mr. Mongrain: But so far you have felt no systematic resistance to the offer of co-operation that you have made to the Government of Quebec in cultural matters, in so far as they come under your responsibility?

In practice, I know that sometimes public statements do not necessarily mean that things are going to go as planned. Have you encountered any systematic resistance, or did you feel that there would be a reasonable amount of co-operation?

Mr. Southam: In the area of our respective responsibilities two aspects must be distinguished. There is the policy aspect and the operation aspect.

It is true that our Minister made the statement that we all read in this morning's Le Devoir. He was not the first, I believe, to make it; it seems to me that the same statement has been made on occasion by other federal ministers.

It is also a fact that the Minister of Cultural Affairs in Quebec City, Mr. Tremblay, has made an opposite policy statement. On the policy side and this goes a little beyond my responsibilities...

Mr. Mongrain: You do not wish to deal with that political matter, do you?

Mr. Southam: That is true. There is a difference of opinion regarding the operational aspects of the matter. Let me say that our contacts with the officials of the Department of Cultural Affairs, and the contacts we have had with musicians and actors from Quebec, have given rise to no difficulty whatever.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Matte: Is there a distinct French service within the National Arts Centre in Ottawa?

Mr. Southam: I am sorry; I did not hear your question.

Mr. Matte: Is there a distinct French service?

Mr. Southam: No. Our staff is approximately half and half, French-speaking or English-speaking however, in all departments of the National Arts Centre. We are setting up at this time a French-speaking theatre company, "Le Théâtre du Capricorne." Mr. Sabourin and Mr. de Margarie are setting up this company. This company, of course, is clearly French-speaking.

[English]

The Chairman: Are there any further questions on this particular aspect?

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, to revert to the impresario aspects of this thing, could we be enlightened, perhaps by taking a hypothetical case and illustrating it, what happens when, for instance, the National Ballet, or the Toronto Symphony, or some other organization, are invited by you, in your role as impresario, to the National Centre in Ottawa?

I am presuming that before they left town they would have a guarantee, because they would not come unless they knew where they were going or what was happening. If you "laid an egg" and had empty houses this would presumably come out of your budget for your impresario work. If, on the other hand, you had a howling success which filled the concert hall for all performances and made a little money that would go into it.

How are you, in your impresario role, visualizing your financial set-up? Are you planning on 50 per cent failures, 50 per cent successes, or have you any thoughts yet formulated on the financial aspects of your impresario work?

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, this question relates to our budget for our opening year. This is still in the process of being finalized and has not yet been submitted to Treasury Board. Therefore, I cannot be very precise.

However, the budget for our programming department, which is our impresario department—the department which brings in attractions to fill our halls on occasions other than those when our own companies are performing—has a budget the nature of which suggests to us at the moment the thought that we will not quite break even over the year.

We are faced, I think, with rather the same problem that the CBC has in balancing a programming which is conscientiously Canadian and is intended to help the development of the performing arts here and a program which might be more commercially interesting.

Where we draw the line has not quite been established, but naturally in our programming over the year we would schedule visits by large Canadian companies such as the opera company from Toronto, or ballet. By and large it is unlikely that we will make money on Canadian attractions which are as elaborate as those, but we think we will be doing a service to the performing arts in Canada in helping them extend their seasons, giving more employment to their artists and in exposing them to the gaze of the residents of Ottawa. We will try to balance that by other more popular attractions on which we think we will make money.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Southam, I think I can save time by saying this is the aspect that worries me, and perhaps I could illustrate it graphically. Everyone knows the Metropolitan Opera Company does not make money. The National Ballet does not make money. But if the Metropolitan Opera Company comes to Toronto the person who brings it there does it on such terms that presumably he is going to at least break even or make a little money. In other words, the performance at the location is not subsidized but the company as a whole is subsidized.

What worries me is that here we have a situation where one government agency in the Canada Council is subsidizing an organization and yet another agency may be subsidizing the performance by that organization. This is where the area becomes puzzling to me; whether we are going to fall between two stools in both organizations and spend a lot of money, when it might not be necessary for that to happen.

Mr. Southam: It could be put a different way. The Canada Council is subsidizing the company. In a sense I suppose it could be said that we are subsidizing the audience because the kind of guarantee that we are putting up will enable us to present the company without putting our seat prices up to the level which people were accustomed to paying, for example, for the Metropolitan before it went out of the travelling business because it was too expensive.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions on this aspect? Perhaps we could move on to a new subject. Mr. Dinsdale has indicated he would like to begin questioning on a new subject. If anyone else is interested in a new subject would they please indicate, so I can put the names down. Mr. Dinsdale?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, Mr. Chairman. In his opening statement Mr. Southam indicated that the actual problems of construction, and so on, were the responsibility of the Department of Public Works, but there are some aspects of the difficulties that have been encountered since the project was launched that I think might be explored by this Committee—for example, the soaring costs.

I think the initial estimate was around $9 million and then it was doubled to $18 million, and then finally settled at a figure of about $46.4 million. How much of that increase in cost was related to the choice of sites? As I recall, there were several sites under discussion when the project was first approached. One was down on Sussex Street near the National War Museum. Another was the present location of the Skyline Hotel and the third was the Confederation Square site where the building is now located.

Is it possible for Mr. Southam to indicate just how much of the unanticipated and almost astronomical increase in cost was related to the choice of the Confederation Square site? I say this because I think the National Arts Centre is under a shadow in the minds of the public because of the unanticipated increase in costs. We had a letter the other day indicating that it was a magnificent building, and all the rest of it, and it should be at that price. Now the question is, was the change of site the main reason for the substantial increase in the cost?

The Chairman: Before Mr. Southam answers I think I should say that this is probably an area which is not his present responsibility. It would pretty well come under the responsibility of the Department of Public Works or even the Secretary of State. We propose to call the Department of Public Works at a later time, after dealing with the Minister. However, I will put it to Mr. Southam in these terms. If he feels he can answer this question he should be permitted to do so, and if he feels it is beyond his competence he should be allowed to pass.

Mr. Southam: I do not like to duck a question. I will try to answer in a way that will not anticipate what the Department of Public Works may say by simply giving you the history of the site. I think that might interest the Committee.

It is true that the original group, the National Capital Arts Alliance, proposed a site on Nepean Point. That was the proposal that went to the government in October of 1963 and at that time part of the proposal was for outdoor parking. It was when the government announced that it was going to go ahead with this project that the City of Ottawa very generously offered the site on Confederation Square. Those are the two sites. You mentioned a site where the Skyline Hotel is now located. That suggestion was made by one of the local newspapers.

Mr. Dinsdale: Was that the Greber plan?

Mr. Southam: There had been a proposal for a theatre there in the Greber plan. Once the government decided to go ahead with the project, and once the Confederation Square site had been offered, the government set up an interdepartmental committee to look into it. The committee appointed an architect and for about a month there was an examination of the two sites. The recommendation to the government—as it was announced, I think, in February of 1964—was that the Confederation site was the one chosen.

The Confederation site involved an underground garage to house 900 cars. It involved a tunnel under Elgin Street because the approaches to the underground garage were quite complicated. I think all I could say is that obviously the switch in site was an important element in the escalation of costs, but I would not like to estimate percentage-wise or otherwise. I think that is a technical question which really ought to go to the Department of Public Works.

The Chairman: I wonder, Mr. Southam, if I might make a request of you and your staff. When you appeared last week you had a document which was the original submission to the government by the National Capital Arts Centre Alliance. I wonder if it would be possible to have copies made available to members of the Committee in order that if they wish to go into this in some depth they would have the original proposal before them?

Mr. Southam: Certainly, Mr. Chairman. We may be down to the last few copies.

The Chairman: Perhaps we could have Xerox copies made.

Mr. Southam: How many copies would you like?

The Chairman: I think 25 copies would be sufficient and if possible we would appreciate it if one quarter of the copies could be in French.

Mr. Southam: Right.

The Chairman: Mr. Mongrain?

Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: A supplementary question. Could I ask Mr. Southam if the program has developed from the beginning; is it possible that there were some requests made by the people involved, the staff of your body, requests for improvements, modifications and so on that were not planned for originally and which might have increased the cost of construction; changes in original plans with regard to equipment, for instance?

Mr. Southam: I believe so, yes. We did not change our requirements. The building you will see next year is just about what we had originally asked for. It has an opera, an experimental studio, a theatre, a drawing room for recitals, a restaurant, a cafeteria but the garage is something new. It is true, however, that once the advisory group began its work it made no change to the requirements but over the course of a two-year working period it may be it becomes more accurate. For example, the acoustic specifications have not been clearly indicated in the original proposal but as the work of the committee progressed we established certain standards and I believe that living up to these standards has contributed to the escalation of prices but we cannot speak of new requirements.

Mr. Mongrain: The Department of Public Works can indicate to us, I think, in approximate terms what this has meant with regard to the increase in the actual price. Thank you.

English]

Mr. Dinsdale: I appreciate the problem we're labouring with in getting specific information on the problems of construction and costs and so forth. Perhaps it is wise to leave it for the Department of Public Works. There were substantial changes in that whole area, for example the Roxborough was torn down with a view to establishing a national museum and all those plans went by the board. No doubt these changes brought about the abnormally high costs in the centre for the performing arts. Perhaps I can question Mr. Southam on the point that he is able to comment on. Would it be a reasonable question to ask if the problem of traffic congestion was considered in the location on the present site? It seems to me that this would be one of your major difficulties. In an area that is already referred to as "Confusion Square" traffic congestion would be almost impossible to cope with.

• 1200

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I would regard that as another very technical question. I know the Department of Public Works, in connection with the National Arts Centre project, has had a traffic consultant at work from the very beginning. All I can say, as a citizen of Ottawa, is that I think the expression "Confusion Square" refers to Confederation Square as it was before the Driveway was cut off. It seems to me that traffic flows more smoothly since the National Arts Centre project began than it did before.

Mr. Dinsdale: If that is technical we will save that for the Department of Public Works.

The Chairman: We have arranged for them to appear later.

Mr. Dinsdale: The architectural style—I was interested in your comment that the impression the building conveys is one of the ruggedness of the pre Cambrian Shield that makes up a good substantial part of Canada...

The Chairman: Including my constituency, Mr. Dinsdale.

Mr. Dinsdale: And mine. We even have parts of the pre Cambrian Shield in Manitoba, and as one who is interested in northern affairs, I can see that that is a very important architectural point. There has been some suggestion, however, that Canadiana is not being used to the maximum extent in the interior of the building. The criticism has been made that we are going to foreign sources for tapestries and mosaics and what have you, and I am wondering if there is any truth in this criticism, and whether we have considered the possibilities, for example, of something that would be representative of Eskimo prints, carvings, other aspects of Canadiana, and some of the Indian works of art that are available. Specifically, to soften the austere aspect of the Canadian Shield representation, was there ever any thought given to having some of the more colourful aspects of Canadiana represented on the exterior of the building because we are not all pre Cambrian Shield; there are other parts of Canada than the Shield.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I welcome this question very much, and if I may take a few minutes to reply to it, I said in my opening statement that as co-ordinator of this project I did, and now as Director General I do, accept full responsibility for the visual arts program, the embellishment of the building through the application of sculpture, tapestry, painting and so on. Questions about this program properly should be addressed to me and not to the Department of Public Works.

If I could take the time of the Committee for a minute, I will give you the history of this program; I touched on it the other day. At the same time the Government decided to build this building, it decided to allocate 3 per cent of the capital cost to its embellishment. That was an historic decision for the arts in Canada because, I believe, never before had so important a proportion of the capital cost of a federal building been allocated to this purpose. I believe other federal government buildings now have a provision of 1 per cent; post offices and other institutions.

As I explained to the Committee the other day, as the capital costs escalated in the dramatic manner that has drawn this Committee's attention, Treasury Board at a certain moment said, "Stop" as far as the visual arts were concerned. The 3 per cent was cut off when it reached $500,000, and there is a budget of $500,000 for the purchase or commissioning of works of art.

• 1205

This budget was made the responsibility of one of the advisory committees that I mentioned. It was originally chaired by the late Donald Buchanan, now by Mme Andrée Paradis of Montreal, who happens to be a member of our board. It met regularly for the first couple of years. There were distinguished representatives of the arts from across Canada. The line followed at its first meeting, was to ask the architect, Mr. Lebensold, for his recommendations about what sorts of works of art he thought the building should contain, and where. There has been a certain amount of experience, a rather unhappy experience, in the past where a building has been built and works of art have been purchased or commissioned independently and put in here or there without the architect's agreement. The result is a manifest clash which does credit neither to the work of art nor to the building. I could give you examples, but I think it would be unnecessary to do so.

Our committee decided from the start that the works of art would be married to the building as intimately and as happily as one could predict of any marriage. At the second meeting, I think, our architect came back with a list; here he wanted a tapestry, there a mural, somewhere else a free-standing piece of sculpture, either on the terraces or in the foyer.

The role of the committee was simply to advise us on what sort of artists should be invited to fill these commissions. The committee, in some cases, organized competitions, but it has been my experience that artists do not enjoy competitions very much. Whatever they may say afterwards, beforehand they usually say to a committee like that, you should take your courage in both hands and select one of us to do it and let us go ahead. Nevertheless, there were one or two competitions, but mostly the committee recommended a certain artist for a certain piece of work. The result of this program to date is reflected in our annual report.

As I told the Committee on Thursday, we are still within the budget and will be. We will not go over the $500,000. Not all the money has been spent as yet because some of the works are still in progress, but I can assure the Committee that most of the commissions have gone to Canadian artists.

It is true that in certain cases we went abroad—there are two French artists involved and two Americans—but the proportion is in the order of three to one in favour of Canadian artists. I am prepared to discuss each of these works of art, if the Committee wishes but I do not want to launch out into that. There are thirteen major commissions and I am prepared to answer questions on any one of them.

You did ask about Eskimos and Indians. It is true that at one time a proposal was made that those fascinating Eskimo wall murals from the restaurant at the Canadian pavilion at Expo be transferred to our restaurant, but we ran into technical problems and other problems connected with the kind of restaurant we are going to have, and the fact is that there will be no representation of Eskimo or Indian work in the building.

The Chairman: Do you have any plans to embellish the outside of the building?

Mr. Southam: No. I know that suggestions have been made that there might be a mural on some of those large external surfaces. Canadians who have been down to Mexico have seen how this has been handled in the University of Mexico, for example. This was discussed by our Committee and rejected because it was felt that those brilliant surfaces are more appropriate in cities nearer the equator where the sunshine gives effect to them. It was felt that the National Arts Centre was not the place for that sort of treatment, hence the present evocation of the pre-Cambrian shield. Mr. Dinsdale, I did not say that. I wish I had thought of it myself, but that was the comment by Mr. Gene Lees whose letter I read to the Committee. I will be quoting his letter regularly in the future.

The Chairman: Have you a supplementary, Mr. Dinsdale?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Southam has referred to the recommendations of the Committee on Artistic Embellishments as not concurring in the inclusion of an artistic expression that has received international acclaim. I think the greatest excitement in the artistic world in recent years has been created by our so-called primitive Eskimo carvings, Eskimo prints and even some of the works of our native Canadians. Now why would they recommend against the inclusion of some sort of representation of this kind which is internationally recognized as being true Canadiana?

Mr. Southam: Take Eskimo work, for example. The two forms it takes are sculpture and prints. I entirely agree with all you say about the splendid quality of Eskimo work in both these fields—it is certainly represented in my house and probably in yours—but Eskimo sculpturers have not worked on an architectural scale. Unless I am wrong, I have never seen a piece of Eskimo sculpture one-sixth as large as the smallest piece of free-standing sculpture we have in the Centre. It is a monumental building and Eskimo sculpture is not monumental in scale.

As for prints—and this is perhaps a question that you should direct to the architect—because of the scale of the building the internal wall surfaces do not lend themselves to isolated small patches of colour. I hope you will see, when this Committee visits the Centre—and I hope you will—that the hanging of prints on walls in the Centre, whether Eskimo or by Harold Town, would destroy the visual impression of simplicity and scale. Consequently there seems to be no fitting place in the Centre for these works of art by our Eskimo artists.

Mr. Dinsdale: And it was the unanimous opinion apparently that there should be no external embellishments notwithstanding the fact that there is nothing more colourful in the world than the display of the Canadian maple in autumn. It is a regular mosaic of colour and it helps to offset the austerity of our pre-Cambrian shield reputation.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I thought the question was murals—the application of colour to the walls of the building, and that has been decided against unanimously. But there will be external embellishments. There will be a very large bronze sculpture of an abstract nature by Charles Daudelin on the terrace behind the largest of those plain walls facing down Elgin Street.

• 1215

But there is also yet to come the landscaping. You mentioned maple trees. I had the curiosity to go through the landscaping plan a couple of days ago and I am happy to inform the Committee that there will be 39 elm trees along the canal and on the Elgin Street side of the building which are expected to reach a maximum height of 28 feet, and on the upper terrace itself, which is one of the more splendid spaces, there are to be four Canadian maples which are expected to reach a height of 25 feet, and a weeping willow which will reach a height of 20 feet. So the Canadian maple will be represented at the National Arts Centre in the best position which could be given to a maple tree.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I have a supplementary question.

[English]

The Chairman: I have some others who have supplementaries. We are dealing with the question of the cost of embellishments, and I believe Mr. Rose had a question?

Mr. Rose: I was wondering if the weeping willow was there to symbolize the possible deficit, but perhaps that is a facetious question.

I was going to ask Mr. Southam if he identified himself completely with the message in Gene Lees' letter but perhaps, Mr. Chairman, you might consider this a new line of questioning and on those grounds prefer to have me raise it later.

The Chairman: Yes, I would prefer to have your question later. Mr. Fairweather, did you have a question on the cost of embellishments?

Mr. Fairweather: No, not yet. I do not get quite as excited as some people, although I think it is a pity we do not have more elms.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: Following Mr. Dinsdale's suggestion, he mentioned that we might put in works of art of Eskimo or Indian origin. If Mr. Dinsdale wanted to move that the government increase its $500,000 grant for decorative purposes I would support him most wholeheartedly.

Would Mr. Southam tell us if any thought had been given to asking some of these well-known and talented Eskimo artists to attempt this? Could they not make works of art which might be large enough to be in proportion with the work centre? It might be a worthwhile attempt. I agree that I have never seen large works by these artists, but do you think it is impossible to ask one or two or three of these people to make something large and in scale with the building? Would it not be an interesting experiment?

Mr. Southam: Nothing is impossible to an artist. It is the impossible, I believe, which is the most challenging to them. The fact is that in the program we have already prepared we have already asked Mr. Daudelin—Mr. Charles Daudelin—to do something impossible. It is, I believe, the largest bronze work of art ever made in Canada. As far as the mural outside the studio is concerned, it is the work of William Ronald and he is at present working on it in Toronto. It is also the largest mural in Canada. It might have been possible, perhaps, to ask an Eskimo sculptor to try.

Mr. Mongrain: You might have had a competition.

Mr. Southam: But we never thought of it. The committee did not think of it at the time; I should be frank and admit that. At the present time our budget is firm and we cannot go beyond it.

Mr. Mongrain: Yes, but I presume that Mr. Mongrain could ask the government to increase the budget from $500,000 to about $750 million. You would not refuse that, would you?

Mr. Southam: Certainly not, but there is another problem. The free space available for art is already pre-empted for the works which we actually have had commissioned or bought. We do not wish to fill this centre.

• 1220

Mr. Southam: We do not want to clutter up the space with works of art all over the place. After all we are not a museum. We have attempted to do little, but well, for budgetary reasons and for architectural reasons too. We would, if you wish, be glad to take this matter up with our advisory group at its next meeting, but I can hardly promise you that the answer of the committee would be affirmative.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you.

[English]

The Chairman: Mr. Stanbury on the same subject.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if Mr. Southam could tell us what the original firm price of this building was after plans had been prepared and submitted for tender?

Mr. Southam: I would like to refer that the Department of Public Works, also, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Stanbury: Well, several figures have been mentioned. What was the figure in vogue at the time the 3 per cent figure for embellishment was fixed?

Mr. Southam: That is a very fair question. I am not sure I can recollect the answer without consulting our files but I suspect it was probably $18 million which was the first estimate given to the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Stanbury: In actual fact, then, the 3 per cent of $18 million would be more than $500,000 so it would appear that the realization was reached very quickly...

Mr. Southam: Correction; may I correct myself? I am sorry. The original 3 per cent decision by the government was made at the moment when the proposition was accepted by the government.

Mr. Stanbury: Yes.

Mr. Southam: The estimate then was the $9 million one which had been put forward by the private group here in Ottawa. It was then that the 3 per cent decision was taken.

Mr. Stanbury: Then when plans were prepared and there was a real estimate made of the cost, the first real estimate of cost was at least $18 million, was it not?

Mr. Southam: Yes.

Mr. Stanbury: So that the $500,000 limit was established apparently almost immediately a real estimate of the total cost of the building was learned?

Mr. Southam: Yes.

Mr. Stanbury: Thank you.

The Chairman: Does this conclude questioning on the question of embellishments?

An hon. Member: Yes.

The Chairman: Mr. Corbin?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Corbin: I have followed closely the line of reasoning, or at least the line of reasoning of the Committee which dealt with the content or the origin of the works of art which are to be found in the Centre. I am of the impression that your line of reasoning appears to conclude that works of art of Eskimo or Indian origin should be in museums rather than in the National Arts Centre. Am I right in that conclusion?

Mr. Southam: No, Mr. Chairman. What I tried to explain to the Committee was the nature of these works, the dimensions of the Eskimo sculptures, the dimensions of the prints were not such that they could readily match the size of the National Arts Centre.

That is what I tried to explain in answering a supplementary question. In particular I was asked if it was possible, to have Eskimo sculpture there if we had more money. I answered that the space required is already occupied and adding a work in the foyer would give the Centre the general appearance of a museum.

I do agree that these works of art—it would be an unfortunate day in Canada if our works of art were to be found in museums. We should find room for works of art everywhere, in our own homes, in public buildings and in museums also.

• 1225

Mr. Corbin: If I may, Mr. Chairman, I deplore the fact that we had a wonderful opportunity to make these works of art available to the public in a very direct way. The idea was not taken up. I think if the idea is ever broached again it should, I believe, be considered very seriously.

[English]

The Chairman: Are there any further questions on this?

Mr. Dinsdale: Just to bring this part of our discussion to a close until such time as we have officials of the Department of Public Works before us, I could advise Mr. Southam that there is an Eskimo mosaic available somewhere in the building occupied by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development which was discarded by the Department of Public Works, but I will pursue that subject with them when they are before us.

The reason we are asking these questions is because there is public concern and there is public interest and unless we, as members of Parliament, generate public support, if we do not get public support the National Arts Centre could become a museum. We want to ensure that the public is satisfied that a building involving such huge expenditures is really representative of all parts of Canada. Actually this building—the project—was inaugurated ahead of the National Museum and we do not want it to revert to that function.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Southam, do you suppose that Canadians might come to like the building in spite of themselves?

Mr. Southam: I think that will be the case. It is not my own opinion only, but of many visiting architects, that it is a very successful architectural statement of a novel kind. Certainly it does not resemble any other building, but like many other examples of modern design—not only in the architectural field—it takes a little getting used to.

I am gratified by the number of people whom I have met—not architects—who said they were beginning to like it better or dislike it less; they were beginning to get used to it; they were beginning to see what it is about. I would plead for patience until people are able to judge this building, as any building should be judged, by its inside as well as its outside, by its programs and its function.

This judgment will have to be suspended until next summer.

Mr. Fairweather: Will the Centennial Centre of the old Union Station that is very noticeable when you walk up Elgin Street, be torn down because that does inhibit the concept, I think? I do not know the architectural terms, but it does not seem to fit in with the three theatre buildings or the main blocks. Mr. Chairman should there not be an open space between the buildings which is taken up at present by the old station?

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I think Mr. Fairweather is absolutely right. Once again, I am not the competent person to announce the government's plans for the redevelopment of the central part of the city. I know the question of the Union Station is a very delicate one, but it is my understanding that it is slated to come down—that has been the understanding all along. I know that architecturally the full effect of the National Arts Centre will only be realized when it has come down.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, would Mr. Southam care to tell this Committee who chose the architects and on what basis they were chosen? Was there, for instance, a contest between Canadian architects or were they chosen on their past experience on this type of building?

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I think I can answer that question. When the government decided to go ahead with this project and announced its intention in December 1963, it set up an interdepartmental committee to co-ordinate the planning. The Department of Public Works, the Department of the Secretary of State, the National Capital Commission and other interested departments and agencies were represented on the committee and one of the first questions they tackled was the appointment of an architect.

I must remind the Committee that at that time the proposal was that the Centre should not only be built, but be built in time for the Centennial in 1967. Therefore, there was a very high degree of urgency about the selection of the architect and other questions and for that reason the interdepartmental committee recommended to government and government accepted the notion that there should not be a competition which would have imposed, if it had been held, a delay of six months or something of that kind. Instead the committee recommended that we select a Canadian architect on the basis of ability and experience. There were three or four firms—architectural firms—studied with that in mind and it was the committee's recommendation that the firm of Affleck, Desbarats, Dimakopoulos, Lebensold, Sise of Montreal be chosen on the basis of their talent and experience.

At the time the choice was made this firm had had a hand in building more theatres and concert halls in Canada—it might, indeed, be in North America—than any other architectural firm. This firm has been the responsible architects for the Queen Elizabeth Theatre and Playhouse in Vancouver and for the Grande Salle, as it was then called, the Salle Wilfrid-Pelletier of the Place des Arts in Montreal and for the Fathers of Confederation Memorial Building in Charlottetown. No other architectural firm had had that experience in this rather specialized type of architecture and it was on that basis they were recommended and accepted to be the architects of this one.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you, very much.

Mr. Chairman: I should point out to the Committee that we would like to finish with Mr. Southam today. If we do not finish our questioning by 1 o'clock I wonder if it would be the consensus of the Committee to sit this afternoon, provided we can get permission from the House? I have already asked Mr. Southam and he and his officials are willing to come and I have also cleared it with the Committees Branch. I wonder if it would be the disposition of the Committee to request permission to sit while the House is sitting this afternoon and perhaps this evening in order to conclude with Mr. Southam and this particular item?

Mr. Stanbury: We will try not to make it necessary, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I have three names on my list, Mr. Stewart, Mr. Rose, and Mr. Fairweather in that order who have indicated a change in subject, so perhaps we could try and get through.

Mr. Dinsdale: I think the Chairman is worried about the quorum situation.

The Chairman: That is correct.

Mr. Dinsdale: We would be agreeable to sit if necessary.

The Chairman: Perhaps we could have a motion that we could use, if necessary, at this time. We could hold it in abeyance if it is not required.

(See Minutes of Proceedings)

The Chairman: Mr. Stewart on a new subject.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I do not know if it is proper for a witness before this Committee to ask himself a question so as to get an answer read into the record, but am I correct in my understanding that we are now leaving the visual arts program?

The Chairman: Yes. The Committee seems to have exhausted the subject. Mr. Stewart on a new subject matter.

Mr. Southam: I leave it, of course, to your decision, Mr. Chairman, but after the last meeting of this Committee a question was raised on a television program by a member of this Committee in connection with the visual arts program and, more particularly, the decision to have the opera house curtain woven in Japan. As the question was raised on television—the suggestion was made that we had something to hide in connection with this decision—I would rather welcome a question from somebody as to why we had the opera curtain woven in Japan. If the member in question would perhaps care to repeat—

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I would be very happy to ask that question.

The Chairman: We will let Mr. Stewart carry on as I believe he was the one who made the statement on television.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I am very happy to ask that question. I did want to get onto something which I consider a bigger subject and with the amount of time we have spent on this I thought perhaps we could leave it for now.

However, with regard to the question of the opera curtain, I wanted to find out from Mr. Southam or his aides exactly what the situation was because the word is that it could not be woven in Canada because there is no loom large enough to weave it in Canada and also it has been suggested that perhaps the materials used are such that the curtain could not be cleaned. I would like the Committee to be aware of why this had to be done in Japan, at what cost and so on so as to clear up these stories.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, could I put on the record one rumour that I heard to the effect that the reason this was made in Japan—it seemed to be an excellent choice to some of us—was in return for all the barley and wheat that the Japanese have bought from us and this was our way of trying to keep the balance. Is this in any way true?

The Chairman: That is an appropriate rumour from somebody from Western Canada. Are there any other questions on this particular subject? Perhaps Mr. Southam could get them and answer all of them. We then could move on to another subject. Mr. Southam would you continue?

Mr. Southam: When the advisory committee was given a list of works of art which in the architect's opinion should be developed within its budget, there were two curtains, in fact, listed by Mr. Lebensold, one, the opera house curtain and the other the theatre curtain. In this case the committee decided on a competition by invitation and three or four distinguished Canadian tapestry makers were invited to contribute. On the basis of the design proposals they submitted, Micheline Beauchemin was selected to carry out the opera house curtain and Madam Mariette Vermette, the theatre curtain. Micheline Beauchemin had already worked in Japan; she had done part of her studies there; and her proposal from the start was for a curtain of a kind—of a texture—which she had learned of in Japan; and because it was an opera house curtain it was also on a scale which, we were informed, could only be executed in Japan.

There is a firm in Japan which has been making theatre curtains for, I think, 800 years, Kawashima of Kyoto, and her proposal from the start was for a curtain which, for reasons of texture, nature and scale would be executed in Japan. It was accepted on that basis.

The theatre curtain, which is much smaller and of a different texture, was one which Madame Vermette recommended could be made in Canada, and it was. That was the reason for our authorizing Mademoiselle Beauchemin to go to Japan to develop this curtain.

I can only add that when the Grande Salle in Place des Arts required a curtain she also received the commission and that in that case, for the same reasons, the curtain was executed in England. I might also add that it is my understanding that the opera house curtain for the Kennedy Centre in Washington will be made in Japan.

The cost of this commission, all told, including Miss Beauchemin's fee and the cost of the execution and transport, comes to $73,000.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Would that also include her fee, her travelling and so on?

Mr. Southam: Yes.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions on this item?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, perhaps we could deal with the question of its "cleanability".

Mr. Southam: We are assured that it will be possible to keep this curtain clean. I have not seen the curtain. I have seen samples of it; and I have seen photographs of parts of it. I do not know if it is proper of me to say so, but the other day Mr. Robert Shaw, who will be known to you as the Associate Commissioner General of Expo, happened to be in Japan. I think he is the only Canadian who has seen this curtain completed. It is now completed and is on its way here. He took the trouble to call our architect, and he said that it is simply splendid—unbelievably beautiful.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions on this subject?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): May I open on a new subject?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I should like to say, Mr. Chairman, that perhaps we are being a little unfair to Mr. Southam. We have been asking all our questions of him. Had we had the freedom to have other people here, as, for example, Mr. Hébert, I am sure he would have been able to answer some of Mr. Osler's questions. In addition to that I think the main architect, Mr. Lebensold, would be able to answer a number of the other questions that have been put to Mr. Southam.

© 1240

The Chairman: The architect can be questioned when we hear from the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): The over-all question of Canadian involvement and so on is something that undoubtedly will come up again. This is why I hesitated to raise this particular aspect.

It is my contention that the Arts Centre was envisaged as a source of inspiration for the development of Canadian art. It is of course, a matter of opinion to what level we must go to ensure that, and whether it should also be a showplace for world art, and so on. I am here speaking of art generally; not only of embellishments but also of Canadian artists.

I would now like to open on the question of the orchestra.

[Interpretation]

If you will allow me, Mr. Chairman, I would put my questions to Mr. Beaudet. Mr. Beaudet might possibly give us a brief history. To begin with I should like to congratulate you because your choice of a musical director was an extremely fine one in every respect and we are very happy to have you here.

I would like you to give me, if at all possible, a little bit of the history of the orchestra. What was the directors' original intention? Did we want a large orchestra? Did we want to bring in other orchestras? How was the decision finally taken?

Mr. Beaudet: I believe, Mr. Chairman, there were a number of plans submitted to the Council's administrators before we arrived at the decision of having a 44 musician orchestra which we call a classical or, if you prefer, a Mozart orchestra. The financial aspect of the matter, of course, figured very largely in our decision. From the policy point of view, I believe it was a good idea not to duplicate the efforts of other orchestras like the Montreal or the Toronto Symphony orchestra—which come to Ottawa on a fairly regular basis. We wanted to prevent a duplication both of the repertory and of the general type of music produced in this way.

As far as the composition of the orchestra is concerned, I believe you also posed that question Mr. Stewart, it will be made up of the most competent elements whose services we may obtain.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I might like to return to that point a little later. Could you give me a brief history of how you came to this decision? Did the government make a decision itself or was the decision taken by your advisory group, by the Arts Centre itself? Who made the decision to get an orchestra in the first place? Could you give us a little history about that?

Mr. Beaudet: I believe, Mr. Chairman, this decision was taken by the Board of the Arts Council itself.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): They also decided on the size of the orchestra?

Mr. Beaudet: I did not mean the Arts Council; I really meant the Arts Centre.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): It says here that as the National Arts Centre will only open in 1969, the recruitment of musicians can be carried out a little later. This should present no problems, at least so far as excellence is concerned. That is what you said, Mr. Beaudet, a moment ago.

Mr. Beaudet added, however, to re-assure those who might be concerned, that he would not be raiding other orchestras, that they would be accepting only those musicians who wished to join us. The musicians' contract will generally be for a three-year period on an annual extent over the whole year which is fairly unusual in North America. Could you enlighten us a little on that subject? For example, it is not the whole year, I believe, as Mr. Southam told us Thursday that it would be a 43-week contract.

Mr. Beaudet: Yes, there has been a change.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Could you give us an idea of what we are going to pay these musicians in an ordinary contract, for example?

Mr. Beaudet: The contract between the musicians' union in Ottawa and the National Arts Centre has not yet been finalized nor ratified by the two parties. It might not be, I think, proper to give you any figure at this time as we are still in the negotiating stage.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): You cannot give us an idea of what the whole orchestra will be costing us?

Mr. Beaudet: Of course I did have to draw up the budget. I arrived at an average salary for you like; but it is not, perhaps, something which is as realistic as it could be when I will have begun negotiations with each musician. The minimum salary, of course, is a basis. It is always as you know, a starting point.

Mr. Stewart: As you said, it is fairly unusual to have year-long contracts for musicians. I imagine that musicians would very much like to come to Ottawa for that purpose.

Mr. Beaudet: Obviously a number of musicians from out of town have been asking for information about our Centre orchestra. They are more or less interested and interested for various reasons. Some are interested in our repertory; some have said they want to avoid the "rat race" that is happening everywhere else. There is musical interest shown here and perhaps, if I may say so, a family interest in the Centre orchestra.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): How many musicians have been hired so far out of these 44?

Mr. Beaudet: Not one.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): There have been no contracts signed. Do you have an idea of how many you have in mind, how many will you accept or have you made no choice?

Mr. Beaudet: We have made no choice and for a very good reason. It is because auditions are not concluded yet. It would not be right, I think, because of those who have already taken a decision—who have already come to us—not that they are all candidates. We will have some auditions in September, others in December. We feel we will have heard most candidates at that time.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): How many candidates have auditioned so far?

Mr. Beaudet: In September Mr. Chairman, we had 100. Unfortunately it was the end of the holidays and a number of these people were playing in festivals. Others had given up playing for that moment. What happened is that we only had 44 in Winnipeg, Ottawa and Toronto. The auditions which we will have in December will make it possible to hear, we hope, 138 candidates if they are available, naturally.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Is there any reason why these candidates should not come to Ottawa? Do you have to move about yourself? I know that you are travelling, in fact, but is it really necessary?

Mr. Beaudet: I believe that in one way or another, Mr. Chairman, somebody has to travel. It was probably easier to move the board of examiners—four people and a secretary—than to bring in people in larger numbers from Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Vancouver and so on. We have tried to go to those places where there was a larger concentration of requests.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): But, I think they should be coming here at their own expense. Is it not a little abnormal for the offices of an orchestra to travel about to hire musicians?

Mr. Beaudet: Mr. Chairman, I will not deny that in practice one candidate who asks to be engaged by an orchestra moves; when we are dealing with one or two candidates that is the case. But for the moment we are setting up what we think is going to be a national orchestra, an orchestra which will be national in character. I have suggested to our people that it might be better for us to go to listen to these candidates. As far as costs are concerned, Mr. Stewart, it is cheaper that way. It is cheaper for us to move than to have the candidates come here.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): If you are paying their costs, of course, it would be cheaper but this is a very attractive position. I do not think that any other orchestra in this country offers a 43-week contract. It would not be difficult it seems to pay their own costs to come to be auditioned.

Mr. Beaudet: In certain cases I can certify that the candidate would have been put to a considerable amount of financial trouble. This would have been the case in a great many instances.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): What about the candidates who have been auditioning? The candidates themselves? I have raised the question; and it has been raised by other people and it has been said that you would rather have Canadian musicians only. It is my opinion that we have Canadian musicians only because we have a large number of them who have to leave this country to go elsewhere because we do not find room for them. It really means that we have enough musicians here in Canada. Why did the National Arts Centre take the decision to go to Europe to find some? Moreover, was that decision indeed taken?

Mr. Beaudet: Obviously there are a large number of Canadian musicians who are in Europe or in the United States and they say that we communicate with them when they have not communicated with us. We hope we can offer sufficient attractive conditions to them to bring them back. This was the case with Mr. Bernardi who had been with the Sadlers Wells now for some years.

If we can recruit an orchestra which can be entirely Canadian and whose quality, whose excellence, is that which we are seeking we would be very happy to do so. There have been no auditions in Europe, Mr. Stewart. We have heard no musician in Europe, neither Canadian nor foreign. May I, Mr. Chairman with your permission . . .

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I am very happy to hear that because some people had said there had been auditions in Europe. I know a number of musicians are a little put out by that. That is why I was glad that you have set the matters right.

Mr. Beaudet: May I make a supplementary observation with regard to auditions? By the way, the National Youth Orchestra travels for audition purposes—the board of examiners travels about.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): But these are not professional musicians.

Mr. Beaudet: But a number of ours want to be professionals.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): You are saying then, according to what I understand, if it were possible to find quality—the quality you require—in Canada, your orchestra would be composed entirely of Canadian musicians?

Mr. Beaudet: It is our hope, Mr. Stewart.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I would like to express my opinion. I think we have enough musicians in Canada and that it would be possible for you to find some if you look hard enough, especially if you go all over the country. I think you should be able to find enough musicians of the calibre you are looking for.

Mr. Beaudet: Mr. Chairman, I can only express the wish that I hope the situation will be such as has been envisaged by Mr. Stewart, but we should not destroy the other orchestras which exist. You stated so yourself.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I agree.

[English]

The Chairman: Do you have a question, Mr. Rose?

Mr. Rose: Perhaps I could address a supplementary on this same subject, Mr. Chairman. Do I understand that we will adjourn at 1 o'clock?

The Chairman: We have a choice. I still have your name, Mr. Rose, and Mr. Fairweather's on my list of questioners and if you are not going to be more than, say, a few minutes we could try to conclude the hearing now.

Mr. Rose: I do not think the subject I will be bringing up will be a lengthy one. However, if I may, Mr. Chairman, I would like to address a supplementary question to the one that has just been dealt with. I would like to pursue this matter of the availability of the quality that you require as far as Canadian musicians are concerned. This comes as a bit of a shock to me because I know that some of the major orchestras at least—and I am particularly familiar with the one in Vancouver—have been importing foreign musicians for the purpose of filling out their ranks with the quality which they appear to feel is necessary. They have a British conductor; perhaps that might have something to do with it, I do not know. However, I would doubt, without aiding perhaps, that this situation which has been discussed here would prevail and that there are a sufficient number of Canadian musicians to fill the ranks.

Mr. Jean-Marie Beaudet (Director of Music, National Arts Centre): Mr. Chairman, it is true that some of the orchestras have been allowed to import musicians because there was a shortage. There is no doubt that there is a shortage of string players not only in Canada but in the United States as well. We may have to do the same thing. I mean, there is no commitment that we will not do it. If we are short of musicians we have to find them wherever they are.

Mr. Rose: Further to this same subject, could I ask if the 43 or 44 musicians that are going to be hired for a 43-week period will be completely employed by the Centre? Will they be free to teach or take on other engagements, or moonlight in a variety of ways known best to musicians?

Mr. Beaudet: I do not know, Mr. Chairman, if there is going to be much moonlighting available here. We would hope that the schedule would certainly allow some of them, if there are requests for teachers, to be made available.

Mr. Rose: Was there any intention, sir, to employ any of the very excellent Canadian Forces musicians that are resident in the Ottawa area?

Mr. Beaudet: Mr. Chairman, we have discussed this problem. There is the question of the available time. This orchestra has to be able to rehearse at any time during the day, it has to be available to go outside, and it might present a problem. They might not be available at the time we would like them, but this is under discussion.

Mr. Rose: This is an aside, sir, but it has to do with time and the Canadian Forces musicians. I understand we now have 90 here from the various forces, and they only have a sufficient number of uniforms for 45 to fulfil an engagement. Nevertheless, they have plenty of time.

I just have one more question on the orchestra. You are suggesting here a Mozartian-sized orchestra, or chamber orchestra, or however you wish to describe it, and you have also suggested that you did not want to compete or duplicate the services of either the Toronto orchestra or the orchestra from Montreal. Do you anticipate at any time that you will be presenting the type of work that would require a much larger orchestra, and if so how would you go about satisfying the performance requirements for burials, or something like that?

Mr. Beaudet: The policy at this stage anyway, Mr. Rose, is that we will limit ourselves to the kind of repertoire that is best suited to the orchestra and that the orchestra can best perform. It may be that we might require one additional player for a specific work but we are certainly not thinking of enlarging the orchestra substantially for any performance.

Mr. Rose: Then the repertoire for the people living here, as far as your orchestra is concerned, will be limited to the kind of material that is to be performed by this size of orchestra.

Mr. Beaudet: Mr. Chairman, I do not think we should say limited because the repertoire is rather vast.

Mr. Rose: I meant by that that the outside orchestras would fulfil the other role.

Mr. Beaudet: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Rose: Perhaps I could turn to this question that I addressed to Mr. Southam earlier, Mr. Chairman, and that has to do with his identification with the letter that he read the other day from Mr. Gene Lees. I would like him to tell the Committee if he agrees with it wholeheartedly and completely.

Mr. Southam: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I read it because I thought Mr. Lees was probably expressing it better than I could because he spoke as an artist. I would not have read it if I had not agreed with the views he expressed.

Mr. Rose: I think perhaps you reflect a bit of uneasiness that I am about to pounce on some particular phrase in here, and perhaps I am. In any event, I think all of us can agree that this Centre should be used for the most profitable development of the Canadian artists and I would agree with Mr. Lees when he said that we were all proud of those who have emigrated and who have brought much credit to Canada through their excellence, their productivity and their recognition in artistic fields outside of Canada.

However, I think there may be a little bit of specious logic at work here in that possibly the suggestion is that the Centre will encourage artists to remain home. I do not think that we could perhaps all agree with this completely. At least, I could not.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I think one of the basic aims of the Centre, in the development of its orchestra and theatre companies and in the program it hopes to develop of inviting other Canadian companies and orchestras to come here is to increase the opportunities for Canadian artists who are working in Canada, and to extend the seasons of visiting companies by the time they come here. Mr. Lees expressed a view which is widely held among Canadian creative people, not only in the performing arts fields but I think also in film work, that they are obliged to go abroad to find work and to the extent that we create work for these creative people we are helping to keep them here, or to bring them back, as Mr. Beaudet says.

Mr. Rose: I would agree with you to that extent but I also feel that every artist craves an international reputation and he will do those things which will help him build that reputation. If it means going out of the country and emigrating to large centres, that that is exactly what he will do.

Mr. Southam: Yes.

• 1315

Mr. Rose: I have no particular quarrel with that except I think that we might be misled into believing that this is going to lock up our artists, and I would not want this view to emanate from this Committee. I now read from Mr. Lees' letter. It says:

The United States did not produce a Kern, a Gershwin, an Aaron Copland, a Hemingway, a Dos Passos because it had a strong sense of national identity. It has a strong sense of national identity because of Kern, Gershwin, Copland, Hemingway, Dos Passos and all the rest. This is why I think there is a strong parallel between the building of the Arts Center and the building of the CPR. We need it.

My comment here is that people like Kern and Gershwin flourish because of the huge market in the United States—and this is true of artists in other countries—that perhaps will not prevail in this country for a great number of years.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, by and large that is true. I think what we are trying to do at the centre is modestly to enlarge the Canadian market.

Mr. Rose: Thank you.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, I misunderstood you a few minutes ago in the proceedings. I for one would like to re-open the question of the orchestra. I did not realize it was closed. I thought we were still pursuing. . .

The Chairman: In that case we will have to come back this afternoon, providing of course the House of Commons gives us permission, and I will be moving that on motions today. So, if the House of Commons accepts the motion we will re-assemble here after Orders of the Day at 3.30 p.m.

Notice of the motion is being distributed to all members of the House of Commons and a notice of meeting will be distributed immediately to you as well.

An hon. Member: So we do not come unless we hear?

The Chairman: Unless the House approves of our motion we cannot come back. If it does we shall come back. We are going to phrase the motion so that it deals only with this afternoon. Thank you.

AFTERNOON SITTING

The Chairman: I think we will continue where we left off. Mr. Osler wanted to ask questions concerning the music policy of the National Arts Centre, and I recognize Mr. Osler.

Mr. Osler: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Before doing so could I just take thirty seconds to ask if the Committee as a whole is going to have an opportunity to tour the Arts Centre? If not, because of time or whatever, then individuals will know whether to take up the very kind offers of Mr. Southam and company to tour it.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I confirm the offer I made to convey this request on the part of the Committee to the Department of Public Works. I am quite sure that any time it would be convenient for the Committee to visit the Centre that visit could be arranged. Consequently I would suggest that it is for the Committee to decide when it wants to go, and I feel sure that the Department of Public Works will make the necessary arrangements. I stand here to be your messenger.

The Chairman: In that case, Mr. Osler, we will take this up at the next meeting of the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure.

Mr. Osler: I do not want this laboured in any way, but in a very quick and cursory way, if possible, I would like somebody to take me back to square one and tell me where the music policy of the National Arts Centre began. It is not clear in the Act, for instance, that you should have an orchestra. Could somebody start at that point, and lead us on?

• 1550

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I will take this one on. I think Mr. Beaudet dealt very well with the questions which were raised this morning, but simply because I have been around the office of the National Arts Centre for some years and he only joined us a couple of years ago perhaps I am more responsible for the developing history of the Centre and if the Committee wants to go back over the history of the Centre, as far as the orchestra is concerned, I will be glad to do my best.

It goes back to the moment when the government decided to build the Centre on the basis of a recommendation from a private group here whose report expressed the hope that the building of a national arts centre would not only supply the physical facilities which this capital city, like any other capital city, requires for the artistic performances, dramatic or musical, but also expressed the hope that the building of a centre would contribute to the revival and development of the performing arts themselves, here.

You will find in the report—the feasibility study—put to the government in October, 1963, this kind of thinking. The Government accepted the idea of building the centre and appointed, as I have told the Committee, four advisory committees to go over the project and make expert recommendations. One of these committees was called the Advisory Committee on Music, Opera and Ballet. The Chairman was a distinguished Toronto composer, Mr. Louis Applebaum, the Vice-Chairman was Dr. Arnold Walter who, for the last 30 years, has been the Director of the Faculty of Music of the University of Toronto, now retired, and there sat on that Committee a number of representatives of music, opera and the dance such as Mr. Zubin Mehta, the Conductor of the Montreal Symphony Orchestra, Miss Celia Franca and Mme Ludmilla Chiriaeff, the Artistic Directors of the National Ballet of Canada and of Les Grands Ballets Canadiens; Mr. Herman Geiger-Torel, the Artistic Director of the Canadian Opera Company and others, and I am sorry if I have forgotten to mention one or two.

It was a strong committee of people interested in this field and this committee was called together primarily to address itself to the physical requirements for the Centre and tackled, particularly, the opera, the large 2,300 seat hall and spelled out in greater detail than the feasibility report had done, the actual physical and acoustical requirements for a concert hall good enough to be part of a national centre devoted to the performing arts.

The Committee went beyond that and I understood that it should do so. It concerned itself not only with the physical requirements of the National Arts Centre, in so far as they concern music, opera and the dance but also programming. They looked into the situation of music in the National Capital Region, they were familiar with what had happened here musically.

We had, years ago, an Ottawa symphony orchestra organized by a private group which was making a good deal of progress towards the raising of standards and the developing of audiences for symphonic music here. That orchestra had got into difficulties; I do not think it would be unfair to say that these were difficulties which arose from their relations with the Musicians' Union and they had ceased their operations. At the time this advisory committee came on the scene there was, therefore, no professional orchestra in Ottawa and members of the committee interested themselves very much in this situation, and I think they were right to do so.

• 1555

As a result of the discussions in that committee during 1964 and 1965, as Co-ordinator I invited the Chairman, Mr. Louis Applebaum, to prepare a report and recommendations about what kind of orchestra we ought to have if we ought to have an orchestra and Mr. Applebaum prepared a splendid report which I would be glad to table here, although it has not been made public heretofore, in which he recommended the creation of a 45-piece orchestra as the resident orchestra of the National Arts Centre. I think his report is dated probably in 1966. I might be out a year.

When the Parliament passed the National Arts Centre Act in July, 1966, a Board of Trustees was appointed. The Board was appointed only in December and met only in March, 1967, for the first time. One of the first questions they tackled was the question of resident companies, and among them this orchestra, and they had before them the Applebaum report. The Board felt that if they were going to tackle this problem responsibly they should go over the whole ground again. They instructed me and Mr. Beaudet, our Director of Music, who just came on our strength then to reexamine the whole question of an orchestra, and whether we should go for a symphony orchestra of 90 or 100 or 110 musicians or the kind of orchestra that Mr. Applebaum had proposed.

We did so. In the course of our study we met several times with the boards of directors of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra and the Montreal Symphony Orchestra as being the representatives of the orchestras that would be most affected by the creation of a symphony orchestra here. We met with the Canada Council, we consulted other Canadian musicians, including Mr. Applebaum and, as Mr. Beaudet said this morning, the factors that entered into the study were partly artistic and partly financial.

A symphony orchestra today is a very expensive proposition. The annual operating budget of a modern symphony orchestra goes well beyond a million dollars per year, as you know. We came back to the Board of Trustees last autumn, I think it was, with a recommendation that, taking everything into consideration, we should go for what Mr. Applebaum proposed, the creation of a smaller ensemble. It was partly for budgetary reasons. We felt that we could not afford the big orchestra but partly we felt it was a more responsible decision, artistically.

The needs of the public of the National Capital Region for symphonic music can well be met now by the visits here from the Montreal or Toronto Symphony orchestras but visits from symphony orchestras from out of town would never create the active musical life in this city which any Canadian city of the size of the national capital deserves. We continue to feel that the presence of a certain number of musicians of talent here was essential to develop the inner musical life of this city and we felt this could be done by the kind of orchestra that Mr. Applebaum had proposed.

• 1600

Therefore we recommended that that be done and the Board accepted this decision, I think it was in June, 1967. Since the Board took that decision, as Mr. Beaudet explained this morning, we have been proceeding, first of all, to find a conductor.

That was the first stage, and we have found a conductor, Mr. Mario Bernardi, and since we have had Mr. Bernardi's agreement, which I think was finally obtained last summer, we have begun to audition musicians for this orchestra. That is the history of the orchestra to date.

Mr. Osler: My next question following on from that would be this, Mr. Chairman. It seems to me that an orchestra in the national capital does two things. One, in some mystical way it is presumably connected with the national effort because it is in Ottawa, and I am not deriding the effort when I say that. Second, it is a local orchestra. I know that the City of Ottawa was not able to keep an orchestra before but I am wondering whether, in the financing of this orchestra, the people of Canada are going to take the thing on through the National Arts Centre or whether this is going to be another orchestra in which the people of Ottawa are expected to pull their weight as people in other cities have to, and some of the financing at least comes on the basis of merit, or what have you, from the Canada Council. I would like to know how you propose to finance this orchestra.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, the orchestra will be making a request for support to the Canada Council, as other professional Canadian orchestras do, and we have been assured by the Canada Council that this orchestra will receive that measure of support which a professional Canadian orchestra of this kind could expect. The support from the Canada Council will be in line with the kind of support that the Canada Council gives to other professional orchestras.

Also, the Board of Trustees of the Centre has decided—and it was only decided by the executive committee last Friday and I suppose this is the first public mention of the fact—that we should create a community involvement and support organization here for the National Arts Centre of the kind that exists around other arts centres elsewhere in the country. There is a precedent for that here in Ottawa in the National Gallery Association. Ottawa is a curious city. The great institutions here are federal institutions—the National Gallery, the National Museum and the National Arts Centre—they are national institutions which exist for national purposes and in former years there was a kind of moat between them and the community.

The first national institution to throw a bridge across this moat was the National Gallery. Some years ago the National Gallery created a National Gallery Association to draw around itself a great deal of support for various program activities of one kind or another, and I think it has been a very successful experiment. We have the advantage of that precedent and from the beginning the National Arts Centre has thought that the time must come, and must come early, when we ought to create around the National Arts Centre a popular, not to say a mass movement of support.

There is a great deal of support in this community for the National Arts Centre, for the orchestra and for the French and English theatre companies which is not yet mobilized. We plan to mobilize it as best we can. We have not done anything until now because I think it would be irresponsible to develop that kind of support, until we knew exactly what we could do, what we could deliver. We know now or will know after we have our budget clued up for our opening year—hopefully in the next two or three weeks—exactly what we can deliver here in Ottawa in terms of our orchestra and our two theatre companies. The moment we know that I think we can go to this community—this is both Ottawa-Hull, it is the National Capital region, it is a community “des deux expressions”—and we can ask them to rally round. We plan to do that and we will be asking them to support us financially and in other ways to the extent they feel that the National Arts Centre is a good idea.

So, to take the orchestra, which was your particular question, I would hope that support at the federal level for the orchestra would come from the Canada Council, and from ourselves, to the extent that an orchestra of that kind requires administrative support—I suppose our staff will be supporting the orchestra. We hope that at least from the very beginning the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, the Ontario Arts Council and the Ministère des Affaires Culturelles at Quebec will support the orchestra to the extent that it makes services available to communities in eastern Ontario or western Quebec. We plan to make an approach to the cities of Ottawa and Hull, which are represented on our Board of Trustees, I should remind you, by the mayors of Ottawa and Hull, and we plan to make an appeal to the community through this support organization which we have in mind and which ought to be set up within the next few weeks.

Mr. Osler: Thank you. I think it is only fair to make an observation rather than ask a question at this time and I really assume that I would be speaking for almost every politician in the room when I say—they can jump down my neck if they do not think so—that it would be seriously embarrassing to a politician to consider the National Arts Centre estimates unless it could be proved that the local people were holding their end up because, without being parochial, I think every place that had an orchestra or theatre company or anything else would immediately say, “well, these people deserve some support from the national government, perhaps, because they are in the capital, but the weight has to be pulled primarily at home” and to a very large extent in the Ottawa area, I would think.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I am with Mr. Osler on this except that I slightly question the word “primarily”. Most Canadian cities the size of Ottawa have large companies or important concentrations of private wealth available for the support of organizations of this kind. Ottawa has not. As has been frequently pointed out, Ottawa is a one-company town. The business is government. The federal government is the principal employer in this area and I would think in a sense this distinguishes Ottawa from other cities of this size. I therefore do not believe that the primary impulse or support for building the Centre or for organizing the programs must come from the civil servants who make up the large part of the population of Ottawa. The primary impulse has come, and I think will continue to come, from the federal government for very good reasons, which I would be delighted to expand on. However, I do agree with you that the community must play its part and we plan to mobilize that degree, but I do not think it will be the primary degree. I do not think the contribution of the community to our budget will be the largest contribution.

• 1610

Mr. Osler: I will retract my choice of the words "community" and "primary" as being unhappy. I think what I really meant was that if it looks as if the national government is putting in 70 to 80 per cent of your requirement that this would be an embarrassing thing. You have mentioned the Province of Quebec, the Province of Ontario, the City of Ottawa, the City of Hull and private people and when you put all those things together they should be a very sizable proportion of the weight, plus the ordinary Canada Council grant, that you, as an orchestra, would be getting.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I look forward...

Mr. Osler: I just suggest this; I do not think we should argue about it.

Mr. Southam: No, I look forward to the next opportunity of coming before this Committee and discussing our budget on the basis of the budget we will then have settled for our first year. We will then be able to determine what proportion of support for these activities comes from the federal government, from the provincial government and from the community.

I may be speaking in a personal and private way rather than with a proper degree of public responsibility because I was born and brought up in Ottawa, but I would urge the Committee to take into consideration that Ottawa is not a city like others; Ottawa is the capital of this country. What I hope we can prove is that the building of the National Arts Centre, and the creation of this orchestra, and these two arrangements we are making for two theatre companies, will be considered by all Canadians as a contribution to national unity and to national realization.

To that extent the experiment here is a little different in kind to the experiment in another Canadian city of this size. Possibly the federal government is right in putting into this particular experiment perhaps a little bit more in proportion to what it would put into a similar experiment in another Canadian city. I think in the long term it ought to pay off in national terms.

Mr. Osler: I am conceding that though, Mr. Chairman, by saying I think it is taken for granted that there will be something in the National Arts Council budget to cover this sort of thing. All I meant was, I think, if the proportions get too far out of line, and that is a hard term to define, there would be trouble from the political sphere.

The Chairman: There always is trouble from the political sphere.

Mr. Osler: Yes. That is the end of my questioning, but I would like to observe that there was a lot of conversation this morning about foreign—versus home—grown musicians. I do not really feel we can afford to be parochial in this department. If we are going to have musicians, we have to get the best we can, assuming that we try to give Canadians the job first.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could raise a supplementary question? What degree of co-operation or indeed help can the provincial centres for the performing arts expect from the National Arts Centre? Do you have a program? Perhaps you referred to it this morning; you did briefly to Quebec when I was here.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, as I suggested this morning the question of the working relationship between the National Arts Centre and other centres remains to be worked out. What I put to the Committee in a rather tentative way this morning was the idea we have that the National Arts Centre ought to recommend to the Canada Council that it call a meeting of the representatives of these centres from across the country—there are now 12 or 14 of them—to work out an effective relationship which will enable programs that we develop here to be exposed in other parts of the country, and reciprocally, programs developed in other parts of the country to be shown here.

It is not the responsibility of the National Arts Centre directly to organize the life of the performing arts across Canada. To the extent that the federal government is interested it is the responsibility of the Canada Council. We can only suggest it to them, but we plan to make that suggestion.

Mr. McGrath: I suggest that it does place a certain responsibility on you when you talk about a national orchestra, for example, making this national orchestra available to the various centres across the country, making it clear that it would be available, and indeed encouraging it.

• 1615

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, we have great hopes for this orchestra. It is an orchestra of a kind that does not exist in Canada. There are symphony orchestras from Halifax to Vancouver, but this is the only one—unless I am wrong—which is of the dimensions we have in mind, 40 to 45 musicians. It will be of excellent quality if we have anything to do with it.

I think charity begins at home and so do the activities of artistic ensembles of any kind. This orchestra will have to prove itself here, because it is being created here. We hope that over the years its reputation and the contribution which it can be expected to make to the musical life of Canada will be more and more widely recognized. We hope that possibly in the first year or so it will already be possible to arrange for it to tour western Quebec and eastern Ontario which are culturally underprivileged areas.

Mr. McGrath: That is exactly what prompted my question...

Mr. Southam: Yes.

Mr. McGrath: ...your reference to western Quebec and eastern Ontario.

Mr. Southam: This is where it begins, but because this is an orchestra of the size it is, it will be comparatively inexpensive to tour it. We do not think we will have to foist it on the rest of the country. We think it is going to be the kind of instrument from the beginning which will attract invitations from the rest of the country. The reputation of an orchestra can be established nationally or internationally much more rapidly than the reputation of a theatre company, because of broadcasting and recording. For example, the Orchestre de Paris came to Ottawa last Monday, a week ago. This was an orchestra which was created only a year ago, but in one year has established an international reputation by the excellence of the quality of its performances. We hope that our orchestra—a smaller one, half the size—by the excellence of the quality of its performances will establish a national reputation very rapidly, and that invitations will come and opportunities to answer those invitations will be made available to us.

I do not think that the National Arts Centre has the funds in its budget to tour this orchestra, but we stand ready to send this orchestra where it is invited, provided funds are made available. I get back again to the Canada Council and to local sponsors.

Mr. McGrath: I just want to conclude, Mr. Chairman, by pointing out, with great respect to Mr. Southam, that Canada does not begin in Halifax, it begins in St. John's, Newfoundland. We have a very fine arts centre there and we are looking forward to having the national orchestra there.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I do not know if a witness can raise a point of order, but I did mention St. John's this morning, twice.

Mr. McGrath: Yes, you did, but you mentioned today that Canada began at Halifax.

The Chairman: Mr. Mongrain?

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Osler has invited us to jump on his neck if our opinions differ with his. I would like to do it in a friendly way.

[Interpretation]

I do not feel, Mr. Chairman, that we should make too much of this need for local financial involvement in the orchestra. By the very nature of things there will be some. Most of your patrons of course will come from Ottawa, Hull or elsewhere, but the point raised by Mr. Osler to the effect that this might possibly not be well considered by other cities in Canada who do not enjoy this type of contribution, whereas Ottawa does, does not appear to me to be a matter of great moment.

I think that for the good reputation of the Arts Centre, we should remind ourselves of this. Most of these arts centres have been built through generous contributions by the province and by the federal government. This is the case in my own city where we have an ultra modern arts centre. This is proper. I think most Canadians will see in what is being done here in Ottawa a stimulus. They will see in this a promise for the future of our young talents throughout the country. I think this will be seen in this light by all young people in this country from St. John's to Victoria going through Halifax and elsewhere.

I feel that Canadians do not really object to the fact that there might not be the financial involvement of Hull or Ottawa to the same extent we might see elsewhere.

This is a Canadian institution. It had to be established in Ottawa; Ottawa is the heart of this country, Ottawa is the capital of this country and we should not forget there are a large number of other cities which have art centres, but it is thanks to provincial or federal contributions. I think these arguments that I have just made should be brought to as many people as possible. Your reputation is not, perhaps, what it should be, in Canada. A lot of people have been saying this is an expensive undertaking and will remain expensive. However I feel we should insist on the fact that this is a very small investment for what this will bring to Canada in the following centuries.

• 1620

This is a new century—the second century of Confederation I do not think Mr. Osler's intentions were petty. However, I do feel that we should explain to all Canadians that although this investment might not bring in returns within one, two or three years it is nevertheless something which will bring incalculable benefits to this country, artistically speaking, in centuries to come. The investment in this light is very small.

[English]

The Chairman: Mr. Givens and then Mr. La Salle.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Southam, do you not feel, sir, that the things you talked about before as leading to a dearth of financial support in Ottawa are what would likely lead to a dearth of talent for your orchestra and for your other requirements, namely, Ottawa is a one-industry town, it has a relatively small population and so on?

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, it is quite true that in the last few years there has been a lack of talent in Ottawa. One of the most unhappy incidents in the history of Ottawa from the point of view of the arts, I think, was the decision to move the National Film Board from here to Montreal some years ago, which overnight meant the migration from here to Montreal of a large number of creative people. The unhappy collapse some 12 years ago of the Canadian Repertory Theatre which was Ottawa's only professional company and of the Ottawa Symphony Orchestra some 6 or 7 years ago had the same consequences. In our view these events could not be blamed on the lack of support among the public here, these were events which had other explanations.

You are absolutely right, Mr. Givens, that in the last 5 or 6 years, there has been a dearth of professional musicians and professional actors in the National Capital Region. I think the creation of the National Arts Centre is a major step towards the repopulation of Ottawa and Hull with creative people from these various disciplines. We want to bring musicians, actors and producers back here and we hope we will have the support of the CBC, the National Film Board and private organizations interested in music and in theatre to help us do so. We think that one of the most important things the National Arts Centre can do for the national capital is to bring back this precious element—precious in any community—here.

Mr. Givens: Incidentally, I just want to say in passing that I subscribe to what Mr. Osler said. I have found in my part of the country, if I may make this observation with great respect, that politics and culture go hand in hand like a warm wet hand and a frozen glove. I have the scars to show for it. It is nice to hear Mr. Mongrain speak the way he does; I am glad that he comes from a more civilized part of the nation and I do hope that the prognostications and the projections that he is making for the National Arts Centre will work out. I had an experience in Toronto with an arts centre.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I am sure it is improper for me to say so, but I think, sir, that what you did for Toronto in the period when you had some responsibility in these matters will be remembered for generations to come. I am sorry that it did not seem to have the immediate effect you had hoped for.

[Interpretation]

Mr. La Salle: I would like to subscribe with pleasure Mr. Mongrain's statement. When we speak of the aspects of financial participation I feel that through the taxes raised in all provinces of this country, all Canadians are going to take part in the National Arts Centre. I might also suggest that they obtain quality, the quality you desire in your orchestra. This orchestra will, certainly, be invited to appear at various centres in various provinces.

I think it would be a very good idea for Ottawa to pay the full shot so that all provinces, all those centres in the various provinces, may benefit from this. Even though this might not be a strictly economic proposition. It is, I think, a very good idea to help our various provincial centres in this way. It is one way, I believe, to spread culture among the people.

[English]

Mr. Osler: I do not think we should have a debate on the subject, Mr. Chairman, but perhaps my remarks were exaggerated a little and in that case it is my fault because I made them, but I do feel very much as Mr....

The Chairman: I think the situation is that you do not speak for all of the Committee and they accepted your invitation to tell you that you do not.

Mr. Osler: That is right. I accept the invitation and the words, but I do feel as Mr. Givens does that there are two things here.

First, I personally feel and I know that I will get into political hot water if it is not shown that the local people are pulling their weight and secondly, you would be performing in a vacuum regardless of how good your instrument is unless the local people pull their weight. We certainly have found in Winnipeg that the way to get people to participate, regardless of the fact that it may seem rude and crude at the time, is to get them to put up their money. They do not have to be wealthy benefactors, they have to be people of average and slightly above average means who are willing to buy season tickets and add $50 or $100 a year to that as a donation and this sort of thing, to keep their organization going.

Until you have a large ground swell of these people behind you, as you well know, you do not have any audience. This is rude and crude, but it is true. No matter how good you are, audiences do not come until they get involved—until their finances are involved—which drag them in often enough to get them used to it and get them to like it. I would hope, not only from a financial and political point of view, but from a purely artistic point of view, that you would get as many people as you possibly can involved here, otherwise you will be performing in an empty hall.

The other query I have is that some reference was made to the CBC. It certainly is not possible for me to speak for the CBC, but I was on their Board for three and one-half years and while on the Board of the CBC their policy, as I understood it, was that while at one time there had been outright help to organizations such as musical organizations in order to give them a livelihood, this policy really had changed quite substantially. The CBC did what it could to buy the services of organizations, but its policy was not to pump money into organizations and there is a difference there.

In other words, if this orchestra is good enough to compete with other orchestras that the CBC uses from time to time in its wisdom on the airwaves, that is one story, but if the CBC is going to be asked to do this as an automatic kind of help as it did with other orchestras 20 years ago, I think you would be up against policy matters that are contrary to CBC policy, unless they have been changed since I was on the Board. That is a subtle difference, but it is a real one.

Mr. Southam: That was a statement, but I think there was an implied question in it which I would be delighted to answer.

First of all, I agree with all you say about the importance of community support. As I mentioned a few minutes ago, we plan to mobilize that support and the results will tell. It is a little too early to say, but I would hope that by the time the Centre opens we will be able to prove to ourselves and to the rest of the country that this community is behind the Centre.

• 1630

With respect to your implied question about the CBC, I want to make it perfectly clear that we are not asking the CBC to give grants to this orchestra. We understand that the people in the CBC who are responsible for programming are very interested in seeing the development of an orchestra of this kind with this kind of repertoire and they are prepared to pay going rates for services. We will not be asking the CBC to do anything more than they would do for any other orchestra. That is, pay for the services which we can provide.

Mr. Osler: They will be drawing down programs from you.

Mr. Mongrain: Another supplementary, Mr. Chairman. I hope your publicity will be nationwide, though. It will probably please Mr. Givens if I mention that. My home town is about 550 miles from Toronto and twice at least we rented a plane to visit Toronto and we went to the O'Keefe Centre for some representations that were there.

Another time we organized a trip to Stratford. So, if we know what is going on here at your Arts Centre, any time there is something of importance I am sure you will get a lot of people come in from all over the country, because there are people who can afford some money to see something of high calibre in the way of culture. Is it your intention to publicize your activities all over the country all the time?

Mr. Southam: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Mr. Southam offered to make copies of Mr. Applebaum's report on the orchestra, available to the Committee. Would the Committee like to have this available?

Mr. Mongrain: Yes.

The Chairman: Secondly, I discussed the question Mr. Stewart raised with Mr. Southam concerning the wages paid to employees and we agreed that perhaps it would not be proper to give the precise wages paid to employees of the Centre in the operational side, but that a provision could be made that we would get the same information from the Arts Centre as now appears for every department in the Estimates, the Blue Book, so that we would know the classes and the ranges within the classes. If this would be agreeable to the Committee it can also be arranged.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, do you want a written submission on this matter or do you want me to answer specific questions?

The Chairman: I think we could perhaps do it either way. Mr. Stewart, you raised the matter. Would you like to put specific questions or would you prefer to have...

Mr. Stewart: We have something that they gave us from the...

The Chairman: From the Blue Book?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, from the agency we had the other day, the Canada Council.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Stewart: Similar to what other departments give us in the Blue Book. I think that would be satisfactory.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, we have a salary structure running from Grades 1 to 20 with steps in each grade. I could give you that table and I could tell the Committee how many employees among the 37 at the Centre fitted into each grade.

The Chairman: That would be agreeable.

Mr. McGrath: Surely if that is in writing it is not necessary...

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. McGrath: And we can cross-examine on that aspect.

The Chairman: Yes, I agree. Does anybody have any other new topics?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Are we still on the orchestra?

The Chairman: We can continue on the orchestra if you wish.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Chairman, I have a question, if I may direct it to Mr. Beaudet.

The Chairman: On the orchestra?

Mr. Corbin: On the composition of the orchestra.

The Chairman: By all means.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Corbin: You did establish this morning I believe that your orchestra would be a truly national one. I understand that through its financing its national character is, of course, assured since the expense will be borne by the federal government. Now, as far as the composition of the orchestra, or the choice of musicians are concerned, how do you intend to maintain this national character?

Mr. Beaudet: Mr. Chairman, I believe I perhaps answered that question indirectly. We have had auditions throughout Canada and we will continue to do so. We can not go and get people who do not want to come to us. However we will get those people who are willing to come, and with whom we can agree. If we find enough people in Canada of proper quality, we will use Canadian talent. Otherwise we will have to do as orchestras in Toronto, Vancouver and Montreal who have had to import musicians.

Mr. Corbin: The dominant criteria here is the excellence of the artists?

Mr. Beaudet: Yes.

Mr. Corbin: Do you not take into account the regional aspect, regional representation in the composition of this national orchestra?

Mr. Beaudet: It would be a rather dangerous criteria.

Mr. Corbin: The excellence of the orchestra itself might suffer.

Mr. Beaudet: Precisely.

[English]

The Chairman: Mr. Stewart, on the orchestra.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I was wondering, Mr. Beaudet, about this. We were told in the initial statement that the orchestra would be starting in the fall and we noticed that the festival is on June 2. I was wondering why the orchestra is not starting when the Festival?

Mr. Beaudet: Mr. Chairman, we had thought of starting the orchestra in the spring so that the orchestra would take part in the festival, but you will realize that most musicians have contracts which do not expire until May, sometimes June and some of them in July, so it would have been unfair to people who would like to apply to make it impossible for them to join the orchestra because they had a contract which would carry them over the month of April. This is the only reason we could not start it.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Another question about the orchestra, Mr. Beaudet. Should it happen that the orchestra is not busy all the time at the Centre, will it be available for other groups? Suppose a group is putting something on and they wanted to use the orchestra. Would it be available to them and could it cost them a certain fee, and so on? Is this envisaged at the moment?

Mr. Beaudet: This is being discussed, Mr. Chairman, with the Musicians' Union. There are different regulations which have to apply here. There are also local regulations which we are discussing with them.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I see.

Mr. Beaudet: I would hope that the orchestra could be made available on certain occasions.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I see. The fact that they are under salary would not mean that they would be excluded from receiving an additional fee.

Mr. Beaudet: I do not think so.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I was wondering about another thing about the orchestra. We hear about fairly famous individuals in Canada, such as the manager of the Toronto Symphony and the manager of the Montreal Symphony, and I was wondering if you could tell us who the manager is going to be, if he has been appointed and if he has been appointed, who he is, where he comes from, and so on.

Mr. Beaudet: The manager has just been appointed. He is right here with us. He is Mr. Ken Murphy, who is a musician from Winnipeg who was with the CBC's International Service and who has had experience in public relations and publicity at the same time.

Some hon. members: Take a bow!

Mr. Beaudet: I am very pleased with the appointment.

An hon. member: With a name like Ken Murphy we are bound to have a good national orchestra.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): That is all I would like to ask about the orchestra at this time.

The Chairman: Mr. Rose, you had a question on the orchestra?

Mr. Rose: I had some questions, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps they are not quite central to the point but I will try to get them as close as I can. I was interested in Mr. Osler's point about the composition or the size of the expected audiences, and this relates to the availability of tickets at a price at which the masses of people could participate, they could attend and listen to this, and I was wondering if there was anyone here who could tell me what the average price for the average high performance would be.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I anticipated that question. I have some figures here. The Board of Trustees of the Arts Centre has considered two matters of this kind. One is the ranges of prices for seats which should obtain in the Centre, and secondly the price at which we should rent the hall or the theatre or the studio to groups interested in taking these facilities for a performance or for a week.

Mr. Rose's question, Mr. Chairman, was about seat prices. We have a range of scales. One must do this, of course. You cannot charge the same for a visiting theatre company, or one of our own, as for an orchestra. The range of scales, and I am giving you the top prices of seats in the large hall, run from a $7.50 top down, by 50-cent steps, to a $3 top. The range of prices in the theatre run through a similar scale from a top of $7.00 to a top of $3. We would like to reserve a certain amount of flexibility as to what scales we would set out for what attractions.

We have in mind, for example taking the opera in which musical groups, orchestras, will perform—and I do not want to be pinned down for all time on this—our planning suggests that visiting orchestras, the Montreal or Toronto Symphony orchestras for example, should use the $6 top which is in fact, I think, what they do now at the Capitol Theatre, or it might be $6.50, but it is in that order. Our own orchestra will use the $5 top; a visiting dance group, the National Ballet, Royal Winnipeg, Les Grands Ballets Canadiens, a $5.50 or $6 top; a visiting musical attraction whether Canadian or American or European will use the $5 to $6 top.

In the theatre, where we do not primarily have musical groups but drama groups, we expect that our own English company, and that is to be the Stratford National Theatre company, would use a $4.50 top, and as I have mentioned the scale runs from $7 down to $3. Le Théâtre du Capricorne, our resident French company, might use a $4 top. With visiting companies it depends on the scale of the production, but we would expect them to run at $5 or a $4.50 top price.

Mr. Rose: You would agree then, sir, that the productions at this Centre would not be available to the masses of people generally in this area. Mr. Osler mentioned the experience of the Winnipeg support from the middle and upper middle classes and I wondered if this was the kind of audience anticipated and were there any particular steps that the theatre was prepared to take so that perhaps the audience might be widened to include those people who are supporting this through their taxation.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I was tactically unwise in mentioning the top; you must also take into consideration the bottom prices for each of these.

Mr. Rose: Those are for the people with good eyesight I take it.

Mr. Southam: No, sir. They are printed here on the paper that I have before me in type of equal character.

Mr. Rose: No, I meant those people in the back rows. I would imagine your house is scaled that way, is it not?

Mr. Southam: Yes, but I am glad you have fastened on that point because one of the essential elements of the design of the National Arts Centre from the beginning, and the end will be when it opens, is that there are no bad seats. For the first time, I believe, in the history of these buildings in Canada, the opera house is proportioned—is dimensioned, if I can create a word—so that there can be a rapport between the audience and the events on the stage. Everyone in the opera will be within the proper audio-visual range of the stage to be able to become involved in the performance and the same is true of the theatre.

• 1645

As you may be aware, there are classical proportions developed in Europe for this. It has always been understood that for opera or ballet performances nobody should be beyond 100 feet from the stage. We practically meet that in the opera house. We have met that standard in the opera house as it has not been met in O'Keefe Centre or in the Grande Salle in Montreal.

In the theatre it has always been taken, because for a theatrical performance you must be able to study facial expressions and minor gestures of actors more intimately, that the maximum distance is 60 feet. We meet this in our theatre. Consequently there are no bad seats.

The difference between the best seats and the farthest seats—the nearer seats and the farther seats—in the National Arts Centre is not going to be a matter between hearing or seeing and not hearing or seeing; it is probably going to be the difference between being very intimately involved and just normally involved in what is going on.

The Chairman: Having given us an example of the top, perhaps you had better also give us an example of the bottom so that members of Parliament will know where they are going to be sitting.

Mr. Rose: Well, I was going to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the very detailed answer about theatre dimensions given by the witness, Mr. Southam, was appreciated. I am also pleased that I have asked all the right questions so far. But I think it does beg my question slightly and you alluded to it in terms of the bottom seats. I asked the specific question, which I tagged on the end of my remarks, were there any particular steps scanned so that people, such as school-children or pensioners or various groups might be able to enjoy the kind of performance this national theatre contemplates.

Mr. Southam: Yes. Mr. Chairman, if I could give the bottom prices. For instance, for our orchestra, which will be playing in the opera, I think I gave you the top price as $5, the bottom price there is $2 for seats, but there is standing room in this opera, as there is standing room in the Vienna opera and other opera houses—the Grosse Music Grand Saal in Vienna—and we anticipate that excellent standing room will be available for $1.

The prices of tickets for our theatre companies, I think I said the top price for Stratford might be $4.50, the bottom price is $1.75. For Le Théâtre du Capricorne I gave you the top price as $4, the bottom price is $1.50. Now, in addition to these prices, which I think are within the range of people who go to the movies, we will have programs whereby tickets for a series may be bought on subscription; six attractions for the price of five. We are developing a program of prices for students which will make similar allowances. We have not yet worked out the details of subscription series or student prices yet, but they will be prices which will present advantages over and beyond the...

Mr. Rose: I will try and be brief with the following two questions, Mr. Chairman. I realize that you cannot have it both ways. You cannot avoid sizable deficits and subsidies and at the same have your prices scaled to an extent that would avoid these; I realize that.

I have a question dealing with the orchestra. I was going to ask the Director of Music, considering the size of the orchestra, does it contemplate a particular kind of orchestral performance? Does it contemplate any particular kind of literature? Obviously it must, and I wonder if you could enlarge on this at all?

Mr. Beaudet: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Obviously the literature will be the classical literature, Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Handel, the old Italian masters, the Baroque, few romantics. We can play the Italian Symphony Mendelssohn. As examples, we can play Schumann Piano Concerto, we can play some numbers by Tchaikovsky for strings or Dvorak, and then the contemporary repertoire. The major orchestral works like the Brahms symphonies

• 1650

Mr. Givens: Only some of Tchaikovsky?

Mr. Beaudet: Not symphonies, I am sorry; some of the string works of Tchaikovsky—the Serenade.

Mr. Givens: But the symphonies?

Mr. Beaudet: Not the symphonies, definitely not.

Mr. Rose: What concerns me here, sir, is the fact that Mr. Lees' examples of Kern, Gershwin, Aaron Copland and other people which were agreed to by the Executive Director, Mr. Southam, were products of a culture and I am a little concerned that perhaps we might be exhibiting a little bit of artistic contempt—arty contempt—for our own culture here because I would like to see the kind of musical production grow out of our culture rather than imported aristocratic music from Europe being superimposed on our people, let me put it that way.

Mr. Beaudet: Mr. Chairman, we do not intend to be snobbish at all with this. I was giving you the over-all repertoire of the orchestra for a given series of concerts, but there is nothing to prevent our presenting—we are actually planning to do so—of even modern idiom. If we get Canadian works, you know, a new musical comedy—a Canadian musical comedy—why not?

Mr. Rose: I hope so and I hope that you will be encouraging the kind of Canadian composition...

Mr. Beaudet: Indeed, we have a policy of commissioning works to Canadian composers.

Mr. Rose: Thank you.

Mr. Mongrain: A supplementary, are you going to invite some piano breakers?

Mr. Beaudet: We will leave this to the Canada Council, I think.

Mr. Osler: I would like to correct an allusion to me by Mr. Rose. I think that what I said was an illustration of how funds were raised and how people became financially involved. I did not mean to say that the Winnipeg organizations of which I spoke did not have cheap seats—a whole range of seat scales—for various groups of people. What I was saying was that it is the people of the middle and upper middle income group who are financially supporting over and above their ticket, purchases. There are lots of dollar seats at the Manitoba Theatre Centre, there are lots of dollar seats at the symphony and this sort of thing, but, by nature, they are not the people who are going to give you extra help in the way of annual grants.

Mr. Rose: By and large, though, I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the audience comes from this group in almost any community. Is that not so? However, I do not want to prolong that. If I have alluded to you unfairly, I retract.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions, perhaps on a new subject? There are no further questions?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Are we exhausted on the orchestra?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Then we can go on to something else.

The Chairman: Correct. Would you like to ask a further question?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I would like to ask Mr. Southam about the Board of Trustees. I know that the members of the Board of Trustees were chosen by the government but I wonder if they were recommended or how was this choice made?

Mr. Southam: Do you mean the Mayor of Ottawa?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): No, no. I am talking about the other members. The Mayor of Ottawa, the Mayor of Hull, the Director of the Canada Council and so on are appointed by the Act, but I mean the other appointments that were made.

• 1655

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, the Board of Trustees of the National Arts Centre is strong. There are five ex-officio members, the President of the CBC, the Government Film Commissioner, the Director of the Canada Council, the Mayor of Ottawa and the Mayor of Hull. The government also appoints 11 members from across the country to the Board of Trustees. To quote a text which is probably familiar to you: "God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform". How the government selects members for boards is not, I think, for me to answer. I take it that ministers go through the usual form of consultation in order to come up with their best efforts at national representation on a national board. All I can say, speaking for the staff of the Centre and myself, is that we are very happy with the board the government appointed. Some of the original terms are for two years, some for three years and some for four years. This is apparently a normal mechanism whereby ultimately a third of the appointed members of the Board will be renewed every year. I could give you the names of the members, but they are in the Annual Report.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): The reason I asked this, Mr. Southam, is because I want your opinion. I wanted to find out if you thought, since there has been a history in Ottawa of problems with unions and so on, it would not be advisable for the government to appoint a member of each of the unions to the Board. Do you think this would be helpful?

Mr. Southam: With all respect, Mr. Stewart, I think the question ought to be addressed to the government.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Fine.

Mr. Southam: I am a servant of the Board and I do not think it is proper for me to comment on the constitution of the Board.

The Chairman: I might say to Mr. Stewart that Mr. Pelletier, the Secretary of State, will be here on Thursday and that question could perhaps be directed to him at that time.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Fine. There are a number of things that we want to know that we will have to ask other people, of course, but I have already asked for a couple of things and I do not want to seem to be asking for a whole lot of things. However, Mr. Southam, you assured the group here last Thursday that undoubtedly the Centre would be busy most of the time and there would be no problem in filling the Centre. I wonder if your staff could give us in the next couple of months or so some idea of what will happen in the first six months of operation, even if they are only tentative bookings and so on, and how the Centre will be filled. Do you think this would be possible?

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, we plan to announce, not only to the Committee, but to the awaiting world, our opening program next month at a date not exactly settled, but probably about November 20. We plan to give the details of our opening two weeks and at that time we anticipate natural questions from the press who will be convened on that occasion about what happens after the opening Festival.

To the extent that the answers are available, we will tell them what other kinds of attractions we will be booking into the Centre during the summer. Your question related to six months which would probably run until Christmas. We will also be giving details of the programming of our resident companies which will come on to the scene in the autumn. I find in this particular business—show business—that you cannot give a program very far ahead. There are what might be called targets of opportunity, possibilities that become available at the last moment and also, unfortunately, targets that disappear.

You can lay on your program only to learn the week ahead that the star has contracted a marriage alliance or an engagement in Europe and is no longer available and so on, but to the extent that our program is known we plan to give it next month.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Fine. I have one more question. I noticed in your statement that you said the negotiations with Stratford were continuing and I take it from that that they are not finalized. Do you expect to be able to finalize that shortly?

• 1700

Mr. Southam: I do hope so, Mr. Chairman. As I explained we are in the process of finalizing our budget for the opening year which runs from April 1, 1969 to March 31, 1970, and in this budget is an important element of government subsidy. Until our budget is approved by the Treasury Board and laid before you as the Minister of Finance normally does, I suppose in January or February, I am afraid we cannot sign contracts with organizations like Stratford. It would be irresponsible to do so.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Fine, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Any further questions from members of the Committee?

Mr. Southam: A correction Mr. Chairman, I am sorry. We hope we will be able to sign a contract with Stratford before the estimates are tabled in the House, but it will be on the assurance that we might anticipate receiving sometime before the estimates are tabled. We would hope to conclude the negotiations with Stratford this autumn.

The Chairman: No further questions? Well I think on behalf of the Committee I would like to thank Mr. Southam for the information and the help that he has given us. We are all fairly new when it comes to dealing with the operations of the National Arts Centre and we look forward to a successful year and also to attending many of the functions that will take place.

We also look forward, Mr. Southam, to meeting you and your officials again, probably in January and February when we get the estimates for the next fiscal year. I hope you will find us much more acute and more informed in our questioning than we have been so far. I thank you, very much.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

(6)

The Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts met this day at 11:10 a.m. The Chairman, Mr. John M. Reid, presided.

Members present: Messrs. Corbin, Dinsdale, Fairweather, Guilbault, La Salle, Matte, McCleave, McGrath, Mongrain, Osler, Reid, Rose, Schumacher, Stafford, Stanbury, Stewart (Cochrane)—(16).

In attendance: Hon. Gérard Pelletier, Secretary of State; and from the Department of the Secretary of State: Messrs. H. O. R. Hindley, Assistant Under Secretary of State; C. J. Lochnan, Senior Special Adviser to the Under Secretary of State; R. D. Mitchener, Acting Director, Education Support Branch; Jean Lagassé, Director, Citizenship Branch; W. R. Martin, Director, Citizenship Registration Branch; Henriot Mayer, Superintendent, Translation Bureau; E. J. Preston, Adviser, Personnel Administration; L. C. Lafleur, Adviser, Financial and General Administration.

The Chairman introduced the Minister, the Hon. Mr. Pelletier, who made a statement reviewing the estimates of his Department and the agencies which report to him or to Parliament through the Secretary of State.

The Committee proceeded to the consideration of the Estimates of the Secretary of State.

The Chairman called Item 1, Departmental Administration, and the Minister was examined on various aspects of his department, assisted by Messrs. Hindley and Mayer.

Item 1 was allowed to stand.

On Item 10, Translation Bureau, the Minister and Mr. Mayer were examined and supplied additional information.

Item 10 was carried.

On Item 5, Citizenship, the Minister and Messrs. Lagassé and Martin were examined.

The Chairman advised that the Committee would tour the National Arts Centre tomorrow morning at 9:30 a.m.

The examination of the witnesses still continuing, at 1:05 p.m., the Committee adjourned until 11:00 a.m. on Tuesday, November 5.

M. Slack,
Clerk of the Committee.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Thursday, October 31, 1968.

• 1112

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I think we shall begin the meeting now. We have as our guest the former Chairman of this particular Committee who has since gone on to further and greater things. The Minister will be making a short statement after which the Committee will be at leisure and liberty to ask any embarrassing question or otherwise of the Minister.

I should like to introduce the Minister, the Secretary of State, Mr. Pelletier.

Hon. Gerard Pelletier (Secretary of State of Canada): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I should indeed like to take this opportunity to say a few words about the Department of the Secretary of State and certain agencies for which I am responsible, or for which I report to Parliament, before attempting to answer specific questions you may wish to ask. Furthermore, I have a few officials here with me who will be happy to give you more information if this is your wish.

[Interpretation]

We shall begin with the Secretary of State Department itself. With regard to the Secretary of State Department itself, the need to increase estimates is due mostly to increased assistance to the provinces under Part II of the 1967 Fiscal Arrangements Act between the federal government and the provinces. This Act provides for repayment to the provinces of a sum equal to the larger of the two following amounts: (i) half the capital operating costs of post-secondary institutions of learning; (ii) i.e. $15.00 per inhabitant of a given province. Up to now the amounts were paid according to the figures provided by the provinces.

Item No. 5 entitled "Citizenship" provides for a further increase in expenses because of the fact that we have chosen to continue our "Exchange and Travel" program which was administered last year by the Centennial Commission. You know, as well as I do, how successful that program was. It was such a success that the Department itself felt it was proper to maintain it. In 1968 more than 15,000 young people availed themselves of that opportunity.

A third item shows an increase and that is the Bureau for Translation. You are probably all aware that this service has to meet a greatly increased demand as compared with the past few years. The major difficulty is the recruitment of competent translators. And, over the last year, jointly with the University of Montreal, we had to launch on a new program providing for a three-year course leading to an M.A. in translation. These students are considered to be government employees and will receive a grant during the academic year. Furthermore, they will also have to work as trainees in translation during summer recess. We are developing another similar program in co-operation with the University of Ottawa. Together these two programs should train 28 new translators annually.

The Centennial Commission—The estimates do not provide for any grants to that organization as it went out of existence on April 1, 1968. However, we will need approximately $195,000 to pay certain projects which were not completed as of April 1 last. This amount will appear in Supplementary Budget estimates which will be presented later this year.

The Canada Council—You have had an opportunity to discuss the operations of that organization recently, and I hope you were able to obtain all the necessary information.

The CBC—This organization feels that it will require an additional $10,953,000 for the coming year in order to pay increases in salaries and entertainers' fees as provided in the contracts negotiated. This increase is partially compensated by the reduction of $3,813,000 which was expended last year for operation of the International Service of the CBC. This expenditure is included for the year under review in the general estimates. Thus the net increase is $7,140,000. Moreover, the sum of the loans required for capital costs has gone from $30,398,000 to $25 million.

Canadian Film Development Corporation—It has a statutory grant of $10,000,000 which it must use in large part, as loans or investments to encourage the production of feature films in Canada. This year, a sum of $300,000, drawn from its budget, will be spent, on the one hand, on administration costs, and on the other hand, to provide grants for film-makers, Canadian technicians, and to reward other individuals for their success in producing full-length films.

Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission—The increase of $673,200 provided for in the estimates for that organization result from the increased number of employees which the Commission has because of the increased responsibilities placed on it by the new Broadcasting Act.

National Arts Centre—I think you have had the opportunity of meeting Mr. Southam. He was therefore in a position to provide you with the required information regarding the National Arts Centre. However, if I may answer certain questions or if the Department of Public Works can answer others, we are at your disposal.

National Film Board—Even though there is an increase of $1,230,000 in the Blue Book of Estimates the figures for the preceding year do not include the $170,000 in supplementary estimates, nor the $384,500 authorized by the Treasury Board for the cyclical salary increases. In view of these figures, the real net increase amounts to $675,500. This sum will be used to pay staff, cover equipment costs towards establishing a computer centre, towards the establishment of a Planning Bureau. Meeting costs incurred by the war on poverty, also to meet costs of a program better known under the name, Challenge for Change, the purpose of which is the change-over from black-and-white to colour and also the improvement of urban broadcasting services in Canada. Because of the austerity program this increase will have to absorb, as much as possible, the cost of all salary revisions negotiated in 1968-69.

National Library—It moved into its new premises a little over a year ago and is now well settled in its new quarters. It is now able to provide adequate services to subscribers and has all the required space for the maintenance of the material which it has or will purchase. In 1968, for the first time, the National Library has managed to fill all its professional positions following an intensive recruiting campaign. However, on-the-spot training remains necessary so that new employees may reach proper working standards.

If the total financial requirements have diminished in 1968-69 as compared to 1967-68, it is because of reduced grants for the purchase of books. In 1967, the National Library received a number of donations in books. Great Britain generously provided approximately $270,000 in books. It was a Centennial gift. The effect of this was to reduce the need for money in 1968-69.

National Museums of Canada—Its estimates include the National Gallery of Canada and the National Museums of Canada which were formerly under separate headings. This follows the establishment of a new corporation called National Museums of Canada as of April 1, 1968, when the new National Museums Act was proclaimed. There has been a modest expansion of former museums which now come under the National Museums. These estimates provide for the entire year's operation of the new museum of Science and Technology which, since its opening in 1967 has attracted a very large number of visitors. The increase in the estimates for the administrative services is explained by the transfer or the creation of new positions designed to serve all museums.

Public Archives—The headquarters of that organization in all its aspects have been located in new quarters, that is in the National Library and National Archives. This building makes it possible to store all archives and houses a great number of technical installations. The financial requirements of the National Archives is especially due to the increase in salaries. We have to recruit less qualified people because of lack of professional help but once they acquire a higher degree of competence these employees must be better paid. On the other hand, regional archives centres require this year additional funds for storage because of an increased demand on their services.

• 1120

[English]

The Chairman: I thank you, Mr. Minister. I call now Item 1—

SECRETARY OF STATE

1. Departmental Administration, including grants as detailed in the Estimates. $1,513,500

I recognize Mr. Dinsdale at this time, as we passed the estimates of the Canada Council on the understanding that he would have an opportunity to discuss the grants on this with you.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is your decision, Mr. Chairman, to proceed on the basis of the items in the blue book or will you allow a discussion of anything under Item 1?

The Chairman: I think we ought to deal with the items in the Revised Estimates as printed, in that No. 1, which in this case would be departmental administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, would permit pretty well a discussion on administration plus the method of allotting these grants, and then we could move on to the other things as they come up.

Mr. Dinsdale: May I ask another introductory question before we proceed? Have the estimates for the Company of Young Canadians been sent to another committee?

The Chairman: That is correct.

Mr. Dinsdale: So I suppose discussion of the CYC will be precluded from this debate?

The Chairman: Correct.

Mr. Dinsdale: And the same with the electoral college?

The Chairman: Yes, it has gone to the Committee on Elections and Privileges.

Mr. Dinsdale: Well, to get the discussion going, the reason I asked to have the Canada Council kept open was because of the information we received, Mr. Chairman, that the capital grants program has been completed, finalized and wound up. I think it amounted to some $50 million, as we were informed. The impression conveyed was that this was the end of the capital grants program and I should like the Minister to confirm whether or not this is so.

Mr. Pelletier: I think that is correct.

Mr. Dinsdale: What is the reason for that decision? Is it because of the feeling that all the capital requirements of our institutions of higher learning have been completed or what was the basis for the decision?

• 1125

Mr. Pelletier: Frankly, I did not give any great attention to this. Perhaps something can be said by Mr. Hindley.

Mr. H. O. R. Hindley (Assistant Under Secretary of State): Mr. Dinsdale, the original Canada Council Act provided for two funds to be turned over to them, $50 million which was the endowment fund for the arts programs and $50 million for capital grants to the universities. The answer is simply that that money has now been spent. This was the division of the original $100 million fund which was put at their disposal.

Mr. Dinsdale: So it is the end of the fund and the end of the program. Is there any alternative scheme to assist institutions of higher learning with their capital construction programs? I think we all realized that with the expanding demands for higher education in the Canadian economy and the emphasis on education today this is going to be one of the major problems of all universities across the country. Has the federal government decided to withdraw entirely from this field or are there other alternative schemes proposed?

Mr. Pelletier: My answer should be that there is no alternative scheme in existence. There are exchanges between the government and the federation of universities and colleges. There are plans that are being considered but for the time being there is no scheme, this one having been completed.

Mr. Dinsdale: I presume, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister has had representations, I might even say strong representations, on the matter from the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada.

Mr. Pelletier: Personally, I should say not particularly on the capital grants, so far as my personal contacts with the Association is concerned. I had discussions with them but this was not brought forward as one of their main concerns, although I know it is.

Mr. Dinsdale: Perhaps they have not felt the full impact of the decision at this stage and we will be hearing more on this subject later.

That was the point I wanted confirmed, whether this was the end of the program and if there were other alternative schemes under way. I will pass at this time.

The Chairman: All right. Mr. McCleave?

Mr. McCleave: I just want to ask one question of the Minister arising out of general departmental administration and this deals with the Translation Bureau and the recruitment of translators. The Minister has noted the programs at the University of Montreal and the University of Ottawa. Is the second program now under way, Mr. Secretary? The one at the University of Ottawa?

Mr. Pelletier: I think it is still in the negotiation stage. Perhaps Monsieur Henriot Mayer could come here and give us more detail about this. I know that the agreement with the Université de Montréal is completed now.

Mr. Henriot Mayer (Superintendent, Translation Bureau): Yes, that is correct. We have had first a series of discussions with the authorities of the University of Ottawa and we are going to meet again very soon on this matter. We are discussing the matter at the present time.

Mr. McCleave: Could you tell me whether there are plans eventually to extend this type of program away from what might be called the bilingual areas of Canada and into, say, places like the Maritimes or the Prairies?

Mr. Mayer: Normally there should be expansion in other areas. I have been told that already the University of Toronto has been looking into this matter with a view to perhaps preparing translators from French into English, in that case, and it is not to be excluded that eventually, as this program expands, other universities will come into it.

Mr. McCleave: Does the Department have any idea of the general rate of delay that we encounter around here on the translations, say from English into French? This is a point that has been raised previously in this Committee and in certain other committees as well. How soon is it expected that this can be overcome?

• 1130

Mr. Mayer: By "around here", do you mean in this Committee or in the House generally?

Mr. McCleave: In the House and in the parliamentary committees.

Mr. Mayer: I see. Well, the translation of the parliamentary committee proceedings has been a large problem with the Translation Bureau over the years for the simple reason that it is a matter of sheer volume in relation to the number of translators available.

As a point of comparison, I might say that the ordinary House of Commons Hansard has something like 70 printed pages and requires a staff of 30 people. We have received collectively from all the committees of the House in one day up to 700 printed pages, so it is easy to see that we have not available between 200 and 300 translators to do this work overnight.

We have created in the last few weeks a small group for this Committee but this requires only about seven or eight translators, but if you multiply seven or eight by, let us say, ten or fifteen committees you have to try to do this over a period of time; you cannot do it overnight.

It is a problem of sheer volume of translation in relation to the number of people and to do it correctly.

Mr. McCleave: You do have outside contracts, do you not, sir, people who are given specific assignments for translation?

Mr. Mayer: As a matter of fact, over the past two years we have been able to reduce the time lag between the publication of the French and English proceedings of committees through a system of contracting out the translation. We have reduced this from something like one year, which it was formerly, to about three weeks or so in most cases.

Mr. McCleave: Of the two courses, the hiring of staff on a permanent basis or the use of outside contracting, have comparisons of cost been made in that respect?

Mr. Mayer: Costs are just about the same if we take into account the fact that if you add the word rate for outside translation the price of the revision that is done, once the translation comes back, works out to just about the same total rate.

Mr. McCleave: Have you ever worked it out on a word basis?

Mr. Mayer: It comes out to about $3.70 per hundred words.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I have other questions to ask but they are not in the general field of departmental administration and I gather you want to confine the discussion to that.

The Chairman: Yes. I have a supplementary I would like to ask. What is the rate per word for outside translators?

Mr. Mayer: So you mean commercially, if you ask an agency outside to do the translation?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Mayer: The current rates are somewhere between 4 and 5 cents minimum for the easy material and up to anywhere around 15 cents a word for the more complicated. I have heard that during Centennial Year when translators were at a premium for Expo, and so forth, that it even went up to 20 cents a word.

The Chairman: What is the distinction between "easy" and "difficult"?

Mr. Mayer: Let us say that a very technical text or a very abstract text would be a more difficult text than, let us say, a simple letter asking for information.

Mr. McCleave: Budget speeches would be difficult!

The Chairman: I will recognize Mr. Matte at this time.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: I have a supplementary question. The Minister is probably aware of the fact that here in this Committee we have carried out an experiment at our last sitting. The general idea is to transcribe the interpretation. I am now speaking French and the interpreter is now interpreting me into English and this is transcribed and eventually printed. Of course this is carried out so rapidly that we can hardly expect it to be perfect, but does the Minister feel that this would be an acceptable compromise? Does he feel that this might be one way of doing it, until such time as a bureau for translations can adequately meet the demands made upon it? Could it not be a custom adopted by all other parliamentary Committees?

Mr. Pelletier: I think this is a very interesting experiment, a very ingenious idea. I think we will have to wait for the results though. It is extremely difficult to imagine what this interpretation will look like in print. It might be a very satisfactory operation when we listen to it, but in print it might be different.

• 1135

Mr. Mongrain: But the idea would be of course to publish in French and in English all translations in the same booklet.

Mr. Matte: My questions have to do with the 1966 act on fiscal agreements between the federal government and the provinces. Which of the two options was chosen in 1966, half the operating costs for institutes of higher learning or $15 per capita in the various provinces?

Mr. Pelletier: I am sorry, but I realized as I was reading this before you this morning that I should have said that the transfer of funds is carried out as follows: four points of the income tax income and one point on the corporation income tax. If this is lower than the expenses required for post-secondary education the federal government makes up the difference or else alternatively it takes $15 per capita. I think all provinces, save one, have chosen the 50 per cent formula because it was more than the transfer of points. In one province, if my memory is correct, Newfoundland, $15 per capita was more than half the costs of higher education so that Newfoundland chose the $15 per head formula. All the others—including New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, I am told, have chosen the 50 per cent.

Mr. Matte: Another question. Up to now the payment was worked out according to the figures provided by the provinces. In other words, did we rely upon the statistics of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics or did we rely on the statistics provided by the Quebec Bureau of Statistics?

Mr. Pelletier: I think the census figures of the federal government are the figures which were used for, I do not believe the provinces publish their population figures. The reference here is to figures given by the provinces for post secondary expenditures and not population figures.

Mr. Matte: When I looked into this I found out that according to federal statistics the population of Quebec on June 1, 1967 was 5,800,000 and according to the statistics of the Province of Quebec the population was 6,100,000, a difference of 300,000 which at $15 per head means a difference of $4,500,000.

Mr. Pelletier: I am surprised. I did not know that the Province of Quebec counted its own people.

Mr. Matte: I was myself surprised when I saw the results.

Mr. Pelletier: I might be going a little too far here, but I do feel that half the costs of post-secondary education would nevertheless be the best figure.

[English]

The Chairman: Mr. Osler?

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, I would like to get back to the organizational aspects rather than going on with the language, if that is possible.

The Chairman: That is all in number 1. We have been talking about grants and departmental administration.

Mr. Osler: This is taking it, perhaps, outside the context of anything that is written, but I think Mr. Pelletier was quoted recently as saying that he was considering diffusing the National Museum effort across the country to a certain extent. I do not know whether I am picking up your words correctly here. If the concept of sharing the National Museum over several physical localities is what you had in mind, I would like to get back to the matter that still bothers me since the visit of the Canada Council to our Committee. I do not feel that the direction in which the Canada Council is heading is going to lead to diffusion. I think it is going to lead to centralization. I wondered if you have the power under your reference to the Canada Council to see whether in fact the concept of diffusion could not apply to the Canada Council as well as to the National Museum. It would seem to me that projects perhaps should be decided on the spot and within the terms of reference of a fixed budget in the various areas and regions, at least on a limited scale, to see if this would work. My question really is has Parliament the competence so to direct the Canada Council and do you believe it is something to consider?

• 1140

Mr. Pelletier: On the first question, all I really did was to inquire of the Museum Commission what the plans were and the first answer was that they took for granted that all the museums would be built in Ottawa on a permanent basis and would remain here. The only thing I did was to return the question to them and ask them to study the respective merits of a concentration in the National Capital or to have some of them built in the metropolitan areas throughout Canada to assure a federal presence under that form. This was in the form of a question which was put to them and I expect an answer from them first before going any further or discussing the matter. I think I would need a little bit more precision in your question about the diffusion applying to the Canada Council. I am not sure I get the intent of your question.

Mr. Osler: I am sorry. Mr. Chairman, I will try to rephrase it more precisely. I am afraid it is still rather a diffuse thought. I think this is what I am getting at. As far as the Canada Council is concerned is it possible to divide Canada into regions and allow a regional concept of allotment to prevail when it comes to the dispensing of their funds? This would not apply to everything. There are some things that are clearly national, but there are other areas and I think it would be exciting to see what B.C. did with its funds and what the Prairies did with their funds, and this sort of thing, rather than have a central organization direct it all.

Mr. Pelletier: I think this is a question that, in the same fashion, should be put to them first for their consideration. I am prepared to put the question to them and see what they think about the merit of it and then perhaps we can discuss it in this Committee afterwards. I confess, now that I understand your idea, that I think the implications would escape me. I think there would be implications. For instance, it might change the very nature of the criteria, although it might also be possible and a positive idea, I could not say. I would like to put it to them.

Mr. Dinsdale: May I ask a supplementary? On the subject of the suggested decentralization of the National Museum, would this be in the form of assistance to provincial museums that are already established? In some provincial centres they have a more elaborate museum development that we have in the nation's capital. What does the Minister have in mind in suggesting the idea of decentralization? Would it be assistance to the already existing provincial museums? There is one in Winnipeg, Regina, Toronto, and so forth.

Mr. Pelletier: What I had in mind is that I wanted to know from them—and they are experts in their field—whether there was any merit in the idea that some of these museums could be built in metropolitan areas or in large concentrations of population that, of course, do not have these kinds of museums.

This is what I had in mind. The National Gallery, for instance, seems to me an institution that belongs in Ottawa. Its possessions and exhibits can travel and it can serve the whole population. Other things, such as a collection of airplanes or locomotives, for that matter, are not very likely to travel across the country, although the exhibits used to and I put the question to them whether there was any merit in the idea that since we cannot move the whole population of Canada to Ottawa to see all of these things that we might move some of these museums to the people who are away from Ottawa. It was really not in the form of a suggestion, it was in the form of a question. Is there any merit in this idea, because we have had inquiries of this kind.

• 1145

I would like to tell you of an instance where, in an article about Expo, I used the phrase "The world at your threshold", or something like that, or "at your doorstep", and somebody from Vancouver wrote a letter to me and said, "Dear sir: My doorstep is 2,000 miles away from my door". What do you do about that? It is in this vein, you see, that I thought we should consider it before making any great capital investments that will make it permanent once it is done, and as these investments are not to be made for another few years I thought we had time enough to consider all the possibilities and I put this question to them.

Mr. Dinsdale: Can I carry this supplementary one step further. I take it, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister's comments on this matter would indicate that the plans for a national museum on the site of the former Roxborough Apartments are being held in abeyance.

Mr. Pelletier: I never heard the Roxborough Apartments mentioned.

Mr. Dinsdale: Opposite the Elgin Hotel and next to the National Defence Headquarters.

Mr. Pelletier: What "does in abeyance" mean?

An hon. Member: In cold storage!

An hon. Member: Keep it away from public gaze.

Mr. Pelletier: That is probably right.

Mr. McCleave: I do not think that was a 20-cent translation there!

The Chairman: Mr. Mongrain?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: I would like to ask the Minister a question after a short preamble. Last year, because of Centennial year, we saw appear a large number of small arts, or culture centres throughout the country; some are multi-purpose centres as otherwise their number would be unlimited, but I do know that in my province that there are a large number of small or medium sized communities who have not got such facilities for various reasons. I do know too that the Provincial Government of the Province of Quebec is quite ready to pay a few million dollars to allow these small communities, who have not been able to provide themselves with cultural centres, to serve as incubating centres for future talent which then might reach the larger centres. Might I ask the Minister if he is ready to consider and to discuss with his colleagues as soon as practicable another formula, if at all possible, to help the setting up of these small artistic or cultural centres which might be multi-purpose centres? Such a project might be linked with the plans of the departments responsible for economic development in the areas involved.

Mr. Pelletier: I do think, of course, that it would be a very good idea for these centres to be multiplied and not to be concentrated in larger centres. They have a very useful role to play at the level of the local community. I do share your view on that matter. As far as Centennial projects are concerned, and more particularly as far as the federal participation is concerned during the Centennial year, it might be said that it played a very useful role. However, I hardly think such a development can be envisaged in the short run except, as you suggested yourself, within the general framework of development plans which envisage more than one aspect of development but which are designed to stimulate a whole area; however, we cannot continue the projects of Centennial year within the limitations of our present budget.

Mr. Mongrain: Do you think it might be appropriate to look further into this matter to establish a five-year or a ten-year plan so that one day all Canadian municipalities that can prove their need in this regard can expect some assistance from the federal government?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, the federal government does want to work towards the development of a co-operative policy with other government levels, but this will be a long-term policy.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you.

[English]

The Chairman: Mr. McGrath?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister could enlarge upon the rather unique suggestion he made.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am still on museums.

Mr. Chairman: We are on departmental administration, which would include what Mr. McGrath has in mind.

Mr. McGrath: His reference to museums was made in the same speech that I am going to refer to. I am referring to the rather unique suggestion the Minister made, which has been received with mixed emotion across the country. I will quote the Minister:

...a year of civic service similar to the military service in other countries, but devoted to peaceful ends.

It has been called conscription and other names. I wonder if the Minister could perhaps enlarge on just exactly what he has in mind.

Mr. Pelletier: I doubt very much that this is the place to do that, since this is in no way a department or government policy. It was used in this speech as an example of some of the ideas that are put forward by young people and that we should not reject them with the back of our hand without giving them consideration. That is about all I have to say about this. In the same speech that you gave me the honour of reading you will see right afterwards that I personally was very impressed by the difficulties involved, and I mentioned all these difficulties. However, I wanted to illustrate a point really rather than make a suggestion, saying that I personally think, and this is the attitude we want to take in the Department, that even an idea like this one, which seemed very far-fetched to most people—they have a spontaneous negative reaction—deserves to be studied very seriously in its social, economic and labour implications.

Mr. McGrath: Surely it would be completely foreign to our Western concept of democracy. I mean, this is the sort of thing you would expect from countries that have a different social system from ours. This is the interpretation placed on your remarks which has caused so much concern across the country. I would suggest to you that...

Mr. Pelletier: I would say concern and interest from reading the clippings.

Mr. McGrath: Well it depends what clippings you read.

Mr. Pelletier: Well I read them all, so I say, both concern and interest.

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale?

Mr. Dinsdale: Coming back to the question of the decentralization of the National Museum. We had an excellent program of this kind during the Centennial year, the travelling caravan. There was a suggestion made in Parliament that one or two of these units might have been retained so that we could bring the doorstep of the nation a little bit closer to this lady that you referred to in your letter. I think everyone will agree that this was a most imaginative program and a most successful program in bringing some of our history, and Canadiana generally, to the people of Canada. I suppose a project of that kind is now beyond recall?

Mr. Pelletier: The project in itself, but I do not suppose that in better times and with larger resources we should not profit by this experience, which was I think, a positive one, and do something of the same kind. Although I heard a very disturbing remark the other day by one of the museum specialists that most museums across the whole world now are very worried every time they have to let their treasures travel around.

• 1155

This is disturbing in a country like ours where we have to beat the distances and where they are so considerable. However, I certainly would not say that the Department, provided they had the resources, would not do something in the same line that was done during the Centennial year. I do not think that these experiences should be forgotten because I think there is a lesson in them, and this lesson should be retained and remembered and we could take initiatives. We should do better than the first time, when we try a second time.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, have the caravans all been broken up? Have any been utilized? What has become of them? I am very curious about this. They were disposed of through Crown Assets Disposal Corporation.

Mr. McGrath: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. McGrath: The Government of Newfoundland expressed an interest in buying the caravans and somewhere negotiations broke down, or something happened somewhere along the line because, as has been suggested they were disposed of through Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. Can you tell me why these caravans were not handed over to the Government of Newfoundland for a nominal sum?

Mr. Pelletier: This was before my time in the Department. I suppose someone can answer this for me. I am informed that the Government of Newfoundland changed its mind about this.

Mr. McGrath: Well, they have been known to do that, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: We have now reached a point in our deliberations where we can follow one of two courses. We can go on to deal with the question of the acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment for the National Arts Centre, or we could take the attitude that we could clean up this morning, if possible, the rest of the department responsibilities of the Minister. Then on Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock, when we again meet, we could deal with the remaining item under the Minister's responsibility. If this would be agreeable to the Committee I would do it this way; if not, I would be prepared to call the other item.

Mr. Dinsdale: You are suggesting Mr. Chairman, that we proceed item by item now?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: So that we can have an orderly discussion.

The Chairman: Yes; we would do Citizenship, Translation, Post Secondary Education Payments, the Centennial Commission and then on Tuesday we would come back and do Item No. 2, which would be the National Arts Centre, land and building program.

Mr. McGrath: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if you would be kind enough to let me revert to my question so that I can further supplement it by asking how much was realized from the sale of the caravans, and how this compares with the original cost?

Mr. Pelletier: We do not know that. Crown Assets Disposal Corporation could provide this information.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: I have a supplementary question. Perhaps the Minister or one of his officials could remind us of the number of caravans. How many were there last year?

[English]

Mr. Pelletier: Six, I am told.

Mr. Mongrain: Six of them all over the country. Now how many people were hired to be responsible for those caravans last year? I do not mean the whole staff, but the men in charge.

Mr. E. J. Preston (Advisor Personnel Administration, Department of the Secretary of State): About a hundred.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you.

Mr. McGrath: I have a further supplementary Mr. Chairman. What was the capital cost of the caravans? Surely the Department would know that.

Mr. Pelletier: We could look into it and provide the answer.

Mr. McGrath: Thank you, sir.

• 1200

The Chairman: I think some interest was shown in the translation services. Before I call vote No. 10 on the Translation Bureau, does anybody have any questions on the Translation Bureau? Mr. Stafford on the Translation Bureau.

Mr. Stafford: We hear complaints, Mr. Pelletier, about the Translation Bureau now and then. What was its size around the years 1962 and 1963 in relation to what it is now?

Mr. Mayer: Well I should say, grosso modo if I understood the question well, that we now have altogether, with the support staff and translators, some 580 people. We would have had at that time about 400 people. I think that is about the number we had around 1962.

Mr. Stafford: In 1962 there were around 400 people. So there has been an increase of somewhere around 50 per cent.

Mr. Mayer: You are right.

Mr. Stafford: When they are given translations are they able to make them—I am looking at the regulations—within the maximum time available? Do many people have to ask for extensions? I am looking at the regulations in the Canada Gazette.

Mr. Mayer: Yes, which section of the regulations would that be?

Mr. Stafford: Well, this happens to be under Section 4, subsection (3). Do they have to ask departments for an extension of the time on many occasions?

Mr. Mayer: It happens quite often because the time limit imposed on the Bureau is not realistic in many cases, and we have to discuss this with the Department.

Mr. Stafford: But you ask for the maximum time, under the regulations?

Mr. Mayer: Oh, yes.

Mr. Stafford: I note from section 6 that the Superintendent of the Bureau can engage the services of professional translators and interpreters as independent contractors under the Government Contracts Regulations. Does that happen very often?

Mr. Mayer: It happens all the time because we have three ways of dealing with the workload. We have the departmental divisions, we have two overload divisions—one in Ottawa and one in Montreal, and we also farm out part of the workload.

Mr. Stafford: Did you include all those too in the 580 people you say you have translating?

Mr. Mayer: I am sorry. I said 580 with the support staff. We would have about 380 translators and 200 support staff.

Mr. Stafford: What would the support staff do?

Mr. Mayer: Well, they are the clerical staff. They handle the clerical end of the translating.

Mr. Stafford: And as far as the responsibilities of the heads of every department are concerned, do they give a fairly accurate five-year forecast of the needs?

Mr. Mayer: I must say that generally they have not given it but these regulations have just recently been published and we intend to get together with representatives from the departments to ask that this be done from now on. It has been done in very few cases in the past.

Mr. Stafford: But you think it will work out much better?

Mr. Mayer: Well if we know where we are going we will be able to plan for staff much better than we have been.

Mr. Stafford: Is it the fact that translators are difficult to find or do you find unequal workloads is the main problem?

Mr. Mayer: I would say that we have a dual problem there. We have the problem of the increasing workload and also the problem of finding good translators.

Mr. Stafford: Do you find usually under section 7, subsection (3) that departments do give you an accurate maximum time available for translation?

Mr. Mayer: Not always, no.

Mr. Stafford: I see in section 11 that the Bureau has attached a Translation Division to a department. How many departments have translation divisions attached to them?

Mr. Mayer: We have 25 departmental divisions including the Parliamentary divisions. There are four for Parliament: Debates, the laws translation—translating bills, the Committees—we have a small Committees section, and also the interpreters in the interpretation section, and all told, with the divisions in the departments, there are 25.

Mr. Stafford: And still all of those are included in the 580 figure?

Mr. Mayer: Oh, yes.

Mr. Stafford: I see here under Section 12:

12. (1) The requirements of both Houses of the Parliament of Canada and of the committees thereof... shall be given first priority by the Bureau.

Mr. Mayer: This is under Interpretation Services.

Mr. Stafford: Yes. Is that correct?

Mr. Mayer: That is correct.

• 1205

Mr. Stafford: So that any complaints we have, say, in the committees here about not receiving the translations soon enough—I mean, it just does not exist then, does it?

Mr. Mayer: Section 12 deals with interpretation Services. Our interpretation section was created to give interpretation primarily to the House of Commons, the Senate, and the House of Commons and Senate committees, but we get requests from government departments for interpretation in conferences both national and international where Canada is the host country. But Parliament gets first priority on the services of interpreters.

Mr. Stafford: Do you find that that makes the departmental translations a little slow or not?

Mr. Mayer: We are dealing with two things. Interpretation is one service and translation is another.

Mr. Stafford: As far as translation is concerned then, do the committees have any priority?

Mr. Mayer: Under the regulations the work of Parliament has priority to the extent that it can be given priority with the resources that we have at the present time.

Mr. Stafford: I just started to read this interpretation section. I did not think it was coming on today. Are the priorities set out as far as translations are concerned? I just do not happen to see the section here.

Mr. Mayer: This is 12(1):

12. (1) The requirements of both Houses... shall be given priority by the Bureau...

for interpretation services. Under the priority order for translation the Bureau will give priority to the work of Parliament. This is section 4(1), which states:

4. (1) Except in cases of particular urgency, the Bureau shall make translations... in accordance with the following order of priority: (a) documents that are required to be published in both the English and French languages including

(i) all Parliamentary documents,...

The Chairman: After Mr. Stafford I have supplementaries from Mr. Corbin, Mr. Stewart and Mr. Matte.

Mr. Stafford: Do you find the number of employees and the number of interpreters now fairly sufficient in order to do the work without keeping even departments waiting?

Mr. Mayer: No, not at all. For instance, we do not have the number of interpreters we would have. We have at the present time an establishment of 17 and we really need more. At the difficulty is that there are about 30 conference interpreters in Canada and these constitute the sum total of people who can do the work correctly—and I am excluding our own staff of 17 when I say 30.

Mr. Stafford: Thirty and 17?

Mr. Mayer: Thirty outside our services. We have had competitions to recruit interpreters and we get very few conference interpreters. We hold the competitions throughout Canada and sometimes we manage to recruit one but that is all.

Mr. Stafford: In other words, the interpreters we hear over our microphones here are the finest then, are they?

Mr. Mayer: Oh, yes—well I mean they are very hard to come by because there are not that many opportunities to train to become a simultaneous interpreter.

Mr. Stafford: There is kind of a common complaint here among committees at times, especially when we meet so often, that there should be constant interpretation. Is the problem that you just cannot find them?

Mr. Mayer: Well at the present time we have the House to serve, the Senate, and the Committees, and if too many committees sit simultaneously it makes it very difficult. In this Committee this morning, for instance, there is one interpreter where there should be about three. He has no relief at the present time.

Mr. Stafford: Is it correct that as far as the rules concerning interpreters are concerned they are only supposed to go half an hour and then have relief for the next half hour?

Mr. Mayer: We have a hard time abiding by the rules.

Mr. Stafford: But is that a rule? I hear it mentioned in Committees.

Mr. Mayer: Half an hour should be a maximum.

Mr. Stafford: Do some of them go on all day long?

Mr. Mayer: No, no, not very often.

Mr. McGrath: I hope this does not constitute a hazard to their safety. Is it air conditioned in there?

Mr. Mayer: Yes, they tell me it is air conditioned.

Mr. Stafford: But is there anything that can be done? I noticed in one committee in particular the other day one of the members from Quebec was complaining about the fact that we go into some of the committees and there just is not sufficient interpretation services. Is there anything that can be done immediately?

Mr. Mayer: Yes, we are doing something right now. We are holding an "in House" competition within the Translation Bureau and we are going to train, like we have done in the past—some of our interpreters have been trained by us—at least three or four, or maybe more if we can find the proper kind of individual who has the necessary qualities.

Mr. Stafford: But you are doing that as quickly as possible.

Mr. Mayer: Oh, yes, we are doing it right now.

Mr. Stafford: How long do you think it will take before there is sufficient interpreters to enable you to do the job just exactly the way it should be done?

Mr. Mayer: Well, at the rate at which we ourselves could turn them out with this training program, and considering the slow rate of recruiting outside, it will take another year or so at least to get a sufficient number.

Mr. Stafford: By "another year or so" do you mean it will take approximately a year?

Mr. Mayer: Yes.

Mr. Stafford: Do you feel that in a year then there will not be any occasion for complaint? I mean, I am not saying that I am complaining but I hear it almost constantly in different committees—at least the eight or 10 committees I have been on since I have been a member.

Mr. Mayer: I can say that we are working on the problem and are trying to get a sufficient number of interpreters through training and recruiting, and there is a strong possibility that within this period of one year we should have the necessary complement of translators.

● 1210

Mr. Stafford: One of the members from Quebec mentioned in a committee the other day that this is something that has been said for the past five years but it never seems to happen. There is a definite reality now that in a year this will take place?

Mr. Mayer: We live in high hopes, to a certain extent.

The Chairman: Are you limited, Mr. Mayer, by a lack of money? Do you have sufficient money for your programs, your training and your salary scales?

Mr. Mayer: Not at all; I must say that the Translation Bureau has been favoured in that we have had what we have asked for. It is a matter of the difficulty of recruiting and training.

The Chairman: With supplementaries I have Mr. Corbin, Mr. Stewart, Mr. Matte, Mr. McGrath and Mr. Mongrain.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of State, Mr. Pelletier, in his remarks spoke of major difficulties in respect of recruiting. Could you tell us what are exactly the difficulties of recruiting? Is there any lack of interest for this type of work? Or is it a matter of salary?

Mr. Pelletier: Are you speaking of interpreters? Mr. Mayer has just explained the situation. What are the difficulties met with regard to translators?

Mr. Mayer: With regard to translators we should, I think, understand that to translate properly we should know two languages well. What happens is that the Public Service Commission opens a competition and out of 100 candidates the rate of recruiting has been, up to very recently, approximately 5 per cent. The reason is that certain candidates know French well but do not know English well enough, so they are not satisfactory translators and, of course, the reverse too. A number of our candidates are well acquainted with English but not well acquainted with French. It is absolutely useless as far as we are concerned to lower the norms of recruiting since the requirements of quality are being felt in an ever increasing degree throughout the public service.

Mr. Corbin: Recruiting is carried out everywhere in Canada?

Mr. Mayer: Yes, it is, through the Public Service Commission.

Mr. Corbin: Now, with regard to this three-year program at the University of Montreal. Is it presently under way?

Mr. Mayer: Yes, it started last fall in September and will continue.

Mr. Corbin: The students are considered to be government employees and receive a subsistence allowance over the year. What is the amount of that?

Mr. Mayer: It is $1,900 excluding tuition costs which are $500 paid by the government. In other words, $1,900 paid over the academic year. If there are seven months, $1,900 divided by seven.

Mr. Corbin: And in return does your student agree to work for the government for a certain number of years?

Mr. Mayer: Yes, once he has obtained his license, for three years.

Mr. Corbin: Thank you.

[English]

The Chairman: I now recognize Mr. Stewart.

1215

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Chairman, through you to Mr. Mayer: You said a moment ago that you are constantly sending work to be translated by private groups in Montreal and Ottawa.

Is it desirable to have this situation to keep a free enterprise system going, or would you prefer to do it all yourselves if you had enough people?

Mr. Mayer: I should say that a very large part of the work-load cannot be farmed out because it is from departments and is work that has to be done for different reasons, such as security and deadlines, and must be done within the Department.

The part that can be farmed out has not up to now been farmed out to what I might call commercial translation agencies but rather to individuals such as former translators in the Bureau, or married women who were translators with us—those whose capacities and talents for translating we are aware of. These are the kinds of people to whom we have been farming out the work.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): So it is strictly a question of not having enough people on your own staff to handle it?

Mr. Mayer: Oh, yes.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Mayer, with the increase in bilingualism in the public service and if, in a few years, we meet the deadlines that have been outlined, will the need for translators be less or greater?

Mr. Mayer: It depends on what objective we are speaking of. If it is a matter of everybody in the Public Service being bilingual it naturally follows that there would be less translation.

Of course, at the outset it would be a matter of a new workload, a workload of more French to English than of English to French. The more documents that are created in the French language in the Public Service the more translation we will probably have to do from French into English.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Within the various translation sections of the Department I know that they do not have time to take texts from departments and edit them. Do you envisage the adding of this service to your translation service? Is it possible or practical, or do you think it would be a good thing?

Mr. Mayer: This matter has come up once or twice. I believe the departments are being encouraged to hire the services of French-speaking editors for the French-speaking text that they have to put out. But there has been no decision on, and really, no study made of, the question whether these editors should be part of the Translation Bureau.

I really have no opinion on that. We have our problems at the present time, and we would not want to add to them a new staff of people doing another job.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): It might lessen the load for the translators. If, for example, I have to write a letter in French, knowing that my French is not perfect I could send it to the editor for editing rather than writing it in English and sending it to your translator.

Mr. Mayer: Departments are being encouraged to do precisely that at the present time; that is, to have French speaking editors correct, or do some editing of, documents prepared in French by public servants who are not quite up to using the French written language.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I have just one more question. I have the impression that we do not have a translation service for the Members of the House of Commons. Is this the case?

Mr. Mayer: There is a translation service for Members of Parliament and Senators in the sense that the Chief of Production of the Translation Bureau is in the Blackburn Building and the House and Senate authorities have been invited to tell all Members and Senators that any official document that they wish to be translated can be sent to our offices there.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Would this also apply to letters, or articles we write for newspapers?

Mr. Mayer: I would say it would apply to any official document.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Thank you, Mr. Mayer.

The Chairman: Mr. Matte?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Matte: With regard to the number of translators would it be possible out of these 580 translators...

Mr. Mayer: Pardon me, not 580 translators, 380 translators; we have a support staff of 200.

• 1220

Mr. Matte: All right. Where do these translators come from; can you tell us how many French Canadians, how many English Canadians there are among these translators and interpreters?

Mr. Mayer: Yes, approximately. We have a foreign language division which includes 35 translators. These foreign language translators are Italians, Russians, Ukrainians, Poles, Spanish and so on. From the French-English translation, we possibly have about 30 translators working only from French into English. If you take these 65 from the 385 that leaves 320 translators working from English into French. These are either Canadians, or Europeans. We have Europeans—French, Swiss, and so on.

Mr. Matte: Can you tell me the approximate number of French Canadians who carry out translation of English into French?

Mr. Mayer: Let us say that out of the remaining 320 who are English-French translators there might be four-fifths who are French Canadians; one-fifth perhaps are translators we have recruited elsewhere when they arrived in Canada—Europeans.

Mr. Matte: In other words, out of the 380 we have about 75 per cent are French Canadians?

Mr. Mayer: Oh, yes, at the very least, yes.

Mr. Matte: Thank you.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, we now have a number of officially bilingual provinces, for example, my own province of Newfoundland went officially bilingual last year, even though our population is about 90 per cent unilingual by virtue of the Anglo-Saxon-Iris makeup of the population. My question is, are these services of the Translation Bureau available to these provinces for translating statutes? If so, who underwrites the costs and have you in fact received any request from provincial governments, such as the Government of Newfoundland, to undertake these translations of statutes?

Mr. Pelletier: Requests have been received. I could not tell you officially if there was an official or unofficial request from Newfoundland. I can tell you that there were some other provinces that have declared themselves bilingual asking us what kind of help we could provide. Of course, the Translation Bureau is not available to these provinces because, as Mr. Mayer just said, the workload that we have to deal with is already a little more than it should be, but we are trying to help these people find the translators they need. I do not know exactly what we will be in a position to do.

Mr. Mayer reminds me that we have offered to co-operate in the field of terminology. They have a Terminology Centre and it is one of the problems of course in the translation of official documents.

Mr. McGrath: You mean you would adjudicate what independent or commercial translators would do for them?

Mr. Mayer: No, this is not it. We have the Translation Bureau a Terminology Centre. We do research in terminology and prepare terminology bulletins in every field of activity and we have offered to place the results of this work at the disposal of the provinces, they want to avail themselves of this service.

The Chairman: Mr. Mongrain?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: One question to Mr. Mayer. On occasion, Mr. Mayer, do your interpreters have to travel outside of Ottawa to go to certain conferences of Ministers and does it happen that they might go to the United States or to Europe on occasion?

Mr. Mayer: Yes, on occasion.

Mr. Mongrain: When you say on occasion, how often?

Mr. Mayer: Out of the 17 we have, let us say that the demands for translators—interpreters in Canada are fairly frequent and twice a month, perhaps, are called to work for the Department of Indian Affairs in Quebec City or the Economic Council which might be sitting in another city.

• 1225

Mr. Mongrain: They might be called to interpret outside of Ottawa. You have mentioned the Department of Indian Affairs. Do you have Indian interpreters?

Mr. Mayer: No. No. We are dealing here with interpreting from French into English because certain Indian representatives speak only French.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you.

[English]

The Chairman: Mr. Rose, Mr. Matte and Mr. Osler.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, my supplementary clings only tenuously to the subject; however, I would like to be permitted to put it. I was very interested in the assistance that is being given to supply our special needs for translators to the extent of some $1,900 a year. We know that the Department of National Defence similarly assists officers training through post-secondary education to the tune of about $187 a month. Does the Secretary of State plan to provide similar federal grants and assistance to overcome, or assist in overcoming, the serious shortages in other fields in Canada? I think particularly of medicine, nursing, dentistry and that sort of thing.

The Chairman: It is tenuous but we will permit it.

Mr. Pelletier: I do not know of any existing scheme of this kind presently in operation.

Mr. Rose: I think we can agree that the Minister is most imaginative and I think a number of us might look to his leadership in this regard.

Mr. Pelletier: I am told that there is a similar system for librarians.

Mr. Rose: Therefore we do have a precedent for federal assistance in this general area, and perhaps we might seek some expansion of it to meet certain particular needs as they arise in Canada, in terms of professional and technical skills.

Mr. Pelletier: Do you have anything particular in mind?

Mr. Rose: Well, yes really, complete post-secondary education at public expense. It seems to me that what we are doing is nibbling away at it number certain pressures for certain specific needs. I would be very interested in knowing how this might be expanded; certainly on the basis of priorities, it is illogical to expect us to go into it all at once. I would like to come back to this general topic later when we consider the vote dealing with post-secondary education.

The Chairman: It is not a vote, Mr. Rose, it is a statutory payment.

Mr. Rose: Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Mr. Matte, Mr. Osler.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Chairman, I would like to clear up some things in my own mind. I do not know if my question is proper but with all the progress in electronics is there not some possibility of using, say, a translating machine?

Mr. Mayer: Yes, I, and a member of a committee in our National Research Council have been looking into the matter of the translating machine over the last four years. The Research Council has set up three study groups, one in Cambridge, one in Saskatoon and one at the University of Montreal to look into this matter, but so far the conclusion of these three groups is that the translating machine will not be practicable in the foreseeable future.

Research has been directed in another area. We are now thinking of an electronic dictionary. All the data would be put into a computer and the information could be drawn from that computer in a classified and codified form. It would make the translation of some technical documents easier. That is the point reached by research.

[English]

The Chairman: After Mr. Osler we will be calling the Citizenship Section.

Mr. Osler: I have a very short question and it may be superfluous, but you were talking about a terminology bank which I presume you are building up here, and which is available. Is there enough widespread interest to have the Crown put out a loose-leaf terminology dictionary that can be kept up to date? Rather than have Newfoundland or Manitoba come to you, why could you not send books to them?

Mr. Mayer: That is precisely it. We are prepared, if the provinces wish our co-operation, to extend the distribution of our terminology bulletins. We have prepared 135 of these on different subjects, and we have been dealing with people outside the Bureau on an exchange basis. However, we are prepared to extend this distribution to the provinces precisely, and have them benefit from this research.

• 1230

The Chairman: Mr. Stafford?

Mr. Stafford: I had a couple of more questions, sir, I meant to ask you before. How does the interdepartmental advisory committee considering priorities work?

Mr. Mayer: Well this is a new committee that is being set up to advise the department, and to advise the Superintendent, because there have been in the past conflicts of priority between departments that were not at all easy to resolve. It is to try and shoulder the Superintendent to a certain extent in resolving some of these difficulties.

Mr. Stafford: That does not effect the priorities you mention in Section 4, though, does it?

Mr. Mayer: No.

Mr. Stafford: The work of the House of Commons and Committees still comes first?

Mr. Mayer: That is right.

Mr. Stafford: Is that used mostly in interpretations submitted by the departments? Is the interdepartmental advisory committee used almost always in translations for departments?

Mr. Mayer: Let us say it is not used yet because it is not yet set up. The regulations have just been published and this committee will be set up soon.

Mr. Stafford: I have just another couple of questions on this. You say there are only 17 translators...

Mr. Mayer: Interpreters.

Mr. Stafford: Oh, interpreters, excuse me. Seventeen interpreters in your Department and 30 in Canada?

Mr. Mayer: Yes.

I read this in an article by Madame Nilsk who is a free-lance translator in Montreal and who knows all about conference interpreting in Canada. Her figure is that there are 30 conference interpreters outside the team we have in Parliament.

Mr. Stafford: Just for a moment on the conference once again, under Section 12(3) when a Department has requested interpretation services for a conference, do you find that you are able to give the service to them?

Mr. Mayer: We have been, generally. Outside the sessions of Parliament there is no problem, but during the session sometimes it is a little tight and we have had to refuse a few times.

Mr. Stafford: But then the complaints of certain members of the Committee that there is a shortage for the committees now is correct.

Mr. Mayer: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Stafford: Just a word about the training. You say you look for the most qualified people to do the job and then you train them. How do you train them?

Mr. Mayer: In interpretation there are two things. You have to have a spontaneous vocabulary that is present in your mind and that just springs out as the speaker speaks in the other language. Also, you have to learn the technique of interpreting, which is to listen on one wavelength while you speak on another, and that is what we try to teach them. We try to take people who already have the vocabulary and we do not have to teach them that part of it.

Mr. Stafford: One more question. Do you have any trouble with overtime? I suppose they work overtime, the translators.

Mr. Mayer: Everybody works overtime in the translation bureau.

The Chairman: Shall Item 10 carry? Item 10 carried.

We will now move on to vote 5, which is the citizenship section.

On Item 5.

Secretary of State

5. Administration, Operation and Maintenance including grants and contributions for language instruction and citizenship promotion, and grants to organizations as detailed in the Estimates $4,550,200

The Chairman: Are there questions?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Dinsdale had to leave, Mr. Chairman. He did have questions. Perhaps this could be passed over and we could go on to something else, if nobody else has questions.

The Chairman: Are there no other questions on citizenship?

Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: Is it the practice to admit to Canadian citizenship only those immigrants who can demonstrate they can speak one of the two official languages of this country?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, citizenship is very often refused on those grounds.

Mr. Mongrain: But you require a fairly elementary knowledge, do you not? You do not require these people to speak fluently?

Mr. Pelletier: The act requires them to have an adequate knowledge. I am told that the citizenship courses interpret that clause in a very liberal way.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Minister, if you have a specialist in his field, a very eminent surgeon or a very distinguished artist, could there be exceptions in such cases on condition that the person asking for citizenship be ready to study enough to get by in the language?

Mr. Pelletier: This is a theoretical question, because in any event you have to live in this country five years. If you are speaking of a high-calibre intellectual I can hardly conceive at in five years he cannot learn one of the two languages. This problem arises most often with very simple people who arrive here after a certain age and who are called upon to work in a very small, closed circle, so that we will still have that requirement.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you.

Mr. La Salle: We are told that more than 3,000 young people have benefited from this exchange travel. Was the participation of provinces approximately equal? Have all provinces taken advantage of the other?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes. The exchange plans have three set programs. They have the young travellers; under that particular program we have had 3,000 students in 140 groups of 24 each. We have had meetings with the provinces and we apportioned these people according to the population of the province. A province with 10 per cent of the Canadian population would have 10 per cent of 140 groups or 10 per cent of 3000, if you like. Then we have another program, the voluntary agency program. Under that title we have had approximately 12,000 people who have been travelling. The grants are given according to criteria based upon the quality of the exchange. For instance, is the trip merely a trip without any study in depth of any kind or is this a trip a very serious business? For instance, we had 30 young people from Labrador city, travelling for a month in Europe under the international program, who availed themselves of that opportunity to study French in Switzerland for two or three weeks, and who found 75 to 80 per cent of the funds required for their own expenses in Labrador city itself. This is a priority matter. We will give them grants in preference to giving them to other people.

[English]

Mr. Stafford: I have heard complaints especially from older immigrants that some citizenship judges expect a more adequate knowledge of one of the two official languages than they can perform. Do you agree with that?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Martin tells me that there are a few complaints, not many. They now have an avenue to appeal the decision.

Mr. Stafford: I have considerable complaints in my own area that possibly do not reach the ears of the Minister, or even the Department, that people of 60 or 65 years of age who find it very difficult to learn the language, would really like to be citizens. Do you not feel that possibly there should be a much more lightening of the required knowledge in cases where it is so difficult at a certain age?

Mr. Martin: The law provides that when a person over 40 years of age emigrates to this country, after he has been here for ten years he does not have to meet the language requirements.

Mr. Stafford: I see.

Mr. Martin: That is a recent change in the law.

Mr. Stafford: I guess it must be that period between five and ten years then. How about applicants found guilty of minor criminal offenses? Are they sometimes unduly held up?

Mr. Martin: Generally speaking, no, sir.

Mr. Stafford: But sometimes they are?

• 1240

Mr. Martin: Very rarely.

Mr. Stafford: Is it correct that in Canada there is perhaps too large a number of immigrants that never made application for years after they could become citizens?

Mr. Martin: There are a large number of people who do not make application. We cannot give you the figure.

Mr. Stafford: I have heard it said that there is perhaps a larger number in Canada than in most other countries. Would you agree with that?

Mr. Martin: I do not know what the figure is in other countries, and I cannot tell you what the figure is in this country. But we do know that there are a large number who do not apply. It is voluntary.

Mr. Stafford: Is there no advertising campaign in order to try to get more people to apply.

Mr. Martin: A small advertising campaign, sir, yes. We advertise in the ethnic press each year, and each of the courts has a small amount of money to make their presence known.

Mr. Stafford: Do you not feel that it would be a good idea if more people would apply at the end of the five years, a good thing for Canada?

Mr. Martin: Yes.

Mr. Stafford: Do you not feel that if we have a few extra dollars, maybe this would be a very worthwhile expenditure?

Mr. Martin: Yes, I think it would. We have only just recently started this.

Mr. Stafford: Are you going to keep it up?

Mr. Martin: Oh yes. We have provision in the Estimates to continue it. It is not much.

Mr. Stafford: But I know at election time it is easy to find people—dozens of them in my area, I suppose sometimes even hundreds—who would say, "Oh, I just never think of it" and "How do you do it?" Is there any chance that it might be stepped up even more to try to get the people to apply at the end of their five-year period? I mean, even more than the minimum amount you speak of.

Mr. Martin: Our court officials, sir, and the presiding officers do participate in public occasions and ceremonies and they try to encourage people wherever they can to apply. We try to make it known as best we can.

Mr. Stafford: I would like to point out to the Minister, though, that the tobacco farmer out in the fields and people like that, do not really see what goes on in the regional centres, such as, London, my area. As a result they are not too much aware of what goes on in the court either and some of them do not even read some of the newspapers from the larger cities where these courts will be outlined. Do you not feel that more could be done?

Mr. Pelletier: This is a problem that we now are trying to deal with. The Department is conducting studies for the revamping of the Canadian Citizenship Act and the whole processes engaged as a result of which there will probably be a White Paper and so on. This is one of the problems that we want to look at very closely because we in the Department also feel that there are a number of Canadians who have arrived here and have acquired permanent domicile who have not followed it up. This is one of the questions that we will have to deal with.

The Chairman: I have Mr. Dinsdale, Mr. Matte, Mr. Mongrain, Mr. Rose, Mr. Stewart, and Mr. Stanbury all on supplementary questions.

Mr. Mongrain, on a supplementary.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: This is a supplementary question to the previous question concerning travel. I had not realized we were moving to another subject.

Mr. Pelletier: I have just asked the Chairman here if the Committee agreed. We have two divisions in citizenship, one dealing with naturalization and the other with social promotion. I have asked the Chairman if he could not stick to naturalization and then social promotion.

Mr. Mongrain: Yes.

[English]

The Chairman: We will try to keep the questions on naturalization and citizenship.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I have a supplementary question for Mr. Martin. I believe I put a question on the Order Paper during the last session about the numbers of people who had come to Canada but had not acquired citizenship after being here five years. I think while it is impossible to tell exactly because we do not have registration laws and our citizenship is entirely voluntary, that it is possible to make an estimate by reason of the number of people who have entered during a certain period and the number of people who have acquired citizenship. I think, both from the answer to my question and from recent published estimates, there are, perhaps, a million people in Canada who could apply for citizenship, but have not bothered to do so. Is it your impression that his is correct?

, 1245

Mr. Martin: Yes, in fact, I would think it might be a little more.

Mr. Stanbury: Yes. Do you have any idea what proportion of these would be British subjects?

Mr. Martin: Offhand, no, sir, but looking at the immigration figures I think it would be fairly high.

Mr. Stanbury: Is it fair to say that Mr. Tafford's suggestion that Canada has a high proportion of residents who might qualify for citizenship but have not bothered to acquire it, is because we accord them electoral privileges, the main privilege of citizenship to British subjects or even people who used to be British subjects who came from Ireland, South Africa or Rhodesia, for instance, without them having to take the minimal step of commitment to our country of becoming Canadian citizens?

Mr. Martin: In my judgment I think this is probably a fair statement.

Mr. Stanbury: In other words, giving that privilege or according that discrimination in our electoral law in favour of British subjects has appeared to be a factor in retarding the acquisition of Canadian citizenship by British subjects?

Mr. Martin: I think it might, sir, but mind you I say it is a subjective sort of thing.

Mr. Stanbury: Yes. Thank you.

Mr. Dinsdale: May I ask a supplementary before we proceed to a new question?

In our part of Canada we have certain citizenship problems that perhaps to not exist in other parts of Canada and I wonder if Mr. Martin could answer in general terms. As a result of the exigencies and the variables of the Second World War, we have some people applying for citizenship who found themselves as guests of the Canadian government in internment camps for a short period up until 1942. They later applied for citizenship and there seems to be some difficulties arising therefrom, even though they became loyalists after 1942. Is there any way that problem can be resolved?

Mr. Martin: Oh, yes, sir. I have not heard of many of these recently, but if you could let me know...

Mr. Dinsdale: I shall discuss one with you personally.

Mr. Martin: I would be delighted to hear about it and will see what we can do about it.

Mr. Dinsdale: Very good.

The Chairman: On a new question, Mr. Dinsdale.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes. This deals with the social development or the cultural development side of things.

The Chairman: Mr. Rose, did you have a supplementary on the citizenship question?

Mr. Rose: My question deals with citizenship, but, again, I am not quite certain. It relates somewhat to the converse of Mr. Stanbury's question. It deals with citizenship, not with the number who have had the privilege and failed to exercise it, but with those who may wish the privilege but are denied it for one season or another. Mine relates to the question of someone who has spent, say, four years in Canada as a landed immigrant, who goes outside of the country to work perhaps for one year, usually to the United States, and then returns. He must start all over again to complete his five years in order to qualify. Is that so?

Mr. Martin: No, sir. No, it is not so.

Mr. Rose: It is not so.

Mr. Martin: It is not so, sir, no. The general qualification is that a person must be a landed immigrant and have resided in Canada for 5 out of the 8 years prior to his application and 12 out of the 18 months immediately prior. So if a chap is a landed immigrant, has been here for four years and goes to work in the United States for a year, resides in the United States—there is a definitional thing here—and then comes back, he can apply in a year.

Mr. Rose: He can re-apply in one year?

Mr. Martin: Yes.

Mr. Rose: I see. Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Before we continue I wonder if there would be a general disposition among members to seek permission from the House to complete the estimates for the Minister, with the exception of the National Capital Commission buildings, this afternoon if we cannot do it by one o'clock.

Mr. Dinsdale: Will we have the Minister with us on Tuesday?

The Chairman: On Tuesday, yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: I would think we can complete them.

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Dinsdale: In another two hour session we should be able to complete them.

• 1250

The Chairman: Fine, if that is agreeable. I should say at this time before we go on that we have...

An hon. Member: What was agreeable, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: That we will not sit this afternoon; that we will sit on Thursday. We have an invitation from Mr. Southam to visit the National Arts Centre on Friday at 9.30 a.m. We have passed around maps, or we will be passing around maps, to assist you in finding where you are to meet. Those of you who have your wives or lady friends, as the case may be, are welcome to bring them. The tour will be over in time to allow members to be in the House of Commons by 11 o'clock.

Mr. Mongrain: Do we meet there?

The Chairman: We would meet there. Mr. Mongrain, you had a question.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: Yes, I did have a question. I had a specific case I wanted to put to your colleague, the Minister, unless you have the answer, in which case I would put the question to you. This is a specific case. I mention this because it might apply elsewhere. There does exist in my constituency an association which has been incorporated for several months, actually, three years, I believe and which a few months ago, had a very good idea. It charters a 100 to 110-passenger plane and they visit various capitals in Canada. They have visited Ottawa and also Toronto. They visit, say, Toronto. In Toronto, and this is going to be a typical case since they will be visiting the other provinces. They are received by the Premier. The Premier there found as many ministers as possible who could speak French. They were entertained by the Lieutenant Governor, by the Mayor who was at the time our friend, Mr. Givens. They also visited all the public institutions in the municipality which were worth visiting. Could a trip like this be considered by your Department? Of course, they pay all their own expenses. Do you think your Department could make some contribution to that? I might conclude by saying that the idea was originally put forward by a group of people whom I would call "Federalists" who did manage to recruit a certain number of separatists who have returned absolutely astounded at what they saw in these various capitals. They have visited two to date: they have been to Toronto and to Ottawa.

Mr. Lagassé: There were similar groups some of which benefited from grants in the past. However, we should have to look into the details of this.

Mr. Mongrain: I had mentioned the fact because I thought it was an excellent idea. I believe that this idea might spread if people thought they could get some minimal contribution at least, to reduce expenses somewhat, and it will help Canadian unity, of course.

Mr. La Salle: I believe Mr. Mongrain is asking for a grant. He is not saying so. I entirely share his view at any rate.

Mr. Mongrain: But I could have put my question otherwise.

[English]

The Chairman: I think the Minister and his officials have noted the request.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes. Mr. Chairman, in connection with what you might call the social development or the cultural development activities of the Secretary of State's Department, in the past there has been close collaboration between voluntary groups and the activities of government. We have had since the Second World War, for example, the Canadian Citizenship Council, which operated in a pioneer way in this field, and with considerable success. Now the Canadian Citizenship Council was recently disbanded, which I think is a great loss to Canada because it got a lot of voluntary support and interest from the business community, and the academic community, that was effective on the local level.

Was there any problem arising from the annual grant that had been forthcoming from the Citizenship Branch to this group? Was that connected with their decision to disband and discontinue their excellent operations?

Mr. Pelletier: It is not my impression. I was invited—if I can say so—to speak at the funeral and I heard their reasons as they explained them. First of all what was going on at the local level is still going on. It is not affected by this. It was a matter, as I saw it, discussing it with the people of the Canadian Citizenship Council, they just felt that their organization had outlived its usefulness in the form in which it had been set up originally. All of them were very firm in their project to replace it as soon as possible with another organization that would be better adapted to the necessities that they now face. This is what I gathered from talking with them. The new institution will be a kind of institute, I heard, and there is a group working on it, but it really was not connected with any problem of grants or that kind of thing.

Mr. Dinsdale: So the local councils continue and the problem at the moment is a lack of any co-ordinating body at the national level. Will the Citizenship Branch take any responsibility in this regard? These councils are continuing and what assistance can the Citizenship Branch provide for these local councils?

Mr. Lagassé: After agreeing that they should disband as a Canadian Citizenship Council, the local councils—and there are some 25 of them in Canada, like the Winnipeg Citizenship Council, the Montreal Citizenship Council and so on—formed a Federation of Citizenship Councils, appointing the president of the Montreal Council as president of that Federation and the president of the Winnipeg Council as secretary, and agreed to study what services a central agency could provide to them by way of newsletters and other types of exchange facilities. We agreed in the Branch to work with that new Federation and to help get it launched in a new way. This will not replace the Canadian Citizenship Council as such because in addition to the type of work which is mainly the integration of immigrants done by local councils, the Canadian Citizenship Council was also focusing upon such broad issues as citizen participation, democratic leadership, broad questions of the quality of life in the country, which also is of interest to the local councils. However, there was quite a demarcation in the level of discussion over the points of focusing of the Canadian Citizenship Council and the local councils which were not necessarily constituents of the Canadian Council. Would that provide some explanation?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, now the Citizenship Branch itself has increased its activities in recent years. I notice there is an increase, for example, in the program to assist immigrants in acquiring language. There has been a complaint from time to time that there is not sufficient assistance available to our immigrants in acquiring facility in one of the official languages of the country. Mr. Chairman, could Mr. Lagassé expand on what the Citizenship Branch does in this regard?

Mr. Pelletier: I would like to say first that there is a decision to make whether it is the responsibility of the federal government only to teach languages to immigrants or whether it is the responsibility of the province or it is a shared responsibility because the provinces that will receive the immigrants will be enriched by so much. I know that the Department has been supplying books at a certain point and maybe Mr. Lagassé has more details that he can give you.

mended that the federal government assist each department, each province in providing language training facilities for immigrants. The plan that evolved from those early discussions was one in which the federal government would reimburse the provinces for certain expenses that they incur in training immigrants. The cost-sharing agreement that is signed with most provinces is one which provides for 50 per cent of their costs for teachers' salaries—I mean the cost to the provinces, not necessarily the costs to the local school board because the school boards pay different salaries for evening classes—and 100 percent of the cost of the text books used in these classes.

We also help finance courses at the university level for teachers of a second language to adults. Such courses are held at a number of places and we provide them with a consultant for problems which they may encounter in teaching a second language to adults. I know many of you have become involved in learning a second language as adults; you will realize that it is essential that the training provided to adults is of the highest calibre so that the people waste little energy for maximum results. In that there has been considerable progress in the last 10 years and it may not be immediately known to a local school board. I mean the person in charge may be somewhat removed from these new findings so that there is a need there to try to transmit that information. Would that answer your question?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes. Mr. Chairman, the Minister, in this oft-quoted speech made the other day in Montreal, referred to the program of cultural equalization and used phrases like "eliminating bourgeois culture" and so forth.

Mr. Pelletier: Not that one.

Mr. Dinsdale: Unfortunately, our time has expired but is this so-called cultural equalization program an active program under the Citizenship Branch or is it something that is still in the...

The Chairman: Embryo stage?

Mr. Dinsdale: ...embryo stage, yes.

Mr. Pelletier: It is in the embryo stage. Your phrase about "eliminating" sounds like something from the cultural revolution in Red China. That is why I did not use it.

Mr. Dinsdale: You did use the word "bourgeois"?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, I did, because I think any cultural activity in a democracy should reach as large a section of the population as it can and that the cultural needs in our country now are probably felt more in the lower income brackets than among the people who have plenty of money. That is what I meant, that culture should not be conceived as a privilege of those with a fat bank account. That is all I meant.

Mr. Dinsdale: I take it that the word "bourgeois" has a different connotation in French than it has in English.

Mr. Pelletier: We will call Mr. Mayer back.

Mr. Dinsdale: In other words, you are interested in the cultural deserts of Canada?

The Chairman: We will not want to name any particular places.

Mr. Pelletier: No, we will not.

Mr. Dinsdale: I wanted to pursue this line of questioning, Mr. Chairman, provided the other members of the Committee are willing to go beyond the hour of 1 o'clock. I wanted, for example, to get into the other aspects of the program dealing with Indians and Eskimos which I think is a special function.

The Chairman: The Minister has said that he has a commitment at 1 o'clock and I think we will adjourn until Tuesday at 11 o'clock.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Will I be able to ask my supplementary on Tuesday?

• 1305

The Chairman: I think I will make a note that Mr. Dinsdale is to be first and to be followed by Mr. Matte, Mr. Stewart and Mr. La Salle. That is the order in which I have them and we will follow that order on Tuesday.

SECOND REPORT

Your Committee recommends that it be authorized to sit while the House is sitting.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN M. REID,
Chairman.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

TUESDAY, November 5, 1968.

(7)

The Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts met this day at 11:10 a.m. The Chairman, Mr. John M. Reid, presided.

Members present: Messrs. Corbin, De Bané, Dinsdale, Fairweather, Givens, Guilbault, La Salle, Matte, McCleave, Mongrain, Osler, Reid, Rose, Schreyer, Schumacher, Stanbury, Stewart (Cochrane)—(17).

Also present: Messrs. Asselin and Ritchie.

In attendance: Hon. Gérard Pelletier, Secretary of State; and from the Department of the Secretary of State: Messrs. Jean Lagassé, Director, Citizenship Branch; W. R. Martin, Director, Citizenship Registration Branch; L. C. Lafleur, Adviser, Financial and General Administration.

The Minister tabled a return relating to the Confederation Train and Caravans, requested by Mr. McGrath, which was ordered printed as an appendix to the proceedings of this day (See Appendix "B").

On motion of Mr. De Bané, seconded by Mr. Stewart (Cochrane),

Resolved,—That the Committee seek permission to sit while the House is sitting.

On motion of Mr. Mongrain, seconded by Mr. Stewart (Cochrane), the Committee agreed to print corrections requested by The Canada Council relating to Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, Issue No. 2, of October 22.

The Committee resumed consideration of the Revised Estimates 1968-69 of the Department of the Secretary of State.

The Chairman called Item 5, Citizenship, and the Minister was further examined, assisted by Mr. Lagassé.

Item 5 was carried.

Item 2, Construction or acquisition of Buildings, Works, Land and Equipment, National Arts Centre, was called.

The Minister was examined and supplied additional information.

Item 2 was allowed to stand until the next sitting when officials from the Department of Public Works would be present.

The Committee reverted to Item 1 and the Minister was further examined on various matters including broadcasting.

The questioning still continuing, at 1:05 p.m., the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chair.

M. Slack,
Clerk of the Committee.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Tuesday, November 5, 1968

• 1112

The Chairman: Gentlemen, we can begin now. We are dealing with Item 5—Citizenship.

Before we proceed, the Secretary of State has given me a reply to the question asked by Mr. McGrath at the last meeting on Confederation Train and Caravans. Since he is not here, is it agreed to have this reply printed as an appendix to today's proceedings?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: On Thursday we will be meeting with officials from the Department of Public Works. Because of scheduling difficulties the meeting will take place at 3.30 p.m.

I would like at this time a motion to sit while the House is sitting. Could I have a mover and seconder?

Mr. De Bané: I so move.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I second the motion.

Motion agreed to.

The Chairman: I have a letter addressed to the Clerk from the Canada Council dealing with some minor corrections they would like to see in Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 2, both in English and in French. I would like also a motion to print this corrigendum, as an appendix to today's proceedings.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Are they extensive?

The Chairman: No, very minor.

Mr. Mongrain: I so move.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I second the motion.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, may I comment on the question of sitting while the House is sitting. We agreed to it, but there is a problem of over-congestion developing in the work of the committees. For example, I have a direct conflict this morning. I understand that there is a supervisory committee trying to sort out some of these conflicts and I just raise this question at this time in the hope that that committee is functioning, and while we are giving concessions to meet while the House is sitting I do hope we do not get ourselves into a hopelessly overcrowded situation where we cannot deal with the estimates properly.

The Chairman: You have probably noticed that committees are now sitting in the evenings, on Mondays, and they are trying to work in Friday mornings as well in order to spread them out. We are meeting in the afternoon at the request of the Department of Public Works because its estimates are before the House. This was a specific request which I thought we should agree to.

• 1115

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, and we do agree to that with this reservation—our inability to be more than one place at one time. We are not omnipresent, unfortunately.

The Chairman: They originally had us scheduled almost permanently at 3.30 in the afternoon, which I felt was not particularly desirable, and so we have reached this concession.

Mr. Dinsdale, you were the person I had marked on my list first to continue the questioning on the Citizenship Branch. We were dealing with the cultural activities of that department.

Mr. Dinsdale: I would like the Minister, if he would, to be a little explicit on the term "cultural equalization". I ask this question because in a country as widely diverse, both geographically and ethnically, as Canada it seems to me that homogeneity, as they have it in much smaller countries like the UK or France or some other old established nation of that kind, is a consummation devoutly to be wished. To achieve cultural equalization at this stage I think is a little premature and would interfere rather drastically with some of the mosaic concepts that we have in Western Canada for example. With that background I wonder if the Minister could expand on this phrase "cultural equalization".

Hon. Gerard Pelletier (Secretary of State of Canada): I am not sure that I get the full sense of the last part of your question.

Mr. Dinsdale: You mean the mosaic concept?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes. My answer to this question, if I can make it as brief as possible, is that it is not something that anybody hopes to achieve within a matter of months. It is only the stated intention of equalizing cultural opportunities as well as other opportunities for Canadian citizens as much as we can and over the shortest period of time. This will no doubt expand over many years but we should reduce the number of years as much as we can.

In my mind this includes coverage by the CBC for instance, this includes encouragement to the arts, this includes all the various aspects of cultural activities, and the Department making it part of its over-all policy to try and equalize the opportunities as much as it can. Of course if you say we are not going to implement this in the immediate future, I have to agree with you. I think it is sad because of the limitations of the means we have. I realize fully how much easier it is—and people from the CBC for instance can tell you this—to equalize the resources derived from radio and television in a country like Britain than it is in a country like Canada, but I think that our perennial fight against distances in this country, which is a factor that we have to take into account and which creates many difficulties, should in the field of cultural resources be carried on as energetically as we can. I do not know if this answers your question, but it is an elaboration of the point I have made previously and the explanation of why I used in a loose sense, if you wish, the word "equalization" or "péréquation culturelle" in French.

It was to carry the views or the idea over that we do not consider that any group of Canadians—any part of our population should be deprived indefinitely or should be considered as being naturally deprived of cultural resources just because they happen to live on the outskirts of our territory or in places that have taken no interest in this kind of activity. I think it is our role to see that the largest possible percentage of the Canadian population should have access to these resources.

Mr. Dinsdale: So perhaps the phrase should be "access to cultural opportunities" rather than "cultural equalization" Maybe this is where the misunderstanding arises—and I say misunderstanding because, as you know, we have a very thriving folk art culture in western Canada, which is encouraged because it adds colour to the whole cultural complex of Canada. Am I right in saying that the Minister's concept is equality of opportunity of access to culture—and that word "culture" is rather difficult to define—rather than cultural equalization, because some are more equal than others?

Mr. Pelletier: I do not know where the misunderstanding comes from. To my mind the two formulations seem to convey the same meaning. They do not to yours, obviously, but that is what I meant.

I should also probably point out that up to now the effort has been conducted mainly in the field of integration of immigrants, for instance, and that as a consequence of the prolongation of the Official Languages bill we may have been made more conscious of the cultural needs of minorities of Canadian-born citizens of the English or the French languages.

That would be the only addendum that I would make to your remarks. Otherwise, unless I have completely misinterpreted your question and your remarks, I do not think there is any difference between the view I hold and the one you have just expressed.

Mr. Dinsdale: It may be a problem of semantics.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to pursue this question as it applies to Canadians of Indian ancestry, so if there is any supplementary on this particular aspect I would be glad to yield.

The Chairman: You may continue.

Mr. Dinsdale: How would the cultural equalization program apply to our Canadian Indians, for example? If I may use the phrase used by the Minister, here is a real cultural desert. I do not think that I will be misunderstood in applying the term to this particular area of Canadian life, even though I am sure the Minister would be reluctant to apply it in other areas of Canada.

We are all aware that our Indian reserve program has created cultural deserts of rather shocking proportions. I take it that some of the functions of the Citizenship Branch are directed at redressing and dealing with this problem. Just what functions are carried out by the Citizenship Branch in this area?

Mr. Pelletier: I think Mr. Lagassé could answer this question better than I.

Mr. Jean Lagassé (Director, Citizenship Branch, Secretary of State): Actually, we try to approach this question in three ways. One is directly with the Indian population. Interestingly, during, or prior to, Centennial year there was some question whether the Indians would really want to take part in Centennial activities, and what the centennial of the country really meant to them, the former possessors of the land.

• 1125

The thought was expressed that perhaps the best Centennial program for Indians would be that of developing amongst them a sense of nationhood and of full participation in the country as a whole. Together, the Centennial Commission, the Department of Indian Affairs and Indian organizations had a number of consultations—and people came here, and so on—and it was decided that the formation of national Indian organizations and provincial federations would in itself be a Centennial project. So that today you have an organization such as the National Indian Brotherhood of Canada, a federation of each provincial federation of Indians, which, in turn, provides free and complete membership for all Indians in each province. We have been working at both providing technical advisory services to those groups and grants to help people to attend these gatherings. This is one approach.

Another approach has been friendship centres. The aim of these is mainly to help people of Indian ancestry to survive—if you wish to use that word—or adapt; but anyhow, to have a “pied de terre” in urban areas.

All of you will be aware that there exist Canadian cities that are located exactly where there were formally large Indian populations. I think of your own constituency, Mr. Dinsdale, where very early in history one can read records of the first settlers, where it is said that Indians were making a great contribution in putting up fence posts, clearing the land and building the first town, Brandon, and yet I recall that when a study was done there some 10 or 15 years ago there were no more than 125 people of Indian ancestry in a town of 30,000.

The question is: How does that happen? We have worked at developing right in the town an area, or a kind of community centre, where Indians can come and receive some referral services, but, more interestingly perhaps, establish their own groups such as a mother's club, youth activity and what have you. That is another area.

The other one, of course, has been, working with the broad Canadian population, mainly through the Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada, which is, again, a federation of some 120 Canadian associations which have been interested in people of Indian ancestry.

There the idea has been to try to promote research and the dissemination of ideas and interpretations of the Indian question conducive to a more healthy attitude in the majority towards a particular minority.

We have worked in these three areas. The total funds available for this type of work in our Department is about $220,000 and we have played a type of supportive role plus providing technical advisers to help identify both problems and solutions.

Mr. Dinsdale: Therefore, I take it, Mr. Chairman, that the emphasis is on assisting the Indians to become community conscious—a sort of the community development idea?

Mr. Lagassé: Yes, you could put it that way. Perhaps the basic goal of the Department, as mentioned in the Minister's earlier speech, was mainly that of enriching cultural activities. It is a question of enabling Indians to live a fuller life. I mean, they will survive, obviously. There is a lot of evidence to show that the poorer people are the longer they will survive as a separate identity. It would be different if the only goal here were their survival, but the question here is how they are to lead a full life and participate in the nation as a whole, and this requires some real, modern organized activity. This is the type of thing that we are trying to provide. It is the energy, the resources with which to have cultural activities, though cultural activities necessarily are a matter of self-expression or group expression—and that is what must be done by the people themselves. I mean, the government cannot...

Mr. Dinsdale: Does the Citizenship Branch co-operate with Indian Affairs branches? Is there any co-ordination or consultation in this program?

• 1130

Mr. Lagassé: Yes. At the field level there must be weekly if not daily communication between the two branches as they are in Ottawa. We have a number of consultations and, at times when our staff is trained or their staff is trained, we exchange people who try to explain what the other is doing.

The Chairman: May I ask a question, Mr. Lagassé, on friendship centre programs? Do you provide capital grants for these programs?

Mr. Lagassé: No capital grants.

The Chairman: What kind of grants do you provide?

Mr. Lagassé: Operational; we are talking of 25 different centres, so obviously these are organized by voluntary boards of governors or directors. Each has a slightly different kind of program and administrative setup. Overwhelmingly what we try to achieve is a formula whereby a local board, made up of as many people of Indian ancestry as is consistent with the organization of that part of the community, seeks to raise local funds from private sources—service clubs and individuals—and from its own activities. It seeks also the support of the Red Feather Agencies, or the United Appeal or whatever it is called. In addition it seeks funds from the municipality in which it is operating, the province and us, and in the case of three provinces, the three Prairie Provinces, there is a cost-sharing agreement whereby the request for funds is given to the province—and the Province has set up an advisory committee for the operation of that agreement—and it is decided how much can be given and we reimburse 50 per cent of what the province gives.

In the other provinces we have consultations with the provinces although there are no agreements, but the end product is somewhat the same—we give the same amount. The municipality also provides, so usually it is about one-fourth per level for the funding of the centres.

The Chairman: This is in terms of operations?

Mr. Lagassé: Of operation, yes.

The Chairman: How are these centres capitalized; where do they get the money to provide facilities?

Mr. Lagassé: If they rent a building, they then have the building and that becomes part of the operational cost.

The Chairman: But for those who, for some circumstances, may already have a building and perhaps would like to expand or move, there is no leeway in the departmental program to assist them?

Mr. Lagassé: No, there is not.

The Chairman: Do you contemplate any development of this nature?

Mr. Lagassé: I do not think so; I mean, not at this stage.

The Chairman: How much money do you now have for this program on a yearly basis?

Mr. Lagassé: We have $115,000.

The Chairman: That is divided among 25 friendship centres?

Mr. Lagassé: That is right. The average support is $5000, but it may be $3000, $5000 $8000 or $10,000; I do not think it exceeds $10,000.

The Chairman: Do you have a supplement, Mr. Stanbury?

Mr. Stanbury: In your opinion, Mr. Lagassé, would it be possible for such centres, if they had living accommodation in them, to obtain CMHC loans?

Mr. Lagassé: Yes, although I should point out here that the function of friendship centres is mainly social, and most friendship centres will tell you in answer to your question, for example, that they would prefer to have very small physical arrangements and put the full emphasis of their work on social, cultural and recreational activities.

This is very consistent with the idea of participation in community life. For example, if you have a group of youngsters who would like bowling you make arrangements with one of the bowling alleys. In some towns this has a lot of meaning because it may well be that until this first bowling activity very few Indians ever went to the bowling alley, so that for them it becomes a matter of achievement to be able to have access to all the public facilities at the same level and in the same way as other Canadians.

The friendship centre has to be seen as providing for a lot of activities but not attempting to have the physical building to contain all the activities. It is the same thing with the hostel arrangements. There are a number of hostel arrangements but the friendship centre definition that is operative with us is not one that includes hostel arrangements.

• 1135

Mr. Stanbury: You are interested in modes of Indian participation in city life other than friendship centres, though, I presume. I am thinking, for instance, of Rochdale College in Toronto which is a form of integration of the Indian friendship centre, if you like—although not exactly a friendship centre—with an institution in the community which is more broadly based.

Mr. Lagassé: Well, yes, I think it is self-evident that once you are engaged in helping with the social and cultural activities of the group, the limit of these activities is dependent primarily on the number of members of that cultural group. I think the B and B Report speaks about this quite clearly, that the amount of functional activities possible in an area depends on the size of the population. So if all of a sudden you have 5000 people of Indian ancestry in Toronto, and if a number of Indians from Toronto and across Canada focus on a particular institution and once they are in decide, in this case, to have an institute of Indian culture, well it is obvious that the group is strong enough to support it and to make it meaningful.

Mr. Stanbury: I thought Mr. Dinsdale might be interested in that institute at Rochdale if he is not aware of it.

Mr. Dinsdale: I know all about it.

Mr. Stanbury: That fitted in with your question; I did not think Mr. Lagassé had mentioned it.

The Chairman: My list now reads: Mr. Matte, Mr. Stewart and Mr. Asselin. Mr. Matte?

[interpretation]

Mr. Matte: Concerning naturalization, when somebody asks to be a Canadian citizen, I wonder if we should not take the following possibility into account? The immigrant in Quebec, the immigrant who comes in Quebec, could we not require him to have a sufficient knowledge of the French language, when he asks to be a Canadian citizen?

Mr. Pelletier: The requirement in all the provinces of Canada, is that the immigrant could we not require him to have a sufficient knowledge of the French language before he becomes a citizen.

Mr. Matte: Yes, this brings us to the Quebec problem. Quebecers are concerned and alarmed by what might happen in a few years because of the decrease of the birth rate and the increased number of immigrants. In a number of years French-speaking Quebecers might not be a majority in their own province. Therefore, it seems to me that taking this situation into account, it would be logical to require a citizen, who wants to settle in Quebec, to have a sufficient knowledge of French.

Mr. Pelletier: I believe this comes under education, and as an educational requirement is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces. The federal government cannot do anything about it. The official position of the federal government is this, there are two official languages, and the applicant wherever he might be, should know one of the two languages, before he gets his citizenship.

Mr. Matte: Now in the St. Leonard case it seems you support the St. Leonard decision, that is to say schooling should be in French at least at the primary level.

Mr. Pelletier: Now if you wish my personal opinion you have got it all wrong. However this is a personal opinion because, as a federal minister I can have no opinion on the provincial handling of education. I am not in agreement with that decision nor with a number of decisions that have been taken in other provinces with respect to the other official language. As far as the federal government is concerned present policy, which cannot, I believe, be other than it is, under the normal definition of a bilingual country, is that, for citizenship purposes, the federal government does not know where immigrants will settle. It has no authority to tell them: you must settle here or there. Therefore there is no federal authority to say which language they should learn. The immigrant must make the decision.

Mr. Matte: Supposing that the new Department of Immigration in Quebec should reach a decision along these lines, would it be supported by the federal government?

Mr. Pelletier: This is a hypothetical question that I will not answer, particularly as you ask me what the attitude of the federal government would be were such a decision taken by a provincial government in its own fields, i.e. schools, education.

Mr. Matte: There is another factor, Mr. Minister, which has to be taken into account. I think Mr. Stanbury has a draft bill on this, in connection with the English vote. Supposing that Quebec should move towards independence, we could thwart this Quebec emancipation either by immigration or by the English vote. From the strategic point of view, a great number of ridings could be won by sending English-speaking citizens into the Quebec townships or constituencies. They might thus unbalance the Quebec electorate. I think Mr. Stanbury's bill thwarts this and it should have been submitted a long time ago. We are probably the only country in the world which tolerates such a situation. Strategically speaking, it would be possible for 100,000 British subjects to settle here, in Quebec and upset the Quebec votes.

Mr. Pelletier: I agree with what Mr. Stanbury said, but what you are mentioning right now, Mr. Chairman, I think this is out of order, because it is not the Citizenship Act that enables British Subjects to vote, but the Elections Act. The Elections Act is no longer under the Department of the Secretary of State.

Mr. De Bané: But this falls within your field of jurisdiction, i.e. citizenship. If I am not mistaken, and I am not an expert in citizenship matters, British subjects have a privileged place in relation to other immigrants to this country.

Mr. Pelletier: This is quite correct. If you mean that they go directly through the Registrar to ask for citizenship, that they pay less than citizens from other countries, you are quite right in this. That depends on us.

Mr. De Bané: And what is your opinion on this, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Mongrain: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I thought we were going to stick to subjects according to our procedure. I wanted to make a supplementary remark concerning language in connection with Mr. Matte's remarks. Now it seems that we are talking about something else. Am I in order?

The Chairman: Yes, I agree, Mr. Mongrain.

Mr. Mongrain: May I make my supplementary remark in connection with the language question?

[English]

The Chairman: I would suggest that those who are interested in this subject attend the meetings of the Committee on Elections and Privileges.

Mr. Pelletier: Excuse me, Mr. Chairman, must clear this up. It is quite correct that in order to obtain citizenship you go to the Minister and not to the court when you are a British subject. But the second injustice has been corrected—through a change in the regulations dating from October 1—as far as expenses are concerned: they pay the same amount.

Mr. De Bané: Nevertheless, in obtaining Canadian citizenship they are in a privileged position compared with other immigrants.

Mr. Pelletier: They have to wait five years like anybody else.

Mr. Matte: They are entitled to vote.

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, but this is under the Elections Act, not the Citizenship Act. They have to wait five years like every body else, but they can apply for citizenship through the Minister, instead of having to appear in court like everyone else.

Mr. De Bané: What does the following inscription in passports mean: "A Canadian citizen is a British subject"? Does this mean one is the same as the other or vice versa?

Mr. Pelletier: This is a section in the Citizenship Act; which states that: "A Canadian citizen is a British subject."

[English]

The Chairman: On a supplementary, Mr. Mongrain?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, my supplementary question concerns what Mr. Matte said as far as the danger of the English language becoming dominant in Quebec with all the consequences this entails.

Mr. Chairman, it is important that someone from Quebec should make a comment on this. For one hundred years we, French-speaking Quebecers, have complained that our fellow citizens who emigrated to other provinces were not entitled to French in schools and public services.

Now that we are beginning to obtain that, I think that it would be most inappropriate and logical for Quebec to impose similar restrictions on English-speaking immigrants. I think there are other means of preventing Quebec from being submerged, if this is what Mr. Matte meant, without having recourse to discriminatory measures about which we have complained over the past century. I understand Mr. Matte's preoccupation, but perhaps there is a legitimate way of solving his problem which would not be discriminatory and of this type of the type which we in Quebec have denounced for over a century. I think it important that this remark be made by a Quebecker.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: I think this comes within the realm of citizenship responsibility. Is this not reciprocal arrangement throughout the Commonwealth, that there are special citizenship privileges that are provided which embrace most of the Commonwealth countries?

Mr. Pelletier: It varies. Certain countries grant the privileges. I understand some others are not granting them any more.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Asselin: A supplementary question. Regarding these privileges given to Commonwealth citizens, does the Minister intend to rectify this situation and give French-speaking citizens the same privileges as Commonwealth citizens?

Mr. Pelletier: I believe that I said here that we were studying amendments to the Citizenship Act and that there would be a White Paper on it. We are trying to put everybody on an equal footing. We do not want to have several categories for people of different origins, be they Italians, French, German, or English. All immigrants should be subjected to the same conditions.

Mr. Asselin: Will this injustice be rectified?

Mr. Pelletier: Certainly. Of course, you must realize that a great deal of inter-ministerial work is necessary. Because, as mentioned a while ago, there is the Elections Act, which grants privileges, and the Immigration Act has to be amended—we are in touch with the Immigration people. At present, our aim is to see to it that everybody be put on the same footing.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to come back, if the Minister will allow me, to a question raised this morning by my colleague to my right concerning the definition of equality.

[English]

The Chairman: This is a new subject?

Mr. Asselin: No, sir, it is about the subject that was raised this morning by my colleague. It is not the same subject, but about the same.

The Chairman: Let us hear it, because we would like to complete this and then if you wish you can come back to it.

Mr. Asselin: Go ahead.

The Chairman: Mr. Matte on the same subject.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Matte: After what Mr. Mongrain said, let us reverse roles. Let us say that in Toronto a French-speaking applicant who knows only French applies to become a Canadian citizen. First of all I doubt if there is a form in French there. I wonder if he will be given Canadian citizenship in Toronto or Vancouver if he speaks only French.

Mr. Pelletier: Yes.

[English]

The Chairman: Have you a question on a new subject. Mr. Stewart?

Mr. Osler: May I just suggest one thing before we change to a new subject, Mr. Chairman?

I think that a lot of the people of Quebec—I am being frivolous now but I know they have a very serious and worrying problem—should take a leaf out of the book of the people of Western Canada who for years, when they got flooded with too many English immigrants, just put a sign up on every store window saying, "No Englishmen need apply" and they did not get jobs and had to move on.

The Chairman: That was really euphemism, sir, that applied only to the Irish.

Mr. Stewart, would you proceed.

Mr. Osler: It is true too; I did my M.A. in that area.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I consider it, and I think most Canadians do, a great privilege to be a Canadian citizen when we look at some of the other countries around the world perhaps it is one of the greatest gifts that people in the world can have but I am afraid that we in Canada have in the past not only not encouraged people to become Canadians but we have discouraged them by the very measures that have been mentioned already. It is true that perhaps the electoral law does not come under the Canadian Citizenship Act, nevertheless it does involve citizenship very closely. This is why I also have a very close interest in this and why I, by means of a private members bill which is identical to Mr. Stanbury's, am insisting that everyone become a Canadian before having the right to present himself in an election. When I was being interviewed on this quite recently the chap—and incidentally he was an Englishman, as is not uncommon in the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—said to me, "Surely you realize that you would have the privilege of running for Parliament in England". I answered, "I do not want to run for Parliament in England and I do not know why anyone who is a Canadian would want to, and I do not know why any Englishman who is not a Canadian would want to run for Parliament in Canada". It seems to me that anyone in this country who is interested enough in its political institutions should want to become a Canadian citizen. I think that our government should take more steps to encourage Canadian citizenship, and also to encourage something else—a feeling of love of country, particularly in our young people. Several things like this come up from time to time and I would say that all these things are examples of colonial subservience that we have to get away from. We have grown up now. We do not have to hold onto the mother's apron strings any longer. I do not know what our Oath of Allegiance, which is administered to new citizens, says—unless it is something similar to what our Boy Scouts and cubs say. My little boy comes home and recites the oath that they learn in Cubs, which says, "I pledge allegiance to God and the Queen" and there is not a word about Canada anywhere in the oath. I am wondering if the same thing exists in our citizenship court. Here is the Oath of Allegiance.

I swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth The Second, her heirs and successors, according to law, and that I will faithfully observe the laws of Canada and fulfil my duties as a Canadian citizen.

• 1155

I wonder if we cannot make that a little more patriotic so that we are pledging allegiance to Canada.

The Chairman: Would you sir, like to make a short speech in reply?

Mr. Pelletier: No, other than just add a footnote that I, since I have been in the Department, have had representations from British immigrants who, since they were never asked to take any Oath of Allegiance in Britain, wondered why they were forced to do this because they immigrated to Canada.

The Chairman: Mr. De Bané.

[Interpretation]

Mr. De Bané: On the same point raised by Mr. Stewart, Mr. Minister, I would like to say that I think your decision to publish a White Paper to place all future citizens on the same footing is a historic landmark. I would like to congratulate you for that for it is one more step towards national identity. I would ask you, in view of the amount of interdepartmental work that this will take, when will this White Paper be published?

Mr. Pelletier: You will understand that my experience in this field is rather limited. I would very much like to see it completed during the present session but I doubt if it will. You understand the process—all the processes: The White Paper has to go through a Cabinet committee, it has to be approved by the Cabinet and then has to come back and you know that our legislative program is quite heavy. We hope it may be possible at the next session.

[English]

The Chairman: I have Mr. Stanbury and Mr. Stewart on supplementaries.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I think that was my preamble, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Stewart, we are just going to have to cut down your preamble.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Well, the preamble is finished.

The Chairman: In the meantime we will recognize Mr. Stanbury and then we will recognize you.

Mr. Stanbury: Mine was a supplementary to Mr. Stewart's so why do we not let him continue and then perhaps it will not be necessary?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I wanted to ask the Minister this question. Although education is a provincial responsibility and citizenship a federal responsibility, do we not have the authority to say in schools that certain things should be done—for example, that the children should be making their Oath of Allegiance in the morning or saluting the flag, or what have you, or would this be considered as interfering in provincial matters?

Mr. Fairweather: Indeed.

Mr. Pelletier: I do think so.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Even though it is citizenship?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, because anything that is taking place in the schools is under provincial jurisdiction. Mind you, I am no specialist of constitutional law but you asked for my opinion and I think that it would definitely be considered an invasion of the provincial area of jurisdiction.

The Chairman: Mr. Stanbury.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, just on a point of information for Mr. Dinsdale and following Mr. Stewart's questions, I have done some research into this myth about reciprocity among Commonwealth countries and the vast majority of Commonwealth countries think we are not reciprocating. Most of them have the usual concept of citizenship, but if it means anything it means the right to vote and to be elected to Parliament, and if we accord people those privileges without them taking the mini-step of paying their $10 or $12 and obtaining citizenship in the country, what on earth does citizenship mean at all? It seems to me that one of the prime elements of any society that aims to be just is to treat people, from wherever they come, the same in a country.

One of the interesting things about introducing a bill like mine, Mr. Chairman, is the bill one gets. I introduced it for the first time three years ago and I am delighted to have the support of two other members who, in this Session, have introduced similar bills. As I said, I have received a lot of mail on this but the typical letter or telephone call in this position usually is to the effect that this is a British colony, not a foreign colony. I think that is the kind of impression our laws have helped to create in this country and that is why so many of our immigrants, whether they come from France, the United States, Italy, Denmark, or elsewhere, feel they have a form of second-class citizenship. There are not very many discriminations but it seems to me that the most serious discrimination is in the electoral law, which in effect undermines can have the main benefits of citizenship the whole concept of citizenship that people without bothering to acquire it.

• 1200

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale on a supplementary.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, as you indicated earlier, this discussion is somewhat out of order.

Mr. Stanbury: You raised the question.

Mr. Dinsdale: I did not raise the question. Someone over there raised it.

The Chairman: Mr. Matte raised it.

Mr. Dinsdale: And it spills over into several areas of responsibility, particularly the Elections Act and also Immigration. I would just like to add the proviso that there is a reciprocation that has become traditional and which is rather highly regarded by certain commonwealth countries, such as Africa and the West Indies, which involves immigration matters. You will recall when Britain tried arbitrarily to remove this reciprocal principle in immigration that it was not very cordially received.

Mr. Stanbury: We are not talking about immigration.

Mr. Dinsdale: But it spills over into this area. This is why the discussion is out of order.

The Chairman: Then I think I will declare it out of order and turn the subject over to Mr. Asselin.

Mr. Stanbury: No, I dispute that, Mr. Chairman. This is citizenship, not immigration.

Mr. De Bané: On a point of order, in discussing your decision, if it is not too late I would like to say...

[Interpretation]

...that citizenship is a fundamental issue as it involves a country's image if this question is out of order, I wonder, as does the minister responsible for citizenship, what question could be more relevant. I feel it is high time that we cut the umbilical cord which makes people feel that there is a part of the population which has privileges not enjoyed by the rest. That is why, I'm anxious to see this White Paper. It would be a landmark in our history. I think Canada is one of the few countries in the world whose citizens do not feel the pride of nationhood, that sense of identity which has nothing to do with nationalism in the narrow sense.

[English]

The Chairman: Yes, but your comments are on what we have before us, which is what the Department of Citizenship is designed to do, but when we get into the area where we are dealing with the Elections Act and the Immigration Act, then it seems to me that we are shading over.

Mr. De Bané: No, no, I was discussing the White Paper.

The Chairman: That is right. This is perfectly legitimate.

Mr. De Bané: According to what I have heard, the White Paper is going to be based on the principle that everybody entering Canada will become a full member of the country under the same conditions. I cannot understand why the hon. Mr. Dinsdale says that this is out of order.

Mr. Dinsdale: The Chairman said it was out of order. I was quoting the Chairman.

Mr. De Bané: He has just said that in that aspect it is in order.

Mr. Dinsdale: I agree with that.

Mr. Fairweather: Let us go on, please.

The Chairman: Further comments on the item before us on Item 5. Mr. Asselin.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Asselin: The question raised by my colleague has, I think, been answered by the Minister. The injustices in the present legislation will be amended in his White Paper. He is suggesting the legislation be amended. I would ask the member to be patient till we have studied the White paper. I think the Chairman's decision is quite in order. We should come back to the matter under discussion.

• 1205

I would like to return, Mr. Chairman, to the question raised by the member for Brandon-Souris with regard to cultural equalization. The minister has put forward an important principle. The Minister will admit that the definition of culture is far from easy when we attempt to demarcate federal and provincial jurisdiction and competence. Does the minister intend to elaborate on his statement of principle? We find ourselves on very difficult terrain. If he intends to consult the provinces in regard to working out a program, whether in thinking of cultural equalization, there are priorities he would like to see adopted as soon as possible.

The Minister mentioned this morning that the CBC might be the tool that would encourage cultural equalization. I agree with him, and I think the first priority the minister should have in mind in regard to the CBC is that the network be extended into areas the CBC does not serve. If we agree that the CBC is an excellent means of disseminating culture, I would like to find out, from the Minister, if his department has set priorities in regard to cultural equalization. Is he going to ask the provinces to discuss a problem as important as this is because if culture is considered as coming under education and education is under provincial jurisdiction then, the minister might contradict me on this, it seems to me we should have a proper definition of culture, and culture is difficult to define.

Does he have priorities in regard to cultural equalization, does he feel the first priority is to convince the CBC to extend its network into areas where the CBC is neither heard nor seen?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Chairman, as the member is probably aware, the Minister has no authority over the CBC, the CRTC holds the authority. I think if Mr. Asselin studies the decisions of the CRTC in the Maritimes, he will see that the trend is that which he feels advisable. The CBC wanted to provide a second English language service before completing its French language service; the Commission decided the CBC should complete its French language service before establishing a second English language service. As to the priorities I might have in mind in regard to cultural policies, the only priority that is now clearly formulated is to ensure greatest possible accessibility, not only the best access to all Canadians but to Canadians of every social class.

As to the definition of culture I do not think we should undertake this discussion when considering the estimates of the Secretary of State Department at this time. I feel that the definition which most people will agree to is that culture begins where school or formal education comes to an end, and that is how we see it. I am not sure this definition is an exact one. I do not know any perfect definition, but rather than a definition it is a hypothesis and, I think, it is generally accepted.

Mr. Asselin: The Minister will agree with me—and I am not trying to launch an argument—that culture is an extension of education and education, as he admitted a while ago, is a matter of exclusive provincial jurisdiction. So does the Minister, in his plans to achieve cultural equalization, intend to consult the provinces, has he a program to submit?

Mr. Pelletier: I think I clearly stated that setting up cultural institutions particularly amongst the people, and that is our first priority, cannot be the responsibility of any one level of government. In a field as important as this, every level of government must work together and this means planning and preliminary consultation.

Mr. Asselin: Is the Minister going to develop this idea in a White Paper to be tabled in the House?

Mr. Pelletier: No, we have not thought of this yet. I would say we are now in the exploratory stages. Perhaps, yes, perhaps, no. It will depend on what our survey of the question reveals.

[English]

The Chairman: Mr. DeBané on a supplementary.

[Interpretation]

Mr. De Bané: On this point raised by my colleague about the CBC which is a very powerful instrument in the transmission of culture, I would like to ask whether it would be possible to study the following problem: the distribution of the CBC fund. I feel that the funds of the CBC are distributed according to the population, i.e., one-third French-speaking, two-thirds English-speaking, more or less.

Mr. Mongrain: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

29136—2

[English]

The Chairman: I prefer to hear the question before making a ruling.

[Interpretation]

Mr. De Bané: The problem is as follows: Radio-Canada, the French network of the CBC, is the most important centre for creative, original work, whereas the English network, because of our geographic position, can easily link up with networks across the border. Tonight, with the U.S. elections, we have an eloquent illustration of what I mean. The French network must be able to conduct the program by itself, whereas the English network will simply be connected into U.S. networks.

I have discussed this matter frequently with CBC employees of the French language network and they explained to me how this distribution of work is absurd because they have more work to do, and incur a good deal more expenses because they have to work in French in an English-speaking environment. Could you not look into this matter?

Mr. Pelletier: It is a problem which concerns us. In so far as the Committee is concerned, the question should be raised by the members.

Mr. De Bané: Yes but...

Mr. Pelletier: When the CBC is called before the Committee I can make representations on this subject, and these are questions which we discuss at our meetings with the CBC authorities, but I think that at the Committee working level, it is a fact that it is the Committee which enables members to question the CBC directly. The CBC is a relatively autonomous Crown Corporation. You shall also meet the CRTC to whom you will be able to make the same representation directly.

[English]

The Chairman: The CBC can be considered to be duly warned.

Are there any further questions on the Citizenship Estimates?

Mr. Matte?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Matte: I come back to this other question. The taking of the Oath of Allegiance to the Queen, does this come under your Department?

Mr. Pelletier: Citizenship, yes.

Mr. Matte: I am under the impression that this taking of the Oath of Allegiance is not democratic in this sense that, if you take for instance the citizens from Champlain in my riding, they would be quite opposed to the Queen. According to my oath, I should have to put the interest to the Queen first rather than the interest to the citizens of my riding and that is quite absurd.

Mr. Pelletier: I have no reply to give, Mr. Chairman, because this is not a question.

Mr. Matte: To put it in other words, could we not consider the possibility of removing this Oath of Allegiance?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, this is a possibility.

[English]

The Chairman: Shall Item 5, Citizenship, carry?

Item agreed to.

We now go to the last open item apart from Item 1. That is Item 2, Construction or Acquisition of Buildings, Works, Land and Equipment for the National Arts Centre.

• 1215

As you know, this is the only capital works estimate, to my knowledge, which is carried under a department other than that of Public Works, and I should say at this time that those of us who did take the tour of the Arts Centre found it most enjoyable and very educational. Some of us were a bit overwhelmed by what we found there, because some of the vastness of the building does not show up looking at it from the outside.

Are there any questions on this particular item?

We will have officials of the Department of Public Works here on Thursday at 3.30, with the permission of the House of Commons, and we will be meeting at that time in Room 371, West Block.

Mr. Mongrain: May I raise a point before we adjourn?

The Chairman: Yes.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, this is a question of privilege. I wanted to tell the Minister who is more used to hearing criticism than praise, that his appearance on the Sunday evening television program "Deux plus un" was highly appreciated by a great number of constituents in my riding whom I met yesterday. I want to extend my congratulations to him on behalf of my constituents.

Mr. Pelletier: Thank you, very much, Mr. Mongrain.

Mr. Mongrain: That is why I waited to the end of this hearing this morning.

[English]

The Chairman: Are there any questions on this?

Mr. Osler:

[Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: Could I ask the Minister to retract his statement?

[English]

I do not feel that I am out of order.

The Chairman: I did not rule you out of order.

Mr. Pelletier: My rulings have no authority here.

The Chairman: Mr. Pelletier has since moved up to better things.

Mr. Osler, on Item 2.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, I would like to have clarified exactly what this item entails compared with the item that we will be considering as presented by the Department of Public Works.

The Chairman: The Department of Public Works will be appearing under this particular item.

Mr. Dinsdale: Does that mean we will probably leave it open?

The Chairman: We will leave it open for the Department of Public Works. The reason for my calling it at this time is in case there are members with questions that they may wish to ask the Minister who, in this particular, exceptional instance, has the primary responsibility because the estimate is under his Department. It is only fair, under those circumstances, to give him an opportunity to say what he wants to say and to give you an opportunity to question him before we move on.

Mr. De Bané:

[Interpretation]

Mr. De Bané: Why does the construction of this building come under your jurisdiction?

Mr. Pelletier: The construction itself comes under Public Works. The Secretary of State does not build. The Secretary of State is not the proprietor of the building either. The Secretary of State is only the spokesman in Parliament for this National Arts Centre which is another institution tied in with the Secretary of State Department.

Mr. De Bané: Was the drawing up of the plans also under the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works?

Mr. Pelletier: The drawing up of the plans was the work of a Committee. This Committee was especially created to that end, and communications between Public Works and his Committee, if I understand it correctly, was through the Secretary of State which was only, as it were, the channel.

Mr. De Bané: The allocation of contracts came under Public Works then?

Mr. Pelletier: Right.

Mr. De Bané: The direct administration of the building, of janitors and all the rest, will that come under your Department or Public Works?

Mr. Pelletier: If you speak to me of the janitors, you embarrass me slightly.

The operational budget is the responsibility of the National Arts Centre corporation and we have certain responsibilities towards this corporation, without having the direct authority we may have over others. But, regarding maintenance of the building, I cannot reply to that question. I do not know whether there is someone here who can handle it. I do not now whether there is any decision yet. The building has not yet been finished.

[English]

The Chairman: Mr. Rose.

1220

Mr. Rose: Last night, Mr. Chairman, when the Minister of Public Works was before us, we were told that the National Arts Centre was not a subject for discussion during the estimates of the Minister of Public Works, that they have intruded here as we see them before us. We now hear from the Secretary of State, or, perhaps it would be more accurate to say from the Chairman, that we are going to be entertaining representatives of the Department of Public Works on Thursday and that it would, therefore be more pertinent to address our questions at that time.

Do I understand that this is to be left open...

The Chairman: That is right.

Mr. Rose: ...and that there will be no question called on Vote 2 until then?

The Chairman: That is correct.

Mr. Rose: Perhaps I could ask of the Minister a question arising out of one put earlier in the sense that it is a supplementary. How much autonomy does the Board responsible for the National Arts Centre have in regard to the operation of this whole building?

Mr. Pelletier: It reports to Parliament through the Secretary of State, and I have the authority to approve certain by-laws that they make. But beyond that the Minister has no direct authority on the operations.

Mr. Rose: Therefore, the operations and policy decisions under which they will operate are completely up to the corporation that is responsible for this centre. A policy in regard to whether it is an impresario role or whether it will be an internal impresario role, or one in which a private impresario may be invited to put on programs, is a decision for them and them alone?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, and not for the Minister.

Mr. Rose: Well, how much influence can this Committee then have on this matter, other than bringing it before the public?

Mr. Pelletier: I would say that this Committee can have the same authority it has over the other bodies that are set up in the same fashion.

Mr. Rose: We can talk about it then, Sir?

Mr. Pelletier: Roughly.

Mr. Mongrain: We can cut the budget if we want.

Mr. Pelletier: That is right.

Mr. Rose: I would like to make one further point because I am a little concerned. This has already been reported, but I would like to hear the Minister's reaction to it. There perhaps might be an impresario role internally within the National Arts Centre for the kinds of programs that might not be particularly financially profitable, and there may on the other hand be some pressure for those popular and therefore more financially advanced.

tageous performances or groups or programs to be farmed out.

The Chairman: You may be interested to know, Mr. Rose, that there is a rumour going around that the National Arts Centre is negotiating to bring Marlene Dietrich some time in June to the National Arts Centre.

Mr. Rose: I do not think, Mr. Chairman, you have a leg to stand on.

The Chairman: Hers are much better looking than mine. Mr. Pelletier?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, I think it is up to the Board although the general idea is that the National Arts Centre is not to be in the same role as, for instance, the authorities over "Place des Arts" in Montreal. "Place des Arts" is a kind of scheme by which they own facilities for the performing arts, and they rent to whatever impresario they have confidence in. This is a different proposition because they have an operational budget, although they also are free to welcome other performances by arrangement with various impresarios.

• 1225

Mr. Rose: I think this is a policy that we might well consider here and I am certain that perhaps they have been giving consideration to this. I feel too that there are particular impresario skills that are held privately—or possessed by a private impresario—that might not be perhaps at the disposal of or internally employed by the National Arts Centre. Nevertheless, since we are to anticipate that this building is to have a substantial subsidy, between $2 million and $3 million for the performing arts for a year, it seems essential that we make certain that the things that are financially successful should not be ignored by this particular corporation?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, and I should add to the remark I made that the Board is in constant contact with the Department and they inform us of all their intentions and generally discuss them with us. That is the type of relation that exist.

The Chairman: I have supplementary questions by Mr. Schreyer, Mr. McCleave and Mr. Stewart.

Mr. Schreyer?

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, according to your advice, most questions having to do with construction costs can be left until Thursday.

The Chairman: You can ask them of the Minister if you want.

Mr. Schreyer: I just wanted to say that there is one question, or perhaps two, that would be better asked now of the Secretary of State. Because this item comes under his Department, and not Public Works, I take it that it was the Secretary of State who had to in the end, approve each revision in capital cost estimates and not the Minister of Public Works. Is that correct? Either you or your predecessor in office?

Mr. Pelletier: I do not think it is. Treasury Board had to approve all capital cost increases.

Mr. Schreyer: Let me ask this. On how many separate occasions was the Minister and Treasury Board asked to approve a revision in cost estimates—four, five, six, ten?

Mr. Pelletier: Roughly four or five times.

Mr. Schreyer: Four or five times. Taking four or five times, an increase of about $30 million to $35 million, one assumes that each time there was a request for cost estimate revision it must have been in the order of $2 million or $6 million, or at least it averaged out that way?

Mr. Pelletier: Maybe some times more maybe some times less, surely. I do not think it would work in this kind of average, from what I know of it, for instance, when the whole complex was changed and it was decided that there should be parking space underneath. It might have been more than what you said. On the other hand, I was not there yet, but I was personally told of a change about creating a silence zone where you would not hear the air conditioning system. This might have been $300,000 or $400,000. So I do not think that you can just divide by the number of times and rely on the average that you obtain.

Mr. Schreyer: I was just approaching this in very approximate terms. Finally, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if it would be possible for the Minister and his officials to provide the Committee with a statement showing the timing and the amounts involved with each major revision in cost estimates. We are told already, and this much we know, that approximately five or six times there was a major cost estimate revision. Could we be supplied with some kind of a paper showing the timing and the amount involved in each case, and for what major purpose such revision was approved?

Mr. Pelletier: I will be happy to inquire about that, whether we have this kind of information in the records of the Department. I am sure though that Public Works have them, and that you can get them from them when they appear before the Committee, but I will look into our files.

Mr. Schreyer: Either way would be fine.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary on this point. Was it the Secretary of State or the Minister of Public Works who presented the estimate revisions to the Treasury Board?

Mr. Pelletier: Public Works.

Mr. Dinsdale: So I presume we will be able to pursue this particular subject with Public Works, or maybe the Public Accounts Committee is the vehicle?

• 1230

The Chairman: Public Accounts, I believe, is looking for malfeasance. Mr. McCleave?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the Minister if the board of this centre will present its operating budget annually to him before it goes to Treasury Board, and in what way are ceilings, perhaps, set on the sums that we would be asked to appropriate for the board?

Mr. Pelletier: The budget is sent to the Minister and it has to go through the normal process of cabinet committee, Treasury Board, cabinet and presentation to Parliament.

Mr. McCleave: I take it this is the same as the other parts of your empire, Mr. Minister, such as the CBC?

The Chairman: Mr. Stewart and then Mr. LeBane.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Regarding the authority of the Minister, I wonder, for example, when the initial decision was made to accept the project in principle—the cabinet made a decision to accept it in principle—and they laid down certain uses that the centre was to be put to, would this not constitute a certain degree of continuing authority? For example, if it was stated in that original document that there could be a great deal of local involvement or that there should be no impresario role, or various things like that, would you not say that this would come under your jurisdiction? In the event that is not being followed would the Minister be able to intervene in that case?

Mr. Pelletier: Of course. If the corporation goes beyond its powers of decision the Minister not only can but must intervene. This is his duty.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): The reason I ask that, Mr. Minister, is because I have the impression that the initial document of cabinet decision outlines the uses in general. I asked for a copy of this but the Privy Council people did not see fit to allow me to have one. I think that sort of thing should be available to the Committee. As to the question of documents, I also asked Treasury Board for a copy of a document which was prepared for them in order to make a comparison between salaries paid to officers of the Arts Centre as compared with a similar job in the Place des Arts. I understand that the differences are quite considerable. This is another document which no one seems to be able to find and I wonder if perhaps you might be able to intervene in this regard. This Committee should have documents such as that before them.

The Chairman: Mr. Minister, we made a request of Mr. Southam for a breakdown of the current operating salaries and Mr. Southam made a commitment to provide us with this document. It was for that reason that I did not call the vote on Item No. 50, which is the operation of the National Arts Centre, and I propose to hold off until we receive this document from Mr. Southam.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): This is a different document, though. This is the comparative document that was done as a special study, which compares Place des Arts with the National Arts Centre, which I think is a very important and significant document.

Mr. Pelletier: Did you say that there is a document in existence which compares both?

• 1235

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Yes.

Mr. Pelletier: I do not know of the existence of this document.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I have asked Treasury Board if they would make this document available to us and they still have not—

Mr. Pelletier: I suppose they might have some difficulties. If it is not a document that is published by Place des Arts I suppose you would have to get their consent on whether they want it to be published through this channel or not. I do not know of the existence of the document. I might enquire about that if you wish, but you can see that the Place des Arts is a different corporation and it might not want its salaries to be published. We would not have any authority to do it if such were the case, but I can enquire about it.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Thank you.

The Chairman: Mr. De Bané and then Mr. Osler.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that we will not have the advantage of having the Minister back with us in the near future, may I ask him a question about the general pattern of his Department?

The Chairman: We did not call Item No. 1. After we finish the questions on this I will recognize you on a new subject.

Mr. De Bané: Thank you.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler?

Mr. Osler: This is rather oblique, I think, when we consider that we are under Item No. 2, which is construction of buildings, and so on. However, it relates to the construction of the building although it flows into operating costs. Do the National Arts Centre have to amortize their building, and if so do you have any idea under what terms?

Mr. Pelletier: There is no amortization and the maintenance will be part of the operational budget.

Mr. Osler: Thank you. Corporations such as the CBC, for instance, have to amortize their buildings out of the capital funds that are available to them. I think the operations are taken over for either 20 or 25 years and written off in that time, and they have to charge interest at the rate at which they would normally be borrowing funds from the government. It struck me in a very, very rough calculation that the amortization of this building is going to be more than the budget they are asking for; it will be somewhere around $3 million or $3.2 million a year if they have the same terms as the CBC had, for instance, which I presume is government policy on these sorts of things. I wonder if anybody is going to have to take amortization into account in the cost of this building, because that is one hell of a price right there.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler, I think perhaps if the Minister cannot answer you could put that question to Public Works and, given the question which Mr. Schreyer asked, it might be necessary for us to seek a witness from Treasury Board to go into some of the other details that were opened up by Mr. Schreyer's questions.

Mr. Osler: Yes, this is it. Do you write off a building like that?

The Chairman: I would think Public Works would be able to reply to that. Do you have any further questions? Mr. Schreyer?

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, before you go on to questions of the general operation of the department of the Secretary of State, there is a very specific although perhaps minor question that I would like information on. What has been the public cost of auditioning for the orchestra to date, and in specific terms the cost of the auditioning that has been done outside the country? I think Mr. Stewart has mentioned this matter but I do not know if he has asked for cost figures.

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Stewart did ask for those figures.

Mr. Schreyer: Cost figures?

The Chairman: Yes, and he was told that there had been no auditions outside the country as yet and they hoped they would not have to go outside the country. They hoped they would be able to complete their auditioning and hiring within Canada. However, if it was necessary to do so they would.

Mr. Schreyer: Thank you.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, a supplementary question.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: I think there has been travelling outside the country, as we discovered during the questioning. I understood that we were going to have a breakdown of these items in the more detailed budget presentations...

The Chairman: That is correct.

Mr. Dinsdale: ... that we requested of Mr. Southam, and I trust that that will be available shortly.

• 1240

The Chairman: That is correct. As I say, that is why I have not called Item No. 50 yet because he did make commitments for further information and I felt we could hold the vote open because we might want to discuss them later.

Before giving Mr. De Bané the floor I would like to ask if it would be possible to have a meeting of the Committee on Agenda and Procedure in my office at 2 o'clock today to discuss hearing further witnesses after we complete Public Works. Would that be agreeable to you, Mr. Mongrain?

Mr. Mongrain: Would you give me five minutes beyond that, because I have an appointment at 2 o'clock?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: If you allow me to get away early now, I can be at the agenda meeting at 2 p.m. Will the Secretary of State be with us next Thursday morning? Oh, we are not meeting.

The Chairman: No. We are meeting in the afternoon. This will conclude the Minister's testimony. Then we have the National Library, Public Archives, and the Museums Corporations to hear from. I think they will be able to appear on their own as sort of semi-autonomous departments within the Minister's empire.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Chairman, in conjunction with Public Works are we going to have the Chief Architect?

The Chairman: This is something that we can discuss at the agenda meeting. I spoke to him about it and he has said he would be quite willing to appear.

Mr. Mongrain: You have my request to have that meeting of the steering committee at five past two?

The Chairman: That is correct.

We will now move on to Item 1, which is the departmental administration.

Interpretation]

Mr. DeBané: Mr. Minister, if I understand the organization of your Department, several corporations are under your jurisdiction and more or less under your control. I would like to ask the following question. Do you think that it would be a good thing for the Secretary of State to have more control over certain Crown corporations? As far as I am concerned I think it is essential for the Minister to have a real control of these Crown corporations. I remember your comments when the Government had contracted with private concern for the building of a bridge and I remember that the Prime Minister had made a statement about "putting more politics into politics". Do you think now that the Secretary of State should have more control than it presently has over the various Crown corporations? How do you feel about this? In the case of certain corporations.

Mr. Pelletier: I would resist any attempt to give the Minister more authority than he now has. I have worked on the preparation of the new Broadcasting Act. I thought then, that the corporations should be as independent as possible of the executive, that is to say, from the Minister. That we should have very well placed authority, that is, to say, the Canadian Broadcasting Commission to avoid very delicate questions such as freedom of expression or thought falling under the authority of someone in government.

For an institution such as CBC I think it is quite clear I do not want any more control and I would resist any more control, any attempt to give more authority or control to the Minister. I still think this way. As to the other institution, I think the same applies to Canada Council. This is highly specialized work. Most of the decisions taken by the Arts Council could have unpleasant political implications, and could involve party politics, even and it would be most embarrassing for the Minister to have to justify personally all scholarships that are given or any grants made to particular groups or he might have to explain to the House of Commons why the Arts Council has given a grant to a highly unsuccessful theatre company. It would be an impossible situation.

I would say that in other fields and I will not quote them for the following reason—I do not want to pass any judgment before these institutions have operated independently for at least one year, to see in what position the Minister finds himself in relation to the degrees of power he might have. After having seen them operate for a year I might change my opinion and I might then think more authority is necessary in general, in spite of the difficulties, as the Secretary of State has to play the role of a diplomat rather than that of a Minister. He has to deal with all the management of these institutions and so in spite of the difficulties I think that the matters within the general ambit the Secretary of State are nearly all of such a nature that institutional autonomy is necessary. This is my general point of view now. Perhaps within a year after seeing the operation, I might change my mind. But, Mr. Minister, I think from the practical point of view there is a sort of irresponsibility which occurs because it is impossible to say who is responsible for a given decision. I quite agree with you that in certain fields it would be indecent to bring party politics in, openly or otherwise, but on the other hand, as a generally one might say that modern governments are becoming more and more complex and it becomes impossible to say who is responsible for a decision, and perhaps there is an erosion of the democratic process by some of the mandarins. I believe that these commissions will never have to make critical decisions like politicians and I am sure they know that if they do not satisfy the wishes of the population they will not be elected at next election. But if you have only nominal control over these bodies if you are only their representative in the House, it might be difficult to detect or remedy some situations. I'm only referring to the Secretary of State, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Pelletier: I think this is true, of course, but I can speak only for my own department. As far as cultural matters are concerned, the budgetary control on the one hand and the power to appoint personnel is a democratic control. It is the Governor in Council who appoints most of the directors of these institutions and, of course, Parliament is always entitled to reduce grants to $1 which is tantamount to a non-confidence motion in the institution concerned. The government can also make its feelings felt through its staff appointments and—the way it presents the budget. For the time being, and as far as the subjects under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State are concerned, I think this policy is a sound one but you are thinking of a situation where the management of such a cultural institution might do something detrimental to the public interests that it could create a scandal or an injustice on a national scale for which they would be answerable to no-one. I do not believe such a flagrant case has ever occurred. I do not believe it is even possible in the present context. Now, if you are referring to other types of cultural matters I might have a very different attitude of course.

Mr. Mongrain: A supplementary question. I share the Minister's general opinion on this matter because the field of arts is such a fluid subject that if the Minister had all the authority suggested by our colleague. The Minister might not like modern art or he might not like jazz music. He could say "Well I do not want this, this is not proper or decent and with each change of minister there would be a change in policy. There are cases that surprise us, and here I concur with Mr. De Bané and would like to mention this case. I know most of my colleagues have it in mind. The case of the CBC and the treatment given to our separatist friends in Quebec. They get preferential treatment. I think we are all concerned about this at this Committee and we are wondering whether an inquiry should not be made into this, and whether there should not be a veto in such cases which could be given to the Minister, or to the Cabinet, or Parliament, because I think this is a fundamental question. A state of incorporation as the CBC has to give news and I understand that, but if a parliamentary majority feels that preferential treatment is being given to people who are systematically trying to tear down Confederation well then I do not understand it.

Mr. Pelletier: Well the problem Mr. Mongrain is one for the management of the CBC and the management as I said the other day in the House in answer to a question is very much aware of this program and is dealing with the matter very actively. However, I would like to emphasize that in any broadcasting media this problem is always very delicate. For instance if you are the editor of a daily paper, it is of course not the women's page or recreation pages which are going to give you headaches. Because, the mass media has to work very quickly, sometimes about 100 value judgments have to be made in preparing a paper and they cannot do everything at the same time. They have to have a certain balance. Some of judgments such as the one you have just referred to are some less so—made without the person realizing. We do not want to seem mysterious, but I mean, you cannot say that in each 15 minute series you are going to give equal place to all trends. That obviously would be absurd. So you have to balance this over a period of one week, two weeks, perhaps a month. If you take political conventions into account it may often be over a year, but not always. There is a problem and we are aware of this problem and CBC management is working on it, but as to many of the judgments passed, they are passed on the basis of what we have just heard, perhaps tomorrow morning another program will be quite contradictory. For instance, we receive an invitation to participate in programs to give the Government's point of view and the Minister concerned cannot go because he has other commitments elsewhere. None of his colleagues can represent him because the matter is too specialized and nobody wants to stick his neck out on something he is unsure of. The representative of the Opposition might be there and the issue may be a political one on any level, municipal, provincial or federal. Well the opposition representative is available and he goes on that day and he speaks. I hear only him and I say, "Well how come"? But perhaps the next day we will be able to balance the matter. This problem always exists in broadcasting and it is very difficult to solve.

So much for that. Now there are some gross abuses which have to disappear, and not only from CBC, but also the private stations. Of course, we are less likely to criticize the latter because they do not operate with the taxpayer's money although tax-payers money goes into the advertising of the products they buy. But so far the CRTC, under its old name of the BBG, the management of the CBC, did not have the machinery to follow this through, you need a special institution to do this. If you were to listen to the complaints made against stations in any Canadian city there would be a hate campaign all day long. You cannot act unless you have the means to give someone to listen over a long period to see if the abuse complained of is only an accident or is a regular occurrence or is balanced by something else. The BBG did not have the resources to make this judgement but the CRTC has. We are probably going to see a lot of changes in all the broadcasting fields when the CRTC provides the instruments for more efficient action in this matter. I need only mention that there is new management in the CBC. It has been in control now for only six months. This is a very delicate problem, a very important problem and difficult to settle. We must realise this.

Mr. Mongrain: I have two questions which have no relation to this. The fact is that an important group of members of the House of Commons called the attention of the CRTC to the special treatment given to separatists. Has the CRTC the authority to do something about it, have an inquiry made, make recommendations to the management?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes.

Mr. Mongrain: Another question, could you assure this Committee that the deliberations of CRTC are held in such a manner that members that are not bilingual have simultaneous interpretation provided. So that they can deal with their colleagues as equals?

Mr. Pelletier: No. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. Mongrain: I am posing this question because I believe there is a unilingual policy.

Mr. Pelletier: Is this so?

Mr. Mongrain: They are at least one or two persons who have to take intensive English courses to be able to follow their proceedings. I would like to suggest that they should have the same privileges as everybody else.

Mr. Pelletier: I do not know whether the CRTC are to appear here but I will make the necessary representations.

Mr. Mongrain: They have not come yet.

Mr. Pelletier: The time for members to make direct representations would be when they are called as witnesses.

[English]

The Chairman: Are there any further questions to be directed to the Minister? Yes, Mr. Osler.

Mr. Osler: Perhaps I should not open another can of worms, but in connection with Mr. Mongrain's line of questioning regarding separatists—and I would suggest there are other elements in broadcasting that to my mind are just as worthy of consideration as the separatist element—the board of the CBC with its legal advisers spent a long, long, long time trying to formulate some kind of approach that would be just and yet would do what you are suggesting and it is a terribly, terribly difficult subject. I wonder if Mr. Pelletier has any fresh ideas on the subject.

• 1300

We touched on this same thing the other day when we were talking about the man who had got a Canada Council scholarship to go somewhere and their answer was: "Well, he may have been a separatist but his scholarship does not relate to separatism and it would be a very difficult thing to go into that."

The same thing applies to this problem of broadcasting. What do you define as illegal or disloyal? Just because a man may be a separatist, do you have to be able to prove that his separatism is showing consistently on the machine? Otherwise he has a perfect right to be a separatist or a communist or anything else. Neither of those parties is illegal.

Mr. Pelletier: I was guided, as a newspaperman—and I think I should take the same guidance if I were in the broadcasting system—by an editor who used to say: "If you want to have a reporter without any personal ideas or prejudices you can get him but he will be an idiot."

What you need is a man who has prejudices, who has personal opinions, strong opinions, if he wants to have them that way, but who knows them and keeps them in check. This is the whole problem of information in that media diffusion. It is really this, and it is the definition of objectivity, of honesty in information, and it is known here in radio and TV that it is even more difficult, because you have more time to check into a reporting job when you are in the written press than in radio.

Mr. Osler: They can do it with a camera. A camera by itself can say everything that needs to be said on some occasions. It does not have to be something that can be checked by looking at the script.

Mr. Pelletier: And sometimes it can be very dangerous because when you read something in the written press you can always have in the back of your mind: "Well, this is the chap called so-and-so who wrote this, and he has his prejudices." But very few people are conscious that they can be shown a piece of film which is blatantly dishonest and not realize it.

The Chairman: And it is the same way with tapes.

Mr. Pelletier: It is the same way with tapes.

Mr. Osler: Sure.

An hon. Member: Cut, cut.

The Chairman: That is right.

[Interpretation]

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Minister I wanted to tell you that, so far as I am concerned, I would be more inclined to think that the Minister should always have a preponderant voice in the matter of a Commission decision. And it will be up to him to justify his position if he has to go against the decision of the Commission. I do not think there is any other way of assuming ministerial responsibility.

The Minister says: "I have no authority." Well, I would rather see stipulations in the Act whereby the Minister would always be in the position to reverse a decision, and if he goes against public interest, well, he will be responsible to the people. I feel ill at ease with this system. I have in mind, for instance, the National Arts Centre where obviously, the Government has abandoned part of its sovereignty to another Commission.

On the other hand things are becoming more and more difficult, since the system is becoming more complex you see who is the responsible person, because we are increasingly relinquishing our responsibilities to a Commission. So democracy—i.e. government by the people—is becoming more and more difficult.

Mr. Pelletier: When you talk about the National Arts Centre, you may also be raising a most debatable point. I might share this opinion with you but—

Mr. De Bané: Well, it is a bad example, but in principle—

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, but how about the rest? For instance, radio and television. I do not agree with you, having lived in countries where a Minister has full authority and where television is used to manipulate public opinion, and having also lived in a country where the written press has lost, and is losing more and more influence. This almost constitutes an instrument of violence. One might say that opinion has been outraged.

• 1305

Mr. De Bané: I agree, as you do, that if a Minister wants to decide himself what is going to appear on television, etc.—all the time, that would be dictatorship. However, I think that if there was a proviso in each Crown Corporation statute saying that the Minister can at any given time change—Of course, any decisions he changes will have to be made public. We shall soon know whether we are dealing with a dictator. But basically, I am concerned by the failure of public men to—

[English]

The Chairman: I would suggest, Mr. De Bané, that you attempt to get on the new committee that is going to be set up to investigate these types of instruments of government; they will be going into this in some detail. I think you could follow it up more properly in that committee than in this one.

Mr. De Bané: I think I am on that committee.

The Chairman: If there are no more questions of the Minister I would like to thank him and his officials for appearing. Perhaps we will have you back early next year when we have the new section of estimates. So thank you, and this meeting now stands adjourned.

Mr. Pelletier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

THURSDAY, November 7, 1968.

(8)

The Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts met this day at 3.45 p.m. The Chairman, Mr. John M. Reid, presided.

Members present: Messrs. Corbin, De Bané, Dinsdale, Givens, Guilbault, La Salle, McCleave, McGrath, Osler, Reid, Schreyer, Schumacher, Stanbury—(13).

Members also present: Messrs. Comeau and Hales.

In attendance: From the Department of Public Works: Mr. G. B. Williams, Senior Assistant Deputy Minister; Mr. R. F. West, Chief of Design & Construction, Capital Region; Mr. H. G. Cole, Project Architect; Mr. K. Bonnell, Project Control Supervisor, Capital Region.

Also in attendance: Mr. F. Lebensold, Consulting Architect.

The Chairman thanked the officials and staff of the Committees and Transcription Branches for expediting the printing of the proceedings of the Committee, including the bilingual issues.

The Chairman advised the Committee of the schedule of witnesses until November 28, (See Evidence).

The Committee resumed consideration of the Revised Estimates 1968-69 of the Department of the Secretary of State.

On Item 2, Construction or Acquisition of Buildings, Works, Land and Equipment, National Arts Centre, the Chairman called Mr. Williams.

Mr. Williams, after introducing Messrs. Cole and Lebensold made a statement relating to the development of the National Arts Centre and explained the role of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Williams was examined on his statement, assisted by Mr. Lebensold.

On motion of Mr. Schumacher, seconded by Mr. De Bané,

*It was agreed,—*That a document showing additional cost due to change in site from St. Patrick Street to Confederation Square, be printed as an Appendix to the proceedings of this day. (See Appendix "C").

It was agreed that a chart indicating outline of new underground parking garage and former traffic lanes be printed as an Appendix to the proceedings of this day. (See Appendix "D").

The examination of the witnesses still continuing at 6:15 p.m., the Committee adjourned until 11:00 a.m. on Tuesday, November 12.

M. Slack,
Clerk of the Committee.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Thursday, November 7, 1968

• 1544

The Chairman: Gentlemen, we can now begin.

First of all, on behalf of the Committee I wish to thank the officials and staff of the Committees Branch for expediting the printing of the Committee's minutes and particularly for the work they have done in producing for us the new bilingual edition. The two gentlemen responsible are Mr. Rogers and Mr. Belzile of the transcribing staff.

Secondly, the Sub-Committee on Agenda and Procedure met and worked out a tentative schedule. On November 12, if necessary, the officials from the Department of Public Works could return, probably in the morning. November 14, we left open. We thought we might want Public Works back again if we still had questions; or Treasury Board; or we could do the Museums Corporations, depending on the wishes of the Members. We again left November 19 open for Treasury Board; and on November 21 we could take the National Film Board and the Canadian Film Development Corporation together and on November 28, the Canadian Radio and Television Commission.

This, of course, would depend on these people being available. It is subject to change on that basis. We still have the Library and the Public Archives to work in somewhere, and the CBC, if possible.

• 1545

Today we have with us Mr. G. B. Williams, the Senior Assistant Deputy Minister of the Department of Public Works. Sitting next to him is Mr. Cole, who is the Project Design Architect, and sitting next to him is Mr. Lebensold, who is the Consulting Architect.

I understand Mr. Williams has a statement and I will turn the floor over to him.

Mr. G. B. Williams (Senior Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Public Works): Mr. Chairman and gentlemen. First of all, I wish to express the apologies of Mr. Lucien Lalonde, the Deputy Minister. He has been ill for a couple of weeks. He has been in and out of his office, but today he just could not make it. I am acting on his behalf. He may well be with you if there is a further meeting.

The Department of Public Works is pleased to have the opportunity to appear before the Committee and provide information on this project which has aroused a great deal of interest and speculation which, we must admit, is understandable.

Before attempting to answer questions from the Committee, I would like to relate what happened in the development of this project and explain the role of the Department of Public Works.

When the Government was requested to consider the development of a National Arts Centre as a centennial project for Ottawa, it set up an interdepartmental committee to prepare recommendations to Cabinet on the execution of the project and to develop arrangements which would be desirable for the future growth, development and operation of such a centre. The Committee was to include representatives of the Privy Council Office, the National Capital Commission, the Canada Council, the Department of Public Works, the National Centennial Administration, the Department of Finance, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the Department of Veterans Affairs.

The National Capital Commission was instructed to recommend a suitable site for the Centre.

The interdepartmental committee recommended to Cabinet that the Department of Public Works be authorized to appoint the firm of Affleck, Desbarats, Dimakopoulos, Lebensold and Sise, of Montreal, as architects for the project.

The firm was recommended on the basis of its wide experience in the design of outstanding theatres in Canada, including the Queen Elizabeth Theatre and Playhouse in Vancouver, Grande Salle of the Place des Arts in Montreal and the Fathers of Confederation Memorial Theatre in Charlottetown. The commissions in Vancouver and Charlottetown were the consequence of winning national competitions.

The Committee recommended to Cabinet that the financing of the project be from funds appropriated for Centennial Commission.

The Committee further recommended that an advisory committee on artistic requirements be formed with a view to assisting the Department of Public Works in the definition of artistic requirements for the theatre. In fact, four committees were set up: an Advisory Committee on Operation; an Advisory Committee on Music, Opera and Ballet; an Advisory Committee on the Theatre; and an Advisory Committee on Visual Arts. Mr. G. H. Southam was named Coordinator of the Committees' activities and was to be responsible to the Secretary of State. These recommendations were accepted February 17, 1964, along with the recommendation from the National Capital Commission that the National Arts Centre be located on Confederation Square.

• 1550

At this stage, then, the Department of Public Works was to design and construct a National Arts Centre with the requirements and design criteria to be set by Advisory Committees and on a specific site. The Department of Public Works was responsible for making submissions to Treasury Board for the expenditure of funds against the appropriations of the Secretary of State to cover the construction of the Centre, as well as all other aspects. These funds were for the provision of visual arts, operating equipment and consultants, including special consultants to assist the prime consultant and the Advisory Committees on technical criteria regarding the various aspects of artistic endeavour to be undertaken at the theatre.

The Department of Public Works had not built and does not normally build theatres; however, we had an experienced architect and, as noted, the Advisory Committees were to tell us what they required.

Mr. Southam has explained to the Committee that there had been very little change in requirements for the building from an artistic point of view since the project was first put to the Government in October, 1963. This statement is correct in a very general sense, in that the original proposal in October 1963 called for an Opera House, a Theatre, a Studio Theatre, plus a Salon. It also specified that restaurants should be added. This is basically what is provided in the project now nearing completion.

However, the original concept provided by the National Arts Alliance, in 1963, and accepted by the Interdepartmental Committee, contemplated that these requirements would be met in a group of theatres with a floor area of 175,000 square feet. In the complex being built, having regard for the requirements established by the Advisory Committees, the floor area provided is 474,000 square feet, plus 450,000 square feet of underground parking. The cubic feet in the building initially was estimated by the National Art Alliance at 4,800,000, whereas the present complex has approximately 16 million cubic feet.

The basic requirements for the three theatres still remain and their development in this complex is, I believe, outstanding in its excellence. The main hall seating 2,300 is different than most theatres of its size now built, in that it is multi-purpose; it provides for the best quality of performance of opera, orchestra and the spoken word. This requires provision for a much wider range of acoustics, lighting, et cetera, and with it the ability to control these features within a range which in turn dictates design criteria and, consequently, the cost. I am advised that it has the second largest stage in the North America Continent. The stage is exceeded only by the new Metropolitan Opera House, which was opened in 1967. However, that theatre is not designed as a multi-purpose unit.

I have referred to the original submission to the Government of October, 1963, which included an estimate of $9 million for the Centre. This proposal was sent to the Government by the National Arts Alliance, a private group who had commissioned an independent study by a group of consultants. Their estimates were not prepared by the Department of Public Works, nor was there any contribution to their development by the Department. Their study was an examination of the need of the facilities in Ottawa and went into considerably more detail on requirements to meet these needs.

Their cost figures were naturally developed around costs which they had obtained on other theatres which had been constructed in the past. They recognized, however, that they were introducing new features in the multi-purpose concept in which excellence was to be guaranteed for a wide variety of performances. It is interesting to note that in their brief, the National Arts Alliance stated quite clearly that it would be essential in the planning and designing of the National Arts Centre to appoint a design team of experts in the field of stage, acoustics, lighting and communication, to work with the Advisory Committees and the architects in developing the criteria for the variety of uses of the complex and the way they could be achieved.

Further, they stated as their view that the facilities should be designed to standards required for use by the individual artist and for productions of the highest professional calibre. In design, pre-eminence should be given to artistic excellence in preference to economic considerations. Emphasis should be placed on quality rather than economy in matters such as acoustics, sight lines, comfort of audience, stage facilities and the needs of the performers. It is understandable that, having stated these broad conclusions and lacking past experience in the development of this kind of centre, they were not in the position to give a more accurate estimate.

It must also be recognized that, in their recommendations, they had proposed that the Centre would be located on St. Patrick and Sussex. Their estimate did not include purchase of land; however, there was not a direct purchase of land involved in the present site of the Arts Centre. With the site on Sussex, however, as contemplated by the National Arts Alliance, it was believed that surface parking would be available and hence not a charge against the proposed centre. They did include in their $9 million an item of $400,000, but this was to cover parking, landscaping of the site, site clearance, etc., in other words, the total development of what they felt was a relatively inexpensive area to develop.

While the Department of Public Works had not contributed to the development of the $9 million estimate, at the time of its presentation to the Committee, the department did not believe the Centre could be constructed for that sum. This was confirmed in writing to the Committee on June 2, 1964. The Department of Public Works stated it did not agree with estimates, and could not until an estimate based on detailed requirements and complete design development had been prepared.

The reasoning behind the actual selection of the Confederation Square for the location of the Arts Centre was that it would contribute most to the development of the National Capital area, as well as being in a central downtown area, close to hotels, shopping and other government facilities. The site, however, adds very substantially to the cost of what has been built. We believe this increase has been some $7 million.

This choice of site placed on the contractor restrictions of area and access which affected the construction cost.

Traffic circulation problems had to be solved in order for the Centre to operate in that area and made necessary a tunnel entrance from Albert Street. To stay within height restrictions and to keep site lines consistent with Parliament Hill and the view down the Canal and Elgin Street, approximately three fifths of the cubic content had to be below ground level.

The site was recognized from a foundation standpoint to be a particularly difficult one. Our experience on the Lorne Building on Elgin Street, and Mr. Hales will remember it particularly, which had run into foundation difficulties, clearly indicated we would have problems. This was magnified by the situation in that the mass of the building would be in faulted rock with an unpredictable bearing.

Further, during the Green Creek collector sewer construction, parallel to Wellington Street, there had been a serious problem with underground water in the vicinity of the Rideau Canal. For excavation in this adjacent area, it was recognized that we would have to make advance provision to cope with this situation, should it develop. Our knowledge of the site conditions was one reason why excavation contracts were called before the completion of designs in order that adjustments could be made as the actual rock conditions were established. Special shoring and sheet piling protective works were necessary along Elgin Street and the canal wall. The final excavation was more than 10 feet below the bed of the canal.

• 1600

A particular problem of the site was, however, the necessity of providing underground parking as no surface parking was available. To provide the necessary 900 stalls on this restricted site required the parking to be built around the perimeter surrounding the mechanical rooms. At such depths and with provision for waterproofing, this greatly increased the structural cost of the garage and the rock excavation, and required mechanical ventilation for the garage.

On June 3, 1964, the consulting architects presented their first estimate to the Inter-departmental Committee on the cost of the building alone, which was $12,800,000. This estimate was based on the architect's preliminary design concept, with room layouts, but without details as to how the artistic requirements being developed by the advisory committees were to be met. Interim reports on the requirements by the various advisory committees had been received in March and April of 1964 which specified considerable detail on the size, quality and type of facilities to be provided. By June, however, the architects had not adequately assessed the consequences of these criteria in terms of cost.

In acoustics, for example, under the original proposal in the National Arts Alliance submission and the basis on which the consultant had gone ahead with his development, a noise level of 35 decibels was acceptable. The recommendation from the Advisory Committee had now set the maximum acceptable level at 25 decibels, and the desirable level at 15. This has added tremendously to the cost, but at that stage—that is June, 1964—it had not been adequately assessed by the consultant.

To the $12,800,000 estimate for building costs the Department of Public Works added other costs, such as the provision for art work, consultant fees and a provisional figure for an underground garage, bringing the total budget estimate for the Centre to $18,223,000.

The Interdepartmental Committee accepted the consultants' design proposals and the estimate, reported them to Cabinet and the Department of Public Works submitted the estimate to Treasury Board for approval to proceed with the project. This approval was given at $18.2 million on July 16, 1964.

The consultant then continued with the development of criteria, working with the advisory committees and the special consultants on the production of designs to meet these requirements. As it was obvious that the underground parking garage must be incorporated into the main complex, the design of this structure was added to the consultant's task.

The traffic requirements and circulation in the area around the Centre were to be coordinated with the proposals of the firm of Deleuw, Cather and Associates, which engaged by the National Capital Commission for this study as part of a more extensive traffic study in the downtown area.

You may recall that at that time they were considering a revision of the area in front of the National War Memorial, and it was as a result of that that the traffic circulation was changed to the North and the West of the Centre on down Elgin Street with the provision of boulevards.

• 1605

For the overall National Arts Centre project, the consultant recommended to the Department that the project be undertaken in a three-phase construction schedule.

Phase I was to be the excavation, shoring and bridge diversion. The purpose of this contract was to get the excavation under way so that the actual site conditions could be determined and reflected in the design of the main structure.

We had very many borings over the sites and every one of them indicated what we had presumed would be the condition from our experience on the Lorne Building. They showed shattered and faulted rock with seams of mud and in general a poor rock condition. It is completely impractical to forecast what the situation will be at any elevation on the basis of bore holes, and this was the purpose in going ahead with an excavation contract.

The bridge diversion was necessary to permit traffic to use the Mackenzie King Bridge while the work was in progress. The original bridge alignment became part of the garage structure and site for the complex. Tenders were called on December 15, 1964, and received on January 13, 1965. The contract was awarded to C. A. Pitts on January 28, 1965.

Phase II was a contract to build a portion of the garage structure, including the new approach to the Mackenzie King Bridge, and providing for excavation. The start of the construction of the garage, at this stage, was advisable in order to provide a working area for the contractor on the proposed Phase III part of the project. The balance of the site, under Phase III, would be totally excavated to depths approaching elevation 200 (approximately 40 feet below Elgin Street) and occupied by heavy construction equipment. With the garage area constructed in advance it could be utilized for development of the sub-trades work associated with the heavy construction operation. In addition to this, the construction of the garage permitted the completion of the realignment of the Mackenzie King Bridge in its final form, so that the surface of the bridge became a portion of the garage roof. Tenders for Phase II were called on May 10, 1965, and received on June 9, 1965. A contract was awarded to Foundation Company of Canada on June 18, 1965, at a figure of $1,049,620. The ultimate cost was $1,730,352.93.

As the work proceeded through Phase I and into Phase II, the Department's concern on rock conditions was more than adequately confirmed, in that shoring and rock excavation would exceed estimates. As well, there were substantial sums required to provide for the relocation of services buried on the site.

We had known in advance of the location of some services, but this is a relatively old part of town and there were in addition to those we knew of, others, and ones that we did know of were located at different elevations than had been indicated on the plans available to us, and all of these added to the cost.

As the advisory committees continued to develop the detailed requirements, the consultant advised that cost and space required would result in the original estimates being exceeded.

The continuing traffic studies by DeLeuw Fether, having particular regard for the development of Elgin Street and traffic patterns in Confederation Square, required the provision of a tunnel access to the parking garage from Albert Street below Elgin to the lower garage level. Tenders for the tunnel known as Phase II "A" were called on June 21, 1966, and received on July 20, 1966. A contract for the work was awarded to Marino Construction Limited on August 12, 1966, at a cost of $515,000. The ultimate cost was $590,000.

In May 1965, the Interdepartmental Committee met and was advised that the cost estimates of $18 million would be exceeded. Subsequently, submissions were made to the board indicating overruns. The Committee was advised that it was impossible to project estimates accurately until all requirements were finalized and design solutions established.

The Advisory Committees continued to meet until January 1966, when they were disbanded. Their function was assumed by the coordinator with the assistance of a technical adviser, who had formerly acted with the Advisory Committees.

• 1610

The prime consultant essentially completed his design for Phase III (the balance of the complex) by February of 1966.

Using a firm of quantity surveyors, he prepared the estimates on the cost of the building. Some items and specialty equipment and finishings could still not be determined.

The following prime sum allowances were provided to cover these items:

Architecture $1,190,000.00; Mechanical $240,000.00; Electrical $155,300.00; Addendum $164,000.00.

The work undertaken in Phase I and II, fees and relocations of services, brought the current total budget of the project to $29,972,000. This was in relation to the previous figure of June 1964 at $18.2 million. A breakdown of the comparison of these figures is available. This estimate was referred to the Cabinet and approval was given to call tenders for Phase III.

Because of the size and complexity of the project, it was decided that the tender call would be on a pre-qualification basis. The Department met with the Canadian Construction Association and set up a pre-qualification committee, consisting of the following:

Chairman:

G. B. Williams, Senior Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Public Works.

J. A. Langford, Chief Architect, Department of Public Works.

T. N. Carter, Past-President, Canadian Construction Association.

A. Turner Bone, Past-President, Canadian Construction Association.

R. G. Johnson, Executive Vice-President, Canadian Institute of Steel Construction (former President of Defence Construction (1951) Limited).

Col. E. Churchill, Director of Installations, Canadian Corporation, for the World Exhibition.

D. F. Lebensold, Affleck, Desbarats, Dimakopoulos, Lebensold and Sise, Consulting Architect for the National Arts Centre.

Questionnaires were sent to construction companies who had done major jobs and major volumes of work in the last five years. The questionnaires requested information of past projects, time of completion, annual volumes of work done, financial status, supervisory personnel and experience on sophisticated construction management techniques. On the basis of this information, the Committee then selected six (6) firms and requested them to tender on the project.

The Phase III tenders were called on March 15, 1966, and received on May 17, 1966. The lowest tender submitted was that of V. K. Mason Limited of Toronto, at $31,848,000, awarded on June 16, 1966. The comparable estimated cost by the consultant, prior to tender call, was $22,500,000. The difference between the tender price and the estimates must be attributed principally to underestimating by the consultant. A breakdown of the difference is available for consideration.

With the $31.8 million tender received, the budget from the project became $43,026,000. A submission was made to the Treasury Board by the Department of Public Works reporting the tenders received and requesting authority to award the contract. Approval was given on June 9, 1966.

The construction has been in progress since July 1966 and will be completed by the general contractor on December 31, 1968, with work on testing and balancing of systems, installation of special furnishings and fitting of offices, to be carried on in the first three months of 1969. The first performance is scheduled for June of 1969.

The original contract amount with V.K. Mason, as indicated, was $31,848,000. The final contract amount is now estimated at $36,140,000 and a detailed breakdown of the changes in this contract amount is available.

The final cost of the project covering the construction contracts, as well as the visual arts, equipment, associated work and fees will be $46,425,000.

The foregoing is an outline of the steps as they evolved in the creation of the project and the development of the cost estimates. From the outset, the principle in setting requirements and standards for the Centre was to provide excellence; it was to be multipurpose in the fullest sense, having a capability of putting on a variety of entertainment in three halls, not achieved in any other centre now existing in the world. It was located in the National Capital strategically to provide a maximum of impact on its development.

To meet the total of these requirements has been costly. Having undertaken to build this type of complex, the expenditure of $46 million must be related to similar projects elsewhere. Members of the Committee are, no doubt, aware of the cost of others and we have available some examples.

In essence, the position of the Department of Public Works is that, allowing for the requirements of this complex and its location, the cost is not out of line, the quality of workmanship of the contractors has been first-rate, and the design concepts have provided a good solution.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Williams, for your comprehensive statement. Do you have any other informations to provide?

Mr. Williams: I understand Mr. Southam read a letter that he had received after he had made his statement and I thought I should reciprocate at least. The only thing I thought I could perhaps add for the Committee's entertainment is a clipping I have from the Engineering News Record dated September 26, 1968. This is a statement about the Sydney Opera House, often cited as an architect's delight, and it reads as follows:

"Opera lowers curtain on cost increases. It has been a nightmare for structural engineers, contractors and estimators, especially the estimators.

I think having said that I had better let the subject drop right there.

The Chairman: I have Mr. Givens on my list.

Mr. Givens: This $46½ million does not include the price of land?

Mr. Williams: There was no direct purchase of land. The land was basically donated by the City of Ottawa.

Mr. Givens: Would you care to put a value on the land?

Mr. Williams: I am sorry, I cannot do that.

Mr. Givens: Seventy to eighty dollars a foot in the heart of Ottawa.

Mr. Williams: I could not say. I could ask the NCC if they would like to put an evaluation on it. If they can I will provide it to you.

Mr. Givens: I would like to know; I would imagine the land would run a few million dollars.

Mr. Williams: Yes.

Mr. Givens: The structures are air conditioned?

Mr. Williams: Yes.

Mr. Givens: At the bottom of page 11 you say that the $46½ includes the visual arts, equipment associated work and fees. Does this include furnishings and equipment, lighting and sound and so on?

Mr. Williams: Yes, it does.

Mr. Givens: Fully?

Mr. Williams: Yes.

Mr. Givens: You talked about the acoustics and you said that you had to lower it so that the acceptable desirable noise level would be 15 decibels. From a performance standpoint, do we have a guarantee that there will not be the same trouble with the acoustics here as they have had in the symphony hall in the Lincoln Centre in New York where they had to tear them out two or three times. Is there any guarantee that you can give about acoustics?

Mr. Williams: I do not know—perhaps Mr. Lebensold should answer—but from my own examinations and my own problems in going through the estimates, the changes, and one thing and another on acoustics, I think you would have to say that there are consultants, here are engineers who deal with acoustics, and as soon as you talk in terms of acoustics or theatre and opera it is more of an art than science.

Mr. Givens: It is more of a mystery.

Mr. Williams: Perhaps art is a mystery—I'm not sure, but I would say that this one as had as extensive study and testing as is practical to achieve the guarantee.

Mr. Lebensold, do you wish to add a comment?

Mr. D. F. Lebensold (Affleck, Desbarats, Dimakopoulos, Lebensold and Sise, Consulting Architects for the National Arts Centre): May I first of all state that the figure of 15 decibels that you have heard referred to applies not necessarily to the acoustical quality that you have referred to when you mentioned the Philharmonic Hall in New York.

Their problems were not really related to this particular figure. Their problems were related to the sort of total sound quality of the hall, which was not really a perfectly measurable sort of thing, but it was judged by critics not to be satisfactory. The 15 decibel rating that we talked about was the noise level which would be acceptable from all the mechanical equipment in this building in the listening area.

I may point out that the 15 decibel rating had been suggested to us by experts in the field and this change, which obviously has taken place over a period of some time, has been advocated, because very many halls in the interim have opened and have had a decibel rating of, say, 35 or 25 and been found to be quite unsatisfactory.

Mr. Givens: So this figure really means nothing. It would be fair to say that technically it means that you have soundproofed the building, but from a performance standpoint it is conceivable that when operatic, symphonic, or theatrical productions start we could find ourselves in the same jam and have the same problems that they have had there and in other places.

Mr. Lebensold: That is not quite true, because the 15 decibel rating is a measured thing; it can actually be measured with an instrument. Whereas whether or not you enjoy a particular concert, or whether you really found it exciting, or whether or not you were awake, depends very much on many other things not necessarily always related to acoustics.

Mr. Givens: So this is a mechanical thing.

Mr. Lebensold: This is basically a mechanical requirement and the implications have really been heaviest on the mechanical, and particularly the airconditioning, equipment.

Mr. Givens: What we are discussing now is really something aesthetic, that only the critical ear will be able to tell.

Mr. Lebensold: We are discussing two subjects and we are constantly, perhaps, jumping from one to the other. I think we should separate them.

One is the question of the noise rating which is acceptable from the mechanical equipment. That has been set as desirable at 15 decibels. After we drop that subject we can talk about the acoustical quality of the hall, the theatre and the studio. That is another subject.

The Chairman: That was the question Mr. Givens was asking. Perhaps you could discuss that aspect now.

Mr. Lebensold: The second one?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Hales: I would like to ask a supplementary on that.

The Chairman: Yes. Perhaps we could have Mr. Schreyer on a supplementary on the first question.

Mr. Givens: I do not want to hog the floor, Mr. Chairman, but I have two more questions to ask. I am not aware of how much time members can take on these.

The Chairman: We try to work by subject matter, and when a Member has a supplementary on a particular subject we usually recognize him and then come back.

Mr. Schreyer has a supplementary on this particular aspect, and then Mr. Hales.

Mr. Schreyer: On the second aspect, the non-mechanical aspect of the acoustical arrangement, you really cannot give any guarantee of what the quality of sound will be once the rugs and furnishings are in and the performances actually start?

Mr. Williams: In terms of a specific guarantee, that is true; but it is not quite wide open, because the design of the acoustics is based on what are, or determines what will be, the furnishings and how they are laid. If there are carpets on the floors then one makes a change in the ceiling to compensate for them. In this particular theatre, in the grand hall, because there are carpets on the floor and because you are looking for excellence in opera, which has a range different from the spoken word, you have a system whereby in the ceiling you can change the acoustic properties of the hall. It costs money, but it is there and you can do it.

Also, although one cannot guarantee it, this one is designed to the latest stage of the science, or art, whatever you want to call it.

The Chairman: Mr. Hales?

• 1625

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, my first question is in this area of acoustics. I notice that the National Arts Alliance had recommended 35 decibels, and then, later on, an advisory committee said that it should be 25 with a desirable at 15. Why was this not established before plans had proceeded as far as they had? Before the plans were started why did these two committees not put their heads together and say, "Now, what will it be—35 or 15"?

My second question relates to the statement that it added tremendously to the cost. What does "tremendously" mean in terms of dollars and cents?

Mr. Williams: Mr. Hales, perhaps I can go back and try again to clarify the difference between the decibels of noise level and acoustics.

The decibels in the 35 limit related to the acceptable noise level of the other things in the theatre—the airconditioning, the operating of equipments and everything else. In a sense they are acoustics.

The National Arts Alliance was not involved in the design of this Arts Centre. They had placed before the Government a proposal to build a theatre, or a series of theatres, and they had engaged a group of consultants to prepare this for them. It covered much more than what would be in the theatre. It covered what was required for the national capital in the form of arts.

When they were getting down to the sorts of things that the theatre should be they said that 35 decibels was an acceptable noise level. But, as I said in my statement, having said that, they then went further and said that the theatre to be built in the capital was to be of excellence, and that quality was to be pre-eminent over economy.

The advisory committee took up exactly what the National Arts Alliance had recommended. They said, "We are looking for quality". Because of this, in their view—and I presume it is now an accepted view in other theatres that are built—35 is not quality. You have to go to 25 and try for 15.

Mr. Hales: My question is: Why did you not accept that in the first place?

Mr. Williams: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Hales: Why did you not accept that in the first place?

Mr. Williams: Because at the time the advisory committees started to meet their interim reports on what the requirements would be were coming forward in the period of March and April of 1964. This was concurrent with the architect's development of the plans for the theatre, and the architect presented his concept of the theatre to the advisory committee, I think in June, 1964, which was the estimate. But at that time he had not had an analysis and had not costed what would be the recommendations of the advisory committee.

The advisory committee accepted his concept, but they still had the rider that they wanted this quality. It was from then on that the advisory committee and the special consultants developed the design solutions to provide the quality that was then established.

Mr. Hales: Would you care to estimate what the extra cost was when you say "it added tremendously to the cost"?

Mr. Williams: I cannot say.

Mr. Lebensold: I think it is a very difficult thing to extract. The reason for that is that this particular 15 decibel quality that we are talking about was part and parcel of the total mechanical design. What we have become aware of is that the mechanical cost escalation, after analysis, has proved that it was a very sizable sum; but exactly how much it is we cannot say. I do not think I can just say it exactly so much.

Mr. Hales: Just one final question and I am rough. Following Mr. Givens' question, if it turns out that this still is not the right level of decibels and it still does not give that quality that you speak of, whose responsibility is it to repair it so that it is what we want?

Mr. Williams: In terms of the noise level, that is now predetermined. It is like the site, I think. It is there. The noise level will be consistent with and better than that of any other theatre—I would not say better than any other theatre I am not sure that this is the case—but, at least, it will be consistent with the latest theatres that have been built.

Mr. Hales: What if it is not? What if it is the opposite?

Mr. Williams: Well, the solution we are re is good.

Mr. Hales: No, but we are not so sure until we get this in operation. It may not be and if it is not I want to know whose responsibility it is. And will you be back asking for more money?

Mr. Williams: If we deal with the noise level, that is the decibels, I would say that part is done and will perform. There is no question.

When you are talking in terms of the acoustics generally, which is, as I have said, half science, half art, or whichever way it is, the guarantee is that this building will be capable of a range of performance to real excellence.

Mr. Hales: But you are not answering my question. I just want to know this; if it is not satisfactory, will we be approached for another over-run or some more money?

Mr. Williams: As I see it, there is no suit against anyone. You have engaged and paid for the best professional information that you can get and it has been given. The only suit is in the event that someone has been negligent in the provision of what he had recommended.

The Chairman: Mr. Givens.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Chairman, this is a very serious question that I would like to ask of the architects and designers. I understand that there is a school of thought which now holds that the building of fixed structures, like the ones we are talking about, for $46.5 million, is now passé, and that these buildings are from an artistic standpoint obsolete; that what is required now for theatrical, operatic and symphonic performances is environmental space, as envisioned by Mr. Buckminster Fuller's bubble at Expo. Is this just a developing theory or is there some truth in this, that fixed structures now are on their way out and that they are obsolete?

Mr. F. Lebensold: I am delighted to be able to comment. I do not think I really have an answer to your question but I think probably this is one of the most wonderful things about performing arts, that they are constantly in a state of flux.

Mr. Givens: At these prices?

Mr. Lebensold: May I point out one thing: that we in our discussions and in our confrontations with the advisory bodies who have been appointed by the government have been fully aware of the different directions in which various artists wish the performing arts to go.

I do not know whether you have visited the Centre, but if you have, you will have noticed that for that reason the three basic spaces we have in the Performing Arts Centre in Confederation Square have definitely three different qualities, and it is our hope that we shall be able to provide an outlet for many of those people who wish a completely different kind of space from those who wish to have a sort of static, formal kind of structure that others would consider completely passé.

Mr. Givens: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. You have indicated in this speech that you can give examples of similar projects which have had overruns of some 400 per cent, as you have here.

• 1635

The Chairman: Mr. Givens, the procedure has been to exhaust the subject and you are moving on to a new one. I wonder if I could call for...

Mr. Givens: No, we are talking cost, and I would like to know...

The Chairman: We were talking decibels and we were talking acoustics and I wanted to know if there was anybody else who had questions to ask on this particular area.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Chairman, if I may, it is not clear in my mind yet if we are sure that the extraneous noise level has been measured or has been definitely set at 15 decibels. Are we sure of this?

The Chairman: That is correct. The real problem is about the acoustics, which is another matter completely.

Now, on a new subject, I recognize Mr. Dinsdale.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, these have been other examples in Ottawa of under-estimation of Public Works projects, and I just want to pursue this subject for a moment.

I recall, for example, the Printing Bureau a few years ago. It cost more than was anticipated largely because of a water problem, which resulted in a launching rather than an official opening. It was referred to as the Floating Palace at the time but I think the present instance that we have before the Committee is most spectacular in this regard and I would like to ask the gentlemen from Public Works whether the problem arose, from their standpoint, from the fact, as is indicated in the opening statement, that they were not in the initial planning. I think that appears on page 4, that Public Works was not in the initial planning, and it would appear that most of the plans were set before Public Works got into the act. It seems that this is an unusual procedure for government policy in construction and perhaps this is one of the reasons why the costs became somewhat uncontrollable. Is this so?

Mr. Williams: No, Mr. Chairman. Public Works was involved in this as soon as the interdepartmental committee was formed. As I mentioned, Public Works was represented on the interdepartmental committee and so we were party to the decisions of that committee. In looking at the reason for the change in cost, I have to go back to what I did say: that the initial estimate and the first one in which we were involved was the $18.2 million which was presented in June of 1964 and at that time the requirements were not totally defined and certainly solutions for the kind of requirements which were coming up for these artistic endeavours were not developed and so the pricing of them was a very preliminary sort of thing.

It could not be precise in any way and this is, as I have said in my statement, the position that we have taken all the way through. If you do not know what you are going to build or what the standard is in detail so that you can develop a solution for that, you cannot properly price it.

Mr. Dinsdale: There is a statement on page 3 which states that the Department of Public Works does not normally build theatres. So, I would take from that, Mr. Chairman, that Public Works was entirely dependent on the advice of the consultants and had to go along for the ride.

• 1640

Mr. Williams: No, not at all. We have our share of responsibility and I would not attempt to say that we had no responsibility in this. It is said in the context that we did not have the normal yardsticks that we apply against other things we build and that we do very often. We did not know what would be required in terms of artistic endeavour for opera, ballet, theatre and the various classes of these. One might say, "Looking at the estimate of $18 million you should have been able to judge that it was that far off, the pace." If it was a standard office building, and we have done many of them, we would know what category of office building it was and whether it was a reasonable price, and ur people would be completely familiar with ot only the pricing but the development of ne requirements that went into it—similarly or penitentiaries, laboratories, schools and any other things that we build, but we had ot had too much experience in what you eed for an opera.

Mr. Dinsdale: Several times in the presentation it states that a new formula was applied in the construction of the Centre for the Performing Arts in that the excellence as to take precedence over economy. It would appear that the usual economic formula with respect to cost was set aside for this particular building and that quality and excellence were the criteria regardless of the economic factors. Is that a fair conclusion?

Mr. Williams: Not "regardless", certainly this was, as I pointed out, the recommendation of the initial report which the government accepted—that of the National Capital Arts Alliance. They put an estimate in but they said, notwithstanding that estimate excellence and quality were to be the criteria, not cost. Now the advisory committees, who are determining how good, what kind of, and what scale of performances would be put took up where the National Capital Arts Alliance left off.

These committees took up the same point of view, that excellence was what they were living for, that they were not concerned with cost.

Mr. Dinsdale: But I would think that in the realm of public expenditure a formula of that kind would have rather an intoxicating effect on people involved and perhaps this accounts for the rather extraordinary departure from the original estimate of $9 million.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Chairman, $9 million is not an estimate—it was $18.2 million.

Mr. Dinsdale: Well the $18 million.

Mr. Chairman: If I might ask a question, Mr. Williams, is not one of the problems really that you started designing this building before you knew what you were going into, that you did not have all the specifications and you did not know how these specifications would change the nature of the design that were after?

Mr. Williams: That is correct.

The Chairman: In other words, you set out blindly, there really was no forward planning and you started out building as you were designing.

Mr. Williams: It is not a question of setting out blindly, we set out on a concept.

The Chairman: On a concept.

Mr. Williams: And at that stage the architects had developed the concept with the view that they could meet the criteria in the broad sense that had been set down in the National Capital Arts Alliance book which they had to work from. But here again it was a statement of desire rather than defined sort of criteria, and certainly it was done at a point when these extra riders on how good they had to be were put on but for which there were no design solutions when we did the first price.

The Chairman: Well, normally you start out building something like this with the specifications, with the blueprints and with everything else. This is the normal procedure but you did not start out under the normal procedure. You did not have everything before you when you made the decision to go ahead. You had a concept.

Mr. Williams: Yes. I would say that normally when you start a program which involves construction projects you do not have a set of detailed blueprints and plans and one thing and another but in most programs you are dealing with something which has been built before and on which you have experience and you are in a much better position to estimate what those requirements are going to be. You can have the exception, where the requirements change, or you can get badly stuck on site which will make things go away up. We explain numbers of these to Mr. Hales' committee every year.

Mr. Dinsdale: The Printing Bureau is an example.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Dinsdale has mentioned the Printing Bureau as one example. I will admit that on this one we did not have as much experience to exercise the kind of judgment we could have exercised if it had been some other type of project. But certainly our estimate at the point in time that we gave the first estimate of $18.2 million was in retrospect and even at that time we in our minds were doubtful from the standpoint that we did not really know what we were going to build.

The Chairman: Was this estimate of $18.2 million based on the Nepean Point place or the downtown site?

Mr. Williams: No, it was based on the downtown site. Here again I must add that at that stage there had not been a solution to the parking problem. As a matter of fact, in the $18.2 million estimate there was a flat sum carried at $3.8 million for a parking garage which was figured on a basis of the number of stalls. We knew at that stage it was going to be in the rock but we did not know how it would relate to the requirements of the rest of the Centre in that three-fifths of it are below ground and we did not know how much mechanical work we were going to have, which pushed things farther and farther down the hole and limited the area we had to work in. A figure of $3.8 million was carried as a sort of an upset figure of what you might build a garage for 900 vehicles for. Now you can say that that decision should have been made before but when you look at that decision you must also realize that at that point in time the government was also considering other developments in that area. A museum was being projected and examined to go on the Roxborough site. The parking problem at that point in time became a real issue because the City of Ottawa had passed a bylaw which laid down certain requirements for parking.

Mr. Givens: What is the ratio of parking to the seating capacity?

Mr. Williams: I cannot give it to you. The bylaw the city put out is not worded in that way because it is also in relation to what is available in the area around it, and at that point in time we were considering a museum which would in itself have parking. The decision was that we could not use the museum site for parking, that we had to make other arrangements. And in the design of the Centre and in the design of the Mackenzie King Bridge approaches we had to make provision for the eventual development of the Roxborough site so that the parking could be common to the two developments and there could be a pedestrian flow at a plaza level between the two buildings. We were not, in advance of that, really in a position to estimate properly what the garage was going to cost. We took a figure which was developed with the traffic consultants and they thought it was an upset figure for a garage. It proved not to be.

Mr. Dinsdale: May I revert to the point I was making, Mr. Chairman, if there are no other further supplementaries?

The Chairman: Are there further supplementaries?

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Chairman, I have a supplementary on the costs. I think it would be much easier to get at these problems if we had the breakdown of the differences. They are referred to in Mr. Williams' statement and I wonder if they are here. They are perhaps we could have those and, if they are not, I wonder if you could be sure to have these breakdowns for Tuesday's meeting?

Mr. Williams: If you like, I could give them now.

The Chairman: What form are they in?

• 1650

Mr. Williams: I have them related to phases of the project, but they are also inter-related, so that I can give a comparison between initial cost and final cost under each contract. They are a little hard to follow.

The Chairman: I think we could ask Mr. Williams to do two things, to use the figures he now has with us, and perhaps to provide us with them in a written form and we could have them attached to the Minutes as an Appendix. Could I have a motion to that effect?

Mr. Schumacher: I so move.

Mr. De Bané: I second the motion.

Motion agreed to.

The Chairman: If you wish to question Mr. Williams on those figures, he has them and can use them.

After Mr. Dinsdale, I have Mr. Guilbault, Mr. Osler, Mr. Schreyer, Mr. Stanbury, Mr. De Bané, Mr. Givens and Mr. La Salle.

Mr. Givens: When Mr. Williams is preparing the figures, could he add comparisons with comparable construction in other centres where it shows between conception and birth what happened when the cost went up, as here by some 400 per cent, as I see it. Could he get the price of the land, too, or the estimated price?

Mr. Williams: I am not certain that on other centres we can give any kind of breakdown that way. For other centres that have been constructed, we have final cost and seating, so that you get a comparative size.

Mr. Givens: That is all I want.

Mr. Williams: For some of them we can give published information on what initial estimates were, and what finals are.

Mr. Givens: That is all I want.

Mr. Williams: But here again, they are not to our knowledge either correct or precise, but I can give whatever we have on that.

The Chairman: On a supplementary, Mr. Guilbault?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Guilbault: Mr. Chairman, a supplementary question on the rise in costs. In the beginning of Mr. William's exposé we see that there was an increase of $7 million because the site was changed from Sussex Street to Confederation Square. Now, $7 million seems to be a very high sum to justify such a decision, even if, at the end of the exposé we say that the National Arts Centre was purposely located in the middle of the city to encourage expansion. This is a rather stiff price to encourage expansion.

I have two questions to ask. I would like to know whether when the decision was taken to move the Centre from Sussex Street to Confederation Square, we knew how expensive it would be, secondly, can we explain, why the cost increased by 7 millions, because of this decision?

[English]

Mr. Williams: When the site was selected at Confederation Square and recommended to the government, it was on the basis of its contribution. A comparison of cost was not available. As I say, at that time we did not have an architect and we did not even have a concept, so we could not really judge what the difference in cost would be.

I have a breakdown of how we estimated that the extra cost would be $7 million and some sketch plans indicating the site that might be of interest. While these are being circulated to members of the committee, I could make an explanation. I the breakdown of cost—you have asked for certain figures to be presented—I take it that the comparison you want is one between estimates in each stage, and I will break it down that way. That does not give you the comparison of individual contracts which is a separate thing, but I will give you a breakdown of the facilities at the comparative estimate stage.

To return to the garage or the site. Indicated in red on the plan is the original location of the approaches to the Mackenzie King Bridge, and in order to utilize the area under the bridge approach for garage, outlines of the site on which we have built including garage are indicated in blue. We had to use the area underneath the approaches. That meant we had to build a temporary approach in order that traffic would not be disrupted from using the Mackenzie King Bridge during the construction period. The diversion of the Mackenzie King Bridge approaches cost $375,000.

With the development that took place in Confederation Square and the provision of boulevards on Elgin Street, traffic patterns on Elgin Street were restricted. There were only right-hand turns available into the Centre. In and out, the only other access—there was none available from the North—was from what used to be the Driveway. So in order to get in and out within a reasonable period of time in an underground garage, we had to have an additional entrance for the start of performances, and an additional exit for discharge. The only solution to it was a tunnel out to Albert Street, which cost $593,000.

To get in enough area, we had to take the garage wall and excavation for it right out to the canal retaining wall. Having excavated it out there, we had to put back a promenade deck so that the bank of the canal would be available after construction, and it is now incorporated into the total plaza area; that cost $80,000. The canal wall being excavated and being below the level of the canal, we had a waterproofing job that cost $80,000. The municipal services that were on the site, which included sewer, power, telephone, certain special communication lines, all totalled $400,000.

I have mentioned the shattered-rock conditions and the water problem. We had an extensive shoring job which was in Phase I of the construction. On Elgin Street the top layer down to about 15 feet was sand and disturbed material lying on rock. This had to be supported; the site was too small. You could not have slope piles extending into the site or else you would cut down your working area.

So we had to go to a prestressed cable. We drilled cables in under Elgin Street into the rock, and had prestressed cables to hold up the shoring. That created another problem in the sense that we had the pilings driven down to the top of the rock, and normally you would expect them to be supported in the rock, but the condition of the rock along the top was such that it would not support the piling, so we had to have a concrete support across the front to hold the shoring.

• 1700

In addition to that, as soon as the winter season set in, Elgin Street started to subside a little bit and we were afraid of it all going into the hole.

Mr. Givens: This free site did not end up being so free.

Mr. Williams: I did not say it was free, sir.

Along with this we had to go to actual heating to prevent frost-heave in that upper layer, which would have shoved the waling out. Therefore, during the winter, when it was exposed, we had actually to have heating ducts to keep it from freezing.

On top of that, this site, as I pointed out, involved total excavation. To compare it with what would have been a site on, say, St. Patrick Street, where they contemplated a garage, or at least surface parking, you have at least to allow for the excavation of the garage, assuming that the theatre would have been down a hole anyway. Therefore we had an excavation item for the garage which we estimated very conservatively at $1.2 million.

Having dug the hole for the garage, you cannot build a parking structure down the hole without its cost a lot more structurally to build at that elevation; and we were aware of the underground water problem, and the whole thing had to be waterproofed.

With an underground garage you automatically have a requirement for mechanical ventilation which would not exist on surface parking or in a surface garage.

Because the site was very prominent in the heart of Ottawa we naturally had to provide a surrounding and a hoarding of a standard which cost a fair amount of money. We also had sidewalks, the triangle up towards the Chateau and the area along by the canal, all of which had to be provided, protected and maintained at an acceptable level, which cost about $150,000.

I have used the figure of $7 million. That, in my view, is conservative, in that I am only talking about the extras, assuming that you had built it somewhere else; and these were not extra things. It is very difficult to forecast what would have been the extra on the theatre portions alone, and I have not really attempted to do that. I have just taken the ones that I could readily identify.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Williams, did the Department of Public Works, knowing the extra costs that would be involved, advise against this location? Did you register a protest to powers-that-be who chose this location, or did you try to guide them away from it?

Mr. Williams: In looking at the site, yes, the position of the Department of Public Works was examined in relation to the problems of traffic, and the problems of the site were reported. But, again, I must say that we were participating in the interdepartmental recommendations to the government.

These were factors that were considered but against that we must also consider that there is no question that that is the site which provides the greatest impact on the national capital. Had it been elsewhere, it would not have provided that impact. You have a cost benefit to look at.

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Chairman, on the matter of cost again, at page 11 you say that the Phase III tenders were called, that the lowest tender submitted was $31,848,000 and that the estimated cost by the consultant was $22.5 million. Then you say: "The difference between the tender price and the estimate must be attributed principally to underestimating by the consultant". Was this a government-appointed consultant?

• 1705

Mr. Williams: Yes.

Mr. Comeau: Was any consideration given to calling tenders a second time? To me it seems that you simply say, "Well, the consultant made a mistake," and that is it.

Mr. Williams: No consideration was given to calling tenders a second time, because—

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, we are off the point I was on. We have been pursuing supplementaries for half an hour. May I be allowed to ask a supplementary before I get back to the point I was on?

We are almost as flexible as the cost!

Mr. Williams: With relation to your question about re-calling tenders, you will remember that because of its size and complexity this had been done on a prequalification.

There were six invited and five bidders. The low tender was $31,848,000; the next was $32,300,000 which is a spread of about $500,000 in 32 millions. The next one was $32,450,000; the next was $33,850,000; and the highest was $35,397,000. Obviously the construction industry knew what they needed to build it. We did not call them again, particularly after we had proceeded on a questionnaire basis and on invitation to the major contractors across the country. The original inquiries were made coast to coast.

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale, on a supplementary.

Mr. Dinsdale: Oh, on a supplementary? I cannot pursue the point I—

The Chairman: Yes, you can go back on that point.

Mr. Osler: But should it not clarify the point we are on?

The Chairman: Yes; we were dealing with the early cost and the first estimates.

Mr. Dinsdale: The point I was making. When the supplementaries began I was referring to this extraordinary ruling that costs were not to be considered but rather quality and excellence. The supplementaries that we have been pursuing have indicated that this was the case.

This may not be a fair question to ask of the witnesses here today—perhaps it should be referred to the Treasury Board—but is it normal procedure in public works construction to issue a carte blanche in the matter of cost? If it is, it is an extraordinary one.

Mr. Givens: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. This is not a policy Committee.

Mr. Dinsdale: That is what I am inquiring, whether it should be asked of Treasury Board or...

Mr. Stanbury: On a further point of order, Mr. Chairman, the witness said no such thing. He said that emphasis was to be placed on quality.

The Chairman: On that basis, and with that caveat, I will ask Mr. Williams to answer, so far as he is able.

Mr. Williams: There was not a rule that excellence would be provided without regard for cost. I keep harping back to this, that the statement that quality would have pre-eminence first emanated from the National Arts Alliance. Then it was carried on by the advisory committee on design. This was the input to the design. They were looking for quality. And once you set the requirements the cost inevitably follows. The Advisory Committee unfortunately does not have to pay the bill. I say "unfortunately" and perhaps that is not appropriate either. But all they were required to do was to make sure that their input in the project was such that Canada would have a first-rate arts centre. So there was not a ruling that cost would be disregarded, it was a case of, do we accept the best advice we can get on providing a good arts centre?

• 1710

Mr. Dinsdale: I do not think I can pursue this question with Public Works at the moment, but there is the statement on page 4 which the witness has restated—that

...pre-eminence should be given to artistic excellence in preference to economic considerations.

Mr. Williams: That is the recommendation, sir, of the National Arts Alliance.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes.

Mr. Williams: It is not a statement by Public Works.

Mr. Dinsdale: And if this was carried out in the financing of the scheme of course it would account for the rather astronomical increases in the proposed cost.

Mr. Williams: I agree.

Mr. Dinsdale: Now perhaps I can ask this question which revolves around the same point, Mr. Chairman. There were other plans afoot for this particular area and some reference was made to the Museum and so forth which were on the drawing board. I presume that a sudden change in plans would account for some of the unanticipated costs that are represented in the estimate that we now have before us

Mr. Williams: That is correct. There were development costs that then flowed to the Arts Centre which would have otherwise been part of the museum. And it is also unfortunate that in looking at the design concept and the height limitations that these had been predicted on the basis of the museum being a backdrop for this complex of theatres. That is still possible and probable. I should not say "museum" but something will be there that will complement what has now been built and make use of—some of the things that have been built into the Arts Centre.

Mr. Dinsdale: There seems to have been some rather sudden changes in the whole plans for this area. I know the Roxborough was torn down when it was badly needed for accommodation in the city, and then it was turned into a parking lot which seems hardly to justify the demands of tearing the building down and so forth. It would seem to me that in some of the thinking of those days, both on the part of the National Capital Commission, and particularly the Parkins Plan, some of this area was considered as an open space area, it being felt that too much congestion in terms of construction would have a deleterious impact on the aesthetic qualities of Confederation Square. Now all these things—and I can remember the discussion that went on in the press at that time—it seems have been thrown overboard by the decision to place the Centre for the Performing Arts in the most strategic place in Confederation Square as opposed to the Sussex Street site, or even the site of the present Skyline Hotel. Now is it fair to ask if this does invalidate the Parkins Plan that was originally drawn up for this area?

Mr. Williams: I am not aware of the Parkins Plan which involves Confederation Square.

Mr. Dinsdale: This would be the National Capital Commission.

The Chairman: I think this would come under Regional Development.

Mr. Williams: But I am quite sure, however, that when the National Capital Commission recommended this site they had in mind, as everyone did at the time, that there would be a major building on the site of the Roxborough, and there undoubtedly will be.

• 1715

Mr. Dinsdale: I would think that the changes in plan—we cannot pursue it perhaps in detail—would account for some of the extraordinary increases in expenditure and perhaps this will be revealed in some of the further statistical information that is going to be made available for the Committee.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Chairman, could Mr. Lebensold add a comment in connection with the plan?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Lebensold: I have noted, sir, that you have referred to the sudden reversal of policy and so on. I would like to assure you however that at that time the Parkins Plan was being discussed very, very seriously at the National Capital Commission. The requirement for the creation of large open spaces in that area has not been abandoned. In fact, once the area is completely open to the public you will realize what an extraordinary amount of large open space is provided by that building to the public in the City of Ottawa. We were very concerned for instance at one time that in fact we should not provide something that would exclude from this area the public of Ottawa. This has been in fact one of the design restrictions or one of the design limitations, and it has had an impact on the cost and the design of this building.

Mr. Dinsdale: Was there any major study done of parking problems that will be generated by this location?

Mr. Williams: Yes, very definitely. As mentioned, when the assignment of designing the garage, which had to be incorporated with the Arts Centre, was given to Mr. Lebensold I mentioned that he was required to co-ordinate with and use the study which was underway by DeLeuw, Cather and Associates which incorporated the traffic movement of the Arts Centre as well as the rest of the traffic movement in the Confederation Square area.

The Chairman: A supplementary, Mr. Guilbault?

Mr. Guilbault: I would like to revert back to what we discussed previously, this escalation in cost because of the changes in location. You mentioned that the cost of excavation was $1.2 million. Comments were made in the Commons, which were not too flattering for the Department, to the effect that approximately $600,000 extra was granted for the excavation. Is that right and, if so, why?

Mr. Williams: There were extras in relation to the contracts for Phase I and Phase II. I am not sure you talk in terms of Phase I—the excavation the shoring and the bridge diversion, portions of it were excavations, but the original contract at time of bid was $1,283,000 and the final contract amount was $1,452,000—closer to $1,453,000, with total extras of $169,000. But they are made up of a number of items. For example, we had to put an underpass in the diversion road to the Mackenzie King Bridge because the City objected to, and understandably, the amount of rock excavation which was going out. We could no longer use a road which we formerly had used going out of the site from the North and so we had to then put a diversion bridge in the underpass to the South of the site which cost $23,000. I mentioned the potential and existing water problem. We had to waterproof the canal wall which cost $58,000; and adjacent to the Rideau Canal on the east side, when the excavation was taken out the rock situation was so badly fragmented and fractured that we had to put in a concrete retaining wall to hold this and do some grouting of the fine rock to hold it below excavation level, which was $21,000. As this project proceeded the design on the rest of the project was going ahead, and we were establishing all the time more closely the elevations at which services would have to be carried. So we did extra rock excavation at $35,000. To go back again to the protection of Elgin Street and the shoring we placed in there, we had to do $15,000 worth on the soldier piles which had intended to be supported on the rock level, but the rock was incapable of carrying it. The total of, with another miscellaneous batch of small change orders that came to $18,000, was $69,000.

On the second contract involving the...

The Chairman: Mr. Givens?

Mr. Givens: Are you satisfied that the provision you made for waterproofing will protect us against seepage and flooding, so that when we open next spring you will not have an aquarium there instead of an arts centre.

Mr. Williams: Yes sir.

Mr. Givens: Do you have pumps in there? You are 10 feet below the bed of the canal.

Mr. Williams: I am saying there are not any pumps. If I am wrong I will come back to the Committee and admit so. I am saying that there are not any. We are below the canal, but by the excavation and by the sort of things that I have mentioned we did in here in the rock grouting and the retaining walls and the waterproofing that we have done on the actual structure, we are confident that we will not be flooded. It will be a reasonable garage operation.

Mr. Hales: Does the architect know if there are pumps or not in this building?

Mr. Lebensold: This is terribly embarrassing to me, but I must admit that the engineering is done by very competent engineers who are not present here, and I can assure you that I have every confidence that we shall not have the conditions that you have postulated.

I think that we have certain pumps, but I am not quite sure and before answering it...

I have just heard that at the very lowest levels which are the elevator pits there are sump pumps. But there are not any sort of general pumping conditions because we do not expect—in fact already the garage has been in existence for some time, for more than one spring, and we have not had any water conditions so far, which is I think sufficient perhaps to reassure you that we will not have sudden floods.

Mr. Williams: In respect to the Phase II contract and the over-run, you mentioned the $600,000 item. The Phase II, as I mentioned, covered a portion of the garage structure, the bridges—the bridge approach—and excavation. The original contract amount was $1,049,000. The final figure was $1,730,000, and total extras were $680,000. The extras are made up of additional excavation and concrete and forms for modifications to column and wall footings to provide suitable bearings. That is, as the design proceeded we knew we had to go deeper and the rock was not good and we had to carry on the foundation and the footings and do the modifications of the design to provide for them. With the excavation going on for the column footings and the rest of it, you automatically have an excavation part that has to be backfilled, to give you a bearing, which cost $19,000.

I mentioned to you, again going back to the shoring along Elgin Street, we had to make a provision for a heating system to protect for frost heave against the portion of Elgin Street that started to sag, which cost us $100,000. In the new bridge approach at the existing Mackenzie King Bridge, the old Mackenzie King Bridge was constructed roughly in 1950 to 1952. The approaches were on fill, and now they were to be a structure capable of carrying—as being part of the garage and the structure. The difference in this meant that we had to go back to the foundation footings of the Mackenzie King Bridge, and as we did the excavation, we excavated around those, established what they were and did the modifications to those footings so we could have a structural element connected to it, which cost $141,000.

On the approaches, on the roof slab and metallic waterproofing to the walls of the garage and various mechanical and electrical structural revisions were $72,000. Additional rock which could have been left and done in Phase III or taken in Phase II, we did more of it in Phase II to keep the work moving on, and we did it at a unit price so we carried on and took out an additional $185,000. There were minor changes to the expansion joints on the bridges, and then as quickly as could be done, we removed the hoarding or at least the support works and backfilled on the Elgin Street side, which we threw into this contract rather than wait for Phase III at a cost of $15,000. On the Mackenzie King Bridge approach, while it was operating on the road diversion which was constructed, it was naturally not as good or as efficient from the standpoint of the City's traffic operation, and in order to get it completed and the new structure completed, we guaranteed to have it finished by January 15, 1965, so we had to hoard in and do it under heated conditions, which cost $50,000.

• 1725

The Chairman: A supplementary, Mr. Osler, and then Mr. Schreyer.

Mr. Osler: We are ranging pretty broadly but I think this is on the subject. Having come in late I would like to have it on the record if it has not already been put on that I think the Chairman of the National Arts Council and the architect should be thanked on the record for a very excellent tour the other day that was given to us. It could not have been more helpful in an explanatory way and the hospitality was excellent.

Now, the thing that is not clear in my mind, and I do not know if it is clear in anybody else's mind, is at what point would it have been possible for somebody to blow the whistle on this whole thing? Was there a point at which somebody made... If you were a private firm, or if you were almost anybody but a government scrambling to get something done for Centennial year, you would have done all your cost analysis, you would have weighed the pros and the cons. I have nothing but admiration for the building as it is. I have nothing but admiration for the way the problems have been met. But the fundamental question of whether you were going to accept the challenge has not been raised, I do not think. And I do not like to—there is not much point in crying over spilt milk, but I think that from the point of view of the future, it would be most helpful if we could find when and where a point was reached at which it was decided that it is just too expensive or it is not too expensive to have this National Arts Centre. My calculations—without an amortization table they may be wrong—but it seems to me that to raise the cost from say $20 million to $46 million and pay for the thing over a hundred years which is a perfectly viable life for that building, is costing the people of Canada approximately $1 million a year. I do not know whether this is true. I do not have my amortization tables here but it is possible that it is in that order.

• 1730

I would like to know who, if anybody, was ever able to grasp a set of circumstances, or figures, or anything to make a decision on this?

The Chairman: In asking Mr. Williams to answer that I think it should be made very clear that this is not really decision that comes under his authority.

Mr. Osler: I know; but I am not really asking him for the name of a person who would make a decision. I am asking if, at any stage prior to construction, there was a point at which a decision could be made? Or did it start, then you had a hole, something had to be done with the hole and you had to put something on top of it?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, if I may ask a supplementary, this is my whole point here. When there is no ceiling on costs, when economics is not a factor, as seems to be the case, there is no point at which to blow the whistle. You just go onward in the pursuit of excellence.

The Chairman: Mr. Schreyer?

Mr. Schreyer: There are—

Mr. Osler: It looks like rotten management, does it not?

Mr. Schreyer: I have about three or four supplementaries that come to mind, but I would like to put two at this time.

First of all, as I indicated the other day, we are told that the first time that the Department of Public Works and those involved with construction went to Treasury Board was July 16, 1964.

On how many subsequent occasions was it necessary to go to Treasury Board, what were the dates and how much was involved in each request for revision?

Mr. Williams: I cannot answer that.

Mr. Dinsdale: Are we going to have Treasury Board before us, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: I have indicated to Treasury Board that we might want them to appear. If this is the type of information that we require, which is not available from Public Works, then I think Treasury Board should be asked to appear.

I was in touch with them. They were to have a representative in the audience, so I am sure they are aware of what is going on. If they are not, I will inform them tomorrow.

Mr. Schreyer: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. That sounds fair enough, if Treasury Board is going to be before us. It is important to get the sequence in mind, not just the absolute amounts involved.

My second supplementary is relative to tendering, Mr. Chairman. It would seem that on Phase I of the construction, Phase II, Phase II A and Phase III, there were extras over and above the initial bid. In the case of Phase I a 15 to 20 per cent overcharge or extra; in the case of Phase II, 70 per cent; Phase II A, again, a 15 to 20 per cent extra.

Mr. Williams: can you indicate to us what percentage of increase there has been in the total cost now as compared to the original bid that was accepted on Phase III?

Mr. Williams: On Phase III the original contract amount was $31,848,000. The estimated final contract amount—the contractor is still working—is $36,139,919. That is the amount that is included in arriving at the budget figure of $46 million.

Mr. Schreyer: Thank you.

You have given us a fairly good account of why there were extras in Phases I, II, and II "A", but in the case of Phase III, where we are not involved with foundation nor with rock faults, and so on, why was there a substantial increase over the initial bid that was accepted? What accounts for this increase?

Mr. Williams: I can go through the same routine of the extras.

The Chairman: That would be fine.

Mr. Williams: Perhaps I could clarify a point. The Department, of course, has the records of all the Treasury Board submissions we made, what they were and the dates on which they were made. I would not want you to think that I had said we could not do this; that we do not have them; but I am saying that I do not have them available. If Treasury Board is here perhaps they will decide who provides them.

• 1735

The Chairman: Perhaps you could look into that and I will be in touch with you tomorrow on it.

Mr. Williams: All right.

In the extras that are provided on Phase III, I mentioned in my opening statement the prime cost allowance that was provided in the contract. The over-run on prime cost allowance was $255,000. This covers catering equipment, stage equipment, parking equipment, hall, theatre and studio seating; and we are estimating some over-runs on the prime sum amounts on contracts which are either still to be awarded or at this stage are in the tender-call stage, which will come to roughly $60,000.

In each case these prime sum items, with the exception of some of the minor ones that have still to come, are the result of tender-calls for the specified equipment, whether seats or catering equipment.

Mr. Schreyer: Sir, how many separate tender-calls have been made during the course of the entire construction project to date?

Mr. Williams: There are the tender-calls which the Department would make and then there are tender-calls which the prime contractor is required to make under our specifications—prime sum amounts.

Mr. Schreyer: Your tender-calls would be the big ones.

Mr. Williams: That is correct.

Mr. Schreyer: You would not be involved with tender-calls for catering equipment and stage equipment?

Mr. Williams: That is correct.

Mr. Schreyer: That was the contractor.

Mr. Williams: That is right. As they are prime sum amounts he is required to provide us with the results of the tender-calls.

Mr. Schreyer: Yes.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know if you are interested in entertaining any comment, but it seems to me that the Committee should be a little curious in the case of the mis-estimating on Phase III.

In the case of Phases I and II, as Mr. Williams has said, it was only after they discovered the rock faults and the tremendous problems connected with adequate foundation piling that it was found necessary to increase the amounts to be paid to the contractors.

In the case of Phase III, however, we are dealing with construction at above foundation level.

What unforeseen set of circumstances arose that there should have been a $5 million short-fall?

Mr. Williams: The rock situation was by no means complete in Phases I and II. The major over-run in Phase III is $1,193,000, which is directly attributable to the foundation conditions.

As Phase II was a portion of the garage, and some excavation and the Mackenzie King Bridge approaches there was still rock excavation on the balance of the site to be paid for, which could only be determined in depth and extent as the design for the balance of the structure was developed. It had to be sized before you could take it all out, and so we had this situation where there was still considerable rock—a very large volume of rock—taken out in Phase III. In addition to the actual taking out of the rock, the over-run in these quantities affects the operation and schedule of the rest of the project in terms of heating and sub-contractors operations. Allowance had to be made for the adjustments we had to make in terms of time and when these people would work, bringing the project back to schedule so we would not be faced with delay claims on the part of the mechanical, the electrical, the acoustical, and all the other sub trades which would be involved with the prime contractor. The actual foundation conditions are directly attributable to, as I say, $1,193,000 of the extras in Phase III.

• 1740

Mr. Schreyer: I did not get that last sentence. Of the $5 million unanticipated cost in Phase III, approximately $5 million increase over estimated cost in Phase III, how much can be imputed to rock work and excavation et cetera?

Mr. Williams: $1,193,000.

Mr. Schreyer: How do you account for the balance?

Mr. Williams: That is one. I have given only on prime sum items. There were adjustments to the acoustical design systems at $250,000. The canal promenade, which becomes part of the building complex now but which was not included in the Phase III contract when it was called, is $260,000. That work could have been done separately in connection with the work which the N.C.C. are doing in the area generally in the development of that area, but because of the complications of having more than one outfit working on the site and the necessity of getting it done so that the rest of the site would not be disturbed subsequently we added it as an extra to the V. K. Massey Limited or Phase III contract. A sound surround system was added to the V. K. Massey project at $137,801. A federal sales tax increase—this is a standard when the 12 per cent sales tax on construction materials was provided. All contracts which had been awarded but not completed within a certain period were eligible for a sales tax adjustment, and that on the job is $200,000. There is a contingency item involved in the co-ordination of major trades and revisions to contract drawings at $1,390,000. The incorporation of art works is $160,000. There is a separate item in the budget for the provision of art works but having provided the art works and determined what they are there is a necessity for the construction contractor to make certain adjustments by means of which the visual arts can be displayed. In every case, I think the visual arts become part of the structure so there was an adjustment on practically every one that is provided.

Mr. Schreyer: Your original plans did not provide for displaying of art work?

Mr. Williams: Yes, they did. But at that stage the decision on the art works was not made. Had we known what they would have been, this item would have been automatically bid by the contractor, but establishing it afterwards we added it to his price. I might add that that is true of each of the extras. Had we known what they were, they would have been included in the original. It is payment for work done. Incorporation of post tender item, that is, the cafeteria equipment and the list of prime sum items, was $130,000. This is a normal type of charge in that when you post tender or even when you do a prime sum when the government supplies any part of anything that goes into the contract, there are always adjustments, depending on the make and size and type of equipment that you provide, required by the prime contractor, and $130,000 was paid for those. Adjustment in requirements for adjacent area developments, $70,000. Here again is reference to the adjustments we had to make as a result of the initial concept of a building going up on the Roxborough site as it is not being built now. There were some adjustments to be made and incorporated in the Arts Centre design, or else we would have had it added up till such time as we could go ahead with the proposed development, cost $70,000. Then there were miscellaneous change orders totalling to $245,698. The total of the extras is $92,000. I think you mentioned a figure of $1 million, sir.

1745

Mr. Schreyer: Yes, I was a little up there. There are two sub items that you refer to, Mr. Williams. One was the canal promenade. Here again you mentioned a figure, I believe, in the vicinity of $200,000.

Mr. Williams: That is correct.

Mr. Schreyer: Was this a case also of not having it in the original plans for the site? Was it decided upon later? Is that why it was added after the bid?

Mr. Williams: In part. It was recognized that we would have some roadway-walkway along the canal. This would be required for access and ability to use the canal. The development of it had not been made at the time called the Phase III. The N.C.C. have an overall development plan which starts at the south end of the site and continues up into Confederation Square, and initially it was thought that this would be done by them or Transport in connection with the development of it, but as the site was so congested and was being utilized to its full amount, it was realized that we had to do it along with the Mason contract. So rather than have Transport or the N.C.C. do it, it was included in this. It was contemplated but not designed in detail.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if you would allow Mr. Williams to elaborate just a little on one item that is the largest one or about the same size as the extra rock work, and that is an item for $1,390,000 which has to do with adjustment for trades, et cetera. I did not quite catch the full description he gave it—$1,390,000.

Mr. Williams: On any construction job there are always co-ordinating charges between the trades because of the impracticability of detailing on a large complex job the specific and precise location and size of every bit of pipe, every column, every re-enforcing bar, every steel beam and the rest of it. They change as the requirements change during the course of the work, which again upsets spacings and the rest of it. On this particular job there were the tender documents which included over 500 architectural, structural, mechanical and electrical drawings. The drawings were checked by the consultant in order to do as much co-ordination and checking as could be done in his time-frame. Then, having regard for the changes we subsequently introduced in terms of the acoustical, the additional cafeteria, and cafe location, there were a large number of detailing change orders, to make certain there was no inconsistency between what was done by the mechanical, the electrical and the structural, and the cost of these changes which the contractor made, because of the difference from what was indicated on the initial plans, was $1,390,000.

• 1750

Mr. Schreyer: Is this payable to the firm of V. K. Mason Limited?

Mr. Williams: That is right.

Mr. Schreyer: I pass for now, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Mr. De. Bané, do you have a supplementary?

Mr. De Bané: In this report when you speak about the consultant to whom does that refer? Is it to the Consulting Architects of Affleck, Desbarats? This is on page 14 of the French text.

Mr. Williams: I am at a disadvantage here. My text only goes to page 12.

Mr. De Bané: Page 11. In the second paragraph when you speak of the consultant, is that the architects?

Mr. Williams: Yes, They are the prime architects and Mr. Lebensold is their representative.

Mr. De Bané: May I ask a question of Mr. Lebensold on that?

The Chairman: By all means.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Lebensold, do you speak French?

Mr. Lebensold: No, but you can speak French to me.

Mr. De Bané: No, I will say it in English. It is said on page 11 that the lowest tender submitted was $31 million. The difference between the tender price and the estimate of $22 million must be attributed principally to underestimating by the consultants. Would you explain to me why your firm underestimated by $9 million the cost of Phase III?

Mr. Lebensold: I am reading the report of the Department. May I read this page?

Mr. De Bané: Of course.

Mr. Lebensold: I think it is true that errors have been made. It is quite obvious that there are errors in estimating. However, when you say errors in estimating you do not mean mathematical errors by this. The actual underestimating in this particular case was caused by very many reasons. We cannot state exactly how much each one of them was.

First of all the factors which we cite are the following: first, the strained resources of the construction industry at the time we went out to tender. This refers you, I think, to the particular construction conditions in the Montreal and Ottawa area when most of the construction industry resources were very, very strained because so much effort had been diverted towards the completion of Expo, and this had a very direct effect on the construction industry in the Ottawa area.

Mr. De Bané: When the Department says that the difference is principally attributed to your firm, principally attributed to underestimating do you accept that blame?

Mr. Lebensold: Yes, I think we can accept the blame for instance for the fact that we did not know to what degree the general contractor, in estimating a project which would take him about two and a half years to do, would have to protect himself for something that he did not know but would have to estimate for, such little things as negotiation with the various trade unions; to what degree he had to escalate his prices when he did not yet have complete agreement with some of the unions.

At that time, if I may take your memory back, this was really quite a substantial problem which had been very, very serious indeed. And now one could say that we as consultants should have foreseen all these things. I would be very happy to say that we are so wise that we can in fact foresee all these things, in which case I think one could say that we have a very extraordinary supernatural vision.

• 1755

The total fluidity of the economy at that time and the complete changes of prices did not only affect the labour market but also affected the material which is indirectly affected by the labour market.

Another thing which we consider a very very serious cause for this escalation of prices is the very, very reduced competition in the major subtrades due to the magnitude of this project and the complexity of this project and the fact that we asked the general contractor to give us a lump sum tender; that is a definite price for the job to be executed. This project is very, very complex. I think Mr. Williams has already stated this. One of the reasons, I think, is that this is a kind of project which is never repeated; it is always a prototype. And whenever you build a prototype, whether it is a building or any other kind of facility such as a boat or an airplane, you sometimes have these problems. These are not abnormal.

Yes, we accept the responsibility for the fact that we did not foresee exactly what this escalation could be. We stated that the plumbing, drainage, heating, ventilation, air conditioning, fire protection, insulation instrumentation contractors were limited to a very small group of bidders. In fact, we had an awful job at that time to find bidders who would be capable by their experience to do work of this kind. And I think we have had bids from the very finest who were interested. What kind of errors they have had—if you call them errors in escalation—we do not know because we, as architects, rely very much on the services of professional estimators. And we actually had, in this particular case entrusted the estimating of this project, before the submission of this estimate was given, to a professional estimating firm.

Mr. De Bané: On page 10 of the French version—in the English version I think it is page 7—the fourth paragraph says that the interdepartmental Committee accepted the consultants' design and the Treasury Board approved the cost of $18.2 million. Then on page 9, the fourth paragraph says that in May 1965, the Interdepartmental Committee was advised that the cost estimated at $18 million would be exceeded.

I would like to know why you waited from July 16, 1964, until May 1965 to advise the interdepartmental Committee that the provisions were going to be exceeded?

Mr. Williams: If you take in context what I receded this with, during that period excavation work was being undertaken and as we undertook it I went through the extras which arose out of those contracts, and this in itself was a clear indication that we were going to exceed the estimates. On some of it we could have said, "Well, it would have been in Phase I anyway", and we could have put it in the estimates the next time it came up with phase III, but we carried on and did it in the phase I part of the estimates. Concurrent with this was the original design concept in June of 1964. It was in this period that the activities of the advisory committee in determining criteria, acceptable solutions, and the development of the design solutions were in the hands of Mr. Lebensold and his staff. As they were going into these it was quite obvious that when you tried to meet the requirements the various mechanical items were going to exceed and as they increased you had a space problem. The more mechanical you added in in terms of provision of mechanical equipment the more you had a space problem you had a bigger hole to dig, a bigger volume to construct, and so the electrical, structural, architectural, and everything else was going up concurrent with the design.

Mr. De Bané: I understood by the fourth paragraph on page 9 that it was not until May, 1965 that the interdepartmental committee was advised, and it was told that it was impossible to project the estimates accurately until all requirements were finalized. I would like to know if that committee which was established by the Cabinet knew only on May, 1965, as that paragraph suggests, that it would not be possible at all "to project the estimates accurately". Was this found out in May, 1965 only?

• 1800

Mr. Williams: No. In the consideration of the first estimates the Department of Public Works said at that time that you could not be precise on estimates unless you knew the requirements and solutions for those.

Mr. De Bané: In May, 1965?

Mr. Williams: In May, 1965. We had also taken this position in the interdepartmental committee but, in fairness, not in any quantitative way. We said, "We do not think it is practical; that might be the estimate but it is not really practical to say how much a thing will cost if you are not sure what you are going to build". Now we did not give it in a quantitative sense beyond some minor things which we had probably sent to Treasury Board requiring their approval.

Mr. De Bané: Yes, but I remember on another occasion the Department of Public Works categorically denied the price which had been estimated and presented to the Cabinet. On page 6, the last paragraph of the French version, the third paragraph on page 5 of the English version—I am sorry...

Mr. Williams: I am the one who has to be sorry.

Mr. De Bané: ...it says that while the Department had not contributed to the development it considered it its duty to advise that the estimate of $9 million was absolutely off the track. I am wondering, when finally in June of 1964 the Treasury Board was submitted an estimate of $18.2 million, if at that time that estimate was not supposed to be more accurate. I understand, as you said, that this was unique, but if we consider the first project that was submitted you would realize instantly that $9 million was absolutely unrealistic. The point I would like to stress is this. When the authorization of Treasury Board was given on July 16 for $18.2 million the plans were not completed. Should we take for granted that a start could be made on that project without knowing what the ultimate cost might be?

Mr. Williams: Your point is well taken in that at $9 million we came out flat-footedly and said it was not realistic; at $18.2 million Public Works is not on record as saying, "It is not possible". It is quite a valid point and I cannot in any way not accept the fact that Public Works received the estimates on the basis of the preliminary designs of the consultant architect and in the terms of what they knew at that stage they accepted what the consultant had given as being reasonable.

Mr. De Bané: I see.

• 1805

Mr. Williams: There is no way that I can say we shut our eyes to what the consultant said—we were not in the position and we did not reject the estimate.

The Chairman: Now we have run over our time and I have two short supplementaries from Mr. Hales and Mr. Dinsdale.

Mr. Hales: I will make mine very short. Mr. Williams, did the Department of Public Works check, through their department of architecture the consultant's designs, plans and his estimates, or did you accept the consultant's recommendations, plans and designs at face value?

Mr. Williams: We accepted them at face value but not without discussing and examining with him what they were. Now we were aware of them but we were not in a position nor did we have as much information to check against as we would have in other projects.

Mr. Hales: In other words you must share some of the responsibility, for that $9 million that the consultants were out.

Mr. Williams: I think we do.

Mr. Hales: Secondly, did any members of your Department or the consultant's firm go to the new Metropolitan Opera House in New York—I realize it is not a multipurpose unit—to look it over and ask how much it cost per square foot to build the Metropolitan and I would like to know what the square foot cost is of this building aside from the parking or underground parts—or any other centre for that matter?

Mr. Lebensold: I have seen the Metropolitan. I think in a way it is particularly unfair to compare this building with the Met because the Metropolitan Opera House we know now has cost $45 million.

Mr. Hales: How much per square foot was their cost?

Mr. Lebensold: It is very difficult to work out exactly how much a building like this costs per square foot. We know that the total price of the Lincoln Centre was $165 million and that is without land of course.

Mr. Hales: I know, but you know the number of square feet in the Metropolitan centre.

Mr. Lebensold: We know one thing about the Metropolitan Opera House—that it has extraordinary facilities in certain respects and that is the reason why it cost so much more than the opera house here. The opera house here is not an isolated building. We have here a complex of buildings. We have not just an opera house; we have an opera house, a theatre, a studio and a whole host of other facilities such as a restaurant and parking facilities that they do not have at all.

Mr. Hales: Assuming all of that, I just want the cost per square foot of that building?

Mr. Lebensold: I cannot answer that exactly.

Mr. Hales: Would you find out, as a consultant engineer, and provide the Committee with that information?

Mr. Lebensold: Per square foot?

Mr. Hales: Yes.

Mr. Lebensold: If such information is at all available, I can give it. We do know what the cost per seat was—I think it was about $11,000. We know that there are 3,780 seats and the total cost of the building is about $46 million.

• 1810

Mr. Hales: I cannot figure that out, without taking time.

Mr. Lebensold: I would have to find out if such information is available, and I will be very happy to give that to you.

Mr. Hales: All right.

Mr. Dinsdale: I will be very brief, Mr. Chairman. The consultant has indicated that his was a prototype, something like building a new airplane and flying off into the unknown. Yet the consultant has indicated that there is experience in other similar projects. Is the consultant not an expert on these matters?

The Chairman: That is rather an unfair question.

Mr. Lebensold: I think the answer to this is either in the affirmative. You see, it is exactly the same thing as an airplane. Every time you build a new airplane you build a prototype. It does not mean to say that you have never built another airplane previously, but when you build a new one generally it provides you with a little bit of surprise. I think that it is prototypal in this effect. It is prototypal, in that the requirements that we were trying to actually provide and satisfy here were prototypal. We have, in fact, gathered the experiences of all other halls that were built up to this date, and we tried to always bring our experiences up to date. In that respect it is prototypal.

Mr. Dinsdale: One final supplementary, Mr. Chairman. Does Public Works know of any other project where a carte blanche so far as costs are concerned was made available?

Mr. Stanbury: Here comes that word again, Mr. Chairman. It was never used and there is never...

Mr. Dinsdale: I will quote then—where the economic considerations were superseded by quality and excellence.

Mr. Williams: Well, again, that statement which was made a recommendation of the National Capital Arts Alliance, was a position taken by advisory committees. It was not an instruction or any kind of direction by government or the department.

Mr. Dinsdale: It is not a usual. Is there any other instance where this was the criterion applied to a Public Works project?

Mr. Williams: It was not the criterion on this project and to my knowledge it has not been on one on any other project.

The Chairman: Mr. Schreyer.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I do not know how to raise this. Perhaps it is a point of privilege. I think that the Committee has inadvertently left a very unfair impression on the record. There has been much questioning in the past few minutes about a $9 million figure as being the original estimate. It should certainly be pointed out that this $9 million figure has to be related to an original estimate of 175,000 square feet, and not to the Centre that has been constructed, 474,000 square feet, an increase of almost two and a half times. It makes the consulting firm or firms look ridiculous, and I suggest they may have been grossly inaccurate, and sloppy even, but not...

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Schreyer has misunderstood the line of questioning, and in fairness to the questioning, and in fairness to the questioners the reference to $9 million was in paragraph 2 of page 11, the difference between the tender on Phase III or the estimate on Phase III and the tender eventually received. I do think, though...

The Chairman: I think, Mr. Stanbury, that what Mr. Schreyer was getting at is that the figure that has been used at $9 million as the total cost of the contract...

Mr. Schreyer: Right.

The Chairman:... was the one that was first used when the National Capital Arts Alliance presented its estimates.

Mr. Stanbury: That is my point. The $9 million we have been talking about in the last half hour is the $9 million difference on Phase III.

The Chairman: That is correct.

Mr. Stanbury: I think the unfairness, if any, that has been left is the suggestion that an inept architectural consultant has been hired, and I would like to ask Mr. Williams if he knows in his long experience of any firm in Canada, or indeed anywhere, that is more likely to have given you the best possible advice than this firm of Affleck and Company.

Mr. Williams: For the construction of the theatre, no.

Mr. Stanbury: Thank you.

• 1815

The Chairman: Then I declare this meeting adjourned, and we will be meeting again next Tuesday, at 11 o'clock. Since Monday is a holiday, I would ask those of you who are travelling to try and get back so we can get cracking on this.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

TUESDAY, November 12, 1968.
(9)

The Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts met this day at 11.10 a.m. The Chairman, Mr. John M. Reid, presided.

Members present: Messrs. Corbin, De Bané, Dinsdale, Fairweather, Givens, La Salle, Mongrain, Osler, Reid, Schreyer, Schumacher, Stafford—(12).

Member also present: Mr. Hales.

In attendance: From the Department of Public Works: Mr. G. B. Williams, Senior Assistant Deputy Minister; Mr. R. F. West, Chief of Design & Construction, Capital Region; Mr. H. G. Cole, Project Architect; Mr. K. Bonnell, Project Control Supervisor, Capital Region.

Also in attendance: Mr. F. Lebensold, Consulting Architect.

The Committee resumed consideration of the Revised Estimates 1968-69 of the Department of the Secretary of State—Item 2, relating to the construction of the National Arts Centre.

Mr. Williams replied to a question at the previous sitting by Mr. Givens relating to the value of the site on which the National Arts Centre is built.

Mr. Williams was examined on various aspects relating to the construction of the National Arts Centre, assisted by Lebensold.

The Chairman tabled a return from the National Arts Centre relating to salary scales at the Centre which was ordered printed as an Appendix to the proceedings of this day. (See Appendix "E")

The Chairman also tabled a document received from the National Arts Centre entitled, "A Proposal for the Musical Development of the Capital Region". (Exhibit 1)

Mr. Williams tabled the following four returns relating to the National Arts Centre which were ordered printed as Appendices to the proceedings of this day:

(a) Return to questions by Mr. Givens—a resumé of the cost estimates to date on the National Arts Centre. (See Appendix "F").

(b) Return to questions by Messrs. Givens and Hales dealing with noise level, unit cost comparisons and sump pumps. (See Appendix "G").

(c) Return to question by Mr. Osler listing Treasury Board submissions made by the Department of Public Works relative to this project. (See Appendix "H").

(d) Return to question by Mr. Schreyer listing separate tenders called by the Department of Public Works on this project. (See Appendix "I").

The examination of the witnesses still continuing, at 1.05 p.m., the Committee adjourned until 3.30 p.m. this afternoon.

AFTERNOON SITTING

(10)

The Committee resumed at 3:55 p.m. The Chairman, Mr. John M. Reid, presided.

Members present: Messrs. Corbin, De Bané, Dinsdale, Fairweather, Guibault, Matte, McCleave, Mongrain, Osler, Reid—(10).

In attendance: Same as at the morning sitting.

The Committee resumed consideration of Item 2 of the Estimates of the Secretary of State relating to the National Arts Centre.

Mr. Williams was further examined on matters relating to the National Arts Centre, assisted by Mr. Lebensold.

The examination of the witnesses being concluded, the Chairman thanked them.

At 5:00 p.m., the Committee adjourned until 11:00 a.m. Thursday, November 14.

M. Slack,
Clerk of the Committee.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Tuesday, November 12, 1968.

• 1111

The Chairman: Gentlemen, we can now begin. Mr. Williams has a statement which he would like to make on the cost of the building lot. This was requested yesterday.

Mr. G. B. Williams (Senior Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Public Works): Mr. Givens asked that a value be placed on the site on which the Centre is built and, like many other things, it is a bit complicated. You must remember that the Arts Centre site is located on property which was formerly occupied by the Ottawa City Hall, the Police Station and the Registry Office. The land was owned by the city under restrictive provisions of the Sparks estate, and the will confined its use to specific purposes. Thus the site could only be used for public purposes with the express permission of the City of Ottawa.

In summary, the site, encumbered as it was by the provision of the Sparks estate, had a nominal value only and if not used for the Performing Arts Centre it would of necessity therefore have continued for park and parkway use. If you work on the assumption, which I think is what Mr. Givens was trying to get at, of putting a value on it so you could get the total value of the present asset and if the title could have been cleared the city could have sold its portion of the site to a private developer under the zoning of January, 1964, zoning G25, and 8 as a density factor, for $800,000. If the zoning could have been changed or modified by a submission to the city under their zoning revisions in April, 1964, it could have been sold for $4 million.

In terms of value you can take it this way, that it could only be used for public purposes and with limited access, so the site value would only be intrinsic for the use of the Arts Centre rather than a commercial building, but if you could have wiped all of that out it could vary from $800,000 to $4 million.

The Chairman: Are there any questions on this particular item? In that case I recognize

Mr. DeBané, who was questioning Mr. Williams.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I believe there were to be some further returns this morning.

The Chairman: They are right here, but because we do not have a quorum it is not possible to...

Mr. Dinsdale: How can we proceed with our questioning without that information?

The Chairman: As far as I am concerned it can be distributed and you can question on that basis, but...

Mr. Dinsdale: How can we proceed with the meeting without a quorum, if we cannot have the information before us?

The Chairman: For the purpose of hearing witnesses it is possible to continue the questioning by the members who are here, and then we will have...

Mr. Dinsdale: But how can you question without the data?

• 1115

The Chairman: The proper data is right here if you want it. What would happen under ordinary circumstances is that you would not be able to get them until the next minutes of the proceedings were printed anyway, and if you would like to have the data it is right here and you can ask questions on it because it is public knowledge. Then at the next meeting all we would have to do is call for two resolutions, first to have these proceedings printed as minutes and second to print these as appendices.

Mr. Dinsdale: I think at our last meeting, Mr. Chairman, the Committee moved that we receive this information.

The Chairman: It is right here, but we lack a quorum.

Mr. Dinsdale: But it was moved at the last meeting of the Committee when we had a quorum.

The Chairman: No, what we did was this. We asked the Department of Public Works to provide us with this information, which they have done. There are two ways of receiving it. You can do it either by having it attached as an appendix to the minutes or having Mr. Williams laboriously read it into the record. My suggestion is that we circulate the copies we have and that you use it. When we have a quorum at this or the next meeting, we can then ask for a motion in the usual way to have it printed as an appendix. In this way we can proceed without messing around with procedural difficulties.

Mr. Dinsdale: It is a new one on me. It is even difficult to decide, Mr. Chairman, whether we should ask that the information be appended to the minutes until we have seen the information. How do we make our decision, sight unseen?

The Chairman: It is in tubular form. For example, we have here a very long document in reply to a question by Mr. Givens on cost estimates. It contains four pages of very concentrated figures. It would be rather an impossibility for Mr. Williams to read it into the record in such a way that it would make sense. We have no objection to making it available so that you can continue questioning on it.

Mr. Dinsdale: Statements are often made and tabled in the House of Commons and then the House decides whether the material is to be appended to Hansard. I would think the same procedure would be acceptable here; that we see it and then decide whether it should be appended to the minutes.

The Chairman: It is right here. As far as we are concerned it can be made available. There is no objection at all.

Mr. Schreyer: May I ask, Mr. Chairman, in connection with Mr. Dinsdale's theory, if you are afraid that inaccurate data might be put on the record?

Mr. Dinsdale: No, we were about to proceed with the meeting without having access to this information and I raised the point that I thought it would be useful in asking questions if we had this statistical information before us. The technical point of a lack of a quorum was raised by the Chairman. I still think we could have the information before us and then we can decide whether it should be appended to the minutes of the proceedings.

The Chairman: All right. Give this to Mr. Givens, who raised the original question, and then they can be distributed. In the meantime I will recognize Mr. De Bané and we will continue in the normal way.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Deputy Minister, if you look back at what has happened since February of 1964 and you were to do it again, would you do it in exactly the same manner?

Mr. Williams: Mr. Chairman, I am not in a position to say because the Department of Public Works was a construction agency...

• 1120

Mr. De Bané: You are an executive.

Mr. Williams: We were executing this and we were participating in an interdepartmental committee, but the determination of the program was not the department.

Mr. De Bané: Then I will put my question in another way. It is not what you would have done but what in your opinion should be done if you were to do it again. In other words, what is your reaction today to the soaring costs of that building? Did anything happen that in your opinion could have been avoided in some way? What would be the moral of all that?

Mr. Williams: Mr. Chairman, it is difficult for me to judge the morals of the situation. What was desired was a good arts centre and what has been built is a good arts centre.

Mr. De Bané: I think it is obvious that nobody here is questioning the excellence of the Arts Centre; we are mainly interested in the cost of that building and I am asking you, because there is an aspect of—I will try to say it in French, if you do not mind.

[Interpretation]

In the construction of such a large undertaking there are definitely technical, financing and engineering and other aspects, which are under the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works. I am asking you whether, in the carrying out of this project, you believe were it to be done over again, the Department of Public Works would advise another kind of construction, or would it do the same, all over again? To take just one example, whether you build an Art Centre, a wharf or an office building, there is always a question of planning. I do not know if you understand the spirit in which I am placing my question

[English]

Mr. Williams: I understand what you are getting at is that when we normally build something we estimate the cost and we do a cost benefit analysis and see if the costs equate to the benefits. Whether it is a service or a building we have to put up, we do it in relation to what perhaps it would have been for rental or something of that order, some alternative. In this case there is not an alternative. You are going to have an arts centre and what you are saying is, how would you analyse how much arts centre you wanted, in a sense, or how much an arts centre is worth to Canada.

Mr. De Bané: This really is a political question.

Mr. Williams: Yes.

Mr. De Bané: I understand that you do not like to answer that question and I think you are right. Let us be more specific; looking backwards today, what do you think of the planning of the construction of that arts centre? Was it good planning? Of course, I do not want to mix you up in political decisions.

Mr. Williams: From our standpoint it would have been preferable if all requirements had been detailed and all solutions to requirements had been established before any decision was made, say, on site and on starting the work. Ideally you would do all of these things first.

• 1125

Mr. De Bané: And may I say that not only ideally, but practically, that is what is done most of the time?

Mr. Williams: In most buildings, yes.

Mr. De Bané: May I ask, Mr. Deputy Minister, whether the Department of Public Works, as a member of the interdepartmental committee that has been set up, has expressed this view to the other members of the Privy Council, The National Centennial Administration, The Department of Finance, etc.? Was the view outlined to the other members of the committee?

Mr. Williams: Yes, in the sense that we aid at the first estimate and subsequently, as reported in my statement, that without that situation you could not be definitive on total cost.

Mr. De Bané: What was the reaction of the others in that interdepartmental committee?

Mr. Williams: Well, the decisions were made. I was at some meetings but not all of them.

Mr. De Bané: But this advice of the representatives of the Department of Public Works was not followed, unless there were complete planning before starting you would not know the definitive costs. The representatives of the Minister of Finance of the Privy Council were not impressed by your views?

Mr. Williams: Yes, they were impressed and realized that it was not definitive. Now, in fairness the Department of Public Works was not definitive and, as I said before, there is a responsibility in regard to that first estimate of $18.2 million because we accepted that as being possible.

Mr. De Bané: But not sure, because the planning was not complete.

Mr. Williams: But not sure.

Mr. De Bané: When I am able to say it in English, I will say it in English.

[Interpretation]

In the enumeration of the Committee, I see no committee dealing with the profit-earning capacity. Am I right or wrong?

[English]

Mr. Williams: You say "profitability"; I am not sure what you are getting at.

Mr. De Bané: You see, at page 2 you have, The Committee further recommended...an advisory committee on artistic requirements...Advisory Committee on Operation...on Music, Opera...Ballet-Advisory Committee on the Theatre...on Visual Arts.

Was there any committee on the operational aspect?

Mr. Williams: Yes, there was a committee on operations and that is a part in which we in Public Works were not involved, but certainly they were looking at the operational costs and what would be done, as I understand it, in the theatre.

Mr. De Bané: I understand, Mr. Deputy Minister, that in your Department you have an economic division.

Mr. Williams: Yes.

Mr. De Bané: Was that division at all involved in that project?

Mr. Williams: No; not at all. I think in fairness I should say the economic division in the Department of Public Works is principally involved in those projects which are funded from our money as opposed to other government department funds in which they have programs. They study and fund and we are the agents that carry out the work.

• 1130

Mr. De Bané: Is it the Department of Public Works that gave the instruction about the construction? I am asking this question because on page 1 in the last paragraph we see that the firm Affleck and Associates were hired as architects for the project. On page 2, from the last paragraph we see that the Department of Public Works was to design. Who did the design? We see on page 2 that the recommendations to the Cabinet were that the Public Works Department was to design, and on page 1 that Affleck and Associates were the architects. In other words, I would like to know—maybe there are not any contradictions—where the authority was and who had it.

Mr. Williams: The Department of Public Works engages consultant architects to do the design of specific buildings and the architects report to us, and out of either our own funds or other department's funds we make payments to them, but the contract to hire that architect and the authority is with the Department of Public Works. Therefore, he reports to us. He is responsible to us. In that context he becomes, in a sense, an extension of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. De Bané: Of course, I understand that in the construction of a building, normally anyway, the important instructions given to an architect are always in writing. As the spirit of that construction was excellence before cost, was that specification written in the instructions given to the architect?

Mr. Williams: No; it was not.

Mr. De Bané: It was not?

Mr. Williams: No. I may say that in the briefing and instruction that is given to the architect it is normally fairly general that in some cases the requirements for the project have been established by the Department of Public Works in advance so he is given those requirements, but along with this he will be given instructions and authority to deal with the client in the detailed development of those and getting approval of the solutions to those requirements.

The same arrangement existed here except that in this case, rather than one specific client it was a series of basically two committees—I think the Committee on Music, Opera and Ballet and the Committee on the Theatre—and the principal consultants, as well as the technical advisers to Mr. Southam. He would deal with them; He would be in direct contact with them, in some cases accompanied by our own staff who were involved in it, and in some cases directly without them. That is not an abnormal situation. It happens in situations for laboratories, schools, penitentiaries, anything that is special other than a standard.

Mr. De Bané: Did the interdepartmental committee have anything to do with the choice of the site, or was it exclusively a choice of the National Capital Commission?

• 1135

Mr. Williams: No, it was a decision of the interdepartmental committee.

Mr. De Bané: On page 1 there is a distinction in paragraph 4, which reads:

The National Capital Commission was instructed to recommend a suitable site for the Centre.

and on page 2, the fourth paragraph says that the recommendations of this interdepartmental committee were accepted along with the recommendation from the National Capital Commission. Why make the distinction for the site?

Mr. Williams: The instruction, in reporting to Cabinet the recommendation of the Committee, was that the site be examined, the National Capital Commission making a recommendation on the site.

Mr. De Bané: They had to approve it first.

Mr. Williams: That is correct. Then the committee received that recommendation and presented its total recommendation. As pointed out—and I think it is appropriate to say so in relation to what I said at the last hearing—the Public Works Department indicated the difficulty on that site, but that does not imply that the Department of Public Works said it was the wrong site.

The difficulties of that site are one factor, but only one factor. The other factors were the advantages of that site in terms of what it would do for the development of the Capital area, and the committee would consider all of the aspects in making the decision and recommendation to Cabinet.

Mr. De Bané: From the third paragraph of page 1 we see that the Committee included representatives of the Department of Veterans Affairs. Does that imply that already we have been looking to that fact?

Mr. Williams: No; actually there were, in a sense, two reasons why the Department of Veterans Affairs was involved in this. Part of it was because the individual who at the time was the Deputy Minister of Veterans Affairs was an individual who was much interested in and nationally known for his activities in art productions—I hope I did not put that too broadly—but in any case particularly interested in the field of music. Therefore, he was invited to sit on the Committee because of the input he could make.

At the same time some consideration was given to one of the sites recommended or looked at by the National Arts Alliance of possible use by Veterans Affairs, so on the two counts he became part of the Committee.

Mr. De Bané: When you say at page 5 that you believe that this increase—going to that site—has been some $7 million, do you believe that today, or did you believe that at that time?

Mr. Williams: No, that was not evident. The cost of what it would do was not at that stage evident because, as I explained in the previous evidence, at that stage we had not designed, or had not made a decision on parking garages and many other things which affected the additional cost of that site proposed to another site.

Mr. De Bané: But when we take such a decision, are we not interested in knowing how much it would cost? I understand that excellence has priority over economics, but I have the opinion that site was chosen without enough planning. Am I unfair in saying that?

Mr. Williams: At the time the decision was made we did not know how much it would add to the cost of the Arts Centre.

Mr. De Bané: This is my point. Is it not ad to take a decision without knowing?

Mr. Williams: It is preferable to know, certainly.

The Chairman: I wonder if I might interrupt here. I have a number of documents which I would like to have attached to the Minutes of Proceedings. The first is a letter from Mr. Gravelle, Secretary of the National Arts Centre Corporation providing us with some information as to the grades of employees at the Centre, and secondly informing us that they had given us three copies of a document entitled "A Proposal for the Musical Development of the Capital Region", which was submitted by Mr. Louis Applebaum, the musical adviser. They will be available at the Clerk's office and may be picked up at your convenience and read.

May I have a motion to have this letter printed as an Appendix to our Minutes of Proceedings?

Mr. De Bané: I so move.

Motion agreed to.

The Chairman: Secondly, I have these other documents that were submitted to us today by Mr. Williams. The first is in reply to a question by Mr. Osler of Mr. Williams of the Department of Public Works on November 7, 1968, in English and in French. The second one is in reply to questions by Mr. Givens and Mr. Hales. The third is a reply to a question by Mr. Schreyer of Mr. Williams. The fourth is a reply to a question by Mr. Givens of Mr. Williams.

May I have a motion to have these printed as Appendices to today's Minutes of Proceedings?

Mr. Dinsdale: I so move.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Givens: Was the evaluation of the land given orally or is it somewhere in here?

The Chairman: It was given orally just before you came in. Mr. Givens, to be fair I think perhaps we should initiate a new round of questioning for those members who got this information from Mr. Williams today so that they might ask supplementaries. I would also recognize you on questions concerning the tremendous costs attributed to the improvement of noise level. Following that we will have Mr. Hales, if he has any supplementaries. Mr. Givens, do you have any questions on that particular item?

Mr. Givens: I think we are satisfied—and also Mr. Hales—that this might not necessarily be the last figure on the matter of the noise level. The matter of the noise level which had to do with the increased cost was merely to accommodate the operation of the machinery, and so on, and to keep it down to an acceptable noise level of about 15 decibels. However, this does not involve what I was trying to get at, namely, that from a performance standpoint we do not really know at this stage whether we have achieved the epitome of satisfactory acoustical values of the chamber, and we will not know until we attend on opening night. You work in accordance with the present standard of the arts in sound development, but it is conceivable that you could have the same catastrophic situation notwithstanding your best planning, and everything, such as they have had in the Symphony Hall of the Lincoln Centre. I think we are agreed on that.

Mr. Williams: It is conceivable. We have done our best to see that it does not happen.

The Chairman: I want to make one thing clear, that when it comes to the noise level from the heating and ventilation systems that this will be 15 decibels or lower. That aspect has been looked after. Is that correct?

Mr. F. Lebensold (Consulting Architect, National Arts Centre): That was not the exact statement, Mr. Chairman, that was referred to. It was not to be 15 decibels or lower. If my memory serves me correctly, I think it was slightly different than that.

Mr. Williams: What I said was that it was to be 25 decibels maximum and they were to attempt to achieve 15.

• 1145

The Chairman: That is one aspect. The acoustics, the quality of the sound, was another aspect.

Mr. Williams: That is correct.

The Chairman: You have achieved the result you wanted on the question of the noise level from the equipment. That has been achieved, but the other matter is still open until we find out how it works.

Mr. Lebensold: That is right.

Mr. Williams: The acoustics will be as they seem to the ear of the audience, or particularly the critics. In general the audience will have excellent acoustics and I am sure they will be generally satisfied. From my knowledge of this, and from what I have learned in the process of trying to get the acoustics to the best degree that can be attained, there will always be some conductor, some singer or some maestro of an opera who will say that the acoustics are not to his liking. What is provided in this theatre is something which, I understand, is an attempt in this direction to a degree that has not been tried elsewhere. There is a control of range over the spoken word, music and singing, but we can meet the requirements of any one of them. However, an absolute guarantee that someone will not complain cannot be given.

Mr. Givens: Do you have a cost factor per square foot for the Lincoln Centre in New York? This is No. 2. The Met is not exactly the same.

The Chairman: Will you speak to that, Mr. Lebensold?

Mr. Lebensold: I will speak to this. The figures for the Lincoln Center are extraordinarily difficult to extract. The buildings are owned and operated by the Lincoln Center. However, all the supplementary space is owned by the State of New York and there is absolutely no way of extracting this information. They are the owners and operators of all the supplementary space.

Mr. Givens: What about Charlottetown and Winnipeg, do we have figures on those centres?

Mr. Lebensold: If I remember correctly the question was to compare the Ottawa Centre with similar facilities.

Mr. Givens: Where it is shown—

Mr. Lebensold: We were the architects of the Charlottetown centre and it is not comparable at all, because it has one small theatre as part of the complex and the other facilities are a library, an art gallery, and so on. It is hardly a comparative kind of building. Winnipeg is not a centre in the nature of the one we have here. The reason the Metropolitan Opera House is actually on this list is because you have specifically asked for that cost.

Mr. Hales: I would like to follow up Mr Givens' questions. According to these figures it would appear that we have a real bargain in the National Arts Centre, and I am not prepared to accept that. I do not think we have. There must be some differences in these comparisons. The figures for the Kennedy Centre and the Metropolitan Opera House must include the cost of land, garage, and so on, whereas in the National Arts Centre does that include the value of the land, garage space, and so on?

Mr. Lebensold: I can categorically state that in the first, second or third the price of land is not included.

Mr. Hales: No land in any of them?

Mr. Lebensold: There is no land included in any of them.

Mr. Hales: What about the high cost of our underground garage?

Mr. Lebensold: It compares rather favourably with the high cost of the underground garages at Kennedy Centre.

Mr. Hales: In all three cases do these prices per square foot include cost of parking?

Mr. Lebensold: In the first two cases, yes.

Mr. Hales: Where is the discrepancy between $42 a square foot for our centre and these others?

Mr. Lebensold: Ours is a little more economical and, as you stated before, it is a bargain.

• 1150

Mr. Hales: Even with the high cost of digging out the rock and putting the garage, the tunnel and the approaches all underground?

Mr. Lebensold: I stated that it was a high cost, as you have.

Mr. Hales: In view of our high costs of building, the underground garage, tunnels and everything, are all included in this $42 per square foot.

Mr. Lebensold: That is quite correct. I would like to repeat again. I disagree with the statement "high costs".

Mr. Hales: Well, I think that you would agree that it costs more to put a garage in rock than it does above the ground.

Mr. Lebensold: I entirely agree with that. That is why the comparison between the Kennedy Centre and the National Arts Centre is appropriate, because they are both underground.

Mr. Hales: Well, maybe we could have the cost of the Charlottetown and the Winnipeg centres at a later date. I know we did not ask for them the other day. You have no other observations to make, Mr. Lebensold?

Mr. Lebensold: One centre I did not think was fair to include, and that is the Sydney Opera House which is very comparative as far as facilities are concerned. The reason I did not think it was fair was because it would only show the Ottawa centre as much too much of a bargain, and also because the Sydney Opera House, as you probably know, has had a rather sad experience in that the original requirements which were stipulated for the architects, some 11 or 12 years ago I think, have not been met. We have stuck to our requirements. We have provided what has been asked for. Also, one should bear something else in mind and that is that Kennedy Centre is not scheduled for completion for quite some time. Kennedy Centre is not being built under the lump sum method that we have here in Ottawa. Therefore the Kennedy Centre figures which we have here of $58 a square foot should still be viewed with some possibility of escalation.

Mr. Hales: What about comparison of seating capacity between the three?

Mr. Lebensold: They are all different.

Mr. Hales: Could you give us the seating capacity for each one?

The Chairman: I wonder when you are getting at the figures, Mr. Williams, from the Charlottetown and the Winnipeg centres, if we might also have the Sydney Opera House figures too, if available, so as to round them out.

Mr. Williams: To the extent that the Sydney figures are available we can provide them. We will provide the seating capacities of all of them. Actually, it would be better if I provided them. I have them in my papers here.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler on a supplementary.

Mr. Osler: I certainly sympathize with and agree with the statement about the Charlottetown and Winnipeg buildings because they are quite different types of buildings entirely. But the only area that intrigues me about this whole thing is the escalation—the seeming out-of-controlness—of the financial situation from the beginning.

The Chairman: I wonder, Mr. Osler, if you could hold that particular question until later. We are getting supplementaries on this document on questions asked by Mr. Givens.

Mr. Osler: These figures are very useful, but could we have any idea of the overages that have been involved? The Kennedy one is not completed so it would be impossible to get that, but I do know that the Winnipeg one, for instance, did not go over its estimate substantially. Now it is a different type of building, but all the way through my point is that they knew where they were going because they knew they had only so much money and that was that. And I do not know whether the same situation applied to Charlottetown. I would like to know whether it applied to Lincoln Centre. What was the escalation factor in these three buildings? You cannot give me the Kennedy one because you say it is not completed.

• 1155

Mr. Lebensold: It is very, very difficult to answer this question in a very simple manner because each one of these buildings has a completely different set of circumstances. I think one of the explanations which was given to you the last time for this escalation was in fact the complexity and size of the project. Some of the buildings which you mentioned admittedly contained a theatre nowhere near the kind of complexity we are talking about here. The closest ones are in fact Kennedy and Sydney and Lincoln Centre, of those recently built, of course. There were some of similar types built a long time ago. I do not think any figures exist on these. The escalation on all these has been quite astronomical especially in the case of Sydney. Really, I refrain from bringing Sydney into it because it has such an unfortunate history which was really public knowledge.

The Chairman: Any further questions?

Mr. Hales: Could we have the seating capacity in these three now?

Mr. Williams: Yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary on this particular document. I take it, Mr. Lebensold, that you are quite familiar with the Lincoln Centre, the Kennedy Centre and the problems deriving therefrom. It did not help us in resolving the same pitfalls here in Ottawa, Or did it inspire us to build in the same direction?

Mr. Lebensold: It is very difficult to answer this in a simple manner again, because each one of those buildings has been conceived in a different manner and built in a different manner. The Lincoln Centre has not been built as one complex. It was built actually in pieces. In fact, it is not quite complete yet. It is much larger and quite complex. The Kennedy Centre is not complete yet. Actually there is very little to show as far as construction is concerned and as far as I know from my discussions with the architect of the Kennedy Centre in Washington, the planning on it is not complete yet.

Mr. Dinsdale: These were mostly private projects, too.

Mr. Lebensold: I think in the case of Lincoln Centre probably the answer is yes. I do not quite know exactly what the structure of financing really was in both to speak on this.

Mr. Dinsdale: Not subject to the usual restrictions of public financing. This is the problem we are wrestling with here—how the costs got out of control under the watchful guidance of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Givens: There was a great deal of public financing in the Lincoln Centre. It was an urban renewal area for one thing, with slum clearance.

There were people who made contributions of $100,000 each but that is only a portion of it. A great deal of the public money went into it. The State contributed and so did New York City, and there were people who were watching there too.

Mr. Lebensold: I stated that I agreed with Mr. Givens. That is the reason I gave before. That is why it is so difficult to obtain the total figure of the cost of Lincoln Centre because the open areas that are part and parcel of the Centre, such as all the open terraces, all the parking and so on, have been financed by the State of New York. They are owned by the State of New York and the Lincoln Centre does not even know what the value of that facility is. That is why I could not get it.

The Chairman: Mr. Schreyer.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if the Committee has established whether we get the construction cost per square foot for the Winnipeg Centre?

The Chairman: Yes. We have asked for that for Charlottetown and also for Sydney, inasmuch as these figures are available.

• 1200

Mr. Schreyer: And in so far as they are relevant.

The Chairman: That apparently has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer Mr. Williams to page 3 of his testimony or his written statement. It seems to me this is the heart of the matter. We are told that the National Arts Alliance and all of the consultants that they had engaged and the interdepartmental committee as well, all accepted the proposition of an arts centre with 175,000 square feet in the initial instance. We are told that from an artistic point of view this was acceptable and adequate. Who made the decision that this was not adequate? Who made the decision to increase the size three or four times?

Mr. De Bané: Was that a supplementary, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: We are still dealing with supplementaries on Mr. Givens's document. After that we propose to review the remaining documents, including yours, before going on to questions, if this is agreeable.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, we have been sitting for two days with Public Works officials and I do not believe you have called me out for a line of questioning. I have just been given the privilege of putting supplementaries.

The Chairman: Well suppose I call your document on the tenders and so on and you then proceed to question along that line. I am quite certain that an experienced parliamentarian like you will be able to work your questions in. I will give you the floor and you then can ask questions on your own document—with the usual latitude the Chair has been allowing.

Mr. Schreyer: I take it that this document showing all the separate tenders called by the Department of Public Works is complete.

I refer to those cases where you called tenders, then accepted the lowest bid, the lowest bid in some cases being only slightly less than the second lowest bid and so on, and then subsequently, after the work was in process, it was found that there would have been adjustments in respect of extras and so on. Has the Department of Public Works received any complaints from any of the other firms that have bid that the amount of adjustment for extras would put the lowest bid considerably above the second or third lowest bid?

Mr. Williams: No, we have received no complaints. And when you speak of extras you must realize that that concerns work that was not in the bid. It is an additional payment for additional work the contractor had to do.

Mr. Schreyer: Let me just rephrase the question slightly. At any phase when you called tenders was it necessary subsequently for the Department of Public Works to engage in a process of adjustment with the contractors leaving—extras completely out of it? Was it necessary to adjust the figure because of misestimating in the first place?

Mr. Williams: No, the contract we enter into is very explicit, that the adjustments that can be made are only in relation to things which we did not include at the time we called the tenders—that is, changes in design or additional work, or a change in the specified conditions which we put on the contract at the time we called it. These are the only things that you can pay for—something that is specific. You measure the actual extra work he does and you pay him for that either by "a negotiated price", or on a cost-plus basis.

Mr. Schreyer: A major problem was encountered in the foundation work. It was found after the work started that there were really many unexpected problems due to rock fault and so on. How did the Department deal with this problem—by way of extra compensation, adjustment or what?

• 1205

Mr. Williams: On the previous day I went through the extras on each one, explained what they were, and those are the extra amounts he was paid. In the case of rock, for example, in the contract with The Foundation Co. of Canada Ltd., there was a specified limit of excavation included in the contract and a portion of the garage to be built. As I indicated in the previous testimony, because of the nature of the site we knew there would be adjustments required because we were reasonably sure that what we specified would not be exact. So the extra was beyond the limit of what we had indicated to be excavated, and then we negotiated with the contractor for a unit price to take that out. The negotiations on the unit price were based on what the costs were in taking out that part included in his contract.

Mr. Schreyer: Cost-plus.

Mr. Williams: In that case we got a flat unit price. It was not cost-plus. We negotiated a price per cubic yard, measured it, and then paid him that amount.

Mr. Schreyer: More specifically, when it was found that because of rock fault there would have to be quite a lot of grouting done, was that dealt with, again, on an extra payment basis?

Mr. Williams: Yes, he was paid extra for the grouting work he did.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I will return now to the other question I posed. I would like to know who made the decision that the original concept and plans as put forward by the National Capital Arts Alliance, all their consultants and inter-departmental committees, was lacking?

Mr. Hales: Mr. Schreyer, if you would not mind a supplementary before leaving this list, I notice on page 2, garage structure, that the Foundation Company of Canada Limited received a tender. Did they not go broke during the process of this building?

Mr. Williams: No.

Mr. Hales: Am I thinking of another company?

Mr. Williams: Yes.

Mr. Hales: Is it correct that the estimated cost was $2 million and the firm you gave the tender to was just a little over $1 million? I am referring to page 2; the Foundation Company of Canada, Ltd. (Montreal) got a contract for $1,049,620.00 and the estimated cost was $2 million.

Mr. Williams: The document, as you have it, is correct. That was the original estimate. However, at the time we went to tender, from my knowledge of what had happened on the previous contract, we reduced the block area and called for less than was included in the $2 million estimate.

Mr. Hales: Then should not this estimated cost be revised? It should not be $2 million then.

Mr. Williams: That is correct; it should have been revised in the statement you have in front of you.

Mr. Hales: Can you give us your estimated cost then—correct estimated cost?

Mr. Williams: I can give you the adjusted one we made immediately before we went to tender. I will provide that.

Mr. Hales: Who prepared that?

Mr. Williams: That would be prepared by the consultant architect and the Department of Public Works because at that stage the garage situation had not been totally decided. One and a quarter million dollars is the appropriate figure, sir.

Mr. Hales: So we should cross out this $2 million and put $1¼ million there?

Mr. Williams: That is correct, sir.

Mr. Hales: Whose responsibility was it to ask Treasury Board for this expenditure?

Mr. Williams: The Department of Public Works.

• 1210

Mr. Hales: When you went to Treasury Board, not only for this amount but other amounts during the course of the building were you confronted with many questions by them why this was escalating from time to time?

Mr. Williams: Yes.

Mr. Hales: Were you able to satisfy Treasury Board on every occasion that they should okay the money?

Mr. Williams: We made our submissions including those having to do with money, and they were subsequently approved on the basis of their judgment from the information we gave. I am not familiar with the process by which they make their decision.

Mr. Hales: Were there any great delays on Treasury Board's part?

Mr. Williams: Not great delays, to my knowledge.

Mr. Hales: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Mr. Schreyer?

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Hales' questioning brings to mind a supplementary which I will ask in my own questions. Mr. Williams has been in Public Works a long time and perhaps he can explain why there seems to be so much apparent inconsistency with regard to tendering practices by the Crown.

I can think of specific instances in which, after a contractor has bid on a given project and circumstances unforeseen have arisen and caused considerable expense to the contractor, there is no willingness or readiness on the part of the Crown to reopen the contract and to make adjustments. I can think of the case of the construction of the Red River Floodway where circumstances entirely unforeseen in the underground soil and rock formation were such that many contractors were put almost to the wall. The Crown was not prepared to reopen the matter. But here there was, it seems to me, a very ready willingness to make adjustments and to pay on a per unit basis the added cost to the contractor. How do you explain this apparent inconsistency?

Mr. Williams: There is not an inconsistency, as I see it. I am not that familiar with the Red River Floodway contract, but to relate to the specific extra rock you are talking of, that was more quantity than we had shown in the tender. He was doing—

Mr. Schreyer: I am not questioning the extra quantity; I am questioning the fact that because it was found that there was rock fault which required extra grouting work and extra expense to the contractor, adjustments were apparently made.

Mr. Williams: That is correct, because he was not required to grout. He was required to excavate. The grouting was something that we added because we were not satisfied with the rock at that elevation and we wanted to make it impervious. So in addition to excavating we instructed him to grout and then we would pay for that.

There is also a clause in the standard government regulations which specifically refers to soil conditions and it says that if the conditions that we depict in the tender documents are issue are wrong, the Department will negotiate for an increase in price if it costs him more, or an allowance for it, or a credit if it is less.

Mr. Schreyer: You justify the practice, then, on the basis of the wording of the contract, the contract provided.

Mr. Williams: That is correct. It provides this. It is equity of a contract which is written into the contract.

Mr. Schreyer: Very good, thank you. I return now to this main question which is in the pursuit of excellence. After all we had the submission of the National Arts Alliance and its advisers and consultants that such and such a centre with such and such an area would, from an artistic point of view, be adequate and acceptable. Now why would this change so drastically from 175,000 to 474,000 square feet? Who changed it?

Mr. Williams: I shall refer to the opening statement, where I said: The original concept provided by the National Arts Alliance in 1963 and accepted by the Interdepartmental Committee contemplated that these requirements could be met in a group of theatres with a floor area of 175,000 square feet. However, if you will look on page 4 in which I continue to talk of their cost figures I stated:

• 1215

Their cost figures—

and “their” is the National Arts Alliance.

—were naturally developed around costs which they had obtained on other theatres which had been constructed in the past. They recognized, however, that they were introducing new features in the multipurpose concept in which excellence was to be guaranteed for a wide variety of performances.

And I carried on pointing out that while that is what they said was the solution, they also added the riders to it that they wanted more. So it is not a case of someone making a decision that that is enough and someone else saying it is not. The National Arts Alliance went as far as they could go in terms of an estimate and said something better is required.

Mr. Schreyer: Now I am a little confused, Mr. Chairman, because on one page we are told that the Alliance acting on the basis of the advice received from its consultant made a submission in which they talked about the construction of an arts centre with an area and so on of 175,000 square feet. This was changed and I would like to know what body made the decision that this was inadequate as to size and opted for a centre three times larger.

Mr. Williams: The extension or the expansion of the building, and consequently of costs, was the direct result of the establishment of the requirements by the advisory committee on what was to be done in the centre. These were developed and priced as they were developed.

Mr. Schreyer: But you say, sir, that the original concept provided by the Alliance and accepted by the Interdepartmental Committee contemplated a group of theatres with a floor area of 175,000 square feet; that the Interdepartmental Committee had accepted that in the initial instance.

Mr. Williams: Yes.

Mr. Schreyer: It was later changed. Did the Interdepartmental Committee change their minds and make a new submission to Treasury Board?

Mr. Williams: No.

Mr. Schreyer: Surely it can be told specifically what group or what body made the decision to increase the size of this proposed arts centre.

Mr. Williams: The process there was that they accepted the report and concept with the riders of the National Arts Alliance. This was acceptance of a program to build an arts centre and this they put forward. As I have indicated the National Arts Alliance had placed an estimate of $9 million which was not accepted by Public Works nor contributed to by Public Works. This was given to the Interdepartmental Committee.

Mr. Schreyer: This $9 million was based on 175,000 square feet?

Mr. Williams: That is correct. Having received this, the Interdepartmental Committee, again as recommended by the National Arts Alliance, set up the advisory groups to determine the requirements. And the requirements determined by the advisory groups were in excess of what the National Arts Alliance had looked at in the first place. But the setting up and the consideration of the various groups to determine the requirements was also a recommendation of the National Arts Alliance.

Mr. Schreyer: I do not know if this is a reflection on the National Arts Alliance, but presumably this is a group made up of men and women interested in and somewhat experienced in the arts and what is needed in the way of a centre for the performing arts. They make a submission which they feel is adequate and a year later it is changed drastically. It seems to be a reflection on their judgment. Not only that, but I presume that they engaged the services of consultants.

I would like to know how much was paid out for consultant services in 1963 and the first half of 1964. It would seem that whatever was paid to consultants was a waste of money, because ultimately a decision was made to scrap completely their first submission and to go for a centre that would be three times as large.

• 1220

Mr. Williams: As I pointed out, the National Arts Alliance was a public body and was not financed by government. To my knowledge it was not financed by government.

Mr. Schreyer: But the consultants' fees were, though.

Mr. Williams: No.

Mr. Schreyer: None at all?

Mr. Williams: None at all. This was a gratuitous thing which they sent to the government. Now I must also point out that their prices were net figures for what they thought would be carried on. But they fully realize that they had not developed to the stage that would be required were they to build one. This is why they said, "Get your advisory committees working early".

Mr. Schreyer: Perhaps it is not fair to cast any aspersion or doubt on the work that was done by the National Arts Alliance, but when they make a submission to the authorities—in this case, the Department of Public Works—on the basis of a plan calling for 175,000 square feet, the question should be asked whether it was deemed completely inadequate.

One hundred and seventy-five thousand square feet seems to me to be large enough. Is the O'Keefe Centre much larger than that? I think it is about the same size.

The original plans called for 4,800,000 cubic feet. Again, the O'Keefe Centre is somewhere in that vicinity.

The question to which I am interested in getting an answer is why it was felt that the original concept of a centre of 175,000 square feet was so inadequate that it had to be completely scrapped.

Mr. Williams: I cannot answer much more fully, sir; than to say that what they said they wanted done could not be accommodated in the general space. In the terms of the study by the Advisory Committees for determining requirements they could not be accommodated in their figure of 175,000 feet.

What is being done, and what is provided, you see, is not comparable to the O'Keefe Centre; it could not be done. Therefore, the judgment of the Advisory Committees was that it could not be done and that more space and more facility were required.

Mr. Schreyer: Yes; I understand that the O'Keefe Centre and the National Arts Centre are quite different in design and intended function, but perhaps I put too much faith in the work that was done by the National Arts Alliance.

It seems to me that if they were making a submission in which they were thinking in terms of three major proposals—an opera, a theatre and a salon—and they were thinking if these three, were they not?—they were thinking in terms of 175,000 square feet.

Mr. Williams: That is correct.

Mr. Schreyer: And these were men and women who have considerable knowledge of what is needed from an artistic point of view in an arts centre. Was it the Department of Public Works or Treasury Board that made the decision to go from this proposal to the one we have now?

Mr. Williams: It was, again, the Advisory Committees which determined the requirements of what we have built.

Mr. Schreyer: The Advisory Committees, made up of personnel from various departments?

Mr. Williams: No; from the various arts—those in opera, ballet and the theatre—of whose efforts Mr. Southam was the co-ordinator. They determined the requirements. These were approved by the Inter-departmental committee which is made up of government, those in the Advisory Committees were of the theatre in its various forms.

The Chairman: Mr. Williams, perhaps it could be of assistance to us to have available the reports of these various committees. We have the one on the musical development. Perhaps we could have one on each of the others. They could be distributed to the Members, if there are sufficient copies. If not, perhaps we could have one copy of each for the Clerk's files, which could be then made available to Members who wished to look at them.

Mr. Williams: They would be reporting to Mr. Southam.

The Chairman: Perhaps after this meeting I will get in touch with Mr. Southam and ask him if this could be done.

Mr. Osler: I have a supplementary on that line of questioning. It is probably not your responsibility, but I, as, I think, was Mr. Schreyer, am trying to find out whose responsibility it is.

Getting back to this 175 versus 474, I presume that in this discussion we are entirely setting apart the garage facilities. In other words, in the complex being built, which is the complex about which we are actually talking rather than the one that was originally proposed, having regard for the requirements established by the Advisory Committee such-and-such was decided upon.

Mr. Williams: That is right.

Mr. Osler: That implies that somebody made a decision having regard for, but not necessarily following. For you to be firmer than I am suggesting you are being why do you not change your words slightly and say "In the complex being built, which follows the concept of the Advisory Committees"? What you are saying is "Having regard for the concept of the Advisory Committees," which really implies that somebody else took that and built something else on top of it. This is what I think Mr. Schreyer is trying to get at.

I do not think it is your responsibility, but somebody must have changed the name of the game before it started.

Mr. Williams: I am trying to be quite clear about it, in our terms, that the Advisory Committees were instructed to determine the requirements and advise the architect on what were the criteria for each aspect, to which he had to provide a solution.

Presumably they started from the National Arts Alliance report, and these, the requirements they came up with and to which the architect had to provide the solutions, were more than those in the National Arts Alliance report.

Mr. Osler: All right; but who is "they"?

Mr. Williams: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Osler: Who is "they"? This is what we are trying to find out.

The Chairman: "They" are the Advisory Committees.

Mr. Williams: The Advisory Committees that set up the requirements. They gave their requirements to the architect who developed solutions for them, and the cost estimates for these were presented to the Interdepartmental Committee and by it to Treasury Board for approval; and they were approved.

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale, on a supplementary.

Mr. Dinsdale: Would this substantial increase in the concept of the Centre for the Performing Arts represent an attempt to combine, on this particular location, which was originally reserved for a convention site, the National Centre for the Performing Arts and the convention complex which was originally conceived by the Parkin Plan and was not contemplated as moving forward for some considerable time?

Mr. Williams: No. Sir the Arts Centre it was recognized that the facilities for, or requirements of, a convention might be met, but it was not designed as a convention hall. In the Parkin Plan there was a convention hall, as originally presented.

The City of Ottawa, in the meantime, has made certain provision for conventions, and, as far as I know, in the Parkin Plan, which again is not a fixed plan, there is still provision for convention facilities.

• 1230

Mr. Dinsdale: The National Centre for the Performing Arts has expanded to such an extent that it has practically usurped the site that was originally designated for the convention centre and which was quite specifically outlined in press reports back in 1963, for example.

Mr. Williams: We may not be referring to the same report, but the convention hall—at least in one of the plans, the Parkin Plan that I have some knowledge of—was not on the site where the Arts Centre is now, but across the canal on the site of the Union Station.

Mr. Dinsdale: According to the newspaper reports back in 1963, and I have got them before me, it was quite a substantial complex of public buildings and the approach to the Mackenzie King Bridge was to have been the main vista and so on, and it appears that the whole plan has been changed in midstream which would account for the tendency to grow like Topsy as has been indicated as we have been proceeding with this investigation.

Mr. Williams: Concerning the Parking Plan, you have a newspaper report before you with which I am not familiar, but there was certainly a complex that involved a convention centre and the one I am familiar is one which at one stage, anyway, was designated as being where the Union Station is. I am not aware of one that had it on precisely the site that is now the National Arts Centre.

Mr. Dinsdale: Perhaps I can approach it from this direction: Speed seemed to have been of the utmost importance in this development and major changes took place as represented by the increase of the building in square feet. I suppose when you move speedily towards some specific target date—and I think in this instance it was Centennial year—you are bound to run into the problems that have been so clearly outlined here.

Mr. Williams: Certainly the desire to meet a date is a factor in cost. There is no argument about this; this is true in any plan.

Mr. Dinsdale: Then I suppose this is what gave rise to the formula, excellence and quality and not necessarily economy, to meet that July 1 target date.

The Chairman: It would seem to me that it would be easier to do it slipshod if you wanted to do it on a quick basis, rather than excellence.

Mr. Williams: I am not sure whether that is a question for me to answer, sir.

The Chairman: He is asking for your opinion.

Mr. Williams: It is an expression of a philosophy. Certainly in terms of trying to meet a date there is a tendency to start things before you have total decision. That is agreed; there is no question about it, and this can be hazardous or, on the other hand, it can provide a slipshod job. It can go either way. In this case the decision was made that we were going to do a good job of what we were doing.

The Chairman: Do you have a supplementary, Mr. De Bané?

Mr. De Bané: I think, Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of a supplementary. I was asking questions. You recognized me at the beginning of the meeting and suddenly we shifted to another subject. I will try to come back to my point.

The Chairman: Then perhaps since you have corrected me, quite rightly, we could go on with these other documents. I have recognized Mr. Osler and his series of...

• 1235

Mr. Williams: Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt for a moment? This has to do with Mr. Schreyer's question and in giving my evidence the previous day I gave misinformation on who called the tenders for prime cost items. You will note in your documents that I have listed the prime cost items and I said that the tenders had been called by the prime contractor and awarded subject to the Department. In fact the Department called the tenders for those prime cost items and then assigned them as subcontracts to the prime contractor.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler's information here concerns Treasury Board's submissions made by the Department of Public Works and Mr. Schreyer also had an enquiry of the Chairman concerning the desirability of having Treasury Board provide this information. I want to ask Mr. Schreyer whether this would be sufficient.

Mr. Schreyer: I think so.

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order before Mr. Osler starts, and I ask this for clarification, what will be the end result of what I consider this exercise in futility? Obviously we are not going to dismantle the building and throw it into the canal. What are we going to do? Will we table the report in the House? Is this what will finally emanate from this Committee?

The Chairman: Presumably.

Mr. Givens: And the report will be just a report for information?

The Chairman: The usual report, when you are doing estimates as we are doing, is that the Committee has considered the estimates and commends them to the pleasure of the House.

Mr. Givens: I see.

The Chairman: If the Committee should so desire we might provide a lengthy report on the particular item with which we spent a great deal of time and this would be something for the steering committee to determine. Should they decide to do this a report would be written which would then be presented to the Committee for approval.

Mr. Givens: Other than that there is no positive action to be taken; something to be done or something to be built. I mean, it is a fait accompli and...

The Chairman: That is right.

Mr. Givens: When we are through flogging the horse the buildings are there and that is all there is to it.

Mr. Williams: Bury the horse.

Mr. Givens: That is correct.

The Chairman: Early in the new year I hope that we will have an opportunity to examine in much more detail the coming operational budget of the National Arts Centre which I think will be of great importance.

Mr. Givens: That is operations; that has nothing to do with the physical plant.

The Chairman: That is right.

Mr. Givens: Thank you.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Givens does not realize that the nation is waiting to have a copy of this report on every kitchen table.

Mr. Mongrain: Order, please, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Mr. Fairweather, you are not speaking into a microphone.

Mr. Fairweather: It is just as well.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Fairweather said that the nation was waiting with bated breath to hear about this.

The Chairman: Then perhaps we could arrange to have a gaudy cover printed for our report. Mr. Osler?

Mr. Osler: So long as the nation does not have to have its kitchen table taken away to pay for the damn thing. It may not have a kitchen table by the time the report comes out.

I do not know that I am going to have any questions, and the question of whether we should ask the Treasury Board is something that I would like to clarify in my own mind.

These figures if taken together add up to $60,979,000 odd and yet we are talking about $45 million. Could somebody just very briefly lead me by the hand and tell me, do we add these figures?

Mr. Williams: No, sir. The submissions to the Treasury Board arise from the contract regulations that if you have an extra you must have Treasury Board approval of that specific item, or if you are going to engage a consultant you must have a Treasury Board approval to do so. They have to be listed here because they are actual submissions we have made, but also included in these are over-all requests to Treasury Board for approvals of budgets which would include the individual items. For example, the $18.2 you will notice is a budget item; it includes many of the individual submissions.

Mr. Osler: My perplexity, Mr. Chairman, arises out of this sort of thing. Just for clarification, under 1964 you add to $19,476,000 there is a budget item of $18,223,000. At the end of 1964 would the Treasury Board have approved expenditures of $19,476,000?

Mr. Williams: I am not clear where the $19 million...

Mr. Osler: Well, you just arbitrarily take it.

Mr. Williams: I see.

Mr. Osler: November, 1964, was your last 1964 submission. In 1964 the Treasury Board had before it figures that add to $19 million odd. Do you see?

• 1240

Mr. Williams: Yes, and individual expenditures had not occurred at that stage. There was an approval for a consultant fee—general approval—to hire consultants. We put a general figure on this to give some order of magnitude because this is before design, before you know cost. So we put up an authority to hire consultants.

The next item—there is an approval that there would be provision for visual arts. The Treasury Board, by the regulations, requires that this be given specific approval. That was approved. Then the next one was the budget figure, which includes those two items and forecasts that there will be additional submissions which over the progress of the work will total up to $18 million.

Mr. Osler: Thank you. My objective in asking these fees was to try and find out at what point a business-like decision could have been made to either go ahead or not go ahead with the thing, and I am not sure that these figures show us.

The Chairman: It may well have been that there was no such point that took place in time.

Mr. Osler: It may well have been that there was no such.

Mr. Williams: I think, if I could suggest, sir, the comparison of estimates which was asked for by Mr. Givens, gives you certain specific dates with budget figures. Perhaps that is the document you would be—

Mr. Osler: Thank you.

Mr. Williams: It would perhaps be more helpful in looking at this.

The Chairman: If there are no further questions on the other one, then I would be prepared to recognize Mr. Givens on this document. Yes, Mr. De Bané?

Mr. De Bané: On page 7 of the report, we see that in the third paragraph the total cost was $18 million, and we see in the other document concerning that $18 million that it was just approval in principle. Does that mean that that figure on page 7 was not as accurate as it should be, you know, by approval in principle? Does that mean that even at that stage the amount of $18 million was not accurate? What do the words "approval in principle" mean?

Mr. Williams: It is an approval of a budget, but recognizing that, before or in the spending up to that budget, there would be a number of individual items which would have to be referred back to the board for specific approval...

Mr. De Bané: Oh, I see.

Mr. Williams: ...which are the sort of things that are listed subsequently.

Mr. De Bané: Thank you.

The Chairman: Mr. Mongrain on a supplementary?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a supplementary question of Mr. Lebensold

I put aside all the estimates or provisions which were made in 1963, 1964, 1965 and 1966, I am talking about the National Arts Centre as it is now, the building itself. Could you categorically state, in front of this Committee that in your opinion, the building, as it is now, is actually worth the 44 or 45 million dollars, we are told it will cost?

[English]

The Chairman: Do you wish to answer that?

Mr. Lebensold: I would not wish to answer that question.

• 1245

Mr. Williams: As I have said, I believe, and perhaps I should quote from that statement: "In terms of what has been built, we are satisfied that it is worth that money."

Mr. Mongrain: Now, could you tell us that a lot of money could have been saved on this building—on the cost of this building?

Mr. Williams: Not to provide what has been provided.

Mr. Mongrain: I have another one. After your experience in the last 10 years, have you seen any building of such magnitude being built at the exact cost that was foreseen in the plans or the estimates?

Mr. Williams: I am not familiar with the arrangements for the Winnipeg theatre to the extent that it is comparable, but to my knowledge anything that is comparable as a complex to what has been done here has not been built within what was first thought would be the cost. They have all gone over.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I think I will be out of order, but I will ask you to bear with me. I would like to ask a question of Mr. Givens. Could you tell us, Mr. Givens, how much the City Hall in Toronto cost per square foot and how that compares with the original estimates.

Mr. Givens: Well, I cannot give you a square foot breakdown, but once the contract was let to a firm by the name of Anglin-Norcross, we did not exceed the cost. As a matter of fact, the company went broke. The contract price was $24.5 million. But just to give you an example of what happens in monumental structures of this kind—by monumental I mean buildings that are not built for $12 per square foot like an office building—when the plebiscite was first put to the people of Toronto the City Hall was to cost $13.5 million. It wound up costing us the $25 million, plus the cost of the land, plus the cost of the garage, of course. But the contract price was never exceeded. There was a critical survey run and expenditures were watched like a hawk.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you, Mr. Givens.

The Chairman: That runs almost around 100 per cent increase from the $13.5, from the $13.5 million at the time of the plebiscite to what the final cost was of $25 million.

Mr. Givens: Except, Mr. Chairman, that the plebiscite antedated the actual construction by several years.

If I want to make an addition to my plant and I need 175,000 square feet, I call in an architect and I say: "I need 175,000 square feet, build it as cheaply as you can." But when you are fooling around with politicians you have to sell them a dream first. So you have the conceptual aspect and at that stage nobody knows whether they are coming or going or whether they are on foot or on horseback. This is where everybody gets misled. So they say $9 million and by the time it gets into the hands of the architects who have to deal a little more realistically with it—and then the real test of course is eventually when it goes out to tender and you sign a contract and by that time you are up a couple of hundred per cent. But there is no other way that you could do it when you are dealing with a City Council or a governmental body. First you have to sell the dreams.

Mr. Mongrain: I have only one more remark and then I am finished.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Chairman, we have had the same experience in my own municipality, where the Place de l'hôtel de ville was inaugurated. This includes the town hall, an arts centre, a library, a theatre and so on. When the project was presented to the population, we were told somewhat as Toronto, that it would cost $1,800,000. We have reached $4 million, but the final figure has not yet been set. So this may perhaps serve as an illustration to show that Mr. Givens' statement is right.

That is all, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale, on a supplementary.

Mr. Givens: On a point of interruption. As an epilogue or an epitaph to this I think you should know that it costs you about $125,000 cheaper than it might have, because Mr. Southam wanted to buy the Henry Moore sculpture that my Council would not vote the money for. So, I went out and raised the money myself and now we have that in front of the new City Hall, so you saved yourself $125.

• 1250

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, now that we have investigated all the monumental buildings across the country, perhaps I should introduce the centre for the performing arts at Brandon, Manitoba.

The Chairman: We all have to get re-elected!

Mr. Dinsdale: It stayed closely within the budget. I just want to ask a question arising out of Mr. Osler's later question. There are various items for consultant fees. First there is the appointment of a consultant, $695,000; then there is another item of $228,000; a special consultant, $27,500; consultant fees, $43,400; a special consultant, $30,000; consultant fees, $54,633; consultant fees, $61,500; special consultant, $36,000; special consultant, $91,000. I suppose these were different firms that were called in at various times for advice in the extraordinary proceedings in connection with this project. How many different firms or people would be involved in these fees? Also, is it customary to have such high costs for consultant fees on Department of Public Works' projects?

Mr. Williams: I will answer the last part first while I am looking for the list. There were more special consultants on this job than on other jobs because, as I said in my opening statement, we were to have specialists to develop the criteria that would be required for the various performances and the type of the things that were to go on, and these people were to be brought in early to advise the prime consultants in the development on the solutions. There are more of them on this list because, again, it was an extraordinary job from the standpoint of what we were attempting to do. It is not the norm in the sense of erecting buildings or laboratories or what have you. In the list of special consultants there is Bolt, Beranek and Newman Inc. on acoustics for the hall. There is also N. J. Pappas and Associates.

The Chairman: Would it be possible as you run down the list to give the cost for each consultant?

Mr. Williams: I do not have this available at the moment. If I cannot do so during the hearing I will produce it for tabling, or whatever you wish, but I can give you the actual amounts paid for each of the special consultants. They were Bolt, Beranek and Newman Inc. for the acoustics for the hall; N. J. Pappas and Associates, acoustics for the theatre; De Leuw Cather and Co. of Canada Ltd., traffic control; William Lam, special lighting; Silas Edman, theatre operations; Jean Rosenthal, stage lighting; Ben Schlanger, site lines and seating; George Izenour, stage equipment; James de B. Domville, theatre consultant control; graphics, Design Collaborative, Montreal; landscaping, Richard Strong and Associates; opera consultant, Harry Horner; catering and restaurants, R. W. Enterprises.

• 1255

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I think the tabled document would suffice.

Mr. Williams: You wish the tabled document with the figures on it?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes.

The Chairman: Do you have any further questions, Mr. Dinsdale?

Mr. Dinsdale: I have one question, although it is not quite related to the document which was returned to Mr. Osler. There was a ceiling placed on expenditure, and that was on visual arts. The original figure was 3 per cent. I am very intrigued to see that in one department Treasury Board finally clamped down. Why was a ceiling placed in this instance and not in other instances?

Mr. Williams: There were to be art works purchased in relation to a figure which was put up, and despite the fact that to produce the building at that location would cost more, the Board felt that the amount of art that would be provided would be consistent with what was decided in the first place. Possibly I am trying to say what went through the minds of the Board, which perhaps is inappropriate, but that is as I understand it.

Mr. Dinsdale: What is the amount that Treasury Board permits on for instance, a post office building or an office building which is built by the Department of Public Works? Is there a percentage formula they work on?

Mr. Williams: Yes, it is 1 per cent, but here again it is not automatic. We have to give consideration to the function of the particular building or structure. That is, you would not automatically put 1 per cent—to take the ridiculous—on a penitentiary.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions on this?

[Interpretation]

Mr. La Salle: May I express my thoughts?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. La Salle: I have been listening to and looking at all these briefs for some time now. As a member said, there is no question of owing up the Centre, far from it. I have had the opportunity and the good fortune to sit it. It is understood that the opportunity for all members to visit the Centre is something I appreciate very much. But trying to establish whether it is worth $46 million, or less, is something very difficult to discuss. I would like to make a reflection because, so far as people in general are concerned—and I am one of them—it is hard to explain such a cost when talking about $12, $33 and $46 millions. I do not know whether it is a habit of the Department when it is dealing with such a fantastic project to accept changes simply because an Advisory Committee has been set up. In fact, the responsibilities are thrown back to the Advisory Committee, and when it is not the Advisory Committee it is the Department of Public Works. I wonder whether the Department is used to accepting the fact that a project starts with a given figure and then the figure is multiplied by two or three.

I believe that, in the interest of the public, it would be wise for the Department to demand more precise details at the outset to provide as clear as possible an idea as to future developments. I am somewhat amazed at the ease with which we accept that the project was much smaller at the outset than it is at present. For some this seems perfectly normal.

I am flabbergasted to hear that there was no coherence. I doubt it. The first figures are provisional. At the end we have final figures. Personally, I am troubled and worried when I see that such an important Department, of the government, should not have demanded more specific figures.

I thought that one could have more or less exact figures, even if this project is as fantastic and as worthwhile as it is.

I would like to know whether the Department can do better or whether we can definitely expect from it, when dealing with another project, to discuss costs or the realization, once the project is entirely finished.

[English]

Mr. Williams: Certainly our record of the estimating in relation to the first estimate presented of $18 million was not good in the sense that we did not know, even at that stage, exactly what was going to be built; but we have to accept responsibility for having accepted those figures from the consultant.

In the normal course of events, we have more experience in assessing the feasibility of plans at that stage of development as we are dealing with requirements that we have had many times before—offices, laboratories, schools and the rest of it—and we can make a better judgment. In this case we really had no basis on which to make a better judgment. Certainly you are quite right in saying that normally we do not go beyond these amounts. In the sense of a service department building something for someone else with their money, we do not exercise control in telling them what they can build and whether they should go ahead with a program or not. That is a decision which the Department makes with the approval of the Board or their estimates by Parliament, and we do not say whether they should go ahead or whether they should not. That is the departmental or the Treasury Board decision. Is that what you are looking for, sir?

Mr. La Salle: Oui.

The Chairman: It is now one o'clock and I think if members would like to sit this afternoon it could be arranged. Is there any discussion on this?

Mr. Osler: I am sorry; I did not hear you.

The Chairman: Well, we have an option. We have run to the end of our time. We can sit this afternoon if members are agreed to do this. If not we shall meet Thursday morning.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I would like first to be allowed to make a very brief remark.

[Interpretation]

I would like to correct what my colleague from Joliette just stated. I know he does not intend to lead anybody into mistakes. He said, though: "I cannot conceive that such a serious Department as the Department of Public Works would accept so easily such large increases in costs".

• 1305

I would like to remind my colleague that with all the questions put forward and all the answers received, these increases were not lightly accepted. A first cost was set before the site was finished. Then the cost was changed because the site was changed. Then the Advisory Committees specified the various requirements, and all this was submitted to the architects and engineers for approval.

The whole project was submitted to the Department of Public Works for study and approval. Then this was handed to the Treasury Board for acceptance. I am sure the Treasury Board discussed this with the Cabinet, and seeing as so much thought was given to the next election at the level of the cabinet and the Treasury that there was no intention of throwing millions away.

This was not lightly accepted. All these increases were accepted after serious consideration as the project developed. I insist on saying this was such a huge project that it was impossible to plan the exact cost ahead. Examples were given for much smaller projects which doubled or tripled in cost as they were being built. I am through, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LaSalle: I should like to answer Mr. . . .

[English]

The Chairman: I do not think we want to get into any argument now. I think that the thing to do is to make a decision as to whether to sit this afternoon. If we decide not to sit this afternoon then we will sit, as scheduled on Thursday morning. Are there any comments on this?

Mr. Osler: May I ask what subject we will be discussing on Thursday morning?

The Chairman: The same subject; the same witnesses.

Mr. Givens: I have a Finance meeting.

Mr. Osler: There is no point in meeting this afternoon if we have the same witnesses and the same subject on Thursday.

The Chairman: Well, it just gives us some extra time; that is all.

Mr. Osler: How are we running for time, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: We are getting a little tight but there is still plenty of time. We have scheduled everybody.

Is it agreed then that we sit this afternoon? We do have permission from the House, so we will meet in this room at 3.30 p.m.

• 1553

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I think we can begin.

The last document to consider before going on to general questioning is a resume of the cost estimates to date on the National Arts Centre. Does anyone have any questions on this particular document? This is the one that contains the estimates and the actual costs and the development of the costing of it. Yes, Mr. Guilbault?

[Interpretation]

Mr. Guilbault: Mr. Chairman, on page our of the estimates there is one item, in which I am particularly concerned, i.e. the special consultants, the estimate for experts of $95,000, while the most recent estimate shows—$275,000. I would like to know, why did the fees increase so rapidly? What type of experts were they, and so on?

• 1555

[English]

Mr. Williams: Mr. Chairman, the initial estimate of how much we thought we would require for determining and developing the criteria and examining the solutions by the prime consultant proved inadequate in that we required their services, or the consultants and committees required their services, a great deal more. The kind of work they did and the kind of consultants and who they were is being provided. There was a request for a return of this this morning, and we will be tabling it on Thursday.

Mr. Guilbault: I do not believe that these were the consulting engineers or architects, because they appear on the previous page at 6 per cent; so these are probably consultants of a very special nature.

Mr. Williams: Yes, as I said this morning, they are special consultants for acoustics for the hall, acoustics for the theatre, traffic control, special lighting, theatre operation, stage lighting and so on.

The Chairman: Mr. McCleave?

Mr. McCleave: If this question was asked this morning, Mr. Chairman, please rule me out. The fine weather in Halifax was not matched by equally fine flying weather everywhere else. My question concerns the extra costs of excavation. I take it from what Mr. Williams told us the other day that it is a fair statement that there were underground water seepages that accounted for the difference in the cost in the excavation parts of the contract.

Mr. Williams: Generally, there was less, as it developed. We had taken all precautions or substantial underground water; we did not hit perhaps as much as we had anticipated, although there was some. There was rock routing and waterproofing that we had to put in. The major part of it was simply the condition of the rock, and taking out more to get good bearing than was included in the initial estimates.

Mr. McCleave: You had to dig deeper, is that the idea?

Mr. Williams: That is right.

The Chairman: Are there further questions on this? That is fine, then Mr. De Bané has some questions on a new topic.

Mr. De Bané: It is always the same topic, Mr. Chairman; it is the existence or absence of planning. Looking at your report, Mr. Deputy Minister, the last paragraph on page 5, the whole of page 6 and the first paragraph on page 9 all are devoted to the question of the disadvantages and the additional costs of the Confederation site. May I assume from the emphasis you give on these three pages the question of site—emphasizing the disadvantages and the difficulties—that your department as a member of the interdepartmental committee, was against that site?

Mr. Williams: From the standpoint of all of the things I said, yes.

The Chairman: What were your reasons for going against that site?

Mr. Williams: From our standpoint, it related to construction. From a construction standpoint—the cost of construction—it had disadvantages. I am also recognizing that as part of the committee there were advantages in other areas.

Mr. De Bané: Did the committee have an idea of how much more it would cost when they chose that site?

Mr. Williams: No, not in terms of $7 million as I now estimate. Those could only be developed as the design was developed and the decision made on how much garage and where, as one element of the site.

The Chairman: You were opposed for technical reasons to going on the present site?

Mr. Williams: Our problem was that it was reported to the committee that from our standpoint it would be a difficult site to construct on; it would be expensive relative to some of the other sites suggested.

• 1600

The Chairman: Did you suggest any other site, in preference?

Mr. Williams: No, we did not, although the National Arts Alliance had considered others. In looking at it, we were looking at one site which they had looked at particularly.

Mr. De Bané: The last paragraph on page 5, the whole of page 6, and the first paragraph on page 9 deal with that site. As you say on page 9:

..., the Department's concern on rock conditions was more than adequately confirmed, in that shoring and rock excavation would exceed estimates.

May I know, Mr. Deputy Minister, the names of the members on that committee?

The Chairman: The interdepartmental committee?

Mr. De Bané: Yes.

Mr. Williams: We would have to table those.

Mr. De Bané: Was the National Centennial Administration, which was to pay for that Centre, aware of how much more it would cost?

Mr. Williams: Not when that decision was made, because at that stage designs had not been made.

Mr. De Bané: Do you have any objection, Mr. Deputy Minister, to tabling the contract that was concluded between your Department and the architects and all the original instructions that you gave to the architects? Would you have any objection to that? I will not insist if it is improper; I understand he was your extension.

Mr. Williams: Yes. The contract is certainly permissible to be tabled. I would have to hold judgment on the correspondence because it becomes an interdepartmental matter which in many cases is not permissible.

Mr. De Bané: On page 7 the last sentence of the first paragraph reads:

The architects had not adequately assessed the consequences of these criteria in terms of cost.

Is there any connotation to the adverb "adequately"?

Mr. Williams: Yes, that relates to the estimate in June, the $18 million estimate.

Mr. De Bané: It is $12 million.

Mr. Williams: Well, all right. In comparison between budget figures, it is $12 million for the building. At that stage they knew there were three halls, they knew the type of requirement but they were not defined and knowing the type they had not "adequately" assessed them. However, it was impossible for them to do it precisely because at that stage they had not been developed to the degree that they could provide design solutions. When I say "adequately" I mean precisely that they were unable to do so, and they made a judgment of what they would be and the judgment proved to be inadequate.

Mr. De Bané: And knowing that estimate of $12,800,000 could not be precise, on June 3 the interdepartmental committee approved the cost of the building, if I read this correctly.

Mr. Williams: Yes, that is right.

Mr. De Bané: And one month after on July 16, still on page 7, the Treasury Board approved $18.2 million.

• 1605

Mr. Williams: That is correct.

Mr. De Bané: Can you explain how between June 3 and July 16 it rose to $18.2 million?

Mr. Williams: I must say the $12.8 million is the consultant estimate of the cost of the building. The $18 million includes the other things that they did not put in, the visual arts, an assumed price for a garage, the moving of services on the site, consultants fees, so that the figure of $18.2 million in July is the same figure that we were talking about in June. There is no change reported in that period.

Mr. De Bané: For the building?

Mr. Williams: For the building. The building was still $12.8 million. The difference between the $12.8 million and the $18 million are things in addition to the building.

Mr. De Bané: So the paragraphs between the one relating to June and three paragraphs down concerning acoustics, which has cost $3 million more, is not included in this $18 million?

Mr. Williams: No, when I say "not adequately" in the paragraph before, it was the sort of thing that they had not adequately made provision for and they were unable to at that period.

Mr. De Bané: Concerning the second paragraph on page 7, it was on good advice that the 35 decibel criterion was abandoned?

Mr. Williams: It was on the advice of the Advisory Committee on Standards and Criteria.

Mr. De Bané: Do they have any idea how much more it would cost to lower that to 15 decibels?

Mr. Williams: No.

Mr. De Bané: And still on page 7, the last paragraph, immediately after the approval of the Treasury Board of the $18.2 million, it is said that the consultant continued to work on the production of designs. So the designs were not yet completed?

Mr. Williams: That is correct.

Mr. De Bané: This morning you told us that way of working was caused by the date on which you wanted to complete that job. Who insisted on completing the work by such a date?

Mr. Williams: I do not think I said that. I said that by going ahead we could achieve this. Initially, it was proposed as a centennial project, and the idea would be that if it was to be a centennial project, yes, complete it for July 1, 1967, but as the criteria were developed and the designs were proceeding we had to examine what it would have cost to go ahead to force it, to bring it to completion in what would have been a very short period of time, and it was felt that you could not be that sure that you could finish it in the time and probably you would spend a substantial amount of money trying to do so. For that reason it was said, go ahead with the design and do it in three phases of contract which means you can get on with it but you are not doing it as a crash program.

Mr. De Bané: I understood this morning that the way the job has been done it was in a rush because we wanted to finish it by a certain date.

Mr. Williams: There was a desire at the start but it had been dropped—

Mr. De Bané: By June, 1964, was that idea abandoned?

Mr. Williams: Just a moment; no, it was later than that. The review of what would have to be done and how we might go on a crash program was made in March, 1965 and decided at that stage it would be pointless to attempt to complete it for July 1, 1967.

Mr. De Bané: Now, on page 8, I understand that Phase I was done for the amount that had been expected. In the third paragraph on page 8...

1610

Mr. Williams: It was. There was $169,988 worth of extras on Phase I.

Mr. De Bané: Then at the bottom of page 8 we see that Phase II was expected to cost around $1 million and it cost 70 per cent more.

Mr. Williams: That is correct.

Mr. De Bané: Was that principally because we had underestimated the cost of Phase II?

Mr. Williams: No, it was additional work added to the contract. I went through these in detail the first day of the extras in each one.

Mr. De Bané: I am sorry. I asked you the same question last week. On page 9 in the fourth paragraph, we see:

In May 1965, the Interdepartmental Committee met and was advised that the cost estimates at $18 million would be exceeded.

You told me that is not exactly correct; that they had been advised before May 1965. In July 1964 the Treasury Board approved the $18 million.

Mr. Williams: That is correct.

Mr. De Bané: On page 9, we see that in May 1965...

Mr. Williams: Yes, the Interdepartmental Committee was advised. That is correct.

Mr. De Bané: I would like to know if contrary to that statement they had been advised before that date.

Mr. Williams: You are speaking of between June 1964 and May 1965.

Mr. De Bané: Because it was the first time since June that the Committee had been advised that the cost estimated would be exceeded.

Mr. Williams: No, May 1965, as I am aware, was the next official report to the Interdepartmental Committee indicating the increase in cost.

• 1615

Mr. De Bané: Would it be correct to say that between the approval of the expenditure of $18 million in July 1964 and the announcement in May 1965 that that amount of $18 million would be exceeded, the Interdepartmental Committee, which includes people from the Finance Department, the Privy Council, thought that $18 million would be exceeded, the Interdepartmental Committee, which includes the people from the Finance Department, the Privy Council, thought that $18 million would be sufficient?

Mr. Williams: That is correct.

Mr. De Bané: On page 9, in the last paragraph, do I understand that by February of 1966 the plans, the design for Phase III were completed?

Mr. Williams: Yes. They were completed for a tender call on Phase III. There were changes subsequent to that, as I have mentioned.

Mr. De Bané: So they were completed for the tenders by February 1966, and I see on page 11 that tenders were called on March 15, 1966.

Mr. Williams: That is correct.

Mr. De Bané: And were received on May 17, 1966.

Mr. Williams: Yes.

Mr. De Bané: Although the Interdepartmental Committee was advised in May 1965 that the $18 million expenditure would be exceeded, it is only in May 1966, exactly one year after, that they knew by how much it would be exceeded.

Mr. Williams: Yes, that is correct. I think the May 1966 figure is the bid figure you are referring to.

Mr. De Bané: Yes.

The Chairman: You are not dealing with the estimated figure, which was by the consultant, of $22 million. You are dealing with the $31 million figure that was the bid figure.

Mr. De Bané: Yes. In May 1965 they were told that it would be exceeded and by February 1966, some ten months after, the consultant estimated at $22.5 million and one month after in May, $31 million, almost $32 million.

The Chairman: An escalation of $9 million between the final estimated cost and the bid cost.

Mr. De Bané: Yes, the tenders were called on March 15, and one month after they had received the tenders. Would it be possible, Mr. Deputy Minister, to have the minutes of the Interdepartmental Committee?

Mr. Williams: I am not in a position to say whether or not this is possible.

The Chairman: My understanding, Mr. De Bané, is that this is a privileged internal document. I will look into it and find out if it is possible.

Mr. De Bané: Did that committee have an executive, a sort of executive board?

Mr. Williams: No. I think in terms of continuing liaison and direction it would be through Mr. Southam, the co-ordinator.

Mr. De Bané: I am trying to figure out how that worked. You told me a moment ago that the artistic committee suggested that the criteria of 30 or 25 decibels be lowered to 15 and you calculate today that this demand has cost $3 million, and you told me you did not tell them that it would cost $3 million more. I am trying to understand if there was a complete separation between the question of demands and the question of artistic requirements. They asked for 15 decibels. It cost $3 million more and we do not even tell them how much more it would cost. Fortunately, they did not ask for 5 decibels instead of 15.

• 1620

Mr. Williams: At the time they asked for it we did not know what it would cost. It is only as you develop the interrelated design that you can come up with the cost. The figure of $3 million which Mr. Lebensold gave this morning is an assessment which he has made after the fact, but at the time it was being done it affected the design of the mechanical, the electrical, the structural, all of these elements of it, and you could not separate it from the lighting, heating and the many other things that were going into the design of the building. You could not isolate it and the isolation that has been done now has been done after the fact, going through and assessing these.

Mr. De Bané: Is it then fair to say, Mr. Deputy Minister, that there was a tremendous lack of planning? Is that unfair or is it correct? Let us be candid about it.

The Chairman: I think it is an unfair question to put to our particular witness. I think that basically how it works—the whole problem, once it was approved by the Cabinet was put into the hands of an interdepartmental committee. The interdepartmental committee set up subcommittees to investigate the cost of various aspects of it, with the acoustics and the sound as one, so they came back and they said this is what we require. They sent it to the architect and the architect designed his building around these centres. Then when it became necessary to have an increase in cost, they went to Treasury Board and to Cabinet, and Cabinet had a choice of either approving or disapproving, and in these cases they were approved. The point I am trying to make is that the decision-making process is not at the level of Mr. Williams.

Mr. De Bané: Definitely, and that is why I want precisely to limit my questions to the aspect of planning, just the question of planning.

Mr. Williams: Well, it is the difference between the planning that we were to do to build the building and the planning of the total program, and we were planning a building in which we were given requirements by a customer or a client and we were providing the facility to meet those requirements. As we did the designs we put prices on them and reported them. That is our part of the function which we did. Whether the program was totally planned properly, I cannot really say.

Mr. De Bané: Really, I do not understand. Of course, it is obvious that such expenditure was approved by such and such, but from the point of view of engineering, of planning a construction, I would like to know if usually your Department becomes involved in projects without doing the planning before hand?

Mr. Williams: Well, we did our planning for this, but in most projects you have some comparison against which to draw the requirements, and you know whether or not they are within the limits or whatever they want to have for the project, but for this one we did not have this.

The Chairman: There were no standards.

Mr. Williams: There were no standards against which I could judge this.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Deputy Minister, I will tell you why I am asking this question, because in Quebec City they are also building an arts centre under the Centennial Year, and after having met with the people involved in it, they told me that, before starting that job, they spent four years doing the planning, and I would like to know in your opinion if this is the proper way before starting a job?

• 1625

Mr. Williams: It would be a much nicer, a better way of doing it, yes, if you could plan everything in detail four years in advance.

The Chairman: Would you like to make a comment on that, Mr. Lebensold?

Mr. Lebensold: I may add that I had the privilege of advising the Minister of Public Works in Quebec about the potentials of cutting back of the escalated cost of the Grand Théâtre de Québec, and the only way in which the cost could be cut was by changing the requirements that were studied for such a long time before, and in fact these requirements were changed and the cost of the building was reduced.

Mr. De Bané: Definitely, because they take—they give certain consideration to the aspect of costs. Of course, they have changed their plans a bit because they have to pay part of it.

Now, Mr. Lebensold, I would like to know what is the decibel rating of the other main centres in Canada, like Montreal, Place des Arts, the one in Charlottetown, and all the others.

Mr. Lebensold: I am not aware of the decibel rating in Quebec. In certain areas, at Place des Arts, the decibel rating was 25 decibels, and found to be quite sound satisfactory by some of the audience. Actually the standards for buildings of this kind are constantly changing. Probably when the original submission for criteria was made, 35 decibels could have been acceptable perhaps to some groups of people, but that was a fair amount of time back, and you may not be aware of the fact that since then a great number of halls have been completed, including Place des Arts, and the Winnipeg centre.

Mr. De Bané: What is the level now in Winnipeg?

Mr. Lebensold: I could not answer that question. I think that the level in this room must be around 35 or 40 decibels, and for that reason probably quite impossible for a performance.

Mr. De Bané: I am asking you about Winnipeg. You are an expert in that.

Mr. Lebensold: Oh, I may be an expert, but I am sorry I have not got this information. I can probably get it by asking someone about this.

Mr. De Bané: Was your advice asked about that level, the decibel level?

Mr. Lebensold: Advice? I would like to state that in this field, we seek the very finest advice we can get, and actually our advisors in the field of acoustics are the same I think as those who have been involved in Winnipeg.

Mr. De Bané: And did they tell you how much it was in Winnipeg?

Mr. Lebensold: I do not remember that particular discussion. They have felt however, as well, that the level of 15 decibels, aimed at 15 or as stated before in our discussions 25 to 15, was the desirable figure.

Mr. De Bané: But you did inquire of the level at Winnipeg.

Mr. Lebensold: Winnipeg was not opened at that time. It was opened only recently.

Mr. De Bané: At the Metropolitan do you know what it is?

Mr. Lebensold: At the Metropolitan I am aware of the fact that it was higher than 15.

Mr. De Bané: And they have found it acceptable.

Mr. Lebensold: They found it not acceptable, but they may have to live with it.

Mr. De Bané: Do you know, Mr. Lebensold, what is the ideal number of seats for a city like Ottawa?

• 1630

Mr. Lebensold: This is a subject that has been discussed at meetings of one of the advisory committees, quite exhaustibly—

Mr. McCleave: Two hundred and sixty-five?

The Chairman: It is down to 264 now.

Mr. Lebensold: This has been a subject which was discussed very exhaustibly and there were very many varying opinions. In this particular instance all we could do is describe roughly what the size of an audience does to the quality of the ambiance, or the environment, either for the audience or for the performers, which are the two subjects you have to deal with in the design of an opera house if you are dealing with opera, or a theatre in the case of theatre and so on.

Mr. De Bané: But did you not give any consideration to the fact that it was built in Ottawa?

Mr. Lebensold: I think all our discussions today indicate that we have been very much aware of the fact that it was in Ottawa on Confederation Square. We considered two factors; the ideal number for the audience and for the stage. When I said "we" I meant the discussion which took place at which I was present; and this was the advice given to us by the committee appointed to deal with the subject.

Mr. De Bané: Did you give your opinion about that?

Mr. Lebensold: We cannot give our opinion about the economic feasibilities or audience participation; it is not our particular field.

Mr. De Bané: I had thought that one of the main responsibilities of an architect building an opera, theatre or something like that was to advise on what is the ideal number of seats compared to the environment of the city.

The Chairman: I do not think that would be acceptable. The architect is given a commission to do something, the standards of which have been set by the people who are promoting it.

Mr. De Bané: I will rephrase my question. What was the responsibility of your firm, Mr. Lebensold, in that? Was it just to execute ideas which were given to you, or is your work an active role in that project? Is that correct, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes, that is a good question.

Mr. De Bané: Was it merely the execution of orders, or do you participate and give your advice?

Mr. Williams: Mr. Lebensold was the architect employed by Public Works.

Mr. De Bané: Yes.

Mr. Williams: And he was to receive direction on the criteria from the advisory committees who were the specialists in the various functions. In receiving the advice he would naturally go to committee meetings and they would discuss this; but the decision on the number of seats—whether it should be 2300 seats for the opera in Ottawa—is a decision which was given as a requirement by the advisory committee. It then became part of the theatre which we had to design.

Mr. Lebensold: It would be presumptuous of an architect to walk in and tell a community what it needs which really affects an integral part of its life. I should say perhaps that we do participate very actively in the discussions. Many times the requirements are quite impossible to meet. When they are absolutely impossible, the architect states that what they are asking for is utterly impossible; or that it may be very costly or very inexpensive, depending on the case.

Mr. De Bané: Would you imply that you have no personal opinion about the number of seats that has been decided on?

Mr. Lebensold: If you are asking for my personal view...

Mr. De Bané: Yes, I am.

• 1635

Mr. Lebensold: This is my personal opinion. I think in Ottawa the decision which has been reached has been perhaps one of the first ones which I very strongly applauded and it was, in fact, to limit the size of the audience to a small number for a large hall rather than continue this trend of very large opera houses or concert halls which have been built in North America. I can proudly recall now that this trend now is being followed in other cities in North America because all the European houses, all the large European houses, are generally about the same size as the house which we are building here in Ottawa.

Mr. De Bané: Do you think, Mr. Lebensold—and now I am asking your opinion—that it makes any sense to have in Ottawa the second largest stage in North America?

Mr. Lebensold: This is a relatively simple thing to answer. One of the committees with which we had been discussing the sizes of stages had been very much involved in the advice given to us on the requirements on the spaces needed for proper production of opera, ballet and music. It was their very, very strong recommendation that we should provide sufficient space for production of opera. Much space has not been provided sufficiently in any of the large halls in Canada or the United States to date, with the exception of the one in the United States, the exception being the Metropolitan Opera House.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler, on a supplementary.

Mr. De Bané: One last question.

The Chairman: I am sorry, Mr. De Bané as one last question.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Deputy Minister, maybe now you understand more my first question. This morning, when I asked: looking back, could you do it in exactly the same way? I was merely referring to the question of engineering and planning. Do we have any lesson learned from that experience from the engineering point of view?

Mr. Williams: Again, from our standpoint it is much better if before you start you have a lot of the requirements detailed and the solutions made. Yes, it is much better from the standpoint of the person who is going to build.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler.

Mr. Osler: I am sorry. If I am not to the point, please slap me down because I was not here at the beginning of this line of questioning.

The Chairman: You should never give the Chairman an invitation like that.

Mr. Osler: Well, I would like to ask two questions. One of them I think I was asked the other day to refer to you people when I asked it of Mr. Pelletier, and it is this. According to a very rough but probably inept calculation without the benefit of amortization tables and everything else, it seems to me that it is going to cost something like $3.2 million a year to write this building off if it is to be written off on the same basis as the CBC buildings are written off. This, then, is obvious to me: that it is not going to be part of the budget of the National Arts project here. Who, in fact, does own this building and who writes it off? Or does anybody?

Mr. Williams: The Government of Canada has title to the building. Possibly Mr. Southam should speak to this but as I understand it, that is a capital expenditure which has been made and it is not intended to write it off in that sense.

Mr. Osler: You do not amortize your capital expenditures over the life of the building?

Mr. Williams: No.

Mr. Osler: The other question then may or may not be out of order, Mr. Chairman. In the written brief here there is a statement near the beginning which, loosely translated I think means that it was considered a good idea to have a centennial project of this type in Ottawa. Centennial projects of this type in any other cities were financed on a shared basis with the municipalities, the provinces and the federal government and I wonder if at any time either the City of Ottawa or the Province of Ontario and even possibly the Province of Quebec which is close enough to be able to use it a great deal, was brought into the discussions about capital expenditure?

• 1640

Mr. Williams: Not to my knowledge, beyond the contribution with reference to site that the city has provided.

Mr. Osler: So that in a way this is a completely unique centennial project; it does not parallel those in other centres.

Mr. Williams: It is not part of the shared program that took place in other centres. No, it is a capital federal contribution in the capital region, in the capital area.

Mr. Osler: Did Ottawa have any shared centennial projects of this nature. I know you are not necessarily competent to answer that.

Mr. Williams: I cannot answer that. I believe so, but I am not certain.

Mr. Osler: Thank you.

Mr. Dinsdale: If the way is clear I would just like to ask—I think it will be a final question to the Public Works people—was this project dealt with in isolation or did the planning include the complex that was originally conceived as occupying this important strategic area on Confederation Square. I am thinking now of the Museum, and the National Gallery, which will be shifting from the Lorne Building in due course, or was the National Centre for the Performing Arts conceived in isolation without any attempt to integrate or co-ordinate with the over-all plan?

Mr. Williams: No, it was co-ordinated with and examined in relation to all other planning in the total downtown area.

Mr. Dinsdale: So I would conclude from that, Mr. Chairman, that there is a time schedule for the other projects, such as the National Gallery, and they will proceed as originally conceived?

The Chairman: If Mr. Pelletier has his way, if he gets the right answers to his questions, the National Gallery could be dispersed across the country.

Mr. Williams: There will be a planned development, involving the Parkin plan, the Roxborough site, and the Lorne Building, yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, in your answer to the question, I would take it you expect there are going to be some more ad hoc decisions.

The Chairman: We have scheduled the National Museums Corporation for next Tuesday. That might be an appropriate time to ask the question.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am very suspicious of ad hoc decisions, after this experience.

The Chairman: I agree.

Mr. Dinsdale: But at the moment then—subject to changes in policy for the Museum and the National Art Gallery—it is impossible to say what might happen to the old Union Station. That matter is, I believe, up for discussion. Has Public Works any responsibility for the over-all planning in an attempt to co-ordinate with the Gréber plan for the National Capital and the Parkin plan which supplemented the original Gréber plan, or are we in a state of flux?

• 1645

Mr. Williams: I think that you will have to accept the fact that the plan as proposed at any point in time is not static; it will change, as your plans do and everyone's plans do, with the changing requirements and the changing conditions. There is an over-all plan which was developed and it is amended and changed in the light of changes that are required. As far as placing the Arts Centre in that location, it was looked at and made certain that it would fit in the location, and it would fit in with a good development of that portion of Ottawa. When you talk about what will be the Museum; whether it will be the same as was planned at the point you were looking, I am not certain. I am not certain what point you were looking at, but certainly there will be more development in that area on a planned basis, and Public Works participates in this because we have requirements to provide facilities, and it is to see where they should be provided and how they fit in with the over-all plan.

Mr. Dinsdale: I appreciate, Mr. Chairman, that it is impossible to be specific. I merely raised the question in the hope of getting some reassurance that the plans that were made, and carried to a relatively advanced level of development as laid down by the Gréber plan and the Parkin supplemental plan, will not be entirely thrown overboard. I would imagine the National Capital Commission is the guardian of these things in the long run.

The Chairman: I would suggest that you also seek membership in the Regional Development Committee, which has the National Capital Commission under its wing.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am spreading myself pretty thin right now.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions for the Public Works representatives?

Mr. McCleave: Yes, if Mr. Williams had his life to live over, and could tackle this thing from the beginning again, would there be any steps he thinks that could have been taken to prevent the size of the bill that we are being presented with?

Mr. Williams: Again, these are what were asked to be provided, and they have been provided, and I believe they have been provided very well; and they have been provided at a reasonable price. Now you could go into the mechanics of how we did some of the contracting, and you could start an argument and say "if you had done it this way it would have been a little cheaper", but this is speculation after the fact. You never know whether it is true or not. As far as I am concerned, we have done a good job in providing what we have been asked to do.

Mr. Chairman, could I get in another word here. I did have the opportunity this morning to correct an impression that I gave in the evidence, from the newspaper report; an impression I left that I felt it was the wrong site. I corrected that this morning; I said that from our standpoint it was an expensive site, but there were other elements of it. It is reported that an estimating error caused the cost to rise. The costs were there for what we are building; the estimating had nothing to do with the cost. If the estimate had been bang on, the cost would have been there. It is just that in this case it would not have been an error in estimating.

Mr. McCleave: But maybe they would have stopped it before it had reached that proportion.

Mr. Williams: These estimating errors referred to are the difference between the price that was quoted at the time the tenders were in—the famous $9 million between the bid price for Phase III and the estimate.

Mr. McCleave: Well, that is all right.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Deputy Minister, of course I will not argue that, as you have just said, it is worth $45 million. I will not argue with that, but what is most surprising to me, and for that I would say—I would not hesitate to say that it is mismanagement—the Treasury Board in July 1964 approved an overall price of $18 million; in 1965 the Committee was told it would exceed $18 million; and in May 1966 it was told at last that it would cost around $45 million. In other words, I would say that somebody who undertakes to build something without putting a limit to his expenses, of course he will have value for his money, but that is not the point. I imagine the people of the Treasury Board approving an $18 million project for Ottawa, an expenditure of the government, and then it costs $45 million. Of course the $45 million are there. But you know, since we met last week I have shown your statement to many engineers and architects and they told me it is obvious that there was a tremendous lack of planning. The reasoning that we have there $45 million worth—I will not argue with that, but I would say that starting a job without looking for a definite price is a bad policy. Do you not agree?

Mr. Williams: I agree.

The Chairman: Again I think I should make it quite clear that this is not to be laid at the door of Mr. Williams.

Mr. De Bané: I approached the project in different ways.

Mr. McCleave: Once he got on this bargain slide he did his best, Mr. Chairman, I am convinced of that.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions? If there are no further questions, then I would like to thank Mr. Williams and his associates from the Department of Public Works for the information they provided and the way in which they did provide it. Thank you, very much. I am sure you will all be delighted to know that we will be having the Public Archives and National Library on Thursday and the National Museums Corporations on Tuesday.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, will we be discussing these matters with Treasury Board at any stage?

The Chairman: I have been in touch with Treasury Board, and Treasury Board said they would not be able to provide any more information than Public Works has provided, in that the decision-making, and what not, was privileged and that if you want to go back into the decision-making process then it became a matter of Cabinet. Where that leads, I am not prepared to say. However, we have left open another couple of meeting dates just in case we want to take this up again.

Mr. Dinsdale: In other words, that gives to policy level, and policy remains ever inaccessible.

Mr. Mongrain: You can discuss it in the House.

The Chairman: Get out of the level of this Committee.

Mr. Dinsdale: We are going around in circles, unfortunately. When the Minister was before us he said Public Works and Treasury Board would deal with these matters.

The Chairman: We can still call Treasury Board if you wish; it makes no difference to the Chair. Whether you will get any information out of them is a debatable point. From what they have told me it is a categorical no, but if we call them, they come.

Mr. Dinsdale: The important point is the radical departure from the usual careful policies of public finances; financing which got Public Works and everybody else concerned into this difficulty.

The Chairman: I think the real problem is, as Mr. De Bané quite properly pointed out, that when they started out on this adventure they did not know where they were going, and they were not able to lay down their plans at the beginning and say, these are the standards we must aim for, the various areas of the building, and have these standards developed as the construction went on. So, of course, you had a constantly escalating level of expenditure because of this oversight and if you want to put the finger on anybody, if you want to blame somebody, then you really must go to the people who approved the decisions to continue and that, of course, takes you into the matter of policy as you correctly pointed out. All the interdepartmental committee and all the civil servants can do is to recommend, and if you are wrong in our system you pay for it in an election.

• 1655

Mr. Dinsdale: I think perhaps we had better have the agenda committee wrestle with this arrangement. There is an old saying about comparing politicians to Christopher Columbus who did not know where he was going when he set out and did not know where he was when he arrived.

The Chairman: And he did it on borrowed money.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I would like to risk a personal opinion. I think the place to start the discussion that Mr. Dinsdale is pointing to is in the House of Commons. That is where we discuss policies; over here we are supplied with figures and the answers we have asked for. Now if we want to have a discussion on policies of the government, the House is the place to do it. That would be my opinion.

The Chairman: Well, if it is agreeable to members, perhaps we could have a meeting of the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure, say tomorrow at 2 o'clock.

Mr. McCleave: May I suggest for the consideration of the Subcommittee that you gentlemen consider whether Mr. McIlraith, the former Minister of Public Works should not be called. We obviously do have to get to grips with a political figure on this one.

The Chairman: I would be happy to speak to Mr. McIlraith.

Mr. Mongrain: He was not the Chairman of the Treasury Board.

The Chairman: No, he was Public Works.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Benson was, I think, for a while at least.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, I am quite easy any way that is decided, but it seems to me that we will be wasting an awful lot of people's time if we have a former head of the Treasury Board, a former Minister of Public Works and one of two former Secretaries of State, neither of whom are available, who really I suppose, if you are getting into the realm of policy, are the people with whom you would want to go over these step-by-step things. I would not be against an attempt to do so, but I do not know where it is going to lead us.

The Chairman: I think that is the problem in a nutshell.

Mr. Osler: I think we have got to the point where we know where the final decisions were made and the buck was no longer passed. What we can do by going further I do not know, but I am quite willing to sit here while we do.

Mr. Dinsdale: I think the main point in this whole exercise is that we come up with sufficient information that will make it possible to avoid a repetition. As elected representatives we are all responsible to the taxpayer, and it is the taxpayer that takes it on the chin in cases of this kind, but I think perhaps we can discuss this in the Agenda Committee to see whether it would be helpful in casting further enlightenment upon this can of worms.

You know in the case of Winnipeg, Mr. Osler, that assistance of this kind would have been very much appreciated in your Centennial project and it would have been appreciated in my constituency as well as in many other parts of Canada. I think this is the crux of the matter; the expenditure of public funds in a responsible and equitable way.

The Chairman: Are there any further comments?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I do not think we need call a whole variety of Ministers; I think Mr. McIlraith was at or near the heart of the whole thing from the start and I would be content to ask just a few questions of him.

The Chairman: Well, I will put it to Mr. McIlraith.

Mr. McCleave: I am sure he will be delighted.

The Chairman: I shall report to the Subcommittee if you could meet in my office at two o'clock. Is it agreed? Fine; I declare this meeting adjourned.

APPENDIX "E"

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

November 8, 1968.

Mr. M. Slack,
Secretary of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films & Assistance to the Arts, Room 406, West Block,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Mr. Slack:

The Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts when discussing the Revised Main Estimates (1968-69) of the National Arts Centre Corporation, asked its Director General, Mr. G. Hamilton Southam, to table the following documents: a) the so-called Brown Book—the National Capital Arts Alliance's 1963 submission to the Government; b) the 1965 Applebaum report on the creation of an orchestra; c) a survey of subsidy policies of European countries prepared in 1965 by a member of the staff; and d) salary scales at the Centre.

The Brown Book was distributed to each member during the course of the Committee's meeting on 29 October 1968. It was agreed between Mr. Reid and Mr. Southam that since there were very few copies of the Applebaum report left, we would send to you three copies, one for the Chairman of the Committee and two for you to circulate to the members. These copies are attached herewith. Our only copy of the survey of subsidy policies of European countries was returned to us last week after you had run off copies of the document for the Committee's use. With regard to salary scales, I would explain that the Centre has 20 grades divided into four classes as follows:

Class A (grades 1 to 10) from $3,120 to $8,937

Class B (Grades 11 to 16) from $9,360 to $16,585

Class C (grades 17 to 18) from $15,600 to $22,500

Class D (grades 19 to 20) from $19,750 to $27,000

We have 19 employees in Class A, 12 in Class B, 4 in Class C and none in Class D. The Director General's salary, fixed by Order-in-Council, is $24,840.00.

Yours truly,

Pierre Gravelle,
Secretary of the Corporation.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

THURSDAY, November 14, 1968.

(11)

The Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts met this day at 11.25 a.m. The Vice-Chairman, Mr. J. A. Mongrain, presided.

Members present: Messrs. Corbin, De Bané, Dinsdale, La Salle, McCleave, Mongrain, Osler, Schreyer, Schumacher, Stafford, Stanbury (11).

In attendance: From the Public Archives: Dr. W. K. Lamb, Dominion Archivist; Dr. W. I. Smith, Assistant Dominion Archivist; Mr. A. C. Taylor, Director of Administration and Technical Services; From the National Library: Mr. Guy Sylvestre, National Librarian.

The Vice-Chairman advised that at the next sitting the Chairman would report on the last meeting of the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure regarding hearing additional witnesses on the National Arts Centre.

The Committee proceeded to the consideration of the Revised Estimates 1968-69 of the Public Archives.

The Vice-Chairman called Item 75, Public Archives, General Administration and Technical Services.

Dr. Lamb made a statement on the organization of the Public Archives and was examined thereon.

Item 75 was carried; Dr. Lamb was thanked by the Vice-Chairman and permitted to retire.

The Vice-Chairman then called Item 65, National Library; Mr. Sylvestre made a statement relating to the financial requirements of the National Library and its various operations and was examined thereon.

The examination of Mr. Sylvestre being completed, the Vice-Chairman thanked him for his presentation.

At 1.05 p.m., the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chair.

M. Slack,
Clerk of the Committee.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Tuesday, November 14, 1968

I will now ask Dr. Lamb to make his statement.

• 1122

The Vice-Chairman: Gentlemen, even though we do not have a quorum I think we will start and we will take this opportunity to hear from our guests this morning. Mr. Reid is ill today but he will be at the next meeting, when he will present a report to the Committee. Today, we will consider the revised estimates of...

Dr. W. K. Lamb (Dominion Archivist): Mr. Chairman, I think the most useful thing I can do is perhaps to say just a few words about the organization of the Archives and point out one or two interesting things that happened since the occasion last year when I had the privilege of appearing before this Committee and discussing the estimates.

• 1125

Mr. Dinsdale: Just on that point, Mr. Chairman, we had an agenda committee meeting the other day which was principally to deal with the matter that Mr. McCleave raised, that is, in pursuing the discussion on the National Centre for the Performing Arts we might have Mr. McIlraith appear before us, and certain complications arose in this regard. I think it rather important to at least resolve this aspect of the matter, and we might do so if we had a report from Mr. Reid at our next meeting. We might also consider the possibility of an interim report. We spent some considerable time at the National Centre for the Performing Arts, and this might also be something that would be worth considering.

The Public Archives consists of three branches. The one best known to the public, because it is the one that deals with the public, is the Historical Branch. That branch includes the Manuscript Division, the Map Division, the Picture Division and the Library, which are the four places to which members of the public come when they are seeking information. There are two interesting points I would like to mention. First of all, we had expected, partly because of the new building—which incidentally has worked out extremely well—and partly because of the Centenary, to have a large increase in the use of the Archives last year, and the interesting thing is that that increased use is continuing. The number of people who actually come into the building and made use of its facilities we think by the end of this year is going to be up 25 per cent over 1967, which was perhaps somewhat exceptional because of the Centenary. Both the Library and the Archives have received a very warm welcome. Incidentally, you may also be interested to know that our meeting facilities, our auditorium and our three meeting rooms, are used all the time. I have lost track of the number recently, but quite some time ago I calculated that 150,000 people have made use of those rooms since the building opened in June of 1967.

The other thing I would like to mention is something that will be of special interest to members. That is, the late publication—because the book could not be compiled completely until well along in 1967—of the Canadian Directory of Parliament. Mr. Dinsdale will be particularly interested in this for two reasons. First of all, we wrote a letter to him yesterday telling him we could not send him a free copy because when this project and various other major publication projects were undertaken it was distinctly understood there was to be no free distribution from the Archives. It was to be a sale. Your Mr. Dinsdale spoke to the Minister and the Minister's office has asked me to arrange to make copies available free of charge to those members who request them. Therefore, when you receive the letter that was sent to you a couple of days ago would you just please ignore it and we will be sending you a copy of this in due course.

This is a major reference work. It includes a short biography of every member of the House and Senate from July 1, 1867 to July 1, 1967. There are about 3,200 biographies and to run them all down—especially the people who were in Parliament for brief periods long ago—was a tremendous job, but I think we have done it quite successfully. There will be omissions, there will be mistakes, and we will welcome corrections, but I think this is a landmark book. As I say, owing to the arrangement made between Mr. Speaker and the Secretary of State any member who wishes a copy will receive one if he requests it. I have not yet completed arrangements for the actual distribution but I will be letting you know about that in due course.

The second branch of the Archives is the Records Management Branch, which does a tremendous housekeeping job for the departments and agencies of government. We are responsible for seeing that records are scheduled; that anything that does not need to be kept is disposed of promptly to save staff, space and other costs; we look after dormant records in record centres and finally, by the authority of a public records order, an Order in Council passed in September of 1966. I am responsible for actual destruction. No records of the Government of Canada can either be destroyed or transferred to other ownership without my approval. The order also instructed all departments of the government to have their records scheduled by May 1, 1969. May 1, 1969, is creeping closer all the time and I recently wrote to all the deputy heads of departments and agencies to inquire about their progress. We have already heard from about half of them, and the picture is very promising indeed. I do not think we will have 100 per cent scheduling by May 1, 1969, but we are going to have so nearly a complete scheduling that I think that date promises to be a real landmark in the economical and proper management of the official records of the Government of Canada.

• 1130

The third division, which is headed by Mr. Taylor who is with me this morning, is the Administration and Technical Service Branch. The Administration Branch, of course, looks after a great number of housekeeping details and it also looks after many things for the National Library. When the two institutions began to grow up together the Treasury Board requested that we should not duplicate services but expand already existing ones to serve both agencies. So the Archives gives many services to the Library such as bindery, photographic, personnel accounting and so on.

One of the major activities is the central microfilm unit which, although it is very much part and parcel of archival activities, is doing more and more work of other kinds for departments of the government. Microfilming is becoming more and more important in all sorts of systems that are being adopted—record systems and so on, and this unit is helping a great many departments to improve their services, their record-keeping, and their facilities in that respect.

Mr. Chairman, that is a rapid bird's eye view of some of the things that have come to light in the last year that I thought might possibly be of interest to members of the Committee.

The Vice-Chairman: Thank you, Doctor. Mr. Dinsdale is next.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I have a few questions that I would like to direct to the witness this morning.

Before I commence with questions I would like to recognize what is, I suppose, Dr. Lamb's last appearance before this Committee. He is ending 20 years of illustrious service in the capacity of Dominion Archivist. I know, from my association with him, that he has made a great contribution in this field of public service.

I know how keen Dr. Lamb was on having a National Library established, because we did have many conversations on that matter in days gone by. We have our National Library in operation today and I am sure that even though Dr. Lamb is not going to be directly identified with it in his years of retirement he will maintain his interest and serve on a volunteer basis.

There is one area of questioning I would like to commence this morning. I have several areas on which I would like to question but I do not want to monopolize too much time this morning. Perhaps we can rotate when I have completed this one area of questioning.

You referred to access to documents, which has now been consolidated under the Dominion Archivist. Does that refer to all documents from all departments of government?

Dr. Lamb: There are two distinct things here, Mr. Dinsdale: custody and access. So far as the record centre at Tunney's Pasture is concerned, let us say, for example, that we receive departmental records from External Affairs—or from Energy, Mines and Resources, or wherever they may come from. We take possession of these records, we service them, and we send them back to departments when they need them at the rate of 400 or 500 inquiries a day. However, control of access to those, as long as they are in the records centre, rests with the department and not with us. We control access by consultation with the department once they come to the Archives proper. The contents of the Wellington Street building are under my control so far as access is concerned, with certain limitations set by departments that have transferred material to us.

We have never had in Canada a general access rule, but this has been a matter of discussion. I do not think it would be proper for me to say anything definite, but a definite rule is in the making and I would hope that it will be operative before long. This would be an over-all rule permitting access to all government records beyond a certain age provided they did not come within two or three quite necessary categories that must be protected—security, for example. In a sense our personal papers should not be available in the interest of proper privacy of the individual and so on, but apart from that the general run of records would become automatically available after a passage of time. The rule in the United Kingdom, for instance, has been recently amended from 50 years to 30 years, and I would hope that ours would follow along that line.

• 1135

Mr. Dinsdale: Is there a rule in the United States, or do they have any rule in that regard?

Dr. Lamb: There is no overriding rule, but the ones that are of most interest to Canadians are those concerning the Secretary of State and so on, and thirty years is becoming pretty well recognized internationally as a fair and desirable period.

Mr. Dinsdale: I commented about the American accessibility because their memoirs and other documents that appear in profusion seem to be free of some of the problems that our current crop of political writings have encountered. We are getting a whole spate of books today which are based on fiction than on fact—guesstimations and speculations—which involve the discussion of pretty serious and intimate aspects of government. Do you expect the rule being contemplated would cover a 30 year period.

Dr. Lamb: I think the important point to consider here is that this would be a rule beyond which everything would be available, but it would not say that things cannot be available until they are so many years old. There is nothing to prevent arrangements within the period as well as outside it.

Mr. Dinsdale: And this would be determined by the departments concerned, or the individual.

Dr. Lamb: The department or the individual who controlled the papers.

Mr. Dinsdale: My reason for raising this question is that I have had inquiries, for instance, from students and scholars engaged in research who, apparently, find the door pretty tightly closed on some of these matters, particularly with reference to External Affairs. Would External Affairs be subject to the 30 year rule too?

Dr. Lamb: Yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: And any exceptions would have to be on a decision basis after determining the intent of the scholar, the area to be covered and so on?

Dr. Lamb: Yes. I think there will be three categories where material would have to be protected. One is the matter of security—if it is not deemed in the interest of the country that certain files should be made available. Another is papers that might cause complications to foreign countries—there might be considerations there. And still another, is the right of privacy. The government is in possession of many files relating to individuals. I, for instance, do not think it would be proper to have these become automatically available; I think a person is entitled to that protection. That is generally recognized, not merely here but in other countries.

Mr. Dinsdale: This would apply to Privy Councillors of course.

Dr. Lamb: Oh, yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: Thank you.

The Vice-Chairman: Mr. Corbin?

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Chairman, since I am new to this—what will I call it—game of politics I would like to know from Dr. Lamb if there are special services available to members of Parliament from the National Archives.

Dr. Lamb: What kind of service have you in mind?

Mr. Corbin: I am referring to research staff at our disposition, among other things.

Dr. Lamb: No, we have no special staff that serves members.

Mr. Corbin: We are considered part of the general public.

Dr. Lamb: Yes, but we may have a slight prejudice toward helping you perhaps more than we would others.

Mr. Corbin: I am interested in the title of that book you have published. What is the name of it again, please?

Dr. Lamb: The Canadian Directory of Parliament 1867-1967. I may say that a translation problem arose in this connection and the French edition has been delayed. However, a complete French version will appear in due course.

Mr. Corbin: I have a few other questions, Mr. Chairman.

The Vice-Chairman: Yes, go ahead.

Mr. Dinsdale: Are we moving from research?

Mr. Corbin: I am still in that general field, Mr. Chairman.

The Vice-Chairman: I have only one other name on my list.

An hon. Member: I want to refer to the research side of it.

Mr. Corbin: I will be reverting to that in another question. What working relations or exchange programs, if any, do you have with the provinces?

• 1140

Dr. Lamb: There are no formal exchange arrangements, but all the provincial archives and the federal archives work very closely together. We are on the happiest personal terms with them all. In fact, several of them at one time were on our staff, many of them have taken courses that we have given and so on, and I could say that there is the happiest relationship and very friendly relations existing between them. Because one is federal and one is provincial you cannot have any organic connection, or anything of that kind, but for all practical purposes there is very complete co-operation.

Mr. Corbin: You are a happy group.

Dr. Lamb: Oh yes.

Mr. Corbin: I have another question, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Lamb, do you handle requests by mail from citizens and if so, are there any charges for such services?

Dr. Lamb: There is no charge except for copying, if the copying threatens to be fairly expensive. If it is just a matter of a page or two, or just answering a question, and if the easiest way to answer it is by copying a document, we will do so. However, if there is extensive copying involved we will write and say that we think they should see these documents. They amount to so many pages. The copying charge will be so much if you use microfilm and so much if you use xerox, and so on, but for the actual answering of questions there is no charge.

Mr. Corbin: Do you have a good working relationship with universities, colleges and so on?

Dr. Lamb: Oh yes.

Mr. Corbin: You have. That is all.

The Vice-Chairman: Mr. De Bané.

Mr. De Bané: I would like to know how many people under your authority at the executive level are bilingual. Do you have any idea?

Dr. Lamb: That involves the very difficult question of the definition of "bilingualism", does it not?

Mr. De Bané: To me a bilingual person is someone who speaks two languages—and perhaps more fluently than I speak English.

The Vice-Chairman: That is asking pretty much. In a position like that I would put it another way, I would say those people who can get along in both languages.

Dr. Lamb: I think an example of this would be Mr. Smith, who is sitting beside me. He has an excellent knowledge of written French and understands it without any difficulty, but as it happens he has relatively little opportunity to speak it. He went to take private lessons some time ago with the idea of improving his French and his teacher said, "There is nothing I can do for you. You just need to go out and talk." However, French is the mother tongue of 55 per cent of the staff of the Archives. The Director of the Historical Section is a French Canadian. As we come down the stairs I am first, Mr. Smith is second and Mr. Weibrenner is Head of the Historical Section. Scattered all through the divisions we have archivists whose mother tongue is French. I will put it this way. We have no difficulty in giving quite satisfactory service to a person who only speaks French.

Mr. De Bané: Do you even make translations of documents?

Dr. Lamb: No, not as a rule. We have done in a few exceptional cases. You mean if a document was in English and someone wanted a French version? No, I think from the standpoint of an archive that is unsound. A document is a document. If it is in French we leave it in French. If it is in English we leave it in English. I do not think we should take the responsibility of attempting to produce an official text in the other language.

The Vice-Chairman: Dr. Lamb, I would like to ask you a supplementary question. You said that 55 per cent of your staff speaks French only. I would hope they would speak both languages, too.

Dr. Lamb: I doubt if we have one French person who cannot get along in English, but the mother tongue of 55 per cent of them is French.

The Vice-Chairman: I suppose that most of the other 45 per cent can get along in French. They understand it and they can get along?

Dr. Lamb: Yes.

The Vice-Chairman: Mr. Stanbury.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if Dr. Lamb could tell us whether or not the Archives have become involved in film preservation, as well as the retention of printed records?

• 1145

Dr. Lamb: We are really just moving into that field. Haphazardly—by happy accident—we have acquired a considerable number of interesting items in both fields. Because they have the facilities to look after them, the films are largely held by the National Film Board in Montreal. We now have a very nicely-equipped lab where we can make sound recordings, where we can play tapes, where we can interview people and things of that kind. This is very recent, we are just moving into it. We have not done it yet to any great extent.

Mr. Stanbury: Do you have any plans to expand this aspect of your work?

Dr. Lamb: Yes. Unfortunately, it will depend on dollars and cents, and I gather that dollars and cents are not going to be too plentiful in the next little while.

Mr. Stanbury: In record retention do you see some considerable opportunity for savings through the use of microfilm?

Dr. Lamb: Microfilm is not cheap. It is actually much cheaper—unless you are going to keep documents permanently—to store them than to microfilm them. The economically-designed storage space is much cheaper than microfilming. The microfilm salesman like to tell you that you save 99 per cent, etcetera, but they do not tell you that the cost of saving that 99 per cent is.

Mr. Stanbury: So in microfilming you are concentrating on the records that have to be kept permanently, and this is the area where you see savings?

Dr. Lamb: Yes. Then, of course, you have to decide whether the papers are so inherently interesting that you want to keep the originals or whether a film would be adequate.

Mr. Stanbury: It is just the information you want to keep.

Dr. Lamb: That is right.

Mr. Stanbury: So you are carefully segregating those areas in which microfilming is economic.

Dr. Lamb: Yes. I can give you an example of that. For many years the Department of Finance microfilmed pay cheques as a matter of keeping a record and we finally persuaded them that it was cheaper to agree upon a period within which cheques should be kept and let us store them. The saving was quite substantial.

Mr. Stanbury: Fine.

Mr. McCleave: I would like to ask a supplementary on this matter of tapes and the like. As you know, Dr. Lamb, your words are being recorded this morning and perhaps it would be of interest to your successor 100 years from now if he could hear what the original archivist sounded like. However, the more important question is do you have records of parliamentary hearings which are offered to you or actual tape recording of something like the Federal-Provincial Conference on Housing and Urban Development which was held earlier this year, or any of the federal-provincial conferences where they might have made tape recordings. Is this sort of thing available to you?

Dr. Lamb: No. By and large, Mr. McCleave, the recording of conferences in that way is relatively recent. For a long time they had loud speakers in rooms but they did not have a tape recording as a product. That is fairly recent and most of these tapes are still being held because they are of practical reference use to the people concerned. I expect they will begin to come to us. I do not think they will be destroyed. After all, they are government records and they would come to us. There is obviously a time lag here. They do not come to us until they have served their immediate practical purpose. By the way, one thing that we are interested in doing—and I want to speak to Mr. Speaker about this—is having sample recordings of the proceedings of the House. The tapes are not going to be preserved in toto permanently. For instance, I think we should have a new Prime Minister's first statement in the House of Commons, and things of that kind, and there is no particular difficulty about it except the physical problem of spotting the items you want, snipping them out and preserving them.

I think perhaps we can do something in that respect through the indexes. Mr. MacLeod, who is in charge of the indexing, is a good friend of ours and as a matter of duty and routine he goes through the proceedings minutely and I think that he would probably know the kinds of things that would interest us and be able to spot them so that we could have them. I do not think it is necessary to preserve everything but I think we should have something. The only tape that we have at the moment from the House is the tape of the explosion. The staff thought that should be preserved for posterity, so it came to me in a little box. I may say it was a very disappointing noise on the tapes.

Mr. McCleave: What about CBC record where you would have, for instance, some of the great voices from the past. Is this sort of thing available or do they jealously guard it? I know they have a fair collection themselves.

• 1150

Dr. Lamb: No, the CBC is very generous about this. As a matter of fact, there have been discussions between Dr. Davidson and myself fairly recently and there are some colossal problems there. The CBC has 150 million feet of film and obviously this whole footage need not be preserved. The great difficulty is to check 150 million feet of film and select and segregate what should be kept.

Mr. McCleave: It could be pared by eliminating the commercials, I suppose.

Dr. Lamb: I think something can be done though. But considering they have storage problems and budget problems and everything else, the CBC have been very, very good about preserving their things, by and large, especially since bringing in television.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have a supplementary on the parliamentary records, Mr. Chairman. Proceedings are taped. Are these tapes preserved?

Dr. Lamb: Mr. Dinsdale, I am afraid I do not know whether any of them have yet been destroyed, but the intention is not to keep them all permanently because they are used essentially for transcription purposes. I think before they are destroyed they should be screened, and with the help of the indexes certain outstanding speeches or occasions should be taken out and preserved.

Mr. Dinsdale: Has this been going on ever since we installed the public address system?

Dr. Lamb: Yes. Is that now about five years? Four or five years.

Mr. Dinsdale: Longer than that.

Dr. Lamb: Longer than that. Time flies.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is there any problem other than a technical problem?

Dr. Lamb: No. It would be a problem of staff time and of identifying, on the tape, the particular section that you wanted to preserve. We are perfectly capable of looking after the tapes, trying them, preserving them and everything of that kind.

Mr. Dinsdale: Are the parliamentary officials quite happy to have these made available?

Dr. Lamb: Yes. I think a formal request from me about this matter should go to Mr. Speaker. We have discussed it informally but it has not come yet to the point of a formal request. I hope it will very shortly.

Mr. McCleave: But you do not anticipate difficulties in retaining some of these records of our proceedings.

Dr. Lamb: No. Not if we can segregate the items we want. That is the major problem.

The Chairman: Mr. Schreyer.

Mr. Schreyer: Dr. Lamb, I understand, probably incorrectly, that the use made of the Public Archives really divides into two kinds: one, the use made of it by the departments as they call back certain material and the other, by people engaged in academic research. Do you keep records of the number of people who come to the Public Archives actually to work there?

Dr. Lamb: This year, to the end of October, there were 23,943.

Mr. Schreyer: This is for one calendar year?

Dr. Lamb: For 10 months ending October.

Mr. Schreyer: Then I would take it you do a good deal of photostating which is then sent out to the various academic institutions on request from professors.

Dr. Lamb: Yes.

Mr. Schreyer: Did you indicate to Mr. McCleave if, at the present time, you have any selections of CBC material?

Dr. Lamb: The only important CBC material we have goes back to war days. You perhaps remember the Mathew Halton broadcasts, the war broadcasts. They were all recorded on metal disks and they are very temporary. You can only play them a few times. A collection of over 500 of these was sent to us for safekeeping and later CBC and ourselves both recognized that they were of very great interest and would be of very great interest in the years to come and that they should not be left in that form. They were sent by sections to Toronto and re-recorded so that they would be permanently available. That is the most important material.

Mr. Schreyer: You have no continuing arrangement with the CBC yet.

Dr. Lamb: No, that is one of the matters Dr. Davidson and I were talking about.

Mr. Schreyer: I think I heard you say, sir, that you are required to decide on all documents and records intended for destruction.

Dr. Lamb: That is right.

Mr. Schreyer: I assume you cannot do this personally. How many persons do you have assisting you in making this kind of decision?

• 1155

Dr. Lamb: The decision is made in two places. Within the Manuscript Division of the Public Archives there is a Public Records Section which is the place to which public records that are going to be preserved permanently will ultimately come. That staff looks at things and gives me reports, suggestions and advice. Then, in the Records Management Branch there is also a group there, the Advisory Services Division of a half dozen people who are thoroughly familiar with registry procedures and departmental procedures and things of that kind. They are capable of looking at things both from the point of view of the departments—of the practical usefulness of the records from the department's point of view and the necessity, perhaps, of keeping them for a longer or shorter period from the department's point of view—and also bearing in mind the long-term interest of the Historical Branch in the Public Archives proper.

These are very competent and experienced people and I get the reports and go over them personally. They all report to me and I do not sign anything unless I have had a report and am satisfied that the review has been satisfactory and that what is being done seems reasonable; and nothing is destroyed without the knowledge and written consent of the department concerned and the consent of the Comptroller of the Treasury and the Auditor General.

Mr. Schreyer: You may not be aware personally of this particular case but I raise it now because I think it gives some insight into the way in which you proceed with the destruction of old papers.

I understand that about two months ago your office was on the verge of giving approval to the destruction of some Métis land script and related papers. There had been no interest in them, no requests, and then I understand that at the eleventh hour there was a sudden awakening of interest in these old papers and script by persons connected with the Manitoba Métis Federation, or whatever the organization's name is, and that it was possible to prevent their destruction.

What kind of procedure is involved in trying to get the Dominion Archivist to hold off on the destroying of records? Did you simply write him a letter saying there is some interest welling up to the surface and asking him to hold off with the destroying of these papers? Is it as simple as that?

Dr. Lamb: As far as the Métis records are concerned, I have no personal recollection of this. I do not think I ever signed a document or thought of signing a document authorizing their destruction because, to my mind, they would stick out like a sore thumb the minute I saw them.

In so far as your other question is concerned, we get hints and suggestions from quite a wide variety of people—sometimes from the provinces. For instance, some records that from the federal point of view have outlived their usefulness may nevertheless be quite interesting from the provincial point of view. This would apply, for instance, to Department of Public Works records. It is of no particular significance to me to preserve a Public Works operation of building a bridge in Alberta, we will say, but it may be of great interest to the provincial archives there and we frequently hear from the provincial archives. We frequently query the provincial archives, in fact, and say, "Now, are these of interest to you? I am willing to authorize a transfer to you as an alternative to destruction, if they are of use to you."

But suggestions come in in a great many ways from individuals who may have knowledge of something but this is pretty carefully watched. I can assure you that I do not take this responsibility in the slightest degree lightly. It is an enormous responsibility. Someone has to have it. As a matter of fact this used to rest with a committee and the Glassco Commission pointed out that the committee always did what I suggested they should do and they said, "why should you not just do it and be done with it?" And that is ultimately what was arranged.

• 1200

Mr. Schreyer: Thank you.

Mr. Corbin: I have a question for Dr. Lamb, Mr. Chairman. I would like to know if your present facilities are adequate, and if not what expansion you are planning and for what target date.

Dr. Lamb: I think our facilities are quite adequate for the moment and for some time to come. I think one consideration here is going to be the rate at which the National Library expands. The Library and the Archives share one building. Ultimately it may well be that the two institutions will grow to the extent that both can no longer occupy that building. My hope there—and we have already made preliminary suggestions to Public Works—is that they will reserve the No. 2 Building area next to our building in the hope that if and when it became necessary to expand, a twin building or another building could be put there with a tunnel between, so that we could still have the great advantages of, in effect, having everything under one roof and yet have adequate accommodation for the two. However, at the moment, so far as the Archives is concerned we are very happy indeed.

Mr. Corbin: I have another question, looking at the figures here. How do you account for the increase in rent costs or operating costs for the building from $401,600 to $694,000 which is almost a $300,000 increase?

Dr. Lamb: We took possession of the new building in the spring of 1967 and the Estimates naturally reflect the fact that we have moved into new, large and much more expensive premises.

Mr. Corbin: Expensive in what way?

Dr. Lamb: Before we moved into our new building we were in an old building on Sussex Drive and scattered around. We had the Loeb building on Besserer Street, and so on. We were scattered around in wretched premises in various places, some of them pretty low-grade spots, and naturally when you come to cost account it on a rental basis the new building is more expensive than that.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes.

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, concerning the service you can provide to the Parliamentary Library, we have a research branch of the Parliamentary Library now which is a greatly appreciated service, handicapped because of lack of staff, and the demands for research are on the increase as public affairs become more complex. Is there any direct co-ordination with the research people that you might have at the National Library and the research people in our Parliamentary Library? For example, if our researchers in the Parliamentary Library sent through an SOS for information on a particular item that was under active discussion in the Commons, would there be any attempt to co-ordinate and expedite?

Dr. Lamb: Mr. Dinsdale, on many occasions we receive requests, sometimes on a very hurry-up basis, for background information or something of that kind and we deal with these as a matter of course. We do not give them special treatment but we will give them special priority. I mean, if they are urgent we do our level best to meet them.

You mentioned the Library. I am no longer responsible for the Library. As far as the Archives is concerned, naturally we have the older material, the background material, but that is certainly at the disposal of anyone who asks for it and we would do our best to supply whatever was needed and have done, I am sure, on many occasions. They are not segregated in any way; they just come in in the flow.

Mr. Dinsdale: So there is no direct co-ordination to meet the special needs of Parliament?

Dr. Lamb: No, and there is no designation within our organization of staff specifically for that purpose. I think that is what you have in mind.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, this is what I have in mind. Is there any discussion along that line?

Dr. Lamb: No, it has never been raised with me.

Mr. Dinsdale: Now, concerning staff, do you have problems in getting trained staff? Perhaps this applies more to the Library than to the Archives. Has there been a great shortage of librarians and trained people?

• 1205

Dr. Lamb: I think Mr. Sylvestre is full of information on that topic. So far as the Archives is concerned, good archivists are not too plentiful. Our great difficulty is that for all practical purposes an archivist must be trained on the job. It is not the kind of job you can learn at school. You must have certain background requirements but there is no place you can learn except by actually handling material and working with collections. That means that it takes years to produce a first-class archivist from our point of view and, of course, the very sad thing is that these people are highly desirable commodities from the point of view of universities. Having had a man for six, eight or ten years and developed him into a first-rate archivist you will find that a university comes along and entices him away, for his research knowledge is very valuable. I cannot replace him other than by growing another archivist, which takes years. There is no place where I can go outside and hire archivists. We produce most of the archivists in the country.

Mr. Dinsdale: It is what you would call an in-service training program.

Dr. Lamb: That is right.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is there any university course that is helpful as background in preparing an archivist? Are any of the universities co-operating in this regard?

Dr. Lamb: The whole matter of training for archivists is of great concern today in Canada, the United States and Great Britain and there are schools beginning to appear, but all those schools recognize that even after a man has spent a year at a course, he has an awful lot to learn in service.

Three times in co-operation with Carleton University—the last time being last summer—we have given a non-credit certificate summer course—there is no degree involved but there is a certificate that they completed the course—in archives and records work and I think it is a very good course. It has been very helpful. It has enabled a lot of people, say from the provincial archival institutions, from universities that have manuscript collections, and so on, to come here and examine our techniques, how we handle things, what we do, and the result is that across the country there is becoming some uniformity in standards and approach to services, and so on, that I think is very worth while, but there is as yet in Canada no full-fledged archives schools.

I think, Ottawa is the logical place for one because it is absolutely essential that it should be where it has ready and immediate access to a large archival institution, because of this great necessity for practical work as well as the theory.

Mr. Dinsdale: So you have begun a summer course, at least, which might eventually expand into something beyond its present size.

Dr. Lamb: Yes, and that has been given three times and this last one was very successful indeed, and I hope we could do it again.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have one more question on this matter of access to documents. Some departments have their own historians right within the department. This includes External Affairs, Defence and so forth; perhaps it applies to all departments, I am not sure. Do the official historians within the branch have access to the documents or are they subject to the same restrictions?

Dr. Lamb: No; for instance, the staff of the Historical Division on External Affairs would have access to anything that their own Department permits them to see. They would not have automatic access, but if they are working for the Department I presume the Department would let them have access. The same would apply to Professor Wise and his staff in the Historical Directorate in the Department of National Defence.

Mr. Dinsdale: That would be an internal departmental decision?

Dr. Lamb: Yes, but when they come to the Archives they are subject to just the same limitations as anyone else.

The Chairman: Shall Item 75 carry now? Item 75 agreed to.

The Chairman: Well, Doctor, thank you very much. This has been very interesting testimony.

I now call Item 65.

DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE

J—National Library

65 General Administration including a payment of $140,000 to the National Library Purchase Account for the purpose of acquiring books, in conformity with section 12 of the National Library Act—$1,585,000.

I would ask Mr. Sylvestre to make a statement.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Guy Sylvestre (National Librarian): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a short general statement about the National Library, before attempting to answer the questions that you and your colleagues may wish to ask.

• 1210

As stated by the Secretary of State, in his opening remarks, when he appeared before this Committee, October 31 last, the total financial requirements in 1968-69 are $35,000 lower than the previous year. This is due to a large reduction in payments to the National Library Purchase Account, from $250,000 in 1967-68 to $140,000 in 1968-69. My predecessor requested a lower payment to this account this year. There was a balance of $150,000 at the end of the year, 1967-68, due to the curtailment of the Library's book purchases program. This resulted from the generous gifts of books received during the Centennial Year, especially that of Great Britain to the approximate value of $270,000.

Increases in expenditures are shown under salaries and wages due to the greater number of employees—227 as against 210—required to deal with the increased number of reference and bibliographic requests, interlibrary loans, titles reported to the Union Catalogue, and publications received, catalogued, classified, listed or indexed, etc.

More funds were requested under Allowances to cover stipends in lieu of pay and tuition fees for the librarian-in-training program. Currently there are 10 employees in training.

The increase under Telephones and Telegrams is principally due to the growing use made of Telex thus supplying information more rapidly to other libraries and so facilitating research throughout Canada.

In a word, the cost of services provided by the National Library is less than 6 per cent higher this year than the previous year, although these services constantly grow due to increased demands from all parts of Canada, and even from abroad.

I should add, however, that we will require Supplementary Estimates in the amount of approximately $155,000 this year. This amount involves $127,000 for salaries and wages. The remaining $28,000 is for Professional and Special Services, and relates to the recently introduced automation of the index to Canadiana.

[English]

As you noticed, Mr. Chairman, these remarks deal only with figures. I should like to leave it to the Committee to decide whether they would like me to give a statement on the various programs under the various divisions, as Dr. Lamb just did, or give this by way of answers to questions.

The Vice-Chairman: What is the opinion of the Committee?

Some hon. Members: A statement.

Mr. Sylvestre: I will be as brief as possible. We have in the National Library three main branches as well as the Office of Library Resources. The first branch is Acquisitions. This branch decides what books we should order, processes the orders and so on, and they do the same thing for periodicals or records. Another branch, which is much larger, is the Cataloguing branch. It is divided into three sections. One is called the Descriptive Cataloguing Section and this is the branch where they produce the cards which go into our own catalogues—in other words, they catalogue our own collection. There is also the Subject Cataloguing section which was established later and which ascribes headings to the various cards.

The most important section in the Cataloguing branch, from the national point of view, is the National Bibliography branch. This is the branch that produces Canadiana, which is the national bibliography. As you no doubt know, when the National Library Act was passed in 1952 and took effect on January 1, 1953 legal deposit was adopted in the country. From that time on the National Library received two copies of every book published in Canada, and in most recent years we added periodicals, excluding newspapers. All these publications, which now amount to more than 12,000 a year, are fully catalogued by this branch and printed in Canadiana, which I am sure you have seen. This bibliography is not only extremely useful to a great many Canadian and foreign libraries for purposes of cataloguing—they have in this way very direct access to bibliographic information on Canadian publications—but a good many libraries use them also as a buying guide. They check it from month to month because it is a monthly publication with yearly accumulations. As a supplement, so to speak, to Canadiana we also produce Canadian Thesis which is an annual list of theses accepted by Canadian universities.

• 1215

The other large branch is the Reference branch. This branch is divided into a number of sections. There is a newspaper section, there is a serial section where are received and processed 7,000 periodicals which we now receive currently.

One of the two most important branches is the Public Service division which gives a reference service to other libraries as well as to individuals who come and use our facilities on the premises.

The most important service from the national point of view is the National Union Catalogue. The National Catalogue now contains cards describing the content of over 300

Canadian libraries. It now has reached the point where it is almost impossible to manage with the facilities at our disposal and we are looking into automation in this area to cope with the situation because libraries, especially the larger university libraries, have very large book budgets now. Toronto, for instance, this year has the largest book budget in North America after Harvard and they report all their accessions to us, which now come at an average of over 4,000 a day. There are now over 8½ million entries in the National Union Catalogue which represents over 13 million volumes. This is an essential service without which a great deal of research that is going on in the country would be made much more difficult if it were not for the National Union Catalogue.

We now give locations of books on the average of about 230 a day and in this way we can make it known to other libraries, or as far as that goes, to people who come to the National Library to get information right on the premises, where the books they need for their research are available in the country. When we do not have the book listed in the National Union Catalogue at all we get in touch with the Library of Congress, to which we are linked by TWX, and they usually are able to produce a location in the United States. From there on we can proceed with interlibrary loans. In this way a great many publications are available to people wherever they may happen to live in Canada.

In addition to these three branches there is a new office, the Office of Library Resources, which was established only this year. It consists at the moment of one person, but it obviously will have to grow. The main purpose of this office is to conduct a survey of research collections available in the country. We have started to conduct this survey. At the moment we have visited seven university libraries, and this is continuing. The findings will be made available to all libraries through the publication of a bulletin. They will also have direct access at any time to the information that we were able to gather. The purpose of this principally is not only to help people locate where principal research collections are but, at the same time, to serve as a basis for future co-ordinating collecting in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, this gives you at least a sort of Cook's tour of the National Library. I will be glad to answer any questions that you may ask.

The Vice-Chairman: Thank you very much.

[Interpretation]

Mr. De Bané.

Mr. De Bané: There was something, I did not understand in your statement. On the first page: the first sentence of the second paragraph, you said the estimates required for 1968-1969 are $35,000 less than those of the previous year. Then in the last paragraph of page 2 you say that, this year, we shall have to ask for a supplementary estimate of approximately $155,000. I do not understand that.

Mr. Sylvestre: The Estimates that we have in front of us which are the revised estimates are $35,000 less than the previous year, but we have already indicated to the Treasury Board that we would make a request for supplementary funds estimated at about $155,000 to be submitted to the House in due time.

Mr. De Bané: The Minister said, on October 31 last, the budget would be $35,000,000 less this year, has this changed since the 31st of October?

Mr. Sylvestre: This has not changed. It is simply that the appropriate time for the preparation of the supplementary estimates is not here yet. I think it will be about the end of November.

Here I simply gave you an indication, a general idea of the moneys that we would need. I simply wanted to warn you that these estimates would be requested soon.

Mr. De Bané: Thus, it will cost $155,000 more?

Mr. Sylvestre: $120,000 more.

Mr. De Bané: What is the relationship between the National Library, which you head and the Library of Parliament?

Mr. Sylvestre: These are two distinct institutions. I know that Mr. Dinsdale asked Dr. Lamp, earlier, about the relationship between the Archives and the Library of Parliament. These relations are, for obvious reasons, quite close, that is closer than those between the National Library and the Library of Parliament.

For many years the Library of Parliament was a sort of pseudo-national library, because there was no national library in Canada. It bought a very considerable amount of books over a period of one century, because no one else in the country did. It was, for a long time, the largest library in Canada. This is not the case any more.

The Library of Parliament is increasingly specializing itself. I have spent fifteen years over there, so maybe, Mr. Chairman, you will allow me to say a word about it. Today, the Library of Parliament specializes mostly in the conservation of parliamentary documents and books on law, economics, social questions, welfare, history.

Now that the National Library exists, all these other libraries which belong to the State are always happy, of course, to co-operate with the Library of Parliament to make available to the M.P.'s, through the Library of Parliament certain documents of reference books that can not be found at the Library of Parliament. These are loaned in the same manner as we ourselves borrow books from the Library of Parliament, if we do not have them, when these works are requested by various parts of the country.

• 1225

Mr. De Bané: A rather simple question: Where is the National Library situated in Ottawa?

Mr. Sylvestre: It is the last building on the north side of Wellington Street, just past the Supreme Court and facing the Department of Trade and Commerce.

The Vice-Chairman: A brand new building into which they have just moved. Could I ask a supplementary question, with your permission, Mr. De Bané. In practice, let us say that Mr. De Bané or another member makes a request for such-and-such a book at the Library of Parliament, and the Library of Parliament does not have it. Would the Library of Parliament automatically make the request of the National Library, or do we have to make a request ourselves?

Mr. Sylvestre: No, but you can of course make the request directly, Mr. Chairman, but the normal procedure is to address yourself first to the Library of Parliament.

I am very happy that you placed this supplementary question, it will allow me to give more information to underline the very extensive use made of the collective catalogue. If a member of Parliament or a senator needs a book, a periodical, a magazine, which cannot be found at the Library of Parliament, we, at the National Library are automatically asked whether we have it, and/or where the book can be found. Since we have the collective catalogue, which comprises the repertory of more than 300 libraries—the libraries of all the Departments, universities, provincial legislatures, and of all the large public libraries—this means that if our National Library, which is a rather new institution,—it is only 15 years old—does not have the magazine, periodical or book requested, we can tell the Library of Parliament where that book can be found in Canada, preferably in Ottawa. Thus, we can obtain the book in a minimum of time.

Mr. De Bané: How many books do you have at the National Library?

Mr. Sylvestre: We have about 400,000 titles.

Mr. De Bané: And at the Library of Parliament?

Mr. Sylvestre: A little less.

Mr. De Bané: About the same number?

Mr. Sylvestre: Perhaps 300,000 or 350,000 titles.

The Vice-Chairman: Another supplementary question. Beside these reference works I suppose you also have all kinds of documents which are not necessarily books, but could be special reports, on documents of that nature?

Mr. Sylvestre: No, very few. In fact, we of course receive all the official publications of the Canadian Government and the provincial governments, as is the case with the Library of Parliament. We also have exchanges with foreign countries, but relatively few as yet, because, as Dr. Lamb mentioned before last year, the National Library did not have a building providing it lacked the proper facilities for its own needs. Therefore, it could not set up extensive programs of exchange. We simply did not know where to put the books.

The Vice-Chairman: Mr. De Bané.

Mr. De Bané: Which is the American institution which could be your counterpart?

Mr. Sylvestre: It is the Library of Congress, but there is a difference. The Library of Congress is the National Library of the United States, and is at the same time the library of the House of Representatives and of the American Senate.

Mr. De Bané: Could you tell us why we have chosen to have two separate institutions: a Library of Parliament, and a National Library, while in the United States the Library of the Congress serves both purposes?

Mr. Sylvestre: It is not very easy to reply to your question. At the start I might mention that it is quite unusual for a library of Parliament to be the national library, as is the case in the United States. In some other countries, like in Australia, for example, they recently established a national library which is distinct, separate from the Library of Parliament. In Ottawa, there might be a problem of architecture, of geography, I'm not quite sure, but I don't see how it would have been possible to build behind the Parliament buildings a library which would have the dimensions of the National Library. It might have been possible to build it somewhere else, and it could have been possible to build it somewhere else, and it could have been decided that the Library of Parliament would be part of this National Library. But this is a question that the MP's themselves have to resolve.

• 1230

If I understand correctly, the main advantage of the American system is that the National Library is also the Library of the Capitol. I am afraid that our system compels us often to buy two copies of the same book. Is this exact?

Mr. Sylvestre: Very often we not only buy two copies of the book, but ten copies of it. I believe it is very important in Canada to do two things: first, to try and study as well as possible, as comprehensively as possible, much more so than what we did in the past, the question of co-ordination of collections. I am quite sure, for example, that in a few years it will be possible for all large libraries in Canada to revise their purchasing policy, because they will know much better than now what the purchasing policy of other libraries is.

At present, there is a specific problem for Parliament. When you sit evenings, you expect—and this I know from experience—to have fast service at night or even over weekends. Up to now, it has not been the policy of the National Library to provide service on evenings.

Parenthetically speaking, I might as well tell you right now that I have already discussed this question with our heads of departments. I told them I believed it would be necessary, very shortly, to offer reference and loan services, evenings and over weekends, at the National Library. I believe that the demand for such a service does exist.

The Vice-Chairman: Mr. Sylvestre, to complete Mr. De Bané's idea, I imagine that with your National catalogue, the Parliamentary Library will not purchase books for which requests are rare and which you do have. It will know that you have them. So, there will be no duplication. You can purchase many copies of the same book because a good many people might ask for them at the same time. But what I mean, is that there is no duplication between the two libraries.

Mr. Sylvestre: Indeed, there is no duplication among the two libraries. In fact, the Library of Parliament no longer purchases as many books as in the past because it is aware of the fact the National Library has these books. There is another point which should be stressed: the purpose of the National Library is not to serve, first of all the population of Ottawa.

Consequently, when we purchase a book, or when we subscribe to a magazine, very often this book or this magazine is part of the National Library collection, or has been loaned to Toronto, Vancouver or Halifax. If an MP feels he should have access to a book very fast because the problem he is interested in will be discussed in the House or in Committee in two days, he won't be very pleased when told: "Yes, we do have a copy, but it is in Edmonton".

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Sylvestre, I stand to be corrected, should I be mistaken. I understood that the Capitol Library in Washington operates as a National Library and as the Library of Congress. However, I believe I understood that there is a group of officials in that library which is exclusively at the service of members of Congress. Is that right?

Mr. Sylvestre: Yes, that is so. In Washington, there is a department called the Legislative Reference Service with a budget over $2 million, and with over 200 employees who work exclusively for American representatives. Naturally, they use the collection of the Library of Congress which is the largest in the world. It now has 14,000,000 books and even greater number of manuscripts, films, recordings, and so on.

• 1235

Mr. De Bané: I wish to quote a sentence from a document prepared by the Research Branch of the Canadian Library of Parliament which was published on June 7th, 1968, four months ago, and I quote:

[English]

The service provided at Washington... that is, the Research Branch,... is greater than that of Ottawa, not only in range but in depth.

[Interpretation]

I wonder whether, if we were also to concentrate both institutions and have a special staff to deal exclusively with requests by MP's, we might not also be able to work more in depth. What do you think of my suggestion?

Mr. Sylvestre: I believe there is a very definite distinction to be made between the responsibilities of the National Library on the one hand, and the responsibilities of the Library of Parliament on the other hand. Please allow me.

Mr. De Bané: Yes.

Mr. Sylvestre: The National Library does not have and will probably never have, certainly not in the near future, what can be specifically called a research department. The Library of Parliament did not have such a service a few years ago. The members of both Houses passed a resolution to request the institution of a research department at the Library of Parliament.

Mr. De Bané: In 1965.

Mr. Sylvestre: Yes. This department provides for a very specific clientele, so to speak, and is capable of taking into account the context wherein it operates.

However, in a Library such as the National Library which serves the entire Canadian population and all the universities, in all subjects except science and technology—the National Scientific Library, which is part of the National Research Council, deals with these fields—it is very difficult to have a research department, except so far as bibliographical fields are concerned. But, to expect to have experts in economics, social sciences, law and so on, to fill the needs of Canada who would need such a huge budget, that I do not believe that...

Mr. De Bané: Yes, but in the States, within this Library, they have a group of officials dealing exclusively with the members of Congress.

Mr. Sylvestre: Yes, but the research department of the Library of Parliament is always welcome at the National Library to consult publications, or documents which are not to be found in the Library of Parliament. Moreover, it has access to the libraries of the various departments. It does not have to do all the research in the Library of Parliament which has a very specialized collection, a very good collection, but which fills the essential needs of Parliament, but sometimes one has to go elsewhere for further data.

The Vice-Chairman: Excuse me if I interrupt you, but I believe that Mr. De Bané will realize, with time, that it is a question of service too.

Other colleagues, and I myself, have quite often asked for books or reference documents on very short notice. These documents or references are needed while we are in the House but, if all this material has to be picked up at the National Library, it would take half an hour and maybe more. It is a question of service. I visited the Library of Congress in the States, and I heard from a number of Congressmen whom I know that this is one of their grievances. The service is slow.

It is perhaps a question of the age of the librarians. The Library of Congress has been in existence for very many years; maybe their organization is better than ours.

• 1240

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale, a supplementary.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, I am interested in this subject and, as Mr. Sylvestre has said, it has been under discussion on Parliament Hill for a number of years.

The Vice-Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale, I would like to interrupt you. There is a mistake on your sheet. It is not "Sylvester"; it is "Sylvestre". That is French.

Mr. Dinsdale: I thought I said "Sylvestre".

The Vice-Chairman: I thought you were reading that sheet. There is a mistake on it.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have not got it.

The Vice-Chairman: I apologize.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have known Mr. Sylvestre for many years. The model that we were looking at in the initial discussions was, of course, the Library of Congress because it does serve the dual function of serving Congress and the United States as a whole. Now that we have got the divided jurisdiction and now that we do have the beginnings of a research unit in the Library of Parliament, is there no attempt to co-ordinate the resources of the National Library with the research resources of the Library of Parliament so that it might gradually expand the research service that is available to M.P.'s?

The Library of Congress as I have seen it in action concentrates in the first instance on serving Congress. You can get speeches written; you can have almost anything done for members of the Congress. Everybody wants research facilities enlarged substantially within the Library of Parliament, but this process of gradual enlargement might be minimized if we could co-ordinate the functions of the two libraries. Is there any thinking along these lines? Is there any attempt to co-ordinate or move forward in this direction?

Mr. Sylvestre: There is but the embarrassing situation I am in, if I can be very frank about this, is that what we are discussing today is this year's budget, technically. To that extent I think I can say this much: There is already a good deal of co-ordination going on in what you call resources. In other words, the Library of Parliament no longer acquires a type of material which is likely to be of very little use to parliamentarians and which they hope will be available in the National Library, but to co-ordinate the resources and to co-ordinate services are two very different problems.

We do not have any type of research services as such but our resources, as I have said before, are of course available to the services of the Library of Parliament. There is a great deal more co-ordination that should be possible in the years to come, especially as we introduce automation in a number of our operations.

I can speak to that point if you wish, provided it is understood that I am just looking into the future and not talking about present services. The moment you automate such things as the National Bibliography and the National Union Catalogue and you include the new list of periodicals which exists too, and as long as you have the necessary apparatus in other libraries which do not have to be fully automated but have the necessary terminals, they can be on line with the National Library computer when there is one and they would immediately have direct access to the information that already is available in computerized form.

• 1245

This opens all sorts of possibilities. You can do this with such things as newspaper clippings, for instance. I just want to use this as an example. At the moment I do not know how many clipping services there are in the Government of Canada. I know there is one in every department; there is one in the Prime Minister's office; there is one in the office of the leaders of all parties; there is one in the Library of Parliament. A great many people clip and index items from the newspapers and these have to be stored. From time to time you have to weed out your files, and so on, and all this is very costly because it involves not only a great number of people but a great many working hours.

It should be possible, I hope, eventually to microfilm every item of interest in every Canadian newspaper and store all these clippings in a system which can provide immediate retrieval. The Miracode equipment, for instance, will give you immediately, provided it is properly indexed on a microfiche, any item that has been put in the bank and in this way you could imagine that eventually if the decision is made to proceed with such a scheme that you could have a central bank where everything that has been clipped from papers and indexed could be immediately retrieved, and with electronic transmission you could have terminals not only in the Library of Parliament but in every departmental library, and they could get immediately a copy of any item or items they want from this bank.

If you want to look into the future, the moment we have a great many of our operations automated there will be all sorts of services that we will be able to provide, not only to Parliament but to the various Department of government and to the Canadian population as a whole which it is not possible to do to the same extent at the moment.

The Vice-Chairman: It would just be a case of budgeting money to invest.

Mr. Sylvestre: We certainly would need a great deal more money than we have available at the moment to embark on this type of...

Mr. Dinsdale: Is computerization being seriously considered, or is it merely...

Mr. Sylvestre: Yes; I am glad you asked this question, Mr. Dinsdale. Shortly after I came to the National Library I asked the Data Processing Division of the Bureau of Management Consulting Services which had been helping us in preparing the index to Canadiana and was working on the automation of Canadiana, the National Bibliography, not to look any longer at Canadiana in isolation but to make a complete survey of the automation potential of the whole library as an integrated information system.

I have just received this week after three months the preliminary report which recommends that a complete survey be made of all branches, to look at them as the integral part of what would be a completely integrated and fully automated information system.

I read this report the other day. I agree with its basic recommendation, which is that such a survey be undertaken and, in addition to that, I have also appointed in the National Library as my principal adviser on systems, Mr. James Gardner, who used to be the Chief of the Management analysis Division of the Advisory Services and appeals Branch of the Public Service Commission, which has been transferred recently to Treasury Board—he has been on the National Library Staff since September 1—he and I have been in touch with colleagues in Toronto and Laval, where a good deal of work in the field of automation has been going on over the past few years, to look at these problems in a co-operative way.

[Interpretation]

The Vice-Chairman: Mr. Corbin?

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Chairman, I have here a document in English—if you will allow me to read it—which states that:

[English]

by statute, two copies of every book published in Canada must be delivered to the National Librarian within one month from the date of publication.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Sylvestre, I would like to know whether you have any problems implementing this Act, and what control you exercise to make sure that two copies of every volume published in Canada are, in fact, made available to you?

Mr. Sylvestre: There are two distinct situations here. On the one hand, there are the publishers who have established...

The Vice-Chairman: May I interrupt you Mr. Sylvestre? Could you say what your source of reference is, Mr. Corbin?

[English]

Mr. Corbin: The portfolio of the Secretary of State, a directory of the Department.

[Interpretation]

Mr. Sylvestre: On the one hand, the Canadian publishers collaborate with us fully and we have no problem obtaining copies of their. We do have a problem though, when a very small publishing firm, a local newspaper, or an individual who publishes a booklet, or a book, or a book of personal memoirs and he does it in a sort of accidental way. Then we must try and obtain the information. We have a team of librarians whose task is to obtain everything published in Canada. This is one of the branches of the National Bibliographic Service. All Canadian reviews or magazines are checked to see what books are mentioned, and in this way we sometimes find reports about books we have not been made aware of. We also do it for a large number of dailies, because, usually, if somebody publishes a book or a booklet somebody will talk about it somewhere. Then, as soon as we are made aware of such a publication we write and we never have any problem obtaining the necessary copies.

Sometimes, when it takes us two or three years to obtain the necessary data, somebody answers: "Unfortunately, I have only two or three copies left. Would you accept one only?" And usually, in cases such as these, we say: "All right". But this never happens with well established publishing houses.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Sylvestre, would you say that you manage to obtain 99 per cent of books published in Canada?

Mr. Sylvestre: Yes, I believe so. In the national bibliography we do not only have books published in Canada, we also have books of Canadian authors published abroad, including the various translations of such books.

Mr. Corbin: These are not covered by the Act, though?

Mr. Sylvestre: No, but we buy them. Secondly, we also check and purchase systematically all foreign books, in any language whatsoever, dealing with Canada, or dealing with part of Canada.

[English]

The Vice Chairman: Mr. Osler?

• 1255

Mr. Osler: I have two very brief questions.

Relative to collecting books, which you have just been discussing, you have no law that requires publishers to do this, in the sense of the Library of Congress, for instance, where it is quite clear that if you wish to protect your copyright on a book you have to do this. In Canada the onus is really the other way around, is it not? There is no compulsion on anyone to put a book in, because his copyright is already protected?

Mr. Sylvestre: No, Mr. Chairman; on this point there are two laws which are relevant. One is the National Library Act and the other is the Copyright Act.

Section 52 of the Copyright Act provides that you may deposit the book when you ask for a copyright; and in the National Library Act there is a clause, called a legal deposit clause, which provides that every publisher in Canada shall deposit with the National Library two copies of any book he publishes; and this now applies to periodicals, except newspapers. But the regulations under the Act provide that if you have deposited the two copies under the Copyright Act you are deemed to have complied with the National Library Act, so that you do not have to deposit full copies.

Mr. Osler: But as I understand the law in Canada, If I write a book I have copyright. The onus is on someone else to prove that he has purchased copyright from me. In the United States the onus is on the worker to prove that he has copyright in the United States, whereas in Canada, if I write a book the onus is on the general public to prove that I have no copyright. There is, therefore, no compulsion on the author to deposit the book as there would be in the United States?

Mr. Sylvestre: I believe this is true. I am no lawyer, Mr. Chairman, and, in addition, we do not administer the Copyright Act in the National Library, but I am told by the Department of Justice that what gives you protection under the Copyright Act is not the fact that you have deposited the book. In other words, you may never deposit a copy and you are still protected.

Mr. Osler: All right. Thank you.

Mr. Stanbury: To put it very simply, copyright in Canada does not depend on registration.

Mr. Sylvestre: No; that is right.

Mr. Osler: My second question, Mr. Chairman, is this: In time, will the functions of the National Union Catalogue and of the Library Resources Office become one, or is the Library Resources Office going to grow into a planning organization?

Mr. Sylvestre: That is what I would hope.

In the first instance, the National Union Catalogue is purely and simply a file containing the information on what there is in research collections throughout the country. It just provides the information.

We already use the National Union Catalogue in our own acquisition program. For instance, each time a title that is requested cannot be located anywhere in Canada this is immediately reported to our Acquisitions branch and we place an order. In many instances, it is an out-of-print book and is not always easy to locate, but we put standing orders with various second hand dealers in the hope that we will get a copy, so that it will be available somewhere in Canada.

It is pretty obvious to me, however, that the present organization of the National Library is obsolete. I do not mean that as a reflection on the past, but it was established 15 years ago, as it was organized, when the National Library was established. It has expanded but it has not been completely reorganized, and the basic decision we will have to make on the type of organization we need is going to depend entirely on the report we get from the systems-analysts when they recommend what type of system we should have in the National Library. To try to reorganize it before we had this report would not achieve very much.

Mr. Osler: To clarify this point further, Mr. Sylvestre, if I am trying to do some research on a particular subject this national union catalogue is of huge value. When the Library Resources Office is working well it will be of value in a different way. I really wish to know in what way it would be different? Would it be that they would simply say to me that there are experts on such-and-such a field at the University of Western and that they had the best collection.

Mr. Sylvestre: Yes.

Mr. Osler: In that case, all they are doing is refining the other one.

Mr. Sylvestre: Yes; basically, the Library Resources Office is not meant to serve the public as such, but to serve other libraries.

Obviously, however, if you came to us and asked where was the best collection of, say, Pakistani documents in Canada we would tell you. The basic purpose of it, however, is to make information available to libraries not only so that they can better serve their clientele but that they can plan the building of their own collections in co-operation with other libraries in the area.

Mr. Osler: Thank you very much.

[Interpretation]

The Vice-Chairman: Mr. Sylvestre, I wish to thank you for your statement and all the useful information that you have given us.

[English]

As we do not have a quorum I will not call this item. We will discuss it at our next meeting.

Thank you.

Mr. McCleave: Perhaps it would be safe to say that we will not require the witness again.

We are very grateful to him for being here this morning.

The Vice-Chairman: If we ever have any problems I am sure Mr. Sylvestre would be willing to come; but I do not expect that we will need his presence at our next meeting.

Mr. Sylvestre: I am at your disposal anyhow, Mr. Chairman.

The Vice-Chairman: Thank you.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

TUESDAY, November 19, 1968.

(12)

The Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts met this day at 11.10 a.m. The Chairman, Mr. John M. Reid, presided.

Members present: Messrs. Corbin, Dinsdale, Fairweather, Givens, Guilbault, La Salle, Matte, McCleave, Mongrain, Osler, Reid, Schumacher, Stanbury (13).

In attendance: From the National Museums of Canada: Mr. C. J. Mackenzie, Secretary General; Dr. Jean S. Boggs, Director, National Gallery, Dr. A. W. F. Banfield, Director, Museum of Natural Sciences; Dr. W. E. Taylor, Director, Museum of Man; Dr. D. M. Baird, Director, Museum of Science and Technology.

The Chairman introduced the officials from the National Museums of Canada.

The Chairman reported on his discussions with Hon. G. J. McIlraith with reference to appearing before the Committee to discuss matters relating to the construction of the National Arts Centre.

Mr. Dinsdale raised the matter of an interim report to the House and this subject was referred to the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure.

Item 65, National Library, considered at the sitting of November 14, was carried.

The Committee proceeded to the consideration of the Revised Main Estimates 1968-69 of the National Museums of Canada.

Mr. Mackenzie made a statement relating to the operations and budgetary requirements of the National Museums of Canada, and was examined thereon, assisted by Doctors Boggs, Taylor, Banfield and Baird.

PROCÈS-VERBAL

MARDI 19 novembre 1968

(12)

Le Comité permanent de la radio-diffusion, des films et de l'assistance aux arts se réunit ce matin à 11 h. 10 sous la présidence de M. John M. Reid.

Présents: MM. Corbin, Dinsdale, Fairweather, Givens, Guilbault, La Salle, Matte, McCleave, Mongrain, Osler, Reid, Schumacher, Stanbury (13).

Aussi présents: Des Musées nationaux du Canada: M. C. J. Mackenzie, secrétaire général; Mlle Jean S. Boggs, directrice de la Galerie nationale; M. A. W. F. Banfield, directeur du Musée d'histoire naturelle; M. W. E. Taylor, directeur du Musée de l'homme; M. D. M. Baird, directeur du Musée des sciences et de la technologie.

Le président présente les représentants des musées nationaux du Canada.

Le président fait part de ses discussions avec l'hon. G. J. McIlraith qui devait venir devant le comité traiter de questions relatives à la construction du Centre national des arts.

M. Dinsdale soulève la question de présenter un rapport provisoire à la Chambre, et cette question est renvoyée au sous-comité du programme et de la procédure.

Le crédit 65 (Bibliothèque nationale), étudié à la réunion du 14 novembre, est adopté.

Le comité entreprend l'étude du budget principal révisé des dépenses pour 1968-1969 des Musées nationaux du Canada.

M. Mackenzie fait un exposé concernant le fonctionnement et les besoins financiers des Musées nationaux du Canada et on lui pose à lui, de même qu'à Mlle Boggs et à MM. Taylor, Banfield et Baird, des questions pertinentes.

The examination of the witnesses being concluded, at 1.05 p.m., the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chair. L'interrogatoire des témoins étant terminé à 1 h. 05 de l'après-midi, le Comité s'ajourne à l'invitation du président.

Le secrétaire du Comité,

M. Slack,

Clerk of the Committee.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

November 19, 1968.

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I think we can proceed. We have with us today the witnesses from the National Museums of Canada. Immediately to my right is Mr. C. J. Mackenzie, the Secretary General; next to him is Dr. W. E. Taylor, the Director, Museum of Man; next to him is Dr. Jean S. Boggs, Director of the National Gallery; at the table to my left is Dr. A. W. F. Banfield, Director of the Museum of Natural Sciences and last, but not least, Dr. D. M. Baird, Director of the Museum of Science and Technology. I understand that you have a short statement to make Mr. Mackenzie.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, before we proceed with this particular item, unfortunately you were absent the other day due to illness. We are pleased to see you back this morning.

The Chairman: I am still ill.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is there any statement arising from the meeting of the agenda committee? Mr. Mongrain, who was presiding, indicated that the statement would be made when you returned to Chair the proceedings. I raise the issue because, as you know, a suggestion was made that Mr. McIlraith might appear before the Committee to finalize our deliberations and on Thursday last, I think it was, we also raised the point that at this stage we might make an interim report based on our deliberations thus far which is sometimes customary in these Committee proceedings. Otherwise, our efforts evaporate into the air with nothing ever consolidated.

The Chairman: I am sure, Mr. Dinsdale, that anything this Committee does will not evaporate into thin air. With respect to the request Mr. McCleave made about Mr. McIlraith's appearing, I did speak to Mr. McIlraith about it. He said that it would not be possible for him to appear before this Committee. The reason given was because he could not take responsibility now for decisions that had been made before. Those responsibilities came under the present Minister of Public Works. He said the Committee could do no more than the House of Com-

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

[Interprétation]

Le président: Messieurs, nous pouvons ouvrir la séance. Nous allons entendre Mr. C.J. Mackenzie, Secrétaire général; Dr. Jean S. Boggs, Directrice, Galerie nationale; Dr. A.W.F. Banfield, Directeur, Musée d'histoire naturelle; Dr. W.E. Taylor, Directeur, Musée de l'homme; Dr. D.M. Baird, Directeur, Musée des sciences et de la technologie. Je croisi que vous avez un bref exposé à faire, M. Mackenzie?

M. Dinsdale: Avant de procéder, M. le Président, vous étiez absent l'autre jour, raison de maladie; nous sommes contents de vous revoir ce matin.

Le président: Je suis encore malade.

M. Dinsdale: Y a-t-il une déclaration émanant de la réunion du Comité des programmes? M. Mongrain, président, a alors dit que vous auriez une déclaration à faire à votre retour. On a dit que M. McIlraith pourrait peut-être comparaître devant le Comité pour résumer nos délibérations et, jeudi dernier, sauf erreur, nous avons aussi soulevé la question suivante, savoir qu'à cette étape-ci, nous pourrions présenter un rapport provisoire fondé sur nos délibérations jusqu'ici, ce qui est la coutume pour les délibérations de ce Comité. Autrement, est-ce que nos efforts ne disparaissent pas dans l'air sans que rien ne soit accompli.

Le président: Je suis sûr, M. Dinsdale, que le travail que fait ce Comité ne disparaîtra pas. En ce qui a trait à la requête de M. McCleave, au sujet de la comparution de M. McIlraith, j'en ai touché mot à M. McIlraith et il a dit qu'il ne lui serait pas possible de comparaître devant le Comité. La raison qu'il a donnée, c'est qu'il ne pouvait pas assumer de responsabilités maintenant pour des décisions qui relèvent du nouveau ministre des Travaux publics. Le Comité ne peut pas faire plus que la Chambre des communes et, à l'heure actuelle, à la Chambre des communes, mons, and in the House of Commons, as you are aware, the present Minister takes responsibility for the actions of his Department over a period of years. He felt that he had nothing to contribute and could contribute nothing, so he declined the suggestion that he appear, and quite properly too, I think.

With respect to an interim report, it was not raised at the meeting of the agenda committee. I agree that sometimes it is permissible to do this. What kind of interim report did you have in mind?

Mr. Dinsdale: In view of the extended discussion and hearings on the National Centre for the Performing Arts, the Committee might want to say something that would indicate conclusions that have been reached as a result of the hearings and put forward any recommendations for further consideration.

The Chairman: I think this could be done in either of two ways. I think we could call for comments from the members of the Committee and then, with those in mind, perhaps we could hold a further meeting of the agenda committee to discuss what the members had to say. Is there anyone here with a comment to make?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I think you have called certain witnesses here this morning, presumably with the concurrence of the steering committee, and I should think that rather than delay them while we have some kind of debate this matter might be taken up by the steering committee. If any member has any suggestions to make concerning a report they could be presented there, and the steering committee could consider whether or not they warranted debate by the Committee.

The Chairman: If it is agreeable to you, Mr. Dinsdale, I will call a meeting of the steering committee at the earliest possible moment to discuss this new development.

Mr. Mongrain: I would like to have a better idea of the kind of interim report he is requesting. Is it on the whole question of the National Arts Centre, or just performing arts, because that is the word you used?

Mr. Dinsdale: I am particularly interested and concerned with the National Centre for the Performing Arts and any conclusions that we might have reached as a result of our extended hearings here. I know from my experience in other committees that if we were investigating a certain area of public or le nouveau ministre est responsable de ce qu'a fait le ministère depuis un an. Il estimait qu'il ne pouvait donc rien contribuer à notre débat et a donc décliné cette invitation, à juste titre, selon moi.

La question du rapport provisoire n'a pas été soulevée à la réunion du Comité d'organisation. Je reconnais qu'on peut parfois procéder de cette façon. A quoi songez-vous exactement, quel genre de rapport provisoire?

M. Dinsdale: Je crois, vu les discussions approfondies que nous avons eues au sujet du Centre national des Arts que le Comité désirera peut-être présenter un rapport pour indiquer les constatations que nous avons faites par suite des interrogatoires et formuler certaines recommandations éventuelles.

Le président: Je crois qu'on peut procéder de deux façons. Nous pourrions demander aux membres des Comités de faire des commentaires et tenir une autre réunion du Comité d'organisation pour étudier la question plus avant. Quelqu'un ici aurait-il des commentaires à faire?

M. Stanbury: Monsieur le président, je crois que vous avez convoqué un certain nombre de témoins, ce matin, plutôt que de les faire attendre nous pourrions fort bien déferer cette question au Comité d'organisation alors que nous aurons un débat d'ordre interne.

Et si quelques députés ont des propositions à faire au sujet du rapport, ce serait le moment de les faire. Le Comité de direction pourrait décider s'il y a lieu ou non de présenter un rapport provisoire.

Le président: Si cela vous va, monsieur Dinsdale, je vais convoquer une réunion du Comité d'organisation le plus tôt possible.

M. Mongrain: J'aimerais avoir une idée du genre de rapport provisoire auquel vous songez. S'agissait-il de toute la question du Centre national des Arts ou des arts d'interprétation particulièrement?

M. Dinsdale: Je suis particulièrement intéressé au Centre national des Arts. Les constatations que nous aurions pu faire par suite de nos débats et de nos interrogatoires, pourraient nous servir pour présenter un rapport provisoire avec des commentaires ou des recommandations découlant de nos délibéradepartmental responsibility it was customary to present an interim report with any comments or recommendations arising from our deliberations.

Mr. Mongrain: So your idea is to cover the whole area of the National Arts Centre, its construction, operations, and all that?

Mr. Dinsdale: We covered all those matters in the deliberations here. Some basic issues were raised and I am concerned that out of the Committee will come an interim report that will summarize some of the conclusions we have reached, and it might even go on to make recommendations. There was interest in hearing from Treasury Board and the former Minister of Public Works because it would appear that this is a matter for high-level policy.

I for one feel that in view of the extraordinary and unusual if not even irregular proceedings in public finance which led to the concern for the increasing costs of the National Centre for the Performing Arts, we might even consider recommending that the subject be pursued further by the Public Accounts Committee so that they can perhaps devise machinery for Parliamentary review or control of these matters to avoid similar abuses of public funds.

Mr. Givens: Perhaps I should know this by now but I do not, so I am going to ask questions out of inexperience. I am finding it difficult to determine a pattern that not only this Committee is following, but other committees that I am on. Am I to understand that the pattern we are following is the discussion of estimates with respect to various groups over which this Committee has jurisdiction or with which this Committee is connected?

The Chairman: That is right.

Mr. Givens: So we are not an investigatory committee that is set up like a court of Star Chamber to determine whether the National Arts Centre did right or wrong or the people that were involved in it. Is that correct? It is a matter of determining where the money went and whether it was wise or unwise.

What I am trying to get at is that if the pattern is that we are sitting on Estimates which have to be recommended somewhere I suppose the recommendation goes to the tions. C'est la politique habituelle lors de l'étude d'un secteur de responsabilité publique.

M. Mongrain: Par conséquent, vous voulez couvrir tous les secteurs du Centre national des Arts.

M. Dinsdale: Nous avons, je crois, couvert toutes ces questions dans nos délibérations. Il y avait certaines questions fondamentales qui ont été soulevées et à la suite de ces questions, de ces débats nous pourrions peut-être présenter un rapport provisoire pour résumer certaines des constatations que nous avons faites, ou des conclusions auxquelles nous sommes arrivés. Nous voudrions peut-être formuler des recommandations.

Je sais que certains députés voulaient faire témoigner des représentants du Conseil du Trésor et l'ancien ministre des Travaux publics. Il semble que ce soit une question de ligne de conduite générale. J'estime que, vu cette façon de procéder, extraordinaire dans le financement public, et qui a fait gonfler les chiffres de la construction du Centre national des Arts, nous pourrions peut-être recommander que la question soit étudiée plus à fond par le Comité des Comptes publics, afin qu'il puisse mettre au point peut-être des filières, des dispositifs, des rouages pour qu'on puisse, à l'avenir, éviter des abus de ce genre dans le domaine des fonds publics.

M. Givens: J'aimerais poser une question à ceux qui ont plus d'expérience que moi. J'ai peine, pour ma part, à déterminer la façon de procéder de notre Comité et des autres Comités. Notre tâche, en somme, n'est-elle pas d'examiner les crédits des ministères ou des organismes qui relèvent de notre mandat?

Le président: C'est cela.

M. Givens: Nous ne devons donc pas déterminer si le Centre national des Arts a bien ou mal fait, est-ce exact? Il s'agit plutôt de déterminer comment l'on a dépensé l'argent, si l'on a agi sagement ou non. Il me semble que nous devrions étudier les crédits accordés aux divers groupes dont ce Comité s'occupe.

Treasury Board—then this stands by itself, and if anybody has any remarks or comments to make, it is strictly sort of obiter dictum...

The Chairman: That is correct.

Mr. Givens: ...and inconsequential. If you are not going to make a motion, let us say, to strike certain things out of the Estimates or to add something, then anything else is just by the way.

The Chairman: That is correct.

Mr. Givens: Then it would seem to me that the proposal my hon. friend is making is really something that is out of order.

The Chairman: No, it is possible for you to make a report giving the conclusions of your hearings. It is possible for you to make charges, if you do desire...

Mr. Givens: At each step of the game?

The Chairman: At each step of the game.

Mr. Givens: If we want to chastise the Museum people for some reason...

The Chairman: We have an opportunity to chastise them today, but I hope we will not do that.

Mr. Givens: Well, it is a peculiar way to run a railroad.

Mr. Dinsdale: I think, Mr. Chairman, we could resolve this...

The Chairman: That is why we are trying to have some parliamentary reform. I think perhaps we could put this under consideration of the agenda committee; then we could come back with a further report and hold a meeting, perhaps to discuss this subject a little further.

Mr. Dinsdale: One of the complaints about the expanded use of the Committee system is that it is going through the motions, and...

The Chairman: Mr. Stanbury?

Mr. Stanbury: There is no reason for...

Mr. Dinsdale: I have not concluded my remarks.

Mr. Stanbury: I did not intend to get into a debate on this because I suggested the proper place is the steering committee.

The Chairman: We will discuss this at a meeting of the steering committee.

[Interpretation]

Le président: C'est exact.

M. Givens: Si quelqu'un a des commentaires à faire, ils sont consignés dans le compte rendu. A moins de présenter une motion pour éliminer quelque chose ou ajouter quelque chose au crédit, nos propositions ne seront que des commentaires marginaux. Est-ce exact?

Le président: Oui, c'est exact.

M. Givens: Dans ce cas, il me semble que la proposition qu'a faite mon honorable ami est irrecevable.

Le président: Il vous est possible aussi de présenter un rapport qui résume les constatations des séances. Vous pouvez, si vous le voulez, porter des accusations...

M. Givens: A chaque étape?

Le président: A chaque étape.

M. Givens: ...si nous voulons fustiger, par exemple, des directeurs de musées?

Le président: Oui, vous avez l'occasion de le faire. J'espère que vous ne le ferez pas.

M. Givens: Voilà la façon de gérer un chemin de fer.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le Président, si nous pouvions résoudre ce...

Le président: Nous essayons d'organiser certaines réformes parlementaires et nous songeons précisément à présenter cette question au Comité d'organisation.

M. Dinsdale: L'un des griefs qu'on a exprimés au sujet du système des Comités, c'est qu'il faille présenter une motion.

M. le président: M. Stanbury?

M. Stanbury: Je ne vois pas pourquoi...

M. Dinsdale: Je n'ai pas terminé.

M. Stanbury: Je ne comptais lancer un débat là-dessus, j'ai dit que l'endroit de le faire c'est au Comité de direction.

Le président: C'est ce que nous ferons.

[Texte]

Mr. Stanbury: I suggest, as Mr. Givens has suggested, that any member is perfectly free to make whatever remarks he wishes and to move that certain items of the Estimates be struck out if he is not in favour of them. If Mr. Dinsdale wishes to take that responsibility, he is free to do so, but for him to make loose comments about what is irregular, or some of the other rather extravagant terms as used, I think is somewhat irresponsible in itself. If he feels that the Estimates are not correct he should move to eliminate them.

The Chairman: Perhaps we can end the matter here and take it up at the steering committee meeting. I hope to call it either for later today or early tomorrow morning if that is possible.

Mr. McCleave: May I make a brief request, Mr. Chairman, since I originally raised the question of Mr. McIlraith's appearance here? I raised it rather as a question of general principle than with reference to this particular case. We have heard his reply from you and I wonder whether it would not be possible for the steering committee to ask the authorities in the House, the Clerks and the Committees Branch, to check into the long-term practice with regard to the appearance of a former minister before a committee under these circumstances. It seems to me the anger might be that a minister could be lifted in departments because of something controversial. As I say, I do not make this request with reference to this specific case; I would rather it be treated by the agenda committee as a general principle. I think my question is quite clear.

The Chairman: That is correct; I will look into that today.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have one further comment; was interrupted by Mr. Stanbury in full flight.

Mr. Stanbury: I was recognized by the chairman.

Mr. Dinsdale: He did recognize you but I was in full flight. He did make the comment at my claims and my charges had been extravagant and irresponsible. Well, goodness me, if my statements here this morning can be regarded as extravagant and irresponsible I think that even to suggest that what I have been saying here this morning can be pre-empted in those terms is a case of personal objection.

All we are trying to do is to make this committee function, and not just be an exer-

[Interprétation]

M. Stanbury: Comme M. Givens l'a d'ailleurs signalé, on est tout à fait libre de formuler les observations que l'on désire faire à propos de quelque crédit qui soit étudié. Si M. Dinsdale veut assumer cette responsabilité, il est libre de le faire; mais qu'il fasse des commentaires plus ou moins bien placés sur certaines irrégularités ou qu'il emploie des termes quelque peu extravagants, je crois que cela n'est pas convenable.

S'il estime que les crédits ne sont pas justes il n'a qu'à essayer de les faire éliminer.

Le président: Peut-être pourrions-nous laisser la question là pour le moment et la soulever de nouveau au Comité de direction. J'estime pouvoir convoquer une réunion plus tard aujourd'hui ou demain matin.

M. McCleave: Une petite requête, puisque c'est moi qui ai soulevé la question initialement à savoir que M. McIlraith comparaisse devant nous. J'ai soulevé cette question d'ordre général, mais en rapport avec ce cas particulier. Vous nous avez transmis sa réponse, mais je me demande s'il ne serait pas possible que le Comité de direction demande au service des Comités d'étudier les pratiques à long terme, en ce qui a trait à la comparaison des anciens ministres et devant le Comité, parce qu'il peut y avoir danger lors de l'étude d'un cas où un ministre assume un nouveau ministère ou passe d'un ministère à un autre, en même temps que quelque chose de litigieux se présente. Je ne m'attarde pas à ce cas particulier, mais il me semble que le Comité du programme pourrait étudier le principe de façon général.

Le président: Oui, et nous soulèverons aussi cette question dès aujourd'hui.

M. Dinsdale: Un autre commentaire. J'ai été interrompu par M. Stanbury, alors que j'étais en plein élan...

M. Stanbury: Ma remarque a été acceptée.

M. Dinsdale: ...J'étais tout à fait dans mon envolée à ce moment-là. Il a dit que mes accusations, mes prétentions étaient extravagantes et manquaient de sérieux.

Et bien, si mes déclarations, ce matin, peuvent être considérées comme extravagantes ou manquant de sérieux, si on peut employer ces épithètes pour ce que j'ai dit ce matin, je crois que c'est là une opinion très personnelle.

Nous essayons simplement de faire fonctionner le Comité, afin que ce ne soit pas simple-cise in utility. There is a lot of public concern over a project that has soared upwards to $46 million.

I was in the West over the weekend and it was one of the main topics of conversation. I have a responsibility to the people who send me here to see that public funds are expended in a prudent manner and we have it from Public Works itself that it was given the extraordinary directive that excellence and quality were to take precedence over economy.

The Chairman: I think Mr. Williams went to some length to say that he was never given that directive.

Mr. Stanbury: This is exactly what I object to, Mr. Chairman—Mr. Dinsdale's coming to his personal conclusions as if they were gospel here this morning. I am suggesting that procedures should be discussed by the procedure committee and then, I presume, we will have a recommendation this Committee can consider.

I do not think it is justified at this point to suggest that the work of the Committee would be fruitless if the Committee did not make a report at this point. That, I think, is being suggested by Mr. Dinsdale. He has other courses of action to take and he has already taken some by the statements he has made that have been widely published.

Mr. Osler: I agree with you that we have witnesses before us and that we should not be wasting much of their time, but I would like to say one thing if I could. When the Steering Committee is meeting, would it consider what appears to me to be the constructive aspect of our function?

I do not think much is going to be gained by pursuing Mr. Dinsdale's line very much further; however, that is something to be argued out. Would they consider pursuing what I consider to be the constructive end and that is ways and means of finding out before it is too late exactly what the ongoing annual operating policies and budgets of the National Arts Centre are likely to be? That is the concern certainly I have had about the National Arts Centre from the beginning, rather than the extraordinary capital invested.

The Chairman: You know that Mr. Southam was quite open about this when he appeared. He said he could give absolutely no comment until his estimates are approved by the Treasury Board and that we would have ment un exercice de futilité. Le public s'intéresse beaucoup à un projet qui, subitement, atteint le chiffre de $46 millions.

J'ai été dans l'Ouest au cours de la fin de semaine, et c'est l'un des principaux sujets de conversation. Et, je dois assumer les responsabilités envers les gens qui me délèguent ici pour voir à ce que les fonds publics soient dépensés de manière sage et avisée. Les représentants du ministère des Travaux publics nous ont dit eux-mêmes qu'ils ont reçu des directives peu ordinaires, à savoir que l'excellence et la qualité devaient dominer l'économie.

Le président: Je pense que M. Williams a clairement spécifié qu'une telle directive n'avait pas été donnée.

M. Stanbury: Voilà ce à quoi je m'oppose, monsieur le président. M. Dinsdale nous donne ses conclusions personnelles comme s'il s'agissait de conclusions générales. Je suis d'avis que le Comité de la Procédure de la Chambre devrait étudier la façon de procéder et puis, nous pourrions examiner ces recommandations.

Je ne pense pas qu'il soit juste, à ce moment-ci, de dire que le travail du Comité serait tout à fait inutile si nous ne rédigeons pas un rapport. D'autres voies s'offrent à M. Dinsdale, et il s'est déjà engagé sur certaines d'entre elles en faisant des déclarations qui ont eu une grande publicité.

M. Osler: Je reconnais avec vous que nous avons des témoins ce matin, et que nous ne devrions pas leur faire perdre du temps. Mais je tiens à faire un commentaire: lorsque le comité de direction se réunira, ne pourrait-il pas considérer ce qui me semble être les aspects les plus constructifs de notre tâche, de nos fonctions?

Je ne pense pas que l'on puisse progresser beaucoup en donnant suite aux idées que vient d'émettre M. Dinsdale. Mais, ne pourrait-on pas songer aux aspects constructifs de notre tâche, notamment les moyens de trouver, avant qu'il ne soit trop tard, quelles seront les politiques et le budget courant du Centre national des Arts? Voilà ce qui m'a préoccupé davantage depuis le début.

Le président: Vous savez que M. Southam a été très clair à ce sujet, il a dit qu'il ne pouvait absolument faire aucun commentaire jusqu'à ce que ces crédits soient approuvés par le conseil du Trésor, et qu'il aurait les the results of those about the same time he would, that is, when they were published in the Blue Book which we are told will be sometime early in January.

Mr. Osler: This is not my point. I am...

The Chairman: We have an agreement that they will be among our first witnesses, should we so desire, in the new year. Another group of members of the Committee would like to have the CBC as our first witness in the new year, but this is something the Committee will decide among its own members.

Mr. Osler: I think these comments of mine apply equally to the CBC, if you are concerned about the CBC as some members would be, but it seems to be an exercise in utility to have them here once their contract is signed and the pattern is set.

The Chairman: That is the whole point. For the first time members will have an opportunity to discuss Estimates before the fiscal year for which such Estimates are valid will begin. Mr. Mongrain, do you have a question?

M. Mongrain: J'ai une question à poser relativement à la procédure. J'ai l'impression qu'il serait probablement futile pour nous de statuer sur le point soulevé par M. Dinsdale à la réunion du Comité de la Procédure. Je m'inquiète, et ceci sujet à l'approbation de mes collègues étant donné l'importance que M. Dinsdale semble attacher à cette question, si nous devrions demander l'autorisation de la Chambre de tenir une réunion spéciale de ce Comité, l'après-midi, afin d'étudier cette question sous tous ses aspects et la régler une fois pour toutes. Je n'ai pas l'impression que nous pourrions en arriver là au cours d'une simple réunion du Comité de Procédure de la Chambre. Je crois, au contraire, qu'une réunion spéciale serait nécessaire pour trouver une solution définitive.

The Chairman: Yes, I agree that your principle is valid and that we will have to have a meeting of the Committee alone to discuss this.

I have one item that arose out of our earlier hearings on the National Arts Centre. Mr. Sam Berger, President of the Theatre Foundation of Ottawa, phoned me yesterday and asked whether it would be agreeable to members of the Committee for him to make résultats en même temps que nous, quand cela sera publié dans le Livre bleu au début de janvier.

M. Osler: Voilà justement le point de je soulève.

Le président: Nous avons conclu une entente avec eux, à savoir que les représentants du Conseil des Arts seraient au nombre de nos premiers témoins au début de l'an prochain. Il y a un autre groupe de députés, faisant partie du Comité, qui aimeraient avoir des représentants de Radio-Canada comme premiers témoins au début de l'année prochaine, mais nous devons décider de la chose entre nous.

M. Osler: Je crois que les commentaires que je fais en ce moment s'appliquent aussi à Radio-Canada. Il semble qu'il soit futile de les avoir ici une fois que les contrats sont signés et que les dépenses sont engagées.

Le président: Pour la première fois, les députés auront l'occasion de discuter des crédits avant l'année financière, alors que ceux-ci porteront sur toute l'année. Monsieur Mongrain, vous avez une question?

Mr. Mongrain: I have a question that I would call a point of order on a procedural point. I am under the impression that it would be futile for us to make a decision on the point raised by Mr. Dinsdale at a meeting of the committee on procedure. I submit, if my colleagues agree, in view of the importance that Mr. Dinsdale appears to have attached to it from the start, we should ask the permission of the House to have a very special session of this Committee to discuss the problem raised by Mr. Dinsdale and all the aspects thereof, and settle it for once and for all. I am not under the impression that we will be able to solve this problem in a one meeting of the Committee on Procedure. I believe that we would need a special meeting to dispose of this question once and for all.

Le président: Je reconnais que votre principe est valide et que nous devrions peut-être avoir une réunion spéciale du Comité.

Il est une question qui découle de nos entretiens préalables sur le Centre national des Arts: M. Sam Berger, président de The Foundation Theater d'Ottawa, a téléphoné hier et m'a demandé si les membres du Comité aimeraient recevoir des billets pour tickets available to those who would like to see The Town Theatre production of The Lion in Winter. The production will be concluding this weekend.

My secretary will be phoning your offices during the next two or three hours and tickets will be provided for any members who are interested. This was done because of the discussion we had in this Committee concerning the impact of the new Arts Centre program on local theatre in Ottawa. He thought it would be an opportunity for members to see just what is being done by the local people in Ottawa at the present time.

Mr. Givens: Does the purchase of two theatre tickets entitle you to the right to buy two football tickets for the game on Saturday?

The Chairman: That is something you might take up with Mr. Berger, but there was no comment on purchase.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, before we call the witnesses, should we not pass the items that we considered at the last meeting?

The Chairman: Yes; last Thursday the Committee heard Mr. Guy Sylvestre, the National Librarian. He was extensively questioned. Shall Item 65, National Library, carry?

Now I should like to call Mr. Mackenzie, the Secretary General, to introduce the Directors and make an opening statement.

Mr. C. J. Mackenzie (Secretary General, National Museums of Canada): Mr. Chairman, you have already introduced the Directors to the Committee. I will repeat their names. On my immediate right, Dr. W. E. Taylor, Director of the National Museum of Man; Dr. Jean S. Boggs, Director of the National Gallery of Canada; Dr. Fred Banfield, Director of the National Museum of Natural Sciences, and Dr. Davis M. Baird, Director of the National Museum of Science and Technology.

Before embarking on a short statement, I should convey to you the regrets of my Chairman, Mr. Jean Ostiguy with whom I was speaking yesterday. He returned yesterday from an extended tour abroad and consequently is unable to be present this morning.

The National Museums of Canada was established effective April 1 of this year and consequently this is the first time it has appeared in this form before your Committee. The Directors of the component museums have been before the Committee before with Miss Boggs as Director of the National Gallery, and the others as Directors of branches of the Department of the Secretary of State.

voir la présentation, par le Towne Theatre, de la pièce: «A Lion in Winter». La présentation se termine cette fin de semaine.

Ma secrétaire nous téléphonera au cours des prochaines heures et vous pourrez recevoir des billets si vous êtes intéressés. En effet, en raison des entretiens que nous avons eus au Comité sur les répercussions du programme du nouveau Centre national des Arts, sur la production théâtrale à Ottawa. Il pensait que ce serait une occasion pour les députés de voir par eux-mêmes ce qui se fait à Ottawa, à l'heure actuelle.

M. Givens: Est-ce que vous pourrez aussi nous envoyer des billets pour la partie de football?

Le président: Vous pourriez vous adresser à M. Gerger à ce sujet, pour ma part je ne saurais vous dire.

M. McCleave: Ne devrions-nous pas tout d'abord adopter les crédits que nous avons étudiés au cours de la dernière séance?

Le président: Oui. Jeudi dernier, le Comité a interrogé M. Sylvestre, bibliothécaire à la Bibliothèque nationale. Par conséquent, le crédit n° 65, Bibliothèque nationale, est-il adopté? Adopté.

Et maintenant, j'invite M. Mackenzie, secrétaire général, à présenter les directeurs et à faire une déclaration.

M. C. J. Mackenzie (secrétaire général, Musées nationaux du Canada): Monsieur le président, vous avez déjà présenté les directeurs au Comité. Je répète leurs noms: à ma droite D<sup>r</sup> W. E. Taylor, directeur Musée de l'homme; D<sup>r</sup> Jean S. Boggs directrice de la Galerie nationale du Canada; D<sup>r</sup> A. W. F. Bandfield, directeur du Musée d'histoire naturelle; D<sup>r</sup> David Baird, directeur du Musée des sciences et de la technologie.

Avant de faire une brève déclaration, je tiens à vous transmettre les regrets de mon président, M. Ostiguy, qui est revenu hier d'un grand voyage à l'étranger et qui, par conséquent, ne peut être présent ce matin.

Le Musée national du Canada a été fondé le 1<sup>er</sup> janvier 1968 et c'est la première fois que nous comparaissons à titre de représentants de ce Musée devant votre Comité. Les directeurs des Musées nationaux du Canada ont comparu devant ce Comité; M<sup>lle</sup> Boggs, en sa qualité de directrice de la Galerie nationale et les autres, à titre de directeurs de différents services relevant du secrétariat d'État.

The Corporation is established by the National Museums Act and consists of 14 trustees, 2 of whom, the Director of the Canadian Council, Mr. Jean Boucher and the President of the National Research Council, Dr. Schneider, are ex officio. The Chairman, as I mentioned, is Jean Ostiguy of Montreal; the Vice-Chairman J. R. Longstaffe of Vancouver; the other trustees, working from east to west are Mrs. Harry Cohen of Sydney; Mrs. E. W. George of Moncton; Dr. Amiôt Jolicoeur of Quebec City; Mr. Allan Bronfman, and Madame Cécile Marcoux-Baillargeon of Montreal; Dr. Tuzo Wilson, Professor Steven Vickers and Mr. David Spurgeon of Toronto; Mr. George Heffelfinger of Winnipeg; Professor Iyoshi Izumi of Regina; and the Vice-Chairman, Mr. Longstaffe, comes from Vancouver. The Act sets out the purposes of the Corporation as follows:

The purposes of the Corporation are to demonstrate the products of nature and the works of man, with special but not exclusive reference to Canada, so as to promote interest therein throughout Canada and to disseminate knowledge thereof.

The corporation is listed in Schedule B of the Financial Administration Act and therefore is a departmental corporation. The significance of this is that it is subject to the Public Service Employment Act—its employees are civil servants—and is subject to the Financial Administration Act and the regulations made thereunder, the most important of which, for our purposes are the government contract regulations.

1130

The Corporation consists at the present time of four museums: the Museum of Fine Arts, to be known as the National Gallery of Canada, the National Museum of Human History, now called the National Museum of Man, the National Museum of Natural Sciences, and the National Museum of Science and Technology. Provision is made in the Act for the addition of such other museums as may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, be established by the Board. The Board has thus far taken no action to establish any other museums. The Canadian War Museum, with which members will be familiar, is a division of the National Museum of Man and the National Aeronautical Collection at Rockcliffe is a division of the National Museum of Science and Technology.

The Board of Trustees has thus far held three meetings and there have been two meetings of the Executive Committee. The Board naturally is not responsible for the La Société qui a été fondée par la Loi sur le Musée National comprend 14 fiduciaires dont deux, le directeur du Conseil du Canada, M. Jean Boucher et le président du Conseil National de recherches, le docteur Snyder sont membres ex officio du Conseil. Le président est M. Jean Ostiguy, de Montréal, le vice-président, J. R. Longstaffe, de Vancouver. Les autres fiduciaires à travers le Canada sont: M<sup>me</sup> Harry Cohen, de Sydney, M<sup>me</sup> E. W. George de Moncton, le docteur Amyot Jolicoeur de Québec, M. Allan Bronfman, et M<sup>me</sup> Cécile Marcoux-Baillargeon, de Montréal, le docteur Tuzo Wilson, le professeur Stephen Vickers et M. David Sperschman, de Toronto, M. George Heffelfinger, de Winnipeg, le professeur Kioshi Azumi, de Regina, et le vice-président, M. Longstaffe, de Vancouver. La loi prévoit les dispositions suivantes: Le nom de cette société est inscrit à l'annexe B de la Loi de l'administration financière et est, par conséquent, une société d'État. Ceci veut dire qu'elle tombe sous la Loi de la fonction publique, ses employés sont des fonctionnaires et est assujettie à la Loi sur l'administration financière et aux règlements qui en découlent. Donc, les plus importants, ce sont les règlements visant le contrat du gouvernement.

La Société est composée à l'heure actuelle de quatre musées: le Musée des Beaux-Arts, qui est la Galerie Nationale, le Musée national, le Musée de l'homme, le Musée de la science et de la technologie. Il y aura d'autres musées qui sont prévus par la Loi et qui seront acceptés par décret ministériel. La Commission peut établir d'autres musées. Le Musée de guerre du Canada, que vous connaissez tous, est une division du Musée de l'Homme et la Collection aéronautique nationale est une division du Musée national des sciences et de la technologie.

Le Conseil des contrôleurs a eu trois réunions. Il y a eu deux réunions du comité exécutif. Le Conseil n'est pas responsable du budget qui vous est soumis, car il a été préestimates which are before you today, these having been prepared before the passage of the National Museums Act which was assented to in December, 1967. The increase in the estimates as between 1967-68 and 1968-69 is of the order of $900,000 or 14 per cent.

The principal reasons for this increase are: provision for the operation of the National Museum of Science and Technology for a full year, it having been opened November 15, 1967; a modest increase in Professional and Special Services—and it should be explained that the Professional and Special Services primary includes the provision for Commissionaire and security services, a very important object of expenditure for the National Museums of Canada.

Of the estimates which are before you 37 per cent are composed of Salaries, 17 per cent Professional and Special Services, and 14 per cent Purchase Account which under the new legislation is a non-lapsing account. This was not the case with respect to the traditional museums previously.

Looking at the estimates you might assume an increase of $300,000 in the Purchase Account as between 1967-68 and 1968-69. This is not in fact the case, the former $300,000 museum Purchase Account was included in the Sundries item.

I do not think, Mr. Chairman, at this point in time I should say anything more. We are at the disposal of the Committee for questions.

Mr. McCleave: I have just a point to raise arising out of the statement that there were no plans to add other types of museums at the present time. Have there been any inklings as to what should be added or might be added?

Mr. Mackenzie: There have been a number of suggestions for the addition of museum-type activities.

Attention has been paid in the Ottawa press recently to proposals for a national zoo. There is interest in an aquarium. There is interest in a planetarium. These have been specifically suggested. The problem, as members of the Committee will realize, is funds.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, I see at the bottom of page 458 Purchase Account. I assume this is for purchases of all museums.

Mr. Mackenzie: That is correct, sir.

[Interpretation]

paré avant la Loi sur le Musée national de 1967. L'augmentation des crédits entre 1967-1968 et 1968-1969 est de l'ordre de $900,000, soit 14 p. 100.

Les raisons principales de cette augmentation sont: les crédits pour l'exploitation, pendant une année, du Musée national des sciences et de la technologie, inauguré le 15 novembre 1967, et une augmentation modeste des services professionnels spéciaux. Ces services comprennent les crédits des services de sécurité et des services de constables. Ils représentent une partie importante du budget.

Dans ce budget, 37 p. 100 est composé de salaires, 17 p. 100 de services professionnels spéciaux et 14 p. 100 de comptes d'achats qui, d'après la nouvelle Loi, sont un compte ouvert. Ce n'était pas le cas auparavant.

En examinant le budget, vous verrez une augmentation de $300,000 entre 1967-1968 et 1968-1969 pour les comptes d'achats. Ce n'est pas le cas: les $300,000 de comptes d'achats étaient dans les points divers.

Monsieur le président, je pense que je n'ai rien à ajouter pour l'instant. Nous sommes à la disposition du Comité et nous répondrons à toutes les questions.

Mr. McCleave: J'ai une question basée sur la déclaration d'après laquelle vous ne prévoyez pas ouvrir d'autres musées pour l'instant. Est-ce qu'il y a des lacunes? Est-ce que vous avez une idée derrière la tête au sujet de ce qu'on pourrait ajouter?

Mr. Mackenzie: Il y a eu un certain nombre de suggestions pour de nouveaux musées.

Dans la presse d'Ottawa, il a été question d'un zoo national. On envisage un aquarium et un planétarium. Ce sont des suggestions qui ont été faites. Le problème comme les membres du Comité s'en rendront compte vient des crédits.

Le président: M. Osler.

Mr. Osler: Monsieur le président, au bas de la page 458, il y a un compte d'achat. Il s'agit de tous les achats de tous les Musées, n'est-ce pas?

Mr. Mackenzie: Oui, monsieur.

[Texte]

Mr. Osler: What body allocates the $1,050,000 among the various museums, and how do you fight it out?

Mr. Mackenzie: The allocation is made by the Board of Trustees and at the present time is on the following basis: $750,000 is allocated to the National Gallery of Canada for the purchase of works of art; the remaining $300,000 is allocated among the other three museums on the basis of $50,000 for the National Museum of Natural Sciences, $75,000 for the National Museum of Man and the National Museum of Science and Technology.

The Trustees have directed that for the current year and the next fiscal year a reserve of $100,000 shall be established to be dispersed only with the approval of the Board of Trustees, presumably for a special or windfall purchase.

Mr. Osler: And how do they allocate it? Is it fairly fluid? Does the National Art Gallery for instance know that under normal circumstances it will get X per cent of the fund each year, or is this something that is decided annually as a matter of annual policy rather than long-term policy?

Mr. Mackenzie: We have been in existence only eight months so it is very difficult to say what the long-term policy would be. In fact, the allocation this year of $750,000 to the National Gallery and $300,000 to the other museums was a repetition of the division in the estimates last year.

Mr. Osler: If I can pursue this just a little further, both in acquisitions and presumably in displays that can be made available without being acquisitioned do you liaise fairly closely with such people as the Glenbow Foundation and soon? I am now talking away from the subject of art. I would think that the National Museum of Man would be an area in which the Glenbow Foundation would be interested. This foundation has been in existence for some time and I am told it has warehouses full of stuff, some of which is very good and some of which is just junk. Would not this foundation, for instance have some means of liaising with you?

Mr. Mackenzie: Dr. Taylor should answer that question.

Dr. W. E. Taylor (Director, Museum of Man): Mr. Osler, it is not so much liaison as competition—competition for staff, competition to buy specimens and so on. On the

[Interprétation]

Mr. Osler: Quel organisme attribue ce $1,050,000 entre les différents musées? Comment se fait la répartition?

Mr. Mackenzie: Les attributions sont données par le bureau des contrôleurs. Pour l'instant, la répartition se fait comme suit: $750,000 à la Galerie nationale du Canada pour l'achat d'œuvres d'art; les autres $300,000 sont répartis entre les trois autres musées sur la base de $50,000 pour le Musée national d'histoire naturelle, $75,000 pour le Musée national de l'homme et le Musée national des sciences et de la technologie.

Les directeurs ont prévu pour cette année et pour le prochain exercice financier, une réserve de $100,000 qui seront dépensés, uniquement avec l'accord du Conseil d'administration, pour des achats spéciaux.

Mr. Osler: Voici la deuxième partie de ma question. Comment la répartition est-elle faite? Est-ce que le système est souple ou est-ce que la Galerie nationale des Arts sait que, normalement, elle recevra tel pourcentage des crédits chaque année? Ou bien, est-ce quelque chose qui est déterminé sur une base annuelle? Est-ce une politique annuelle ou une politique à long terme?

Mr. Mackenzie: Nous n'existons que depuis huit mois. Il est donc difficile de dire quelle serait la politique à long terme. En fait, les attributions de cette année de $750,000 à la Galerie nationale et de $300,000 pour les autres musées ne sont qu'une répétition de ce qu'on a fait l'an dernier.

Mr. Osler: Je veux poursuivre un peu plus loin cette série de questions. En ce qui concerne les acquisitions et les expositions qui sont assurées sans acquisitions, est-ce que vous avez des liaisons étroites avec d'autres organismes, comme la Fondation Glenbow? Je ne fais pas abstraction des arts. Le Musée national de l'homme est un musée auquel pourrait s'intéresser la Fondation Glenbow. Celle-ci a toutes sortes de réserves; les unes ne valent rien, d'autres sont très intéressantes. Il pourrait y avoir une liaison étroite entre vous et cette Fondation, par exemple.

Mr. Mackenzie: M. Taylor pourrait répondre à cette question.

Mr. W. E. Taylor (Directeur, Musée de l'homme): Ce n'est pas tellement une question de liaison qu'une question de concurrence. C'est une concurrence pour le personnel, et research side we certainly liaise. I think it is fair to say that all such institutions as ours in Canada try to help each other.

However, you get situations in which somebody comes down the track with a very large bag of money to buy a very significant collection, and either you can meet the competition or you cannot. It is simple as that. When you face the decision whether or not you will attempt this kind of a competition, you have to weigh your priorities. We might, to take a strictly hypothetical example, know of a very good collection, say, in the ethnological collections of the Maritime Provinces. If we considered ourselves weak in that area in terms of our collections we would attempt to go after it.

If we considered ourselves very well off we would not—but we might attempt to get certain specimens from it. Assuming the second situation, we would then tell others that there is this very good collection available for purchase and they would probably do the similar thing.

Mr. Osler: One more question, Mr. Chairman. I assume the National Art Gallery—correct me if I am wrong—takes part in tours of the country, exchanges and this sort of thing.

Dr. Jean S. Boggs (Director, National Gallery): Yes, since 1916 we have had exhibitions touring the country.

Mr. Osler: The reason I hesitate was that I was not sure whether you would be just a number on the route or whether they would actually be your own exhibitions. But your own exhibitions do tour as well.

Dr. Boggs: Yes we have about 50 exhibitions touring during the year.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, I will now revert to the Museum of Man. The Manitoba museum is obviously a very poor little effort and they are now trying to get into better shape. It has been limping along for years. Assuming that it finds a better home than it has had and so on, could it draw on you for exhibitions from time to time?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, travelling exhibitions differ from those of an institution such as the Gallery, and it is a rather different kind of thing to undertake. By and large ours are three dimensional objects—in a sense, paintings—which are far more difficult to pour l'achat de spécimens. C'est une liaison dans le sens que, du point de vue de la recherche, nous avons des contacts avec les autres institutions qui fonctionnent au Canada. Nous essayons de nous aider les uns les autres.

Mais, il y a des cas où des gens arrivent avec un gros montant d'argent pour acheter une collection très importante. Alors on peut soit faire face à la concurrence ou ne pas y faire face. C'est aussi simple que cela. Lorsqu'on envisage la décision, à savoir si l'on va essayer de faire ce genre de concurrence, il faut déterminer les priorités.

Je vous donne un exemple purement théorique. Nous pourrions savoir qu'il existe une très bonne collection dans les collections ethnologiques des provinces maritimes. Si nous pensons que nos collections sont faibles dans ce domaine, nous essaierons de l'obtenir.

Si nous considérons que notre situation est bonne, nous ne le ferons pas, mais nous essaierons simplement d'obtenir certains spécimens de cette collection. Dans le deuxième cas, nous dirions à d'autres organismes que cette excellente collection est offerte. Et je pense qu'ils feraient la même chose.

Mr. Osler: Encore une question, monsieur le président. La Galerie nationale des Arts, rectifiez-moi si je me trompe, organise des tournées dans le pays et participe à des échanges. Est-ce exact?

Mlle Jean S. Boggs (Directrice, Galerie nationale): Puis-je répondre? Oui, depuis 1916, nous avons des expositions itinérantes.

Mr. Osler: Je voulais poser cette question parce que je ne savais pas si vous n'étiez que des participants à ces expositions, ou bien si c'était vos propres expositions. Vous faites des tournées avec vos propres expositions.

Mlle Boggs: Oui, nous avons une cinquantaine d'expositions itinérantes.

Mr. Osler: Monsieur le président, j'en reviens au Musée de l'homme. Est-ce que c'est quelque chose que vous, messieurs, pouvez faire dans une certaine mesure? Je pense par exemple, au Musée du Manitoba qui est vraiment quelque chose de très faible. C'est un Musée qui boitille depuis des années. Il devrait être mieux logé. Pourrait-il vous demander d'envoyer des expositions de temps à autre?

Mr. Taylor: Monsieur le président, la nature des expositions itinérantes, comme celles de la Galerie nationale, est une chose très différente. Nous avons des objets solides à trois dimensions. Ce sont des choses très difficiles à emballer. Dans certains cas, nous avons des pack and ship. We do have in some cases a more serious problem with humidity, temperature control, breakage and so forth.

Museums such as ours, which is an anthropological and history museum, are in almost all cases that I know much less given to travelling exhibits. Temporary exhibits, which are exhibited for three or four months, are not done quite to the same extent as permanent exhibits, which you try to do in your own shop with your own resources for a long term. Permanent exhibits are an expensive undertaking.

They are not the kind of thing you want to take apart every two years. This is the case I think of virtually all such museums as ours. The result is that the trafficking of loan exhibits is on a much lower scale. The Gallery, as Dr. Boggs has just said, has 50 travelling. For our museum, this is a stunning accomplishment. I think in any historical and anthropological museum it would be that.

• 1140

On the other hand, we do very vigorously make specimens available for other peoples' exhibits—that is to say, they house them, they build the cases, they do the lighting, they do the story line, they do the theme and so on, but we lend specimens. There is a very large collection for example right now in Paris. This is a major exhibit showing the aboriginal art of Canada.

Approximately one-third of the specimens in that collection are from the National Museum of Man. We have attempted to design and build the Armistice display, which was just opened in the Ex War Museum, in such a way that it can travel as an entity.

Loans for research purposes are a very major activity, very much indeed. We lend research collections to scholars in institutions for study purposes to write up for publication, and so forth. We are quite concerned with developing travelling exhibits of a small scale for other institutions that do not have resources comparable to ours in their collections.

There are budget restrictions. There are restrictions on personnel. So it is not a simple thing. We have had the experience of offering material on loan for a special exhibit to a new museum opening and finding they simply did not have the capacity to take the offer. So, it is rather different than a gallery's operation, but by the scale of Canadian museums we do a very considerable amount of lending.

You mentioned the Manitoba museum, which I know rather well. If the director of problèmes de contrôle de l'humidité et de la température.

Des musées comme le nôtre, qui est un musée anthropologique et historique, ne sont pas faits pour des expositions itinérantes. Des expositions temporaires de trois ou quatre mois ne sont pas aussi fréquentes que les expositions permanentes que nous faisons avec nos propres ressources.

C'est le genre de choses qui est onéreux et qu'on ne peut pas faire à tous les deux ans. C'est le cas de presque tous les musées comme le nôtre. En conséquence, le troc de pièces est beaucoup moins important. La Galerie a cinquante expositions itinérantes. Pour nous, ce serait extraordinaire. Pour tous les musées historiques et anthropologiques, ce serait difficile à atteindre.

Par ailleurs, nous offrons des spécimens aux expositions d'autres personnes. Ils les logent, ils les éclairent, ils font les cadres, ils font les légendes, etc. Et nous fournissons simplement les spécimens. Il y a une très grande collection, en ce moment, à Paris pour une exposition des arts aborigènes du Canada.

Environ un tiers des spécimens de cette collection vient de notre Musée de l'homme. L'exposition de l'Armistice, qui vient de s'ouvrir au Musée de guerre, a été conçue et construite de façon à pouvoir voyager.

Nous prêtons, cela représente une grosse activité pour nous, des collections de recherches aux universitaires, aux chercheurs, pour leur permettre de faire des études et de rédiger des ouvrages, etc. Nous envisageons, pour certaines institutions qui n'ont pas les mêmes choses que nous, d'avoir des petites expositions itinérantes.

Ce n'est pas très simple en raison de nos limitations aux points de vue budget et personnel. Nous avons offert de prêter des pièces à de nouveaux musées qui s'ouvriraient. Mais très souvent, ces musées n'avaient pas la possibilité d'accepter notre offre. Donc, c'est très différent du travail d'une galerie, mais, par rapport aux musées ordinaires, nous faisons beaucoup de prêts.

Vous avez parlé du musée du Manitoba que je connais assez bien d'ailleurs. Si le directeur the Manitoba museum were to ask for certain material on loan for exhibit, we would be happy to agree to help him. The one restriction we would have would be on the specimens themselves. If our custodial people said a specimen was too fragile, or subject to temperature change, we would have to withdraw it from the request. We would certainly offer other specimens in place.

Mr. Osler: We heard about the inter-cataloguing that goes on in the National Library with other libraries, and the way this is going to be more easily and more comprehensively done with the help of computers. Do the National Galleries and the National Museums of Canada have the same sort of thing, vis-à-vis other museums?

Mr. Mackenzie: I believe that at the present time this is not so, but the Board of Trustees have commenced discussing the question of what we term loosely a union catalogue. It presents very serious problems as you will appreciate—for example the cataloguing of the specimens in Dr. Banfield's museum which has, I understand, 2½ million shells of various types. It presents some considerable difficulty. However, it is a subject that is in the minds of the Board of Trustees at the present time.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for Mr. Mackenzie. Many people are of the opinion that the Historic Sites and Monuments Act—and this is debatable I guess—should come under National Museums. I wonder if Mr. Mackenzie would have any comments to make on this subject?

Mr. Mackenzie: I can express a personal view, which is that there can be made a case for adding the National Historic Sites Service of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as one of these additional museums, which may be established by the Governor in Council. This view may not be shared by my colleagues in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. However, there is no doubt that in certain areas there is competition for artifacts and for professional staff between that branch of the Government of Canada and ours. Similarly, there is competition in the establishment displays. Dr. Baird would point out that the historic site at Baddeck, Nova Scotia, The Alexander Graham Bell Museum, is in effect a museum of science and technology, which is his responsibility.

[Interpretation]

du musée du Manitoba demandait certaines pièces en prêt, pour les exposer, je suis certain que nous serions très heureux d'accepter cette demande et d'aider le musée.

Il y a une restriction que nous devrions imposer concernant les spécimens eux-mêmes. Si nos conservateurs nous disaient, ce spécimen est trop fragile et trop sensible aux modifications de température, nous devrions retirer les spécimens. Mais nous offririons d'autres spécimens en remplacement.

M. Osler: Une dernière question. Je l'ai déjà dit, mais c'est vraiment la dernière question. On nous a beaucoup parlé des échanges de catalogues à la Bibliothèque nationale avec d'autres bibliothèques et du fait que c'est plus facile et plus rapide grâce à des ordinateurs; est-ce que la Galerie nationale et les musées nationaux du Canada envisagent le même genre de choses avec d'autres musées?

M. Mackenzie: Je pense qu'à l'heure actuelle ce n'est pas le cas, mais le Conseil des vérificateurs a commencé à étudier la question d'un catalogue global; cela soulève de gros problèmes. L'enregistrement des spécimens du docteur Banfield qui a 2 millions et demi de coquillages de toutes sortes présente de grosses difficultés. C'est cependant un sujet qu'étudie le Conseil des vérificateurs en ce moment.

M. Corbin: Monsieur le président, j'ai une question pour M. Mackenzie.

Beaucoup de gens sont d'avis que la loi sur les lieux et les monuments historiques doit, évidemment cela est sujet à controverse, devrait dépendre de la loi sur les musées nationaux et je me demande si M. Mackenzie a quelque chose à dire à ce sujet?

M. Mackenzie: Je veux exprimer mon opinion personnelle. Nous pouvons proposer que la division des lieux historiques du ministère des Affaires indiennes devienne l'un de ces nouveaux musées que peut créer le gouverneur en conseil, mais peut-être que mes collègues de la division des Affaires indiennes ne seraient pas d'accord. Parfois dans certains domaines il y a concurrence pour les pièces et pour le personnel entre cette section du gouvernement et la nôtre. De même il y a de la concurrence concernant les expositions. Le docteur Baird pourrait faire remarquer que le lieu historique de Baddeck, en Nouvelle-Écosse, le musée Bell, est un musée de sciences et de technologie dont il devrait avoir la responsabilité.

The plans of the National and Historic Parks Branch for establishing wildlife interpretation centres in effect constitute the establishment of miniature zoos. But I am expressing a personal view on this point, as you will appreciate.

Mr. Corbin: It would be unfair then to ask you if you would recommend to the government that it does transfer responsibility of the administration of the national historic sites and monuments to National Museums.

Mr. Mackenzie: No sir. It would not be unfair. I have in fact made this recommendation to the Secretary of State, but it is for the Minister, of course, to carry it forward.

Mr. Corbin: Thank you.

Mr. Givens: I notice that you have an increase in the establishment of strength of 42. Is this normal for one year?

Mr. Mackenzie: No sir. I mentioned that the National Museum of Science and Technology opened last year.

Mr. Givens: When you allow for an increase like that in your budgeting, do you allow for gapping, or do you ascribe a full salary for each person for the full year.

Mr. Mackenzie: Oh, no sir. The Treasury Board do not allow us to do anything of that kind. As a matter of fact, although the estimates show provision for 401 man years in 1968-69, under the staff freeze rules with which members of the Committee are no doubt acquainted, we are, in fact, restricted to 370.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, the tendency in the development of the National Museum in recent years has been towards centralization, both at its structure—and this is represented in the Act that was passed last year at his time—and also in terms of the building facilities. Are there any immediate plans to go ahead with an overall project that would bring all the branches of the National Museum under one building, somewhat along the lines of the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, and that in particular would replace the present Victoria Building which has been declared as untenable now for almost 10 years?

[Interprétation]

Les projets de la division des parcs nationaux qui veut créer des centres d'observation de la vie naturelle, en fait, représentent l'institution de petits zoos; n'oubliez pas que ce n'est là qu'une opinion personnelle.

M. Corbin: Recommanderiez-vous donc au gouvernement de transférer des responsabilités pour l'administration des lieux et monuments historiques au Musée national?

M. Mackenzie: Ce n'est pas une question «déloyale»; j'ai moi-même fait cette recommandation au secrétariat d'État. C'est au ministre évidemment de prendre les mesures qui s'imposent.

M. Corbin: Merci.

M. Givens: Je remarque que vous avez une augmentation de l'effectif de 42, est-ce que c'est normal pour une année?

M. Mackenzie: Non monsieur. J'ai dit que le Musée national des sciences et technologie a ouvert l'an dernier.

M. Givens: Ce qui explique le phénomène?

M. Mackenzie: En partie.

M. Givens: Lorsque vous prévoyez une augmentation comme celle-ci dans votre budget, est-ce que vous permettez un certain flottement ou bien est-ce que vous fixez le traitement de chaque poste de la division?

M. Mackenzie: Non, on ne nous permet pas de faire cela. Bien qu'il soit prévu 401 hommes-année au budget de 1967-1968, en fait nous sommes limités à 370. 370, en fait c'est la limite.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, l'évolution du Musée national au cours de ces dernières années a été vers la centralisation aussi bien du point de vue structurel, comme on l'a vu dans la loi adoptée l'année dernière à la même époque, et également du point de vue de l'installation matérielle.

Est-ce qu'il y a des projets pour un avenir rapproché permettant d'avoir un programme global qui regrouperait toutes les divisions du Musée national du Canada dans un seul bâtiment, un petit peu comme l'institution Smithsonian à Washington, et en particulier, est-ce que cela pourrait remplacer l'édifice Victoria qui a été déclaré comme tout à fait inhabitable depuis près de dix ans, maintenant?

[Text]

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Chairman, if I may take Mr. Dinsdale's question literally, I do not think anyone has ever thought of housing the corporation's facilities in one building. The requirements of the National Gallery of Canada, which to an extent are the same as those of the other museums, nonetheless are different in a sufficient number of details to justify a separate building for that component.

It seems to me, although I am not expert on this point, that the same case can be made with respect to the other museums. The problem, for example, of housing Dr. Baird's collection of locomotives and railway rolling stock is quite different from the problem of housing, as I mentioned earlier, Dr. Banfield's collection of shells.

As the Secretary of State mentioned to the Committee during his appearance a week and a half ago, the question of housing the corporation's components is one which will require very careful study. In order to embark upon that study in an orderly fashion, in September of this year I added to my staff a building planning officer. He is getting his feet on the ground and becoming acquainted with the components of the corporation. So there has been no concrete work done with respect to future building plans.

Mr. Dinsdale: You mentioned, Mr. Mackenzie, the fact that the National Gallery should not be brought under the same roof as the National Museum, and I think we would all agree with that. But, other than the National Gallery and the three arms of the National Museum—

I realize too the problems of housing of locomotives; they usually have to be displayed outside rather than inside—are there no immediate plans to replace the old Victoria Building with a modern structure.

Mr. Mackenzie: No sir.

• 1150

Mr. Dinsdale: Does that mean that the Roxborough site has now been abandoned as a possible location for a National Museum?

Mr. Mackenzie: Not at all, Mr. Chairman. The Roxborough site is, as I understand it, reserved for a display building for the National Museums by the Department of Public Works. The Deputy Minister of Public Works advised me of this within the last five months. However, the size of that site severely limits the amount of floor space which can be constructed on it. The building which could be erected there would not be adequate to house the corporation's displays and artifacts as they presently exist.

[Interpretation]

M. Mackenzie: Monsieur le président, si je veux prendre au mot M. Dinsdale, personne n'a envisagé de loger toutes les installations dans un seul bâtiment. Les exigences de la Galerie nationale du Canada, bien qu'elles soient à peu près les mêmes que celles des autres musées, cependant, sont différentes dans suffisamment de détails, pour qu'elle dispose d'un bâtiment qui lui soit propre.

Cependant, il me semble bien que je ne sois pas expert, que l'on peut dire la même chose pour les autres musées. Le problème, par exemple, du logement de la collection du docteur Baird, du matériel roulant de chemins de fer et des locomotives, est assez différent du problème de logement, comme je l'ai dit plus tôt, de la collection de coquillages de M. Banfield.

Comme l'a dit le secrétaire d'État au comité lorsqu'il a comparu, il y a une semaine et demie, la question du logement des différents éléments de la société est une question qui exigera une étude très minutieuse; c'est afin d'entreprendre cette étude de façon ordonnée, en septembre, que j'ai engagé un planificateur de l'utilisation des bâtiments qui vient à peine de commencer son travail. Il s'est mis au courant des différents bâtiments dont nous disposons. Donc il n'y a pas de travail concret qui a été fait en ce qui concerne nos projets de construction.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur Mackenzie, vous avez parlé du fait que la Galerie nationale ne devrait pas être sous le même toit que le Musée national et je pense que nous sommes tous d'accord. Mais, en dehors de la Galerie nationale, il reste les trois divisions du Musée national.

Je comprends aussi le problème du logement des locomotives, on les expose ordinairement à l'extérieur plutôt qu'à l'intérieur; alors, il n'y a pas de projet immédiat de remplacement du vieux bâtiment Victoria par un édifice moderne?

M. Mackenzie: Non, monsieur.

M. Dinsdale: Est-ce que cela veut dire que Roxborough a été maintenant écarté comme emplacement possible d'un musée national?

M. Mackenzie: Non, absolument pas, monsieur le président. L'emplacement Roxborough est, d'après ce que j'ai compris réservé comme centre d'exposition par le ministère des Travaux publics pour les musées nationaux.

Malgré tout, la dimension même de ce emplacement limite l'espace disponible et le bâtiment que l'on pourrait construire ne suffirait pas pour héberger les expositions telles qu'elles se tiennent actuellement.

[Texte]

Since the design for the Roxborough site was embarked upon the National Museum of Science and Technology has been opened, which has increased the demand for display space and storage space enormously. I should perhaps point out at this stage that the National Museums of Canada are presently housed in 18 buildings in Ottawa and Hull.

As to the Victoria Memorial Building, there is concern, as you have said, about the length of time it will survive. The consulting engineers to the Department of Public Works have advised that we can count upon occupancy for another five years.

Mr. Dinsdale: With reference to the Roxborough site, would it not be possible to gain access to some of the land that is now occupied on a temporary basis—it has been a long-term temporary basis—by the Department of National Defence, and particularly when that department moves to Lebreton Flats?

Mr. Mackenzie: I wonder to what point the Roxborough site is available to the National Museums of Canada at the moment? It seems to me that the lack of funds in the estimates of the Department of Public Works to make any use of the site would be a liability rather than an asset.

Mr. Dinsdale: The point used to be made that if a museum were decentralized it interfered with its essential function and, as you say, it is now scattered even worse than it used to be. There has been a further suggestion that the scattering might be expanded in terms of decentralization outside of Ottawa. Is that prospect being seriously considered?

Mr. Mackenzie: The question has been asked by the Secretary of State, as Mr. Pelletier advised the Committee during his appearance here, and we are endeavouring to accumulate all the facts upon which he and the government must make a decision.

Mr. Dinsdale: On that same thought of decentralization, what sort of co-ordination and contact has been established with the very excellent provincial museums? A few years ago some of them were even more advanced than our National Museum.

Is there any formalized association or co-ordination? In the proposed decentralization would the branches of the National Museum located in capitals such as Winnipeg, Regina or Toronto, as the case may be, be in competition with the provincial museums or would they be supplementary? Just how would you obtain the necessary co-ordination?

[Interprétation]

Une fois que la décision a été prise de se servir de cet emplacement, on a créé le Musée des sciences et de la technologie et des arts. Je voudrais également ajouter actuellement que les Musées nationaux du Canada sont actuellement répartis dans 18 immeubles, à Hull et à Ottawa.

Pour ce qui est de l'édifice commémoratif Victoria, comme vous l'avez dit, on s'inquiète de sa durée, les autorités nous ont cependant assuré que nous pouvions espérer y résider pendant cinq ans encore.

M. Dinsdale: Maintenant, en ce qui concerne l'emplacement Roxborough, ne serait-il pas possible d'accéder à certains terrains présentement occupés sur une base temporaire par le ministère de la Défense nationale, particulièrement quand celui-ci ira s'installer à Lebreton Flats?

M. Mackenzie: Eh bien, je me demande dans quelle mesure l'emplacement Roxborough est à la disposition du Musée national du Canada actuellement, mais si on s'aperçoit que l'on peut s'en servir, ça se sera plutôt un inconvénient qu'un avantage.

M. Dinsdale: Maintenant, pour décentraliser un musée, cela s'oppose à son rôle même qui est de centraliser les choses, lesquelles sont plus dispersées que jamais. Il a été en outre suggéré que cette décentralisation pourrait se faire même à l'extérieur d'Ottawa, cette perspective est-elle envisagée sérieusement?

M. C. J. Mackenzie: La question a déjà été soulevée par le secrétaire d'État. Comme il l'a dit lui-même lors de sa comparution à ce Comité, nous cherchons à rassembler toutes les données sur lesquelles on pourra prendre une décision.

M. Dinsdale: Maintenant, encore pour cette question de décentralisation, quel genre de contact et de coordination avez-vous établi avec les très beaux musées de provinces? Certains, il y a quelques années, étaient encore plus perfectionnés que les musées nationaux. Est-ce qu'il y a des associations ou des coordinations officielles?

La décentralisation envisagée pourrait-elle atteindre les villes comme Winnipeg, Regina, et si tel était le cas, est-ce qu'il serait en concurrence avec les musées des provinces ou est-ce qu'ils se complèteraient l'un et l'autre? Comment pourriez-vous réaliser cette coordination?

[Text]

Mr. Mackenzie: I do not think I can answer the latter part of your question. Up to this point we have not studied it to that extent.

As to the first part of your question on the co-ordination between the National Museums of Canada and the provincial and regional museums, I think the directors would advise you that there is very close collaboration between themselves and their counterparts in the provincial and local museums. Contact is also maintained through the Canadian Museums Association.

Mr. Dinsdale: As the witness has indicated, Mr. Chairman, these are matters that have hardly been thought about as yet in terms of the administrative and operational problems arising therefrom. Mr. Chairman, while Dr. Boggs is before us I wonder if she could indicate just what services are provided by the National Art Gallery to provincial art galleries and even to local art galleries?

Dr. Jean S. Boggs (Director, National Gallery): There are certain definite services. There are the travelling exhibitions that we have mentioned before. We also send lecturers to those galleries. We give advice, and the most useful professional advice is in terms of conservation. What I would like to emphasize, however, is that we are not doing as much as we would like to do. We have neither the money nor the staff to do it. If we had the money and the staff there is a great deal more we could do.

Mr. Dinsdale: Does the National Art Gallery assist in the development of artists across the country or is that left entirely to the Canada Council?

Dr. Boggs: That is really left pretty much to the Canada Council. I think that is their responsibility rather than ours. Our traders of Canadian art, however, visit artists in their studios and we buy their works. I suppose by showing an interest in them and exhibiting their work in Canada and even abroad—we have had three exhibitions abroad this summer—this does a lot to help in their development.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, did Dr. Boggs have any contact with the Canada Council in reference to artistic developments?

Dr. Boggs: Yes, we have a certain friendly rapport. I am not a member of the Canada Council nor of any committee of the Canada

[Interpretation]

M. Mackenzie: Eh bien, je ne peux pas répondre à la dernière partie de votre question, parce que nous n'avons pas encore fait d'études aussi poussées.

Maintenant, je peux répondre à la première partie de votre question ayant trait à la coordination entre les musées nationaux du Canada et les musées régionaux et provinciaux. Je pense que les directeurs peuvent vous dire qu'il y a une collaboration très étroite entre eux-mêmes et leurs correspondants dans les musées locaux et provinciaux. Il y a également des contacts par l'intermédiaire de l'Association des musées du Canada.

M. Dinsdale: Et je suppose que si la décentralisation se produisait, comme le témoin l'a indiqué, ce sont là des questions qui ont encore été à peine abordées du point de vue de l'administration et des problèmes s'y rattachant. Comme le docteur Boggs est parmi nous, je me demande si elle ne pourrait pas indiquer quels sont les services fournis par la Galerie nationale aux galeries provinciales et même aux galeries locales?

Dr. Jean Boggs (directrice, Galerie nationale): Il y a certains services précis; il y a les expositions itinérantes, comme nous l'avons mentionné auparavant, il y a également des conférenciers qui vont dans ces galeries et nous donnons des conseils, notamment sur la conservation.

Mais ce que je voudrais indiquer clairement, c'est que nous ne pouvons pas faire autant que nous voudrions, nous n'avons pas l'argent ni le personnel pour le faire. Si nous avions l'argent et nous avions le personnel, alors nous pourrions faire beaucoup plus.

M. Dinsdale: Est-ce que la Galerie nationale aide à former des artistes et de nouveaux talents dans le pays ou bien, est-ce laissé au Conseil du Canada?

M<sup>lle</sup> Boggs: Non, c'est plutôt le Conseil du Canada qui s'en occupe et dont c'est la responsabilité. Nous avons des marchands qui vont visiter les artistes dans leurs studios et achètent leurs œuvres. Je suppose qu'en s'intéressant à leur travail, en faisant des expositions ici et à l'étranger, nous en avons eu trois en dehors du pays l'été dernier. Cela constitue une assez bonne contribution à l'épanouissement de nouveaux talents.

M. Dinsdale: Est-ce que le docteur Boggs, monsieur le président, a eu des contacts avec le Conseil en matière de création artistique.

M<sup>lle</sup> Boggs: Oui, nous avons des rapports assez amicaux, je ne suis pas membre du Conseil du Canada de même que je ne suis

[Texte]

Council. Occasionally we do talk about things on the telephone person to person. The head of the Canada Council, Mr. Jean Boucher, is however a member of the Board of Trustees of the National Museums of Canada.

Mr. Dinsdale: So there is a personal contact in that regard. I do not suppose, Dr. Boggs, you have any comments to make as to whether it would better serve the interests of artistic development in Canada if there was a closer relationship between the Canada Council and the National Art Gallery?

Dr. Boggs: Frankly, I do not think it does any harm to have us working somewhat independently. It may be more effective in the end.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is the Lorne Building quite adequate for your needs for the foreseeable future?

Dr. Boggs: No. The Lorne Building was sufficiently inadequate even before I came to the Gallery that they had to have extra storage space. It is away out on Wellington Street. It is bad storage space. It has been broken into by burglars. We had water enter into it. It is really a rather dangerous place. Since I have been at the Gallery we have also had to move the offices and the library out of the Lorne Building into four floors of the National Building at 130 Slater Street. We are still very short of shipping and packing space.

At the moment we have rented space in Boyd's warehouses because we have three exhibitions coming back from Europe at the same time that we have works coming in for a major exhibition which is opening on the 29th. So, we are very sadly short of space. The space in the Lorne Building, if I can go into it, is wrong in many respects.

It costs the Department of Public Works a great deal of money, I am happy to say, to look after it. The hardware was built for an office building and not for a building that 500,000 people use. The stone has to be worked over because it cannot stand up against the humidity control. Of course, the most serious handicap for us is that the ceilings are too low. We have great difficulty in exhibiting large pictures.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I think the National Gallery needs this formula: artistic excellence and quality.

Dr. Boggs: We do.

Mr. Stanbury: I am glad Mr. Dinsdale approves of it now.

[Interprétation]

membre d'aucun comité. Il nous arrive d'avoir des contacts, à l'occasion, soit par téléphone ou autrement. Le président du Conseil du Canada, M. Jean Boucher est membre du conseil de Musées nationaux du Canada.

M. Dinsdale: Je ne pense pas que le docteur Boggs ait des commentaires à faire pour dire s'il serait plus utile au Canada d'avoir des rapports plus étroits entre la Galerie nationale et le Conseil du Canada.

M<sup>lle</sup> Boggs: Non, je pense qu'il n'est pas nuisible que chaque organisme travaille séparément, ce serait peut-être plus efficace.

M. Dinsdale: Croyez-vous que l'édifice Lorne réponde aux besoins futurs?

M<sup>lle</sup> Boggs: Non il n'est pas suffisant pour l'avenir. L'édifice Lorne n'était pas suffisamment adéquat. Nous avions un espace d'entrepôt en surplus sur la rue Wellington. C'était un mauvais lieu d'entreposage, des voleurs s'y sont introduits, il y a eu des effractions, etc., cela présentait quelques dangers. Il a donc fallu déménager les bureaux de l'immeuble Lorne au quatrième étage de l'édifice Lorne, à 130 rue Slater. Nous manquons de place pour l'emballage et l'expédition des marchandises.

A l'heure actuelle, nous avons loué une place aux entrepôts de Boyd, car nous avons trois expositions qui reviennent d'Europe en même temps, et nous avons des ouvrages qui nous sont envoyés pour une exposition importante le 29 prochain. L'édifice Lorne ne répond pas à nos besoins à plusieurs égards.

Cette location coûte beaucoup cher au ministère des Travaux publics en ce qui a trait à l'entretien. La plomberie a été faite pour des bureaux et non pas pour un musée où plus de 500,000 personnes peuvent circuler. L'humidité cause des dommages à la pierre et nous avons dû faire des travaux de refecton. Le plus grand handicap pour nous est que les plafonds sont trop bas et, de ce fait, nous éprouvons quelques difficultés à y exposer des grands tableaux.

M. Dinsdale: Eh bien, monsieur le président, je pense que la Galerie nationale a besoin d'une formule d'excellence artistique.

Mlle Boggs: En effet.

M. Stanbury: Je suis ravi de constater que M. Dinsdale est maintenant d'accord.

[Text]

Mr. Dinsdale: I am not approving it. I am simply recommending that it should be equitably distributed.

Mr. McCleave: I take it, Mr. Chairman, that Dr. Boggs did not follow the advice of the outgoing Secretary of State as to certain steps that could be taken to improve her budgetary position. The story hit the local papers anyway—perhaps it was not current in central Canada—that she should join the parade of certain females' inoscuation of a certain gentleman to achieve her female ways.

The Chairman: It seems to me that she has been doing it before this Committee.

Mr. McCleave: Perhaps she could start by kissing the Chairman.

Mr. Osler: Could I ask a supplementary on Mr. Dinsdale's final question or are you...

• 1200

Mr. McCleave: I was very quickly going to get off this subject to ask a question related to what Mr. Dinsdale had asked about decentralization. I wished to ask Mr. Mackenzie about the help that can be given or is being given to the small museums that are springing up throughout various parts of Canada, what sort of liaison there is with them, if any, and what sort of services you could give?

Mr. Mackenzie: At the present time we must admit quite candidly that we are not doing all that we could do and all that the small museums would like us to do in this area.

Actually, the principal request made to me, at any rate, by the representatives of the small museums—and at the beginning of this month I was at a meeting of the Province of Quebec Museum Association—is for money. The general attitude is, "Give us the money and let us spend it."

I need hardly say that with a total appropriation of $7.2 million there is no money for that sort of assistance.

However, training assistance is provided to a degree. Miss Boggs has an active program of bringing persons into the National Gallery for study and training. Perhaps Miss Boggs should speak on this rather than I, and I will let her do so.

Training is carried on, on a relatively small scale, in the National Museum of Natural Sciences and the National Museum of Man. With increased funds and more space we could do more of that.

[Interpretation]

M. Dinsdale: Je n'approuve pas, mais je souhaite simplement que tout soit distribué équitablement.

M. McCleave: Monsieur le président, je dois dire que le docteur Boggs n'a pas suivi les conseils du sous-secrétaire d'État pour qu'il des mesures soient prises afin d'améliorer la situation budgétaire. Eh bien, on a dit dans les journaux locaux, on n'en a peut-être pas parlé ici, qu'elle devrait peut-être se joindre à certains groupes de femmes qui embrassent un certain monsieur afin de s'épanouir. Je voudrais demander à M. Mackenzie.

Le président: Il me semble qu'elle l'a fait ici, au Comité.

M. McCleave: Peut-être pourrait-elle commencer en faisant une bise au président?

M. Osler: Pourrais-je poser une question supplémentaire se rapportant à la dernière question de M. Dinsdale?

M. McCleave: Maintenant, j'aimerais demander à M. Mackenzie si l'on aide les petits musées qui commencent à voir le jour dans toutes les régions du Canada? Quel rapport y a-t-il avec eux et quel genre de services pourrait-on fournir?

M. C. J. Mackenzie: Eh bien! actuellement, il nous admettre honnêtement que nous ne faisons pas tout ce que nous pourrions faire, ni ce que pourraient attendre de nous les petits musées du Canada. La principale demande qui m'est adressée par les représentants des petits musées, c'a été le cas notamment au début du mois au moment où j'assistais à la réunion de l'Association des musées du Québec, c'était une demande d'argent! De façon générale, on nous demande de l'argent et la liberté de la dépenser.

Eh bien je dois vous dire franchement qu'avec sept milliards, deux cent millions de crédits, n'est pas possible de fournir ce genre d'aide. Malgré tout, on peut fournir une aide à la formation dans une certaine mesure. M<sup>lle</sup> Boggs dirige un programme actif permettant d'attirer à la Galerie nationale d'ailleurs c'est vous, M<sup>lle</sup> Boggs, qui devriez en parler et je vous donnerai l'occasion de le faire—des personnes qui pourraient suivre des cours de formation au Musée national des sciences naturelles et au Musée national de l'homme, sur une petite échelle. Si nous avions plus de place et plus d'argent, nous pourrions en faire plus.

[Texte]

Requests for advice are received very frequently, and this advice is given if it can be given.

Assistance is rendered to the Canadian Museums Association in the form of teachers for a training program they are undertaking.

We have recently had a request from an official of the Musée du Québec for training in the National Museums, and he is being encouraged to indicate in greater detail what his requirements are.

But I say, as I said at the outset, that the efforts are not as large as we would like to make them. There is a very serious shortage of museologists in Canada and my Trustees feel that the National Museums have a responsibility to assist in training more.

The Chairman: Mr. Otto, on a supplementary.

Mr. Otto: Supplementary to Mr. Dinsdale's question re the Canada Council to Miss Boggs, I notice in the Estimates that there is a grant of $11,000 to the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts and that there are sundry scholarships, and so on amounting to $18,500. Why do these come under this appropriation rather than that of the Canada Council?

Dr. Boggs: The Board of Trustees did question the validity of the grant to the Royal Canadian Academy, which is historic.

The National Gallery and the Royal Canadian Academy were established at the same time, in 1880, so the grant to the Royal Academy from the federal government is a traditional thing. It has however, been taken out of the Estimates for 1969-70 and you will no longer have to deal with it. It was suggested that there are more appropriate agencies to give it to.

The other $18,000 is for the six museum trainees whom we have at the Gallery now. They come from different parts of the country. They all have university degrees and they are essentially in an apprenticeship training program at the Gallery.

By the way, one thing that might interest you is that in the Estimates for 1969-70, in which there is considerable retrenchment, the training program has to be cut out.

Mr. Otto: Thank you.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, je voudrais demander à notre témoin, peut-être nos cinq témoins, s'ils voudraient bien faire un bref rapport au Comité sur la situation du

[Interprétation]

On nous demande souvent des conseils, des avis, et nous donnons ces conseils, si nous le pouvons. Nous aidons l'Association des musées Canadiens, dans le cadre des programmes de formation des enseignants, qu'elle a mis sur pied.

Récemment, nous avons reçu une demande d'un responsable du Musée du Québec qui nous demandait que des cours soient donnés dans les musées nationaux et nous l'avons encouragé à nous donner plus de détails sur ses besoins.

Mais ce n'est pas encore suffisant. Il y a un manque d'experts en muséologie au Canada et nos administrateurs pensent que nous devrions y apporter une aide plus considérable.

Le président: M. Otto voudrait poser une question complémentaire.

M. Otto: Une question complémentaire à ce que M. Dinsdale a demandé tout à l'heure à M<sup>lle</sup> Boggs au sujet du Conseil des arts. Je remarque que dans le budget, on accorde une subvention de $11,000 à l'Académie royale Canadienne des arts ainsi que d'autres subventions diverses au montant le $18,500. Est-ce que vous pourriez nous dire pourquoi cela figure sous ces crédits, plutôt que sous ceux du Conseil des arts du Canada?

Mlle Jean S. Boggs: Le conseil d'administration de la Galerie a mis en doute la validité de la subvention historique à l'Académie royale canadienne. La Galerie nationale et l'Académie royale ont été créées en même temps, en 1880, et les subventions du gouvernement à l'Académie sont devenues subventions traditionnelles mais, malgré tout, cela a été retiré des budgets pour 1969-1970; on ne les y trouvera plus et il y a certainement d'autres organismes plus appropriés pour donner de telles subventions.

En ce qui concerne les autres $18,000, cela concerne les stagiaires que nous avons actuellement à la Galerie, qui viennent de différentes régions du pays; ils ont des diplômes universitaires et, en quelque sorte, c'est un apprentissage qu'ils font.

A ce sujet, une chose qui pourra vous intéresser, c'est que dans les budgets de 1969-1970 où on fait énormément de réductions, le programme de formation a été abandonné.

M. Otto: Je vous remercie.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask our witness, perhaps our five witnesses, if they could report, briefly, to the Committee on the situation of bilingualism in each bilinguisme dans chacun des musées qui relèvent de leur juridiction? Par exemple, est-ce que les publications sont toutes bilingues? Quelle est la proportion du personnel qui a affaire au public qui soit bilingue? Je pense aux téléphonistes, aux réceptionnistes, enfin, aux gardes, à tous ceux qui ont affaire au public.

[Text]

Je crois qu'il sera opportun de leur poser cette question-là et, si M. Mackenzie n'a pas la réponse pour tous les cinq musées qui sont représentés ici, on pourrait demander à chacun des responsables de nous dire brièvement quelle est la situation dans son département.

Mr. Mackenzie: Yes, Mr. Chairman; I will speak for the administrative and security services, and invite the Directors to comment on their own museums.

• 1205

The bilingual image of the administration is not by any means as good as we would like it to be, but we are taking specific steps to improve that in the immediate future.

For example, we have instructed the Ottawa Division of the Canadian Corps of Commissioners, which supplies security service in the National Museum of Man, the National Museum of Natural Sciences and the National Museum of Science and Technology, that all commissioners on duty while the public is admitted to the buildings shall be bilingual. The commandant of the Corps has agreed to effect this change by December 31 next.

The staff on the sales desks are bilingual. In the case of the head office staff, if I may put it that way—the finance people, the contracts people and the purchasing people—the picture is not so good. I myself do not pretend to be adequately bilingual. My secretary is not bilingual. Therefore, a call to my office would not be answered in the French language except haltingly.

In the administrative services generally although there are bilingual personnel they are by no means 50 per cent of the staff.

Perhaps the Directors would now speak on behalf of their own institutions.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should be more specific about that. I am not thinking in terms of perfect bilingualism. I would rather like to know what would be the proportion of those who, for instance, understand enough French and can say a few words, or at least have sufficient to perform of the museums they are responsible for. Are all publications bilingual, for instance? What percentage of the personnel dealing with the public is bilingual? I am talking of telephone operators, receptionists, guards, etc, i.e. anyone dealing with the public.

I think it would be appropriate to ask them this question, and if Mr. Mackenzie does not have the answer for all five museums represented here, perhaps each of the various representatives could tell us briefly what the situation is in their own departments.

M. Mackenzie: Oui, monsieur le président, je vais parler au sujet de l'administration et du service de sécurité et inviter les directeurs à donner des commentaires sur leur propre musée.

L'image du bilinguisme dans l'administration n'est pas, loin de là, aussi bonne que nous le voudrions, mais nous prenons des mesures concrètes pour améliorer la situation dans l'avenir immédiat.

Par exemple, nous avons demandé à la division d'Ottawa du corps des Commissionnaires du Canada, qui fournit les gardiens au Musée national de l'homme, au Musée national d'histoire naturelle et au Musée national des sciences et de la technologie, que tous les Commissionnaires qui sont de service quand le public est admis dans le musée soient bilingues. Cela doit être fait avant le 31 décembre.

Tout le personnel du bureau des ventes est bilingue. En ce qui concerne le Bureau du Siège, soit au centre des Finances des contrats, des achats, le bilinguisme n'est pas aussi bon. Pour ma part, je ne prétends pas être parfaitement bilingue; ma secrétaire n'est pas bilingue; par conséquent, un appel téléphonique à mon bureau ne peut recevoir de réponse en français, si ce n'est péniblement. Maintenant, en ce qui concerne les services administratifs en général, bien qu'il y ait un personnel bilingue, il n'y a pas loin de là, 50 p. 100 du personnel qui le soit, mais je pense que les directeurs sont mieux placés que moi pour parler au nom de leurs institutions.

M. Mongrain: Eh bien! monsieur le président, je voudrais être plus spécifique. Je ne parle pas en termes de bilinguisme parfait; je voudrais surtout savoir quelle est la proportion de ceux qui comprennent suffisamment le français pour vous dire quelques mots, afin de remplir leurs fonctions les plus ordinaires.

[Texte]

the most important part of their duties? I am not expecting that at a few months' notice everybody will be bilingual.

Did you say that about 50 per cent of the members of your staff are bilingual?

Mr. Mackenzie: No, sir; less than 50 per cent.

Mr. Mongrain: Are the publications all bilingual?

Mr. Mackenzie: The publications are the responsibility of the individual Directors. I will ask them to speak to that.

Mr. Mongrain: That is fine.

Dr. Taylor: In the Museum of Man our main areas are the anthropological disciplines and history. The scientific and research publications are usually published in the language in which the author writes them, with a précis or a summary in the other official language.

The profession of anthropology, as we know it, is in large part a North American product, beginning about 1850. Consequently, Canadian anthropology is largely an American discipline—and I mean that in the sense of the U.S.A. Consequently, most of those who work in the profession are initially English-speaking anyhow and, as a result, most of the publications are in English.

You have the problem, with those French-Canadian scholars whose first language is French, that in anthropology they will usually prefer to write and publish in English because their audience is largely a North American audience.

A French scientist in France is not usually very concerned with the social organization of the Canadian Eskimo, or with the ethno-history of the Blackfoot, whereas an American scholar most definitely will be.

Because of the American dominance of the profession of anthropology, the English language tends to be the language of communication, so that even with French-writing and French-speaking scholars the preference is to publish in English.

In archaeology, for example, there has not been in the history of this country a fully-trained French-speaking archaeologist from the Province of Quebec. We hope to hire the Je ne demande pas que d'ici quelques mois tout le monde soit parfaitement bilingue.

Vous avez dit, donc, qu'il y a à peu près 50 p. 100 des membres de votre personnel qui sont bilingues?

M. Mackenzie: Moins de 50 p. 100.

M. Mongrain: Ah bon! moins de 50 p. 100. Maintenant, en ce qui concerne les publications: est-ce qu'elles sont toutes bilingues?

M. Mackenzie: Les publications relèvent de chaque directeur de musée. Je leur donne la parole.

M. Mongrain: Très bien.

M. W. E. Taylor: Au Musée de l'homme, nos principales activités sont l'anthropologie et les disciplines connexes et l'histoire. Les publications de recherche et les publications scientifiques sont publiées dans la langue de l'auteur, avec un résumé dans l'autre langue officielle.

Dans le domaine de l'anthropologie, la profession d'anthropologiste, telle que nous la connaissons, est surtout un produit d'Amérique du Nord, qui remonte à environ 1850. Par conséquent, notre discipline d'anthropologie est surtout une discipline nord-américaine, ayant ses racines aux États-Unis.

Par conséquent, la plupart des membres de cette profession sont des anglophones, de toute façon. Et par conséquent, la plupart des publications sont en langue anglaise. Nous avons des difficultés lorsqu'il y a des savants anthropologistes qui sont francophones.

En général, ils préfèrent écrire et publier en anglais parce que leurs lecteurs sont surtout des lecteurs de l'Amérique du Nord.

Un savant français de France ne s'intéressera guère en général à l'organisation sociale des Eskimos canadiens ou à l'ethnologie des Pieds-Noirs, alors qu'un savant nord-américain s'intéressera plus à ce genre de choses.

Maintenant, étant donné la dominance américaine dans ce domaine la langue anglaise a tendance à devenir la langue de communication. Même si vous avez des savants qui écrivent en français ou qui pensent en français, il est coutumier qu'ils écrivent en anglais. Par exemple, dans toute l'histoire du pays, il n'y a jamais eu un anthropologiste francophone parfaitement formé de la province de Québec.

Nous espérons pouvoir obtenir les services d'un second archéologue au printemps prochain. Il nous a fallu dix ans pour en former un premier et il nous quitte pour accepter un second one next spring. We have spent ten years training the first one, and we are losing him to a provincial institution after ten years of investment, beginning with his undergraduate time. It is that difficult.

The first article published in the French language on the archaeology of the Province of Quebec is an article entitled "La Préhistoire de la Péninsule du Labrador", and I am the author of it. I wrote it in English. This is part of the problem.

Consequently, the scientific literature put out by the Museum is very largely in the English language. The main exception would be our folklore publications; they are more heavily in the French language than in English. The reason for that is that the folklore of Canada is very largely the product of Quebec institutions. It derives from a strong heritage of that discipline in France. In terms of personnel—

Mr. Mongrain: Excuse me; could I interrupt, Mr. Chairman? Even if those documents or books or reports or briefs are written originally in English, for instance, or in French, do you not have the benefit of translators that could give us the translation, either in French or English according to the case?

Dr. Taylor: On the scientific literature, you have first the problem of cost of publication and second—and a grievous problem; I have lived with it—is the difficulty of translating scientific literature from one language to the other. The article I mentioned La Préhistoire de la Péninsule du Labrador was translated by the Translations Bureau; it was really an act of love. The man who did the translation worked, he truly worked. He had a B.A. in Chemistry. He was faced with the problem of translating the words "woodland culture" which is one of the prehistoric periods. How do you translate "woodland culture"? "La culture sylvicole"?

Now, what he had to do, in fact, was to develop a terminology for the archeology of northeastern North America. He had to invent terms all over the place. It was a very considerable job. I think he did an excellent piece of work. The article was meant for publication by the Sorbonne. The people in l'Ecole Pratique des Hautes Etudes of the Sorbonne refused it because it was not polished enough. The ironic result is that the Sorbonne published my article on "The Prehistory of the Labrador Peninsula" in English and the National Museum of Canada published the French translation because I set out to do the thing for French publication.

poste dans une institution provinciale. C'est très difficile.

Je suis l'auteur du premier article en langue française sur l'archéologie dans la province de Québec. Il s'agit d'un article intitulé «La préhistoire du Labrador». Je l'ai écrit en anglais. Et, c'est là un exemple des difficultés que nous rencontrons.

Par conséquent, les documents publiés par le Musée du point de vue scientifique sont surtout en anglais. Nos publications sur le folklore constitue une exception à cette règle. Les publications françaises sont plus nombreuses que les anglaises, étant donné que le folklore canadien a surtout ses racines au Québec.

Au point de vue personnel...

M. Mongrain: Excusez-moi, me permettez-vous de vous interrompre? Même si ces documents, ces publications, ces rapports, ces mémoires, sont rédigés, d'abord, en français ou en anglais, n'avez-vous pas des services de traduction qui puissent nous en fournir la traduction soit en français, soit en anglais, selon le cas?

M. Taylor: En ce qui a trait à la documentation scientifique il y a d'abord le problème des frais de publication.

Deuxièmement, un problème beaucoup plus grave, il y a la difficulté de traduire des documents scientifiques d'une langue à une autre. L'étude que j'ai mentionnée sur le Labrador a été traduite par le Bureau des traductions.

C'était vraiment un acte d'amour de la part du traducteur qui a vraiment buriné son travail. Il devrait faire face à la traduction de la culture orale, de la littérature orale des Indiens. Ce qu'il a dû faire, effectivement, c'est de mettre au point une terminologie, inventer des termes propres à l'archéologie de l'Amérique du Nord.

Je crois qu'il a fait un excellent travail. L'article devait être publié par la Sorbonne, mais ne le fut pas, parce que la forme manquait de finesse. Le résultat, quelque peu ironique, c'est que la Sorbonne a publié mon article, "The Prehistory of the Labrador Peninsula" en anglais plutôt qu'en français.

Le Musée national du Canada en a publié une version française. Je puis ajouter que toute la bibliographie est en anglais. C'est une bibliographie très complète. Si l'on envoie un manuscrit de 500 pages, dactylographié pour la traduction, il faut ensuite, s'il s'agit, par exemple, d'un article sur l'anthropologie économique, il faut trouver un spécialiste bilingue qui puisse reviser tout ce travail.

[Texte]

I might add that the whole bibliography of that article is in the English language and it is a comprehensive bibliography. This is the scale of the problem. If you send a manuscript of 500 typescript pages for translation you can have it translated. Let us take an article in economic anthropology. You have to find some bilingual specialist, some scholar, who is completely bilingual to vet the whole thing. The trouble at that point is that there are very few scholars who are going to sacrifice that time because they have three articles of book reviews and seven committees and 240 students and they just do not want to do it. Their reaction is, "Good God, I can read the thing in English anyhow; so can everybody else who is a scientist".

Where the problem comes and where the problem must be met is in the publication of popular material that derives from the scientific research, material for the mass media, and in this area we have no intention of being anything except bilingual; not at all.

Mr. Mongrain: Have you the impression that there is, though, some progress being made toward this ideal situation where everything is in both languages? Mind you, I realize it will be an ideal situation which will take a very, very long time.

Dr. Taylor: Do I think there is progress?

Mr. Mongrain: Yes.

Dr. Taylor: In Canada or in the Museum of...

Mr. Mongrain: In Canada.

Dr. Taylor: In my discipline, very definitely. There is no doubt of it at all. We have been able to hire bilingual staff. We are in competition, and we must not pretend otherwise, with the provincial government. I have just lost two people to the University of Montreal, one of them a bilingual American who was our Chief Ethnologist, the other a bilingual Canadian of Polish extraction who is the curator of our ethnological collection. They are two very serious losses.

• 1215

Now, the chance of recruiting replacements for these people in French Canada is very slight. Our Folklore Division is entirely bilingual except for one member who, I think, is partly bilingual. The Archaeology Division has two or three people who are bilingual but at this point none of its scientific staff is adequately bilingual. They are worse than I am for the most part, with one exception. In the Ethnology Division we lost two of our

[Interprétation]

La difficulté, c'est qu'il y a très peu de savants qui veulent consacrer autant de temps à la révision d'un article. Ils ne veulent tout simplement pas le faire. Ils se disent: je puis de toute façon lire l'article dans une langue ou dans l'autre, et les autres scientifiques aussi, alors... Le problème, c'est celui des publications de vulgarisation, des publications populaires qui s'inspirent des recherches scientifiques et qui s'adressent aux masses. Dans ce domaine, évidemment, nous suivons une ligne de conduite de bilinguisme très stricte.

M. Mongrain: Avez-vous l'impression, cependant, que certains progrès sont accomplis en vue de cette situation idéale, savoir, que tout sera publié dans les deux langues? Je sais fort bien que ce sera une situation idéale mais qui prendra très longtemps.

M. Taylor: Est-ce que je crois qu'il y a progrès?

M. Mongrain: Oui.

M. Taylor: Au Canada?

M. Mongrain: Au Canada.

M. Taylor: Sûrement. Cela ne fait aucun doute. Nous avons pu embaucher du personnel bilingue. Nous entrons en conflit avec le Gouvernement provincial, nous ne prétendons pas le contraire. Je viens de perdre deux employés, des fonctionnaires, qui sont allés à l'Université de Montréal. L'un, un Américain bilingue, était notre ethnologue en chef. L'autre, Canadien trilingue, d'origine polonaise. Ce sont deux pertes très graves.

La chance de remplacer ces gens est très mince, au Canada. La division du folklore est entièrement bilingue, sauf pour un seul membre de la division et encore, je crois qu'elle est partiellement bilingue. La division de l'archéologie compte deux ou trois personnes bilingues, mais le personnel scientifique n'est pas bilingue. On est pire que moi, sauf une exception. La division de l'ethnologie a perdu deux employés bilingues. Le chef suppléant best bilingual people. The Acting Division Chief, whom I thought was completely bilingual, I learned last week was completely bilingual in reading but he has got a block; he cannot speak it.

[Text]

Mr. Mongrain: This is already something.

Dr. Taylor: But this is the scale of the problem, the History Division is largely bilingual—far more than 50 per cent—the Canadian War Museum is no more than one-third bilingual in its staff and it is something else we are moving to resolve.

Mr. Mongrain: What about the other museums?

Dr. Boggs: If I may speak next, I think it is a serious problem. It is very difficult to achieve. From the public's point of view, the National Gallery is not completely bilingual. The people at the sales desk who are provided by the Queen's Printer are bilingual, the people at the information desk are bilingual; only 50 per cent of the security staff is. We, unlike the other museums, have our own security staff.

In order to achieve a bilingual security staff we have to go out to contract and make this one of the stipulations in the tender which we will do next year. Obviously the cost will go up. One thing we realized immediately is that beginning January 8 we have to close the National Gallery on Mondays because we cannot afford the security contract on that basis. Otherwise, great costs are involved in bilingualism.

Elevator operators, who are crucial to anyone entering the National Gallery since we have eight floors, are provided by the Department of Public Works and they are stubborn and difficult. They may be bilingual but they refuse to admit it and they cause more difficulty, I think, than anyone else. Our labels are bilingual. Occasionally there are errors. We try to avoid them but they are discovered from time to time.

So far as publications are concerned, our popular publications, and I think we have far more perhaps than the other museums, are bilingual. We publish in French and English all our exhibition catalogues, everything we do.

Again, I must emphasize the difficulty which Dr. Taylor pointed out. For example, at the moment we have a major exhibition, the Jacob Jordaens Exhibition. We want it to be perfect in every sense. It is a very scholarly catalogue. It is so large that we had to have separate English and French editions; no one could carry them otherwise. The French edition is not going to be ready for the open-est tout à fait bilingue en ce qui regarde la lecture, mais il ne peut pas parler le français.

M. Mongrain: C'est déjà quelque chose.

M. Taylor: La division de l'histoire est en grande partie bilingue, plus de 50 p. 100. Au Musée de guerre du Canada, il y a à peu près un tiers de bilinguisme. C'est un autre problème qu'il va falloir régler.

M. Mongrain: Et, que dire des autres musées?

Docteur Boggs: C'est un problème très sérieux. Il est très difficile de le régler. Aux yeux du public notre musée n'est pas complètement bilingue. Les gens à la réception et au comptoir de l'information, sont bilingues. La moitié seulement du personnel de sécurité est bilingue.

Afin d'en venir à avoir un personnel de sécurité qui soit bilingue, il faudrait le stipuler dans le contrat. Et, nous allons le faire à partir de l'an prochain. Évidemment, le bilinguisme entraînera beaucoup de frais. Nous devons fermer la Galerie nationale tous les lundis, et ce à partir du 8 janvier, à cause des frais encourus.

Le ministère des Travaux publics nous fournit les garçons d'ascenseur indispensables dans un édifice de huit étages. Ces employés sont opiniâtres et difficiles. Il se peut qu'ils soient bilingues, mais ils ne veulent pas l'admettre et causent plus de difficultés que n'importe qui. Nos affiches sont bilingues, et on essaie d'en éliminer les erreurs.

En ce qui concerne les publications, je crois que nous en avons beaucoup plus que les autres musées, sont bilingues. Nous publions tous nos catalogues et toutes nos autres publications dans les deux langues.

Je dois répéter, encore une fois, la difficulté qu'on vient de vous signaler.

Nous tenons présentement une exposition d'envergure. Nous voulons qu'elle soit parfaite à tous les points de vue. Il fallait que le catalogue soit aussi d'excellente présentation. C'est un ouvrage très savant. Le catalogue était tellement volumineux qu'il a fallu avoir une version française et anglaise distinctes.

[Texte]

ing. In order to have it properly edited in careful, good French, it was not possible. We had the translation from the Translation Bureau on time but it was not French that would be acceptable internationally and it is the kind of publication we want to publish internationally.

Now, if you know the gallery you realize that there are some publications which are not bilingual. Our bulletin, which is a scholarly one, is not. It is published in the language in which the article is written and our catalogues which were published many years ago of the collection are only in English so far and we do not have the money to do them in French. They are major publications.

Concerning the staff, I think we are not doing badly so far as the professional staff is concerned. There are so many problems. For example, what about cataloguing the library? Can one afford a bilingual cross-filing system in a departmental library like ours? I think at some point we should all be asked to present a 10 year program of how bilingualism could be achieved in an agency such as the National Gallery. It seems to me it is something one should work toward in a very constructive fashion. We have important members of the staff who are French Canadians, crucial members.

Mr. Mongrain: That is very interesting. Of course, we do not expect you will achieve that ideal bilingualism in the next few months. The only thing we are interested in knowing is whether any progress is being made and whether all departments try to make some progress toward that goal. Is there anything special in the other museums?

Dr. Banfield: If I may speak for the Museum of Natural Sciences, we too are trying to increase our bilingualism. I might say that all our popular publications are in both English and French.

One of the most popular of our recent publications, Birds of Canada, Les Oiseaux du Canada is available in both languages.

All our exhibitions are bilingual. We give both English and French lectures. With the scientific publications, the scientific monographs, the same rules apply that Dr. Taylor mentioned. In other words, the publication, the monograph, is published in the language of the author with a résumé in the other language. We have one French publication in press at the moment «Les Oiseaux de l'île

[Interprétation]

L'édition française ne sera pas prête pour l'ouverture. Il n'était pas possible de rédiger le catalogue et de le rédiger en excellent français. Nous avons eu la traduction à temps mais, ce n'était pas un français acceptable au point de vue internationale, ce à quoi nous tenons.

Si vous connaissez bien la Galerie nationale, vous savez qu'il y a certaines publications qui ne sont pas bilingues. Dans notre bulletin qui est très savant, nous publions les articles dans la langue originale. Nous n'avons pas les fonds nécessaires pour publier des versions françaises des catalogues publiés il y a plusieurs années.

Ce n'est pas mal en ce qui concerne le personnel professionnel. Et, il y a tellement de problèmes qui se posent. Que dire de la bibliothèque, que dire des bibliothécaires, que dire du système de classement dans une bibliothèque comme la nôtre!

Je crois qu'on devrait tous nous demander de voir comment le bilinguisme peut être réalisé dans un organisme comme la Galerie nationale. Il faudrait mettre au point une formule constructive. Nous avons un certain nombre d'éminents employés qui sont Canadiens français.

M. Mongrain: C'est bien intéressant. Bien entendu, nous ne nous attendons pas à ce que vous réalisiez ce bilinguisme idéal d'ici quelques mois. Ce qui nous intéresse, c'est de savoir s'il y a des progrès accomplis, et si dans tous les services, on essaie de faire des progrès en vue de cet objectif.

Y a-t-il quelque chose de particulier dans les autres musées qu'on aimerait noter?

Docteur Banfield: Au nom du Musée des sciences naturelles, je dois signaler que nous aussi nous essayons d'accroître notre degré de bilinguisme. Je peux dire que tous nos ouvrages de vulgarisation sont publiés en français et en anglais.

L'une de nos publications récentes les plus populaires, «Birds of Canada» «Les Oiseaux du Canada», est distribuée dans les deux langues.

Nos étalages, nos expositions, sont aussi de présentation bilingue. Nous avons des conférences, des cours en français et en anglais. Pour les publications scientifiques, les monogrammes, les règlements que mentionnait M. Taylor s'appliquent. Les monogrammes sont publiés dans la langue qu'a employée l'auteur avec un sommaire dans l'autre langue. Nous avons une publication française, «Les Oiseaux d'Anticosti». We are making progress in this area.

Unfortunately the natural sciences of biology, paleontology and mineralogy are largely English-oriented, particularly in North America and to some extent abroad as well. Even in France many scientific articles are published in English. We have tried very hard to recruit French Canadian scholars in the natural sciences. It is not easy. It is not a popular subject in Quebec and, in fact, we even have difficulty recruiting Canadian scholars in these sciences. We are trying to do our best, sir.

Mr. Mongrain: Fine.

Dr. Baird: The National Museum of Science and Technology, being the newest, has had the air of bilingualism very early in its history. The result has been, I think, that we have about 100 per cent capacity. All labels have been bilingual from the outset; there have been bilingual receptionists, bilingual commissioners at the door meeting the public. All of them are being shifted, as Mr. Mackenzie pointed out, in favour of bilingual guards everywhere. In the line of publications, popular publications, which we have yet to get into, will be in both languages. Scientific ones will certainly follow the form of the Scientific World, I expect, although this is not as heavy an activity in this museum as it is in other ones.

But the trend all over the world of science is exactly this one—to publish the article in the language in which the author asks for it to be. He usually directs his article to particular audiences and he knows which language is the one to use. It makes sense this way.

As far as the staff is concerned, up till now this has not been a quantitative problem because we do not have any staff to speak of. The increase of 42 that you heard mentioned a little while ago resulted in an increase of my staff by exactly six, I think it is, or perhaps seven. So it has not been a major problem. The freeze which is on now also makes it no problem at all. I think that a visitor to the National Museum of Science and Technology will find it generally has a bilingual aspect throughout.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, je voudrais remercier les cinq témoins. Ce qui nous intéresse, je veux encore le préciser, ce de l'île d'Anticosti» qui est en train d'être préparée. Nous faisons sûrement des progrès dans ce domaine.

Malheureusement, les sciences naturelles, la biologie, la paleontologie, la minéralogie sont surtout orientées vers la langue anglaise, notamment en Amérique du Nord et à l'étranger aussi. Même en France, dans une certaine mesure, bon nombre d'articles scientifiques sont publiés en anglais. Nous essayons de recruter des savants canadiens-français dans les domaines des sciences naturelles. Ce n'est pas facile, ce n'est pas un sujet très populaire au Québec et de fait, nous avons même des difficultés à recruter des savants canadiens dans ces disciplines. Nous essayons de faire de notre mieux.

M. Mongrain: Très bien.

Dr. D. M. Baird (Directeur, Musée des sciences et de la technologie): Le Musée national des sciences et de la technologie, étant le plus récent je dois dire que le bilinguisme a été impliqué dès le début de notre histoire. Nous avons des employés bilingues dans une proportion de 100 p. 100, nous avons eu des réceptionnistes et des employés bilingues dès le début. Nous avons des commissaires bilingues à la porte pour répondre au public. Comme M. Mackenzie l'a signalé, nous sommes en faveur de l'implantation du bilinguisme dans tous les services. Au point de vue des publications populaires que nous allons commencer à publier, elles seront dans les deux langues, nous adopterons certainement le format de la revue Scientific World pour les publications scientifiques, je présume, quoique ce ne soit pas une tâche aussi lourde que cela peut l'être dans d'autres domaines.

Mais la tendance dans le monde scientifique à l'heure actuelle est celle de publier un article dans la langue voulue par l'auteur. Il le rédige pour une classe de lecteurs en particulier et il sait quelle langue est la plus appropriée et ceci est tout à fait sensé.

Pour ce qui est du personnel, le problème n'en est pas un de quantité, car nous n'avons pas beaucoup de personnel, à proprement parler. On a parlé d'une augmentation à 42, il y a quelque temps, mais, en fait, elle ne fut que de six, ou peut-être sept. Ainsi, ce ne fut pas un problème bien grave, et le gel des emplois n'en est pas un non plus. Je crois qu'un visiteur au Musée des sciences et de la technologie trouvera un climat bilingue dans notre Musée.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the five witnesses. What I am interested in, and this I wish to point out again, is n'est pas de savoir si c'est parfaitement bilingue aujourd'hui ou si ce le sera dans un mois ou dans un an, mais plutôt si, dans tous ces services, il a un effort qui se fait vers le bilinguisme avec les moyens à leur disposition.

Je voudrais poser une autre question, monsieur le président, mais elle ne concerne pas le bilinguisme. Je voudrais la poser au secrétaire général, mais peut-être pourrait-il me donner une réponse qui me renseignera sur les autres musées.

Existe-t-il un catalogue de toutes les pièces exposées dans les différents musées ou endroits publics au Canada particulièrement dans les cinq musées dont il est question ici, qu'on peut trouver, qui ne vous appartiennent pas nécessairement, mais sont plutôt la propriété de musées provinciaux ou d'entreprises publiques et qu'on pourrait voir ailleurs au Canada?

Mr. MacKenzie: This, Mr. Chairman, is the point that Mr. Olson made a while back. There is no such union catalogue, to use that term, at the present time. But as I mentioned earlier, the Board of Trustees of the Corporation has begun to turn its attention to this subject.

Mr. Mongrain: I apologize; I had missed that one. I am sorry. Thank you very much.

Mr. Givens: I am interested in the role that the Gallery and the Museum can play with respect to other galleries and museums throughout the country. I do not feel that all these facilities throughout the country should be sort of separate but equal and sort of paddling their own canoes, but that the National should be the fountainhead for the others.

• 1225

Now à propos the question that was asked before of Dr. Boggs—what was being done with regard to the stimulation or the encouragement, for instance, of artists and sculptors throughout the country—I remember about two years ago the Gallery helped us in Toronto with a display on the Nathan Phillips Square. All you asked of us at the time was the use of the Square and some custodial facilities which amounted to peanuts as far as we were concerned, and at that time you put up this display of art where apparently Dorothy Cameron went around the various sculptors throughout the country and gathered together these things from various Canadian sculptors.

[Interprétation]

not the fact of knowing whether it is perfectly bilingual today or whether it will be so in one month or a year, but rather whether in all these services, efforts are being made towards bilingualism with the means that are at their disposal?

I would like to place another question, Mr. Chairman. It does not concern bilingualism. I would like to put it to the Secretary General. Perhaps he can give me a reply concerning all the other museums.

Is there a catalogue of all the items exhibited in the various public places and museums in Canada—especially in the five museums concerned here—which do not necessarily belong to you but rather to provincial museums or public or private enterprises, and that could be seen elsewhere in Canada.

M. Mackenzie: Monsieur le président, c'est le point que M. Olson avait déjà soulevé, je crois. Il n'y a pas de catalogue général de ce genre à l'heure actuelle. Comme je l'ai mentionné plus tôt, le Conseil d'administration de la Société a commencé à étudier cette question.

M. Mongrain: Je m'excuse, je n'avais pas entendu votre réponse. Merci, monsieur le président.

M. Givens: Je suis très intéressé dans le rôle que peuvent jouer la Galerie et le Musée par rapport aux autres galeries et musées du pays. Je ne pense pas que tous ces services devraient être séparés mais plutôt égaux.

J'estime que le Musée national devrait être le point central. On a déjà posé la question à M<sup>lle</sup> Boggs. Que fait-on pour encourager les artistes et les sculpteurs à travers le pays? Je me rappelle qu'il y a environ deux ans, la Galerie nous avait aidés à tenir une exposition à la place Nathan Phillips, à Toronto. Tout ce que vous nous demandez était l'usage de cette place et une surveillance, ce qui était bien peu. Il est apparent que Dorothy Cameron avait visité les différents sculpteurs à travers le pays, ce qui lui a permis de recueillir assez d'œuvres pour pouvoir faire une exposition à ce moment.

[Text]

What I want to know is this. Was that sort of one-shot proposition, where there was an ad hoc appropriation, made because it had something to do with the Centennial, and do you intend to continue to do something like this as a program with respect to other centres throughout the country? Can you do that?

Dr. Boggs: We hope to do it. You may remember there were certain difficulties with that exhibition, particularly with the sculpture itself. It was not durable enough to stand up against the wear and the number of people who came to see it in the Toronto City Hall Square. So we have to be somewhat careful in proposing to do this again and to be careful about the kind of guarantees we have in arranging it. But we do have plans for it in 1970, hoping that the 1970-71 Estimates are more generous than the 1969-70 will be, and we propose it for Vancouver, that is in Stanley Park, and in 1974 we are hoping to do it in Charlottetown.

Mr. Givens: So this will be a continuing...

Dr. Boggs: And there are other exhibitions of that kind. We had a Scottish exhibition which opened in Charlottetown this summer, for example—an important exhibition which opened there.

Mr. Givens: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Mr. Mackenzie whether he shares this view which we discussed a bit before the meeting and I would like to hear his view now.

I am sure you must have thought from time to time about your museum's being the intellectual fountainhead leader in the field for the others across the country—those that are in the provincial capitals and so on.

Mr. Mackenzie: This is an objective to which I know all the directors and the Board of Trustees have addressed themselves, and it is certainly a goal which the Corporation hopes to achieve in time.

Mr. Givens: Thank you.

The Chairman: Mr. Stanbury.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I wondered whether there is a liaison between all the museums and public educational institutions in Canada. I believe that the National Gallery has some such liaison but I wonder how well developed it is in all the museums with public schools, secondary schools and post-secondary institutions.

Mr. Mackenzie: You introduced the word "all" into your sentence, Mr. Stanbury, and

[Interpretation]

S'agissait-il d'une proposition unique, d'une proposition spéciale parce que cela intéressait le centenaire ou s'agit-il d'un programme permanent? Est-ce que vous continuez de faire quelque chose de ce genre pour encourager les artistes et pour communiquer avec d'autres centres à travers le pays?

Mlle Boggs: Nous espérons le faire. Nous avons rencontré certaines difficultés avec cette exposition particulièrement en ce qui concerne la sculpture. Ce n'était peut-être pas assez permanent pour subir toutes les vicissitudes de l'exposition sur la place de l'hôtel de ville de Toronto.

Il faut donc faire très attention à la préparation de ces expositions. Nous avons sûrement des plans pour 1970, espérant que les crédits de 1970-1971 seront plus généreux que ceux de 1968-1969. Nous comptons aussi faire une grande exposition au parc Stanley, à Vancouver et en 1974, nous comptons en faire une autre à Charlottetown.

M. Givens: Ainsi, vous allez continuer...

Mlle Boggs: Il y aura d'autres expositions de cette sorte. Nous avons eu une exposition écossaise cet été à Charlottetown.

M. Givens: Merci beaucoup. Monsieur le président, j'aimerais demander à M. Mackenzie s'il partage ces opinions que nous avons discutées auparavant. Je suis sûr que vous y avez songé de temps à autre, au sujet de votre propre musée et des autres qui seraient une espèce de fontaine intellectuelle qui donnerait l'exemple, qui prendrait l'initiative dans le domaine à travers le pays.

M. Mackenzie: Je sais que tous les directeurs et que le Conseil d'administration s'occupent de cet objectif. C'est certainement un but que la Société compte réaliser avec le temps.

M. Givens: Merci.

Le président: Monsieur Stanbury.

M. Stanbury: Monsieur le président, je me demande s'il y a liaison entre tous ces musées et les maisons d'enseignement public au Canada. Je crois comprendre que la Galerie nationale a des services de liaison, de communication de ce genre, mais je me demande si cela existe dans tous les musées et entre les écoles publiques, les écoles secondaires, et aussi, avec les institutions postsecondaires.

M. Mackenzie: Lorsque vous parlez de toutes les maisons, monsieur Stanbury, il faut one must admit that the Corporation does not by any means have a liaison with all the educational institutions and all the museums in Canada.

Our resources are—and I stress this again—very severely limited. With the $7.2 million for which we are asking and which at this point in time is about two-thirds spent, one can only do so much.

As I implied in my answer to Mr. Givens, the trustees are anxious, eager, that a good deal more be done in terms of liaison with the 700-odd, more than 700 museums in Canada, and with the educational institutions.

At the last meeting of the Board I was given urgent instructions to endeavour to find an officer who could undertake this sort of liaison on behalf of the Corporation.

As has been suggested, Dr. Boggs probably has a greater degree of contact with the art galleries in Canada than have the other institutions with their counterparts among the museums. Many of these 700 museums, as you will appreciate, are very small, often an historic house in a community which has been set apart by the municipal council.

Mr. Stanbury: I am thinking more of schools and colleges, Mr. Mackenzie. In view of our budgetary limitations, has there been any consideration given to making publications available at cost or at some price to educational authorities in the provinces who might very well welcome publications of a nature that could be used by them in their educational institutions?

Mr. Mackenzie: With respect to the three traditional museums, there is a very elaborate exchange system and I would think that all the universities in Canada, for example, receive all the publications of those three museums. The extension of the publication program to enable the corporation to provide publications to high schools and the like could be a very expensive undertaking, and we do not have the finances to embark upon this.

Mr. Stanbury: There has not been as far as we know any discussion between the museums and provincial authorities on the subject of those authorities being interested in purchasing such materials if they could be made available by these unique institutions which we have in Ottawa.

Mr. Mackenzie: There have been no such discussions of which I am aware, but perhaps my colleagues can answer that.

admettre que la Société n'a pas de service de liaison avec toutes les maisons d'enseignement et tous les musées au Canada.

Nos ressources sont très limitées. Nous ne demandons que ce $7.2 million dont les deux tiers sont dépensés à l'heure actuelle, par conséquent le champ d'action est très limité.

Comme je l'ai laissé entendre dans la réponse antérieure, le bureau des gouverneurs veut qu'on fasse beaucoup plus au point de vue service de liaison avec les 700 musées ou plus qui existent au Canada et avec les maisons d'enseignement.

A la dernière réunion du conseil du bureau des gouverneurs, on m'a demandé de trouver un fonctionnaire ou un employé qui puisse assurer cette liaison. Le docteur Boggs a peut-être plus de contacts avec les galeries d'art au Canada que les autres institutions. Bon nombre de ces 700 musées sont plus ou moins des résidences historiques, qui ont été édifiées ou constituées par un conseil municipal.

M. Stanbury: Je songe surtout aux écoles et aux collèges. Vu vos restrictions budgétaires, a-t-on songé à publier des ouvrages consacrés à des fins éducatives?

Il se peut fort bien que les autorités éducatives se réjouissent des ouvrages qui pourraient être utilisés par leurs maisons d'enseignement.

M. Mackenzie: En ce qui a trait aux trois musées traditionnels, il y a beaucoup d'échange et je crois que toutes les universités au Canada reçoivent toutes les publications de ces trois musées. Si l'on intensifie le programme de publication afin que la Société puisse fournir des ouvrages aux écoles secondaires et aux autres maisons d'enseignement, ce serait une entreprise très coûteuse et nous n'avons simplement pas l'argent requis pour cela.

M. Stanbury: A votre connaissance, il n'y a eu aucune entente entre les musées et les autorités provinciales, à savoir que ces autorités seraient intéressées à se procurer cette documentation qui pourrait être publiée par ces institutions uniques que nous avons à Ottawa.

M. Mackenzie: Non, selon moi, il n'y a pas eu d'entente à ce sujet. Mais, peut-être mes collègues peuvent vous fournir une réponse à cette question.

[Text]

Mr. Stanbury: If there have not been, do you see some merit in discussing this, in other words making the benefits of your museums available more broadly throughout the country.

Mr. Mackenzie: Indeed. As I said, the trustees have instructed me to find someone who will undertake this program, or this as one of his duties. It is contemplated by the trustees that he should also undertake, for example, liaison with provincial Departments of Education on the part the National Museums of Canada can play in educational TV curricula.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Mr. Mackenzie or any of his people a supplementary question. About two years ago, I think it was, there was an excellent program that the CBC did with Dr. Boggs.

They put out a booklet and co-related it with the lecture series and so forth, and I think it was very well received as well as being very excellent. Is much of this sort of thing done, and if not, could not more be done? Have you a liaison with the CBC?

Mr. Mackenzie: I think perhaps the Director should do that. I know the program to which you refer and I agree that it was very well received. I know Dr. Baird has also embarked on similar TV and radio lectures.

Mr. Osler: How do those come about? Do they come about more or less by accident, or...

Dr. Boggs: I think the CBC would be very happy if we could provide the material for them. As Director of the National Gallery, I find I very seldom have the time to do something of that sort, and I do not have the staff to do it. One thing perhaps this Committee should realize fully is the consequence of the freeze upon us, because the whole growth and development of our institutions have been affected by it. Which part of our program we will emphasize is not necessarily a policy decision; it is an accident caused by the freeze itself.

One of the things that happened to us was that the education people and audio visual people who were to be interested primarily in that aspect of the program were frozen out of existence. And so there is no possibility of our working in that direction until the freeze is lifted and the estimates are increased.

Mr. Osler: But here is what I meant. What did the CBC pay for and what did the National Gallery pay for?

[Interpretation]

M. Stanbury: S'il n'y en a pas eu, est-ce que vous pensez que cela vaudrait la peine d'être discuté? Autrement dit, vos musées peuvent-ils verser leurs avantages d'une façon plus étendue à travers le pays?

M. Mackenzie: En effet. Les directeurs m'ont encouragé à faire cela. C'est une de mes fonctions. Les directeurs pensent qu'il devrait se mettre en contact avec les ministères provinciaux de l'éducation au sujet du rôle que le Musée national du Canada pourrait jouer dans les programmes de télévision scolaire.

M. Osler: Monsieur le président, je voudrais demander à M. Mackenzie ou à l'un de ses fonctionnaires la question suivante: il y a deux ans, il y a eu un programme excellent de Radio-Canada en collaboration avec M<sup>lle</sup> Boggs.

Une brochure a été publiée qui permettait de suivre ce programme. Ce programme a eu une large audience et il était tout à fait remarquable. Est-ce qu'on fait beaucoup de ce genre de choses et, si ce n'est pas le cas, est-ce qu'on pourrait augmenter ce genre de choses? Est-ce que vous avez des contacts avec Radio-Canada?

M. Mackenzie: Je crois que le directeur devrait le faire. Je sais de quel programme vous parlez et je suis d'accord que cela a été très bien reçu. M. Baird a fait des conférences radiodiffusées et télévisées du même genre.

M. Osler: Est-ce que cela se produit par hasard? Comment fait-on?

M<sup>lle</sup> Boggs: Radio-Canada sera sans doute très heureuse que nous lui fournissions du matériel. Comme directrice de la Galerie nationale, je sais que je n'ai pas le temps et le personnel pour faire quelque chose de ce genre. Le comité doit se rendre compte des conséquences du blocage sur nous. Tout développement de notre institution a été affecté par ce blocage. En fait il ne s'agit pas de priorités, il s'agit des répercussions du blocage.

Les gens chargés de l'éducation et des dispositifs audio-visuels, et qui devaient s'intéresser principalement à cet aspect de la question, ont été complètement supprimés. Tant que ce blocage ne sera pas supprimé, nous ne pourrons rien faire dans ce domaine.

M. Osler: Donc, pour se baser crûment sur votre exemple, qu'est-ce que Radio-Canada a payé pour cela, et qu'a payé la Galerie?

[Texte]

Dr. Boggs: When I did that series for the CBC, I was not working for the National Gallery. But I think the CBC is quite prepared to let us provide the people and the reproductions, and to put on the program. We would provide that side of the intellectual work and they would do the whole production side. It is unlike the National Film Board where we are asked to contribute large amounts of money to produce something.

Mr. Givens: You say frozen out of existence. Under the freeze cannot you replace staff, or you just cannot...

Dr. Boggs: That implies a flexible staff which we do not have. You see, first of all you cannot fire anyone.

• 1235

Mr. Givens: No, but if you have say five people who fall out by attrition, by that I mean as they retire, they get sick, or they die or something, do you not replace them?

Dr. Boggs: I should say very happily. I have a very tight staff.

Mr. Givens: I hope they are not tight all of the time. Can you not replace people that fall out in that way?

Dr. Boggs: Yes, if they fall out.

The Chairman: The point is that you cannot expand to look after your new needs.

Mr. Givens: I was talking about what you meant by frozen out of existence.

Dr. Boggs: Well, not in that sense. Actually we have had two retirements, and we have had to use those positions which were rather senior positions for support work that was very badly needed in the National Gallery, The Registrar's Office and Installation Division. They simply could not safely handle the works of art coming into the building, without people in those areas. So we used them or those rather than for this educational program.

The Chairman: I think we had better return to Mr. Stanbury. This supplementary as gone rather wild.

Mr. Stanbury: I was interested in the general approach of the museums to young Canadians particularly. I noticed an article in

[Interprétation]

Mlle Boggs: Je ne travaillais pas pour la Galerie nationale lorsque Radio-Canada a fait ce programme. Je pense que Radio-Canada est parfaitement prête à nous laisser fournir les gens et elle s'occupera du programme. C'est nous qui fournirions tous l'aspect intellectuel; Radio-Canada s'occuperait de la réalisation. Ce n'est pas comme à l'Office national du film, où nous devons fournir beaucoup d'argent pour produire quelque chose.

M. Givens: Vous ne pouvez rien faire pour compenser l'effet du blocage?

Mlle Boggs: Il y a un problème. Nous ne pouvons pas trouver le personnel. Nous ne pouvons pas renvoyer des gens.

M. Givens: Si vous avez des gens qui partent, c'est-à-dire qui deviennent malades ou qui meurent, ne les remplacez-vous pas? Vont-ils ailleurs où il sont mieux payés?

Mlle Boggs: Je dois dire que j'ai un personnel très restreint.

M. Givens: J'espère qu'ils ne sont pas toujours fauchés: Ne les remplacez-vous pas?

Mlle Boggs: Oui, s'ils partent.

Le président: Vous ne pouvez pas vous développer?

M. Givens: Vous dites qu'ils ont été supprimés complètement?

Mlle Boggs: En fait, nous avons eu deux retraites et ces postes assez élevés ont été utilisés dans l'intervalle pour du travail de soutien. On ne pouvait absolument rien faire sans ces gens, et on s'est servi de ces postes pour les préposés à l'entreposage des œuvres d'art plutôt que pour le programme éducatif.

Le président: M. Stanbury a une question supplémentaire depuis bien longtemps.

M. Stanbury: Je m'intéresse à ce que pourraient fournir les musées aux jeunes Canadiens. Dans le «Toronto Daily Star», j'ai lu un the Toronto Star making some interesting comments on a visit by the reporter and his family to the War Museum. I presume that the Director responsible for the War Museum saw it. I thought that the point was rather well made, that it may be a very fine display of war relics, but its message perhaps leaves much to be desired, particularly when this is the one museum that virtually all school children who visit Ottawa seem to go through for some reason.

Dr. Taylor: May I speak to this?

The Chairman: Yes.

Dr. Taylor: I am a little bit uneasy about the general area of questioning. Not this specific point; I will have to speak to the specific one too. Let me take the general one first if I may and talk for a few minutes. I am not convinced that the Committee has a full understanding of the extent of the corporation's extension activities in Canada. As a matter of fact from the questions I have heard I get the impression very definitely that the Committee knows very little about it.

Mr. Stanbury: You mean by the questions that are being asked?

Dr. Taylor: Yes, so let me speak for a few minutes about the Museum of Man, and I will speak in terms of the five components of it.

Alphabetically, archeology—and that happens to be my own discipline—is perhaps our strongest division. That division alone answers written inquiries that are counted not by the hundreds but more correctly by the thousands per year.

This does not include visitors or interested high school students or professionals, or graduate students who come in for anything from one day to three weeks to work with our staff. Our staffs serve on doctoral committees, they advise very generally. Their publications are read, the archeological publications are read by the whole profession and by the students. They are used very widely. We have examples of reprintings, and so forth. We do more field training for archeology students I think than any other institution in Canada. We are involved in approximately 25 archeological field parties per year.

The last three things to hit the press on archeological in Canada were Dr. Tuck's excavations in Newfoundland, Dr. Pohorecky's work in Saskatchewan, and Dr. George MacDonald's work in British Columbia. Dr. Tuck was recruited for the Newfoundland people by our staff to help them. We are running a full-scale program in Newfoundland. We financed Dr. Tuck's work article dans lequel il y a des commentaires intéressants au sujet d'une visite d'un journaliste et sa famille au Musée de guerre. Je suppose que le directeur responsable du Musée de guerre l'a vu. Je pense que c'est peut-être une très belle exposition de reliques de la guerre, mais le message laisse à désirer, en particulier lorsque c'est justement le Musée que visitent tous les écoliers qui viennent à Ottawa.

M. Taylor: Est-ce que je peux répondre?

Le président: Très bien.

M. Taylor: Je suis un petit peu mal à l'aise en ce qui concerne toutes ces questions. Je répondrai d'abord au début de votre question. Les membres du comité doivent comprendre quelle est l'étendue des différentes activités de la société au Canada. J'ai l'impression que le comité ne comprend pas très bien la situation.

M. Stanbury: Vous voulez dire par les questions que nous posons?

M. Taylor: Oui. Laissez-moi vous parler d'abord du Musée de l'homme. Je vous parlerai des cinq éléments qui le composent.

Par ordre alphabétique, l'archéologie, qui est ma propre discipline, est peut-être la division la plus importante; cette division répond à des milliers de demandes par année. Cela ne comprend pas les visiteurs ou les étudiants du secondaire ou les professionnels intéressés.

Il y a des étudiants qui viennent entre une journée et trois semaines pour travailler avec notre personnel. Notre personnel travaille au sein de comités doctoraux. Les publications archéologiques sont lues par toute la profession et par tous les étudiants. Elles sont grandement utilisées. Nous avons des réimpressions très multiples. Nous formons beaucoup plus d'archéologues que d'autres institutions au Canada. Nous nous occupons d'environ 25 domaines archéologiques par année.

Les trois derniers éléments, qui ont été publiés sur l'archéologie au Canada, sont les travaux de M. Tuck à Terre-Neuve, de M. Pohorecky en Saskatchewan et de M. George MacDonald en Colombie-britannique. M. Tuck a été recruté par notre personnel pour aider les gens de Terre-Neuve. Nous avons un programme complet à Terre-Neuve. Nous finançons le travail de M. Tuck cette année. Nous this year. We are financing Dr. Pohorecky's work in Saskatchewan. Dr. George MacDonald of British Columbia is one of our staff officers.

This is something of the scale in archeology. It is rather similar in the other disciplines, although I think not as strong. In terms of inquiries, consultations, publications and so forth, there is a great deal being done.

Turning to the War Museum, it is sufficiently concerned with its contribution to other Canadian museums that it brought into existence the Association of Military Museum Curators of Canada, so that it would have a channel to help them.

The archeology division of the National Museum of Canada was the main force in bringing into existence last year the Canadian Archeological Association. It is very aware of the national responsibility, for what must be appreciated is that we are not operating from the strongest foundation in terms of funds, in terms of accommodation and so forth.

Turning to the War Museum and the Toronto Star, I have only briefly glanced at it because it came to my office just before I came here this morning. As I understand it, the newspaperman felt that the War Museum exhibits did not sufficiently portray the ghastly side of war.

• 1240

In the first place, before the War Museum came to the corporation it was under strictures not to illustrate corpses. They are rather ghastly things. I am well aware that the man sitting on my left flew a spitfire. In any event.

I would ask those of you who doubt its ability to show the ghastly side of war to go to the third floor and look at the November 11 exhibit and tell me how you enjoy seeing 14 flayed bodies bloated and covered with flies laying in the mud. I can assure you this is a very dangerous thing to put on exhibit. You only go so far. I went over there the other day in a taxi and the taxicab driver's comment to me was, "I have been to that museum. Do you know it?" He thought I was from out of town. I said, "Yes, I have seen it a couple of times. What do you think of it?" He said, "It is nice, but it is sort of ghastly".

Where is the line? What do you do? The War Museum staff has been told, and told very vigorously, that they will not simply portray medals, bugles and flags and they are well aware of it. I might add that the War Museum staff includes a petty officer who had his head bashed in in the North Atlantic, an ex-wing commander who was a Beau-fighter ace, an ex-rear admiral, an ex-squadron leader and a man who for 21 years was an officer in the British and Canadian Armies. They finançons le travail de M. Pohorecky en Saskatchewan. M. George MacDonald, de Colombie-britannique, fait partie de notre personnel.

Voilà ce que nous avons en archéologie. C'est assez comparable dans les autres disciplines, mais pas tout à fait aussi fort. En ce qui concerne les publications, nous faisons beaucoup. En ce qui concerne le Musée de guerre, il contribue beaucoup aux autres musées canadiens. Il a créé l'Association des conservateurs de musées de guerre au Canada, qui est le moyen par lequel il vient en aide aux autres musées.

La division de l'archéologie du Musée national du Canada a créé, l'an dernier, l'Association archéologique du Canada. Il est conscient de ses responsabilités nationales. On doit se rendre compte du fait que nous n'avons pas des bases extrêmement solides du point de vue financier, du point de vue bâtiments, etc. . .

En ce qui concerne le Musée de guerre et l'article du «Toronto Daily Star», j'ai jeté un coup d'œil rapide. Je l'ai vu ce matin à mon bureau avant de venir ici. Si j'ai bien compris, le journaliste pensait que le musée ne montrait pas suffisamment les horreurs de la guerre.

Il était entendu avant même la création du musée de guerre, avant qu'il ne soit constitué, que le musée ne devait pas montrer des cadavres, spectacle peu agréable. Demandez à mon voisin de gauche, pilote de Spitfire.

Doutez-vous de la capacité du musée à faire voir ces côtés horribles de la guerre? Allez au troisième étage et voyez vous me direz ce que vous a suggéré la vue de quatorze cadavres mutilés couverts de mouches et croupissant dans la bave. C'est très dangereux de montrer ce genre de choses.

J'ai pris un taxi pour aller au musée l'autre jour et le chauffeur m'a dit: «Je suis allé voir ce musée déjà». Il croyait que j'étais un touriste; «je l'ai visité deux ou trois fois» lui ai-je dit en lui demandant «qu'en pensez-vous?», il m'a répondu. «C'est bien, mais c'est épouvantable».

Où s'arrête-t-on? Quelles sont les bornes à ne pas dépasser? Le personnel du musée de guerre sait bien que sa tâche ne se limite pas à montrer uniquement des clairons, des décorations et des drapeaux. Le personnel comprend un sous-officier qui a été blessé au combat dans l'atlantique Nord, un ancien chef d'escadrille, as du combat aérien, un ancien contre-amiral, un officier qui a vingt et un ans de service; et tous ces gens-là connaissent très bien les aspects négatifs de la guerre.

have a pretty fair appreciation of the negative side of war.

Mr. Stanbury: Living exhibits.

Dr. Taylor: They have experienced a bit of it. The question is at what point have you defeated the purpose of portraying Canada's military history by throwing corpses around. We are quite prepared, if our trustees recommend it, to go to EMO and get some of these delightfully shocking restorations where you put what looks very convincingly like a human body on the floor with its guts spread all across the wood, but I do not think this serves any purpose whatsoever.

Mr. Stanbury: I agree it is a fairly violent alternative to what is there now, I suppose, but I wanted to draw your attention to that article and have your comment on it because the story of how this reporter's children reacted to the War Museum raises questions as to how all the thousands of children who go through it in a year might react to it. I am sure you have this consideration in mind but I wanted to draw it to your attention.

Dr. Taylor: You cannot pump in the smell of rotten bodies. Of course, technically you can do it. As a matter of fact, we are doing a diorama right now that includes the smell of cordite, diesel oil, and so on. However, there is a judgment that has to be made in these areas. Among other things, where you must consider the reaction of children you cannot entirely control it and you cannot entirely structure it. You have the converse problem of people who visit that War Museum who lost a brother, sister, wife, husband, and so on, in the war, and it is not a very good thing to rub their noses into this kind of a disaster. They do not have to be reminded.

Mr. Stanbury: In any event, I presume you have this consideration firmly in mind. You are not just attempting to display interesting relics of war.

M. Matte: Je voulais tout simplement revenir sur le sujet mis sur le tapis tout à l'heure par M. Mongrain, et donner quelques réflexions peut-être davantage que de poser des questions. Nous arrivons toujours, à chaque fois qu'il est question de bilinguisme, peu importe le département en question, nous arrivons toujours à ce fameux cul-de-sac, où s'il n'y a pas de français ou s'il n'y a pas de bilinguisme, c'est dû tout simplement à des impossibilités quelconques, et entre autres l'argument le plus fort que vous semblez avoir donné, celui, tout simplement, parce

[Interpretation]

M. Stanbury: Des pièces d'exposition vivantes?

Dr. Taylor: La question est celle-ci: Il ne faut pas aller à l'encontre du but recherché, soit exposer l'histoire militaire du Canada, en montrant des tas de cadavres. Si la direction le veut, on peut demander à l'OMU de nous fournir des reconstitutions très convaincantes, des cadavres aux boyaux éparpillés, mais je pense que ça ne servirait à rien.

M. Stanbury: C'est là une solution très violente, je l'admets. Je voulais porter cet article à votre attention et avoir vos commentaires car la réaction des enfants de ce journaliste à l'exposition soulève la question de savoir comment réagiront tous les enfants à cette exposition.

Je voulais simplement attirer votre attention là-dessus.

M. Taylor: Vous ne pouvez pas reconstituer l'odeur de cadavres en train de pourrir; enfin, on peut techniquement le faire. On va faire un diorama dans lequel il y a des odeurs de cordite et de mazout. Mais il faut se servir de son jugement; entre autres choses, il faut tenir compte de la réaction des enfants. On ne peut pas la contrôler complètement, on ne peut pas vraiment la structurer. Il y a un autre problème. Il y a des gens qui vont au musée de guerre et qui ont perdu un frère, une sœur, leur femme ou leur mari pendant la guerre; il n'est pas très bon de retourner le couteau dans la plaie. Il n'est pas nécessaire de le leur rappeler.

M. Stanbury: Quoiqu'il en soit, en supposant que vous teniez compte de toutes ces considérations, je suppose que vous n'essayez quand même pas simplement de montrer des reliques intéressantes de la guerre.

Mr. Matte: I would simply like to return to the subject which was discussed earlier by Mr. Mongrain. And I would really like to voice my opinion rather than place questions. Every time we talk about bilingualism, no matter what department is under scrutiny, we always reach the same dead end, viz. if there is no French or no bilingualism, this is simply due to impossibilities of one sort or another, and the strongest argument you seem to have provided is quite simply, that there are no French Canadians interested in the subject.

[Texte]

qu'il n'y a pas de Canadiens français qui s'intéressent à la chose.

• 1245

C'est peut-être vrai. Mais si on se demande pourquoi il n'y en a pas de Canadiens français qui s'intéressent à la chose, c'est dû, précisément au fait que la chose en question est étrangère aux Québécois, totalement.

J'en connais des anthropologues au Québec qui seraient extrêmement intéressés, mais qui ne font rien parce que, selon eux, ça ne reflète en aucune façon, leur propre mentalité. Alors ils ne sont tout simplement pas intéressés. C'est la raison pour laquelle on n'en a pas. C'est une espèce de cercle vicieux.

Alors, la difficulté que vous rencontrez provient donc du fait qu'il est très difficile, d'arriver à donner un visage français à quelque chose qui n'est absolument pas du tout français. C'est très difficile, et je crois que vous n'y arriverez jamais. Tout ce que vous pouvez faire, c'est ce qu'on a semblé faire, c'est-à-dire, à la réception, avoir des gens bilingues. C'est à peu près tout.

C'est tellement vrai que lorsque vous mentionnez le fait qu'à Paris même, on va publier en anglais, mais c'est évident, parce qu'à Paris, il n'y a pas de problème de bilinguisme; parce qu'à Paris, il n'y a aucun problème ethnique, et que par conséquent, l'écrit l'un savant est étudié et lu sans la langue originale. On n'a pas besoin de traduction. C'est tout à fait normal. C'est pour ça que, il ne semble, et ce n'est pas seulement pour le service en question, dont on parle aujourd'hui, mais également pour tous les autres services.

Et la solution serait toujours que l'on ait, instinctivement, un service français et un service anglais, comme on l'a à Radio-Canada. Le réseau français de Radio-Canada est le meilleur réseau français du monde, et ça me fait de le dire: c'est le meilleur réseau de langue française au monde. Pourquoi? Parce qu'il est exclusivement français. Mais si on avait tenté, dans le réseau de Radio-Canada, d'avoir un seul réseau, mais, si vous voulez, dans ce même réseau, avoir du bilinguisme, on serait arrivé au même cul-de-sac habituel. Pourquoi? Parce qu'on aurait forcé des gens à publier une mentalité. Ce qui ne se fait pas.

Alors, tandis que le réseau français va fonctionner avec sa mentalité, va selon les intérêts des Canadiens français, ça va très très bien. Et je pense qu'il est même souvent un exemple au point de vue canadienisme. Au point de vue contenu canadien, il est même un exemple pour le réseau anglais.

[Interprétation]

This may be true. However, if we wonder why there are no French Canadians interested in the subject, this is due to the very fact that this subject is completely foreign, alien to Quebecers.

I know anthropologists in Quebec who would be very interested indeed, but who do nothing as this in no way reflects their own way of thinking. Hence, they are not interested, and this is the reason why we have none of them. This is a kind of vicious circle.

The problems you have come from the fact—it is very difficult I admit it, and so far as I am concerned, this is impossible—that a French aspect must be given to something which is not French at all. This is very difficult indeed, and I believe you will never succeed. All you can do, is what was done up to now, i.e. to have bilingual people as receptionists. This is about all you can do.

This is so true when considering the fact, as you mention, that even in Paris books are published in English. But this is obvious, because in Paris there is no bilingualism problem, nor is there any ethnic problem. Consequently, what a scientist writes is read in the original language. No translation is needed. This is perfectly normal. This is the reason it would seem to me—and this does not apply just to your department, the department under scrutiny today, but this applies to all other departments—that the solution would be to have a separate French service and a separate English service just as we have in the CBC.

The French network of the CBC is the best French network in the world, and I am very pleased to say so. It is the best French-speaking network in the world. Why? Because it is exclusively French. But, if we had tried to have the CBC network as a single network, and to have bilingualism in this network we would have reached the same usual dead end. Why? Because we would have forced people to duplicate a mentality, which cannot be done.

However, the French network goes its own way, following French-Canadian interests, and this works very well. And I believe that often it is an example so far as Canadianism is concerned. From the point of view of Canadian content it is an example to the English network.

[Text]

Alors voyez-vous, c'est moins une question qu'une constatation que je fais, et je me demande comment arriver à solutionner un problème de bilinguisme dans le cas qu'on a là. Les musées, le musée national, le musée de guerre n'intéressent pas du tout les Québécois. Alors comment voulez-vous implanter, donner un visage français à cette chose-là, je pense que ce sera une lutte inutile. Peut-être qu'il faudrait plutôt envisager la possibilité d'avoir des sections, au moins, qui seraient totalement françaises. Et là, vous aurez plus de chance d'avoir la collaboration des éléments du Québec.

Alors, je pourrais poser la question suivante: est-ce qu'il est possible d'envisager l'établissement d'un musée national qui serait surtout, disons, canadien-français?

Mr. Mackenzie: I do not think, Mr. Chairman, I could answer that question. Perhaps one of the directors could answer it.

● 1250

Dr. Taylor: If I could speak to it a moment, and speak conversely, my discipline is archeology and I came here twelve years ago. I spent ten years in trying to produce a French Canadian archeologist. Despite what you say, we are now being successful and we have no intention of stopping, not a bit. It is quite the opposite. We have French Canadian undergraduates and graduate students in field parties all across Canada every summer. Right now there is a young French Canadian who is undertaking to do a master thesis on Quebec archeology at my suggestion. The initiative was mine, not that of the University of Montreal. Three of my staff in the past 18 months have been engaged in teaching courses at the University of Montreal. In one case the students came to Ottawa and, as a matter of fact, the course was taught in the National Museum of Canada. We are in close liaison with the University of Montreal, with Laval and with Centre des Études Nordiques. I think we are beginning to break through, contrary to what you suggest.

I thought we were making considerable progress in ethnology and then we lost two key people to the University of Montreal. I do not think this is a reason to stop, nor do I think it is a reason to despair at all.

In folklore we have nearly the situation you suggest. The folklore division is entirely francophone with the exception of Mr. Klymasz who is a Ukrainian Canadian and is bilingual but in a different sense of the word. There is a case of one unit of one of the

[Interpretation]

This is less a question, than a voicing of my own opinion, and I wonder how we can solve the problem of bilingualism in the case we have here. Museums, the National Museum or the War Museum are of no interest to Quebecers. Therefore, how can you give this a French aspect. I think this will be a useless struggle. Maybe we should consider the possibility of having sections, at least, which would be exclusively French. Then you would have a better chance of obtaining the collaboration of Quebecers.

In view of this I should like to ask the following question: Is it possible to consider having a national museum which would be mainly French Canadian?

M. Mackenzie: Monsieur le président, je ne pense pas que je puisse répondre à cette question. Peut-être que les directeurs pourraient le faire à ma place.

Dr Taylor: Si je pouvais parler sincèrement et vous donner mon expérience. L'anthropologie, cela fait de nombreuses années que je m'en occupe. J'ai passé dix ans à essayer de former des archéologues Canadiens français; malgré ce que vous avez dit, nous ne réussissons pas, mais nous n'avons pas du tout l'intention d'abandonner. Bien au contraire! Nous avons étudiants et des diplômés universitaires francophones dans les groupes que nous envoyons, sur le terrain, dans tout le Canada chaque été. Nous avons un licencié qui actuellement fait une thèse de maîtrise sur l'anthropologie du Québec, à ma suggestion d'ailleurs. C'est moi qui en ai pris l'initiative, pas l'Université de Montréal. Au cours des dix huit derniers mois, trois de mes employés ont donné des cours à l'Université de Montréal. Dans un cas, les étudiants sont venus à Ottawa et leurs cours ont eu lieu au musée national du Canada.

Nous sommes en rapport étroits avec l'Université de Montréal, l'Université Laval et le Centre d'études nordiques. Je pense que nous progressons dans la bonne direction, dans le sens contraire de ce que vous venez de dire. En ethnologie, je croyais que nous faisons du progrès et puis deux de nos employés importants sont partis à l'Université de Montréal. Je ne crois pas que cela signifie que nous devons nous arrêter, ni perdre espoir.

Dans le folklore, nous avons une situation voisine de celle que vous avez proposée; c'est-à-dire, nous avons une division composée entièrement de francophones, à l'exception de M. Klymasz, qui est un Canadien d'origine ukrainienne et est bilingue quoique ce museums being almost entirely French Canadian in its makeup.

In history the staff, by ethnic origin, is I think about half and half—Anglo-Celtic and French Canadian, and, by language, it is almost totally bilingual. The chief historian took his masters degree in Paris, for example. So I think we are making progress there.

Everyone seems to be talking as though bilingualism and biculturalism is a rather new thing. Marius Barbeau joined the National Museum of Canada staff in 1911. He came from Oxford. Diamond Jeness is completely bilingual. The year after I joined the staff my director was Dr. Rousseau. Our assistant deputy minister was Ernest Cote. I cannot recall a time in the National Museum of Canada when we did not have bilingual labels, bilingual publications and bilingual staff. However I would say that in the last few years many people have become more aware of this fact.

Mr. Stanbury: More people have been reading the labels.

Dr. Taylor: Exactly sir.

Mr. Osler: May I comment that it is wonderful to hear Mr. Matte say that the French network is the best French network in the world. I hope he repeats that statement in the House some day when members of his party criticize the network, as they do all the time.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, je pense qu'il faudrait quand même faire une distinction. Je n'ai jamais cru, et je ne pense pas que quelqu'un de raisonnable puisse croire, que la culture ou la science ou la technique ce soit une chose qui appartienne à une race ou à une langue.

La technologie, l'histoire naturelle, les œuvres d'art, ce sont des choses universelles, à mon point de vue. Alors, je ne vois pas qu'on puisse faire des musées qui soient canadiens français ou canadiens anglais, parce que là, il faudrait nous reporter au temps d'Hitler qui brûlait tous les livres qui n'étaient pas composés par des aryens de naissance, ce qui est absolument inouï.

À mon point de vue, tout ce qu'on peut raisonnablement demander, c'est que le service de ces musées-là soit bilingue; c'est que ne soit pas français-anglais. Il y a un cas où une unité, dans un des musées, est absolument ou presque absolument francophone.

En service d'histoires, le personnel, je crois, est, du point de vue ethnique, moitié anglo-celtique et moitié franco-canadien. Du point de vue linguistique, il est presque entièrement bilingue. Par exemple, l'historien en chef a passé sa licence à Paris. Par conséquent, je pense que nous faisons des progrès dans ce domaine.

Maintenant, je voudrais revenir sur le fait que tout le monde semble parler en penser comme si le bilinguisme était quelque chose de nouveau.

Marius Barbeau s'est joint au personnel du Musée national en 1911. Il était diplômé d'Oxford. Diamond Jeness est parfaitement bilingue. Un an après mon arrivée au Musée, mon directeur était Jacques Rousseau. Un de mes collègues était Marcel Rioux. Notre sous-ministre adjoint était Ernest Côté.

Je ne me souviens absolument pas d'un moment où il n'y ait jamais eu d'affiches et d'enseignes bilingues et il y eut toujours des membres du personnel bilingues. Je dois dire qu'au cours des dernières années, les gens ont pris plus conscience de la question, mais je ne pense pas que nous ayons été à l'arrière-garde.

M. Stanbury: Il y a eu une prise de conscience.

M. W. E. Taylor: C'est exactement cela.

M. Osler: Je pense qu'il est intéressant d'entendre M. Matte dire que le réseau français est le meilleur du monde. J'espère qu'il pourra le redire à la Chambre, un de ces jours, quand les membres de son parti le critiqueront comme ils ont l'habitude de le faire.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I would however like to draw a distinction. I never believed and I do not think any reasonable person can believe that culture or science or technology can be something that belongs to a given race or a given language.

Technology, natural history, works of art are things that are of a universal nature, in my opinion. So I do not think we can have museums which are French Canadian or English Canadian. Otherwise we would have to go back to Hitler who burned all books that were not written by true Aryans, which is absolutely outrageous.

In my opinion, the only thing that we can reasonably ask for is that the service in these museums that should be bilingual, that the les représentants de ces musées-là, qui ont affaire aux Canadiens français et aux Canadiens anglais, puissent éventuellement les servir dans leur langue maternelle. Autrement, il faudrait avoir deux sortes de musées, une Galerie nationale française et une Galerie nationale anglaise.

A quoi cela va servir? Les œuvres d'art, qui sont à la Galerie, sont faites par des gens de l'Inde, des Russes, des Syriens, des Italiens, des Allemands, enfin, toutes sortes de races. Je pense que notre objectif doit être d'assurer le bilinguisme dans le service aux Canadiens, ou enfin, aux gens qui visitent ces musées-là. Vouloir espérer qu'on pourrait avoir des institutions dans les deux langues, n'est pas réaliste.

Maintenant, c'est vrai que les Canadiens français hésitent à venir travailler à Ottawa, dans bien des domaines, pour bien des raisons aussi. Une des raisons, c'est que nous n'avons pas tellement de gens qui sont compétents dans toutes les sphères. Le peu que nous avons, pour toutes sortes de raisons personnelles, ou familiales tient à rester dans son patelin. Il n'aime pas immigré dans une ville étrangère.

Dans les circonstances, cela s'appelle Ottawa. S'il s'agissait de Montréal ou Québec, ce serait le même problème. Il faut quand même être réaliste là-dessus. Je ne crois pas que cela serait raisonnable de pousser trop loin la remarque de mon collègue, tantôt, et qu'il est important de faire cette nuance-là. La culture, la science et les arts, c'est quelque chose, à mon sens, d'universel.

Cependant la mise à la disposition du public de ces musées doit supposer, au Canada du moins, un bilinguisme aussi parfait que possible. Je pense que c'est important que nous fassions cette correction-là, monsieur le président.

M. Matte: Monsieur le président, pour faire suite à ce que...

The Chairman: Well I do not think that we can debate this subject at this time. Our purpose is not to debate but to elicit information from the witnesses. If you have a question I would permit that.

M. Matte: Je pourrais poser la question suivante: est-ce que le monsieur, qui est ici a compris que je voulais exprimer ce que M. Mongrain vient de dire?

M. Mongrain: Alors, ils sont d'accord!!

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should say that our Minister is the Hon.

[Interpretation]

representatives of those museums, who deal with French Canadians and English Canadians may in future serve them in their mother tongue. Otherwise, we would have to have two museums, one English Canadian National Gallery and one French-Canadian National Gallery.

Of what use would this be? The works of art in the Gallery were created by people from India, by Russians, Syrians, Italians, Germans, briefly, by people of all kinds of races. I think our purpose must be to guarantee bilingualism to Canadians who visit these museums. To hope that we can have institutions in the two languages is not realistic. It is true though, that French Canadians hesitate to come to work in Ottawa, in a good many fields, and for many reasons. One of the reasons is that we do not have many people who are competent in all the specific fields. The few we have want, for all sorts of personal reasons, for family reasons, to remain in their own locality. They do not want to emigrate to a foreign city, and in this particular case, that city is Ottawa.

If it were Montreal or Quebec City, it would be the same thing. We have to be realistic in this matter. I do not think it would be reasonable to pursue too far the comment made earlier by my colleague, and I think it is important to draw this distinction. Culture, science and the arts are, in my opinion, universal in nature.

However, as these museums are put at the disposal of the public, one must assume that, in Canada at least, they will be as bilingual as possible. I believe it is important to bring about this correction, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Chairman, to follow up—

Le président: Je ne pense pas que nous puissions maintenant entreprendre un débat sur la question. Nous ne visons pas à soulever des débats mais plutôt de solliciter des renseignements. Si vous voulez poser une question je suis prêt à vous céder la parole.

Mr. Matte: Well, I could ask the following question. Did the gentleman here understand that I wanted to say what Mr. Mongrain just said?

Mr. Mongrain: Thus they agree!

M. C. J. Mackenzie: Monsieur le président, peut-être que je pourrais dire que notre Gerard Pelletier. Mr. Pelletier has indicated that he has a great deal of interest in the museums. He has also indicated that he wishes the bilingual image of the museums to be improved as rapidly as can be. That may indicate the direction in which we are moving.

Dr. A. W. F. Banfield (Director, Museum of Natural Sciences): Mr. Chairman, I would like to change the subject slightly and return to questions asked by Mr. Stanbury and I believe also by Mr. Osler having to do with museums, contact and outreach into the education field—secondary schools and also elementary schools.

I think quite a bit of what we have done is often forgotten or not perhaps widely known. I find that we have been donating specimens to schools since 1874 when a suite of rocks was sent to a high school in Ontario. We have school loans which go out to primary and secondary schools in the form of mounted birds and animals as well as ethnological and archaeological artifacts. These go quite widely across Canada. Naturally most of the calls come from western Quebec and eastern Ontario. We also have a film library. We have, with the co-operation of the National Film Board, produced films for schools and film trips. We have a library of about 150 films and a film catalogue has been distributed to all boards of education. I know for sure that we are listed by the Alberta Board of Education as a source for school materials. We also have school tours regularly, which is part of the local curriculum. I notice from statistics that we had 965 school tours last year. I do not know the exact figure involved this current year but I know a couple of years ago in the neighbourhood of 80,000 students visited museums quite regularly. I imagine the figure is much higher this year. In May there will be a number of tours by students coming from quite far afield—from eastern Canada, as well as groups from the United States.

We have been doing a great deal and everything we could with our limited resources for many years.

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale?

Mr. Dinsdale: Unfortunately, it is one o'clock and I do not want to prolong the discussion. However, I wanted some time ago to ask a supplementary based on Mr. Osler's ministre est l'honorable Gérard Pelletier. M. Pelletier a dit qu'il s'intéressait beaucoup aux musées; il a également indiqué qu'il voulait que l'image bilingue des musées s'améliore aussi rapidement que possible. Cela pourrait vous donner une idée des buts recherchés.

M. A. W. F. Banfield: Monsieur le président, je voudrais changer légèrement le sujet et en revenir à la question posée par M. Stanbury et je pense, également, par M. Osler, sur les musées et leurs rapports avec le domaine de l'éducation: écoles élémentaires, écoles secondaires.

Je crois qu'une partie de ce que nous avons fait est souvent oubliée, ou bien, encore, méconnue. Mais, nous donnons des spécimens aux écoles depuis 1874, alors que nous avons donné une série de pierres à une école secondaire de l'Ontario. Nous prêtons des oiseaux et des animaux empaillés ainsi que des objets ethnologiques et archéologiques façonnés à des écoles primaires et secondaires. Cela est vrai pour tout le Canada.

Naturellement la plupart des demandes nous parviennent de l'Ouest du Québec et de l'Est de l'Ontario.

Nous avons également une cinémathèque. Nous avons aussi fait des films fixes et des films mobiles en collaboration avec l'Office national du film. Nous avons environ 250 films. Ce catalogue a été distribué à toutes les commissions scolaires. Nous figurons dans la commission scolaire de l'Alberta, comme source de documentation scolaire.

Nous avons également des visites organisées régulièrement pour les écoles dans le cadre des programmes locaux. Je constate par les statistiques que nous avons organisé 965 visites l'année dernière, je ne sais pas quel est le chiffre exact pour l'année en cours, mais je sais qu'il y a deux ans, environs 80,000 étudiants avaient visité assez régulièrement les musées. Je pense que le chiffre est beaucoup plus élevé cette année.

De plus, en mai, nous aurons un certain nombre d'auto-cars scolaires qui nous permettront d'organiser des visites à l'intention d'étudiants qui viennent d'assez loin, c'est-à-dire de l'est du Canada de même que des États-Unis.

Nous avons réalisé bon nombre de chose et je crois que nous avons fait tout ce que nous pouvions faire avec nos ressources limitées depuis de nombreuses années.

Le président: M. Dinsdale.

M. Dinsdale: Il est déjà une heure et je ne voudrais pas prolonger la discussion, mais un peu plus tôt je voulais poser une question supplémentaire à celle de M. Osler qui inquiry about making exhibits available through the facilities of the CBC and the National Film Board. I know if we get into this subject it will take some time.

I understood Dr. Boggs to say that the National Gallery for example has to provide the staff. Could the CBC not come in with its own facilities to present programs that would display for Canadians, through CBC facilities, some of the displays that you have there.

• 1300

Dr. Boggs: Yes; we would, of course, be glad to co-operate with them, but I often find that they themselves are short of the people with experience to do this sort of thing.

Mr. Dinsdale: The same would apply to the other branches of the museum, of course. They came in—

Mr. Mackenzie: Dr. Banfield might mention a film program he is contemplating embarking on at the moment, if funds can be found.

Dr. Banfield: I was just briefly going to mention, Mr. Dinsdale that actually for two years, I believe in the 50s, a regular weekly program entitled "Visit The Museum" was conducted from the museum. My staff have also been involved in many TV interviews. A great deal of our film and material have been used in natural history type programs. One of the most famous was "The Nature Of Things". A good deal of our film was involved in that program from British Columbia.

Mr. Mackenzie has mentioned that we are now working on three educational films in the field of oceanography, which will be most important in the school curricula.

Mr. Dinsdale: My other subject was the safeguarding of artifacts for Canadian museum purposes. Is this problem under control, or do our American friends still come in and take them from right under our noses?

Mr. Mackenzie: The legislation on this subject, Mr. Chairman, is a matter of provincial jurisdiction. Although I am not an expert on this point—and my colleagues can comment—my understanding is that the effectiveness of the legislation varies widely from province to province.

Mr. Dinsdale: Do you find that some of the provinces are still a little lax in preserving their artifacts?

[Interpretation]

demandait s'il ne serait pas possible de permettre à la Société Radio-Canada et à l'Office national du film de se servir des pièces d'exposition. Je sais qu'il nous faudrait du temps pour traiter de la question mais j'ai cru entendre le docteur Boggs dire que la Galerie nationale, par exemple, doit fournir du personnel. Est-ce que la Société Radio-Canada ne pourrait pas se servir de ses propres moyens pour réaliser des programmes intéressants pour tous les Canadiens?

Mlle Boggs: Oui, bien sûr, nous serions très heureux de coopérer avec eux, mais souvent, je m'aperçois qu'eux-mêmes n'ont pas les personnes avec de l'expérience.

Mr. Dinsdale: Ceci vaudrait pour les autres divisions du musée.

M. Mackenzie: Je pense que M. Banfield pourrait mentionner le projet qu'il désire entreprendre, si on trouve les fonds nécessaires.

M. Banfield: Je voulais mentionner, monsieur Dinsdale, que pendant deux ans, je pense autour de 1950, nous avions un programme hebdomadaire régulier qui s'appelait «Visiter les Musées» et qui était rédigé à partir du musée.

Mon personnel a participé également à un certain nombre d'interviews à la télévision. Plusieurs de nos films ont été utilisés dans des programmes d'histoire naturelle. Un des plus célèbres était «La nature des choses». Une grande partie de notre film était impliquée dans ce programme de la Colombie-britannique. M. Mackenzie a dit qu'actuellement nous sommes en train de préparer trois films scolaires sur l'océanographie, qui seront très utiles en matière de programme scolaire.

M. Dinsdale: L'autre sujet, auquel je pensais, est la préservation des éléments artificiels pour les besoins des musées canadiens. Est-ce que c'est quelque chose qui est particulièrement bien contrôlé ou est-ce que ce sont les Américains qui nous enlèvent tout cela?

M. Mackenzie: La loi à ce sujet, monsieur le président, est une question qui relève des provinces. Je crois savoir, bien que je ne sois pas expert en cette matière, mes collègues pourront me corriger, que l'efficacité de la loi varie d'une province à l'autre.

M. Dinsdale: Constatez-vous toujours que certaines provinces se sont plutôt relâchées dans la conservation de leurs éléments artificiels?

[Texte]

Dr. Taylor: If I may say one word, Mr. Chairman, I think that is a fair assessment.

There is a group called the Dominion-Provincial Conference on the Preservation of Historical Resources which has met now for eight sequential years. At the meeting held just at the beginning of October of this year the question of the export of antiquities was very much on their minds. They are seeking to move towards a situation in which they can agree among themselves what would be proper, uniform legislation that all the provinces could agree upon.

As soon as you start talking about the export of antiquities you become involved in, for example, the protection of archeological sites. This leads to the ghastly problems of policing the situation. It is one thing to have an act; it is another thing to apply it.

What do you do when a new highway goes crisscrossing through a series of archeological and historic sites? Do you tell the highway people to stop at "X" millions per week, while you discuss the thing, or do you just shut your eyes and let it go? It is a very complicated subject, and it is not made less complicated by the varying jurisdictions. But we are aware of the problem and we are hoping to work towards a solution.

Mr. Dinsdale: Thank you, Dr. Taylor.

The Chairman: Are there further questions?

Mr. Osler: If I may revert for a moment, I would like to have on the record, if possible, a recommendation that this matter of the CBC be explored further by the Secretary of the Department to see whether a meeting of minds cannot be rediscovered. I do know from experience that if these programs are well done, they have relatively high listening audiences and get a very high appreciation factor. From the point of view of the audience, they get as good a reception as most of the so-called junk that one sees. I say most of it—I am being careful in my words, not all of it, by any means. Perhaps this should be explored further.

Mr. Osler: No, not necessarily.

The Chairman: It would be very interesting to have the amount of the subsidy that went into the original program by the National Gallery to which Dr. Boggs referred. I listened to the program, and I sent away for the splen-

[Interprétation]

M. Taylor: Si je peux me permettre de dire un mot, monsieur le président, je pense qu'il existe une Conférence fédérale-provinciale sur la préservation des ressources historiques. Il y a eu une réunion au début d'octobre de cette année. La question de l'exportation des antiquités avait été abordée.

Ils cherchent à s'orienter vers une situation où ils pourraient se mettre d'accord entre eux sur ce qui devrait être une bonne loi valable dans toutes les provinces et acceptée par toutes les provinces. Dès qu'on s'occupe d'exportation des antiquités, il y a la question de la protection des sites historiques, par exemple. Il y a également le problème des baux, par exemple. Il y a une différence entre avoir une loi et l'appliquer.

Lorsque vous avez une route qui va traverser un lieu historique, est-ce que vous allez dire aux gens de la route que cela est impossible ou bien allez-vous fermer les yeux et vous taire? C'est une chose très compliquée et qui est rendue encore plus compliquée du fait que les lois varient. Mais, malgré tout, nous espérons obtenir une solution.

M. Dinsdale: Merci, M. Taylor.

Le président: D'autres questions?

M. Osler: Je voudrais, un instant, revenir en arrière et faire une recommandation qui figurerait au procès-verbal, si possible. Je pense que cette question de Radio-Canada devrait être étudiée plus en détail par le Secrétariat d'État, pour s'assurer si une solution est possible.

Je sais, par expérience, que ces programmes, s'ils sont bien faits, attirent beaucoup d'auditeurs et sont très bien acceptés par les auditeurs. Du point de vue de l'auditeur, ils sont aussi bien accueillis que ces déchets que l'on voit parfois. Ceci s'applique pour la plupart et non pas pour tous les déchets. Cette question devrait être étudiée plus en détail.

Le président: Il y a un dicton qui dit: lorsqu'il y a de l'argent, il y a des possibilités!

M. Osler: Non, pas nécessairement.

Le président: Je pense qu'il serait très intéressant de connaître le montant des subventions qui ont été accordées à la Galerie nationale pour son programme original. Je me souviens du programme moi-même et je crois did booklet at a very, very small cost. I expect that one of the difficulties in doing this type of programming is the cost of the materials.

Mr. Osler: As an example, there was an exchange program with the BBC which Dick Glover did while on a sabbatical in England. I believe he is at Carleton now. He happened to be a professor at Winnipeg at that time, and I remember it very well.

He did the most magnificent thing on the Battle of Hastings. You would think that this would be dead, from the point of view of a listening audience. It was highly entertaining; it had high ratings; and a high appreciation factor—it had everything. It was done on sand tables—animated drawings—and the man put together a delightful, light but very revealing script.

There are all sorts of openings such as that. "The Nature of Things" is one that has been used a lot. I think a certain amount of outside pressure could be put on these two groups to get together, to the benefit of the people of Canada—pressure from the Secretary of State.

Mr. Baird: Mr. Chairman, several of the questions have been skirting the matter of a national policy. This one also deals with national policy, fundamentally.

Perhaps it would be useful for you to know that the Board of Trustees has now set up a policy committee. This committee will be examining all aspects of policy, inside the individual museums, outside and nationally.

So far as the CBC is concerned the initiative in this has to start in one of two places. I had a fair amount of experience doing scientific programs with the CBC while at the University of Ottawa. It was a glorious idea that we have numerous programs from universities on the CBC. The CBC rushed around madly, but they did not find any persons who were interested in doing it. The problem within the museums is partly this one. From my own experience in providing people, as Dr. Boggs pointed out, you cannot have a CBC person lecturing on art. It requires an artist to do that. He is a rare bird who is an expert on art and can also speak well or be a television personality in this field.

The Chairman: We find difficulty in finding politicians like that.

Dr. Baird: I can only say that I have read about this. The traditional emphasis in the National Museum for a long time has not related to the national picture. This is a long, sad story of financial and other neglects.

[Interpretation]

que la difficulté qu'il a à faire ce genre de programme, c'est le coût des documents.

M. Osler: Il y avait un programme d'échange avec la BBC, que M. Dick Glover a fait lors de son année de congé en Angleterre. Je crois qu'il est maintenant à l'université Carleton. Il était professeur à Winnipeg, à ce moment-là.

Alors, je m'en souviens très bien. Il avait fait une chose remarquable sur la bataille d'Hastings. On aurait pu croire que c'était là une chose complètement oubliée du point de vue de l'auditoire. Cela a été quelque chose de très divertissant; c'était parfaitement bien. Il y avait des faits remarquables; quelqu'un avait fait un montage très agréable et un scénario très intéressant.

Je pense qu'il y a donc toutes sortes de possibilités. Je pense que des pressions extérieures, par exemple du Secrétariat d'État, pourraient faire rassembler ces groupes pour l'intérêt de tous.

M. Baird: Monsieur le président, je pense qu'il y a eu plusieurs questions qui ont touché à la question d'une politique nationale. Cette dernière également traite de la politique nationale. Je pense qu'il serait bon de savoir que le conseil d'administration vient de créer un comité de la politique, qui va étudier tous les aspects de cette politique, à l'intérieur des musées, à l'extérieur et du point de vue national.

En ce qui concerne Radio-Canada, l'initiative doit venir de l'un de deux endroits. J'ai eu une certaine expérience en matière de réalisation de programme scientifique avec Radio-Canada lorsque j'étais à l'Université d'Ottawa. C'était une idée très remarquable d'avoir plusieurs programmes à Radio-Canada, qui soient faits par l'Université, mais on n'a trouvé personne pour le faire. Le problème dans les musées est en partie celui-ci. En ce qui concerne le personnel, je dois dire qu'on ne peut pas avoir un responsable de Radio-Canada pour faire des conférences sur l'art. Il faut que ce soit un artiste qui puisse également bien parler et être présentable à la télévision.

Le président: On a des difficultés à trouver des politiciens semblables.

M. Baird: Je peux seulement dire que j'ai lu quelque chose sur ce sujet. La politique traditionnelle a été parfois indépendante de l'image nationale. C'est encore la même histoire des négligences traditionnelles. Je pense

[Texte]

However, I think that the dawn is beginning to peek up a little over the horizon.

This committee on national policy, for example, should lead to great things. The emphasis has also been a historical item. There are very few people on the staff of the total National Museums complex that I know of who could do a first class job on television. When the CBC comes they, I should think, would rather slowly, but over a period of time, become discouraged in this line.

The other peculiar part about experience with the CBC is that the initiative usually starts with a producer. In the local program in which I was involved for several years there was a producer who was interested in doing a series of programs on a particular aspect of science. The result was about 65 programs with which various people in Ottawa were concerned. I am sure if they were to take the initiative now there would be difficulty from the National Museum's point of view because we do not have that number of people who are good at, or terribly interested in, that aspect of the thing.

Public attitudes are changing, however, and also the attitude of the National Museum. There is an enormous field here, and it takes very little imagination to understand that there is also a tremendous responsibility.

I should think that of all institutions, or groups of institutions, who are charged, as we are with the demonstration of the works of man and the wonders of nature—whatever the exact wording is—the national television system has an absolutely tailor-made sort of extension bid. This, however, is all tied to this national policy and the fundamental purposes of the museums which are only now, after a hundred and some odd years, I think going to be sharply focused and questioned seriously and then crystallized.

The Chairman: And, I might also add to that, the resources that are given to you to carry out these functions.

Dr. Baird: This is not the only reason, by any means. We cannot lean on this completely, although it is certainly a long and not a happy history. It is not that it is starvation. I would look at the record, but on the other hand the party has survived. It is a matter of purpose, among other things.

The Chairman: Perhaps on that note we could adjourn. The Chairman will reserve his questions until the next time we meet. Thank you very much, ladies and gentlemen.

maintenant que l'on commence à voir la chose se dessiner à l'horizon.

Le Comité de la politique nationale devrait faire beaucoup de choses. L'accent également doit être mis sur des points historiques. Il y a peu de gens qui pourraient faire, d'après-moi, un travail de première classe à la télévision. Lorsque Radio-Canada vient, ils viennent peut-être lentement, mais, bien souvent, ils sont découragés.

L'autre chose particulière dans nos rapports avec Radio-Canada, c'est que l'initiative vient habituellement d'un producteur. Le programme, auquel j'ai participé pendant quelques années, avait un producteur qui était chargé de faire une série de programmes sur un aspect particulier de la science. Le résultat a été que, après cinq ans, trente-cinq émissions qui intéressaient diverses personnes d'Ottawa.

Je suis certain que si on prenait l'initiative de le refaire maintenant, il y aurait des difficultés parce que nous n'avons pas suffisamment de gens qui soient intéressés ou compétents pour faire ce genre de choses. Je pense que les attitudes publiques changent malgré tout, de même que les attitudes du Musée national. Il y a énormément de possibilités et il faut très peu d'imagination pour s'apercevoir des responsabilités énormes qui se présentent. Toute institution ou groupe d'institutions sont chargés, comme nous le sommes, de montrer les œuvres de l'homme et de la nature.

Le réseau national de télévision est un élément absolument fondamental pur pour la vulgarisation de ce genre de choses. Tout est lié à cette politique nationale et aux objectifs des musées qui seront maintenant, après quelque cent ans, étudiés très sérieusement.

Le président: Je dois dire que également les ressources dont vous disposez ne sont peut-être pas suffisantes.

Dr. D. M. Baird: Ce n'est pas là la seule raison, loin de là. On ne peut pas uniquement avancer cet argument bien que certainement ce n'est pas un bilan très favorable, il n'y a pas de famine en quelque sorte. Nous n'avons pu survivre. Entre autres, c'est le but à atteindre qui est en cause.

Le président: Eh bien, nous pouvons peut-être lever la séance maintenant, le président réservera son jugement pour la prochaine séance. Merci messieurs.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

TUESDAY, November 26, 1968
(13)

The Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts met this day at 9.45 a.m. The Chairman, Mr. John M. Reid, presided.

Members present: Messrs. Barrett, Dinsdale, Givens, Guilbault, LaSalle, McCleave, Osler, Reid, Schreyer, Schumacher, Stafford, Stanbury, Stewart (Cochrane)—(13).

Members also present: Messrs. Nowlan and Rose.

In attendance: From the National Film Board: Dr. H. McPherson, Government Film Commissioner and Chairman; Messrs. F. Bertrand, General Manager; W. Jobbins, Director of Distribution; G. Dignard, Manager of Production Office (French); F. Spiller, Director of Production (English); D. B. E. Greenway, Director of Financial and Administrative Services. From Canadian Film Development Corporation: Mr. Georges-Émile Lapalme, Chairman, and Mr. Michael Spenser, Acting Secretary.

The Committee proceeded to the consideration of the Revised Main Estimates 1968-69 of the National Film Board.

On Item 55, the Chairman introduced the officials of the National Film Board and then Dr. McPherson made a statement on the role and functions of his agency.

Mr. Dinsdale moved that this Committee recommend to the House that Vote 2, Revised Estimates 1968-69 under Secretary of State, relating to the National Arts Centre, be referred to the Public Accounts Committee with a view to setting up the necessary procedural machinery for Parliamentary control of expenditures of public funds so that similar fiscal fiascos can be avoided in the future.

PROCÈS-VERBAL

Le MARDI 26 novembre 1968
(13)

Le Comité permanent de la radiodiffusion, des films et de l'assistance aux arts se réunit à 9 h. 45 sous la présidence de M. John M. Reid.

Présents: MM. Barrett, Dinsdale, Givens, Guilbault, La Salle, McCleave, Osler, Reid, Schreyer, Schumacher, Stafford, Stanbury, Stewart (Cochrane)—(13).

Aussi présents: MM. Nowlan et Rose.

Et aussi: De l'Office national du Film: D<sup>r</sup> H. McPherson, commissaire du gouvernement à la cinématographie et président de l'Office; MM. G. Bertrand, directeur général; W. Jobbins, directeur de la distribution; G. Dignard, chef du Bureau de production française; F. Spiller, directeur de la production anglaise; D. B. E. Greenway, directeur des Services financiers et de l'administration. De la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne: M. Georges-Émile Lapalme, président; M. Michael Spencer, secrétaire intérimaire.

Le Comité examine le budget principal révisé des dépenses de l'Office national du Film pour 1968-1969.

Au moment d'étudier le crédit 55, le président présente les représentants de l'Office national du film et D<sup>r</sup> McPherson expose le rôle et les fonctions de cet organisme.

M. Dinsdale propose à la Chambre que l'examen du crédit n° 2 du budget révisé des dépenses de 1968-1969 du Secrétariat d'État portant sur le Centre national des arts soit confié au Comité des comptes publics qui serait davantage en mesure de mettre sur pied les rouages nécessaires devant permettre au Parlement de contrôler les déboursés de fonds publics de façon à éviter la répétition d'une telle catastrophe à l'avenir.

Mr. Givens moved an amendment that consideration of Mr. Dinsdale's motion be deferred until a later meeting.

After consideration as to whether the motion was in order, the Chairman deferred his ruling until Thursday.

Dr. McPherson was examined on the operations of the National Film Board, assisted by Messrs. Spiller, Dignard and Jobbins.

The examination of Dr. McPherson and his officials being completed, the Chairman thanked them and they were permitted to retire.

The Chairman then introduced Messrs. Lapalme and Spencer of the Canadian Film Development Corporation; Mr. Lapalme made a statement relating to the operations of his Corporation, and was examined thereon, assisted by Mr. Spencer.

The examination of the witnesses being concluded, the Chairman thanked them.

At 1.05 p.m., the Committee adjourned until 2.00 p.m. on Thursday, November 28.

M. Givens met de l'avant une modification visant à renvoyer à une séance ultérieure l'étude de la motion de M. Dinsdale.

On se demande ensuite si la motion est régulière et le président déclare qu'il rendra une décision jeudi.

D<sup>r</sup> McPherson répond aux questions concernant l'Office national du film et compagnie de MM. Spiller, Dignard et Jobbins.

L'interrogatoire terminé, le président remercie les témoins qui se retirent alors.

Le président présente ensuite MM. Lapalme et Spencer de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne; M. Lapalme fait un exposé sur le fonctionnement de cette Société et répond aux questions avec l'aide de M. Spencer.

Les questions épuisées, le président remercie les témoins.

A 1.05 de l'après-midi, le Comité s'ajourne au jeudi 28 novembre à 2 heures de l'après-midi.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Tuesday, November 26, 1968.

● 0943

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I think we can begin now. This morning we will consider the estimates of the National Film Board of Canada and later we will hear the officials of the Canadian Film Development Corporation. We have arranged for this sitting to continue on beyond the 11 o'clock period until we complete our hearings.

The National Film Board will be represented today by Dr. H. McPherson, the Government Film Commissioner and Chairman of the National Film Board, sitting immediately to my right. He is accompanied by Mr. G. Bertrand, the General Manager; Mr. W. Jobbins, the Director of Distribution; Mr. M. Martin, the Director of Production (French)—

Dr. H. McPherson (Government Film Commissioner and Chairman of the National Film Board): Mr. Martin turns out to be Mr. Dignard. Mr. Martin was not able to attend.

The Chairman: Fine. And Mr. F. Spiller, the Director of Production (English); and Mr. D. B. E. Greenway, the Director of Financial and Administrative Services.

Dr. McPherson has a short statement he would like to read; then the witnesses will be available for your usual interesting questioning. Dr. McPherson.

● 0945

Dr. McPherson: Monsieur le président, Mr. Chairman, hon. Members, Messieurs, Mesdames, I dislike making formal statements. I much prefer an informal question and answer kind of period and I am sure you do too, but this is the first full-dress appearance, if you wish, that I have made before this Committee apart from a short appearance last January on the question of educational television. I recognize that the Committee has been reconstituted since I first met the hon. members and therefore I feel that perhaps on behalf of the Board I ought to make a brief formal presentation. Then I will be willing to answer any questions that you may wish to put to me.

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

[Interprétation]

Le président: Messieurs, je pense que nous pouvons commencer. Ce matin, nous allons examiner les prévisions budgétaires de l'Office national du film, puis nous recevrons les témoignages des représentants de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne. Nous avons aussi prévu de poursuivre notre séance après 11 heures, au besoin, jusqu'à ce que l'audience soit terminée.

L'Office national du film sera représenté aujourd'hui par M. Hugo McPherson, commissaire et président de l'Office national du film, qui est immédiatement à ma droite. Il est accompagné de M. G. Bertrand, directeur général, de M. W. Jobbins, directeur de la distribution, de M. Martin, directeur de la production française...

M. H. McPherson (commissaire et président de l'Office national du film): C'est finalement M. Dignard, M. Martin n'ayant pu venir.

Le président: Bien. M. F. Spiller, directeur de la production anglaise, et M. D. B. E. Greenway, directeur des services financiers et administratifs.

M. McPherson a une brève déclaration à vous lire, puis les témoins seront à votre disposition, comme d'habitude, pour l'interrogatoire.

M. McPherson: Monsieur le président, honorables députés, je n'aime pas faire de déclarations officielles. Je préfère de beaucoup une période moins structurée de questions et de réponses, et je suis sûr que vous êtes de mon avis; mais c'est ma première comparution vraiment officielle devant le Comité, en dehors de celle de janvier dernier, qui portait sur la télévision éducative.

Je m'aperçois que le Comité a été reconstitué depuis ma première entrevue avec les honorables députés. C'est pourquoi, au nom de l'Office, je voudrais faire un petit exposé officiel. Je serai prêt ensuite à répondre à toutes les questions que vous voudrez me poser.

[Text]

I am very pleased to have the opportunity to appear before your Committee, Mr. Chairman, and I would like to make a introductory statement on the role and functions of the National Film Board. Two years ago, members of the Committee paid a one-day visit to the Film Board's premises in Montreal and Mr. Grant McLean, the Acting Government Film Commissioner, and his colleagues had the very pleasant duty of conducting the members of this Committee through the building and explaining many of the services and the occupations of the film makers and technicians. I take it you are aware that the Film Board occupies a site of 11 acres just in the track of jet landings on the way to Dorval—a huge building that looks rather like a biscuit box.

This is the first occasion on which the estimates of the National Film Board have been considered by this Committee.

Avant d'en venir à ce sujet, j'aimerais, monsieur le président, vous inviter très cordialement, vous et les membres de votre comité, à venir de nouveau nous rendre visite à Montréal, soit officiellement, soit officieusement, afin de mieux vous familiariser avec les activités de l'Office national du film du Canada.

Il serait peut-être utile à ce stade-ci de dire quelques mots concernant l'Office national du film, qui, aux termes de la Loi nationale sur le film de 1950, a été établi pour entreprendre et favoriser la production et la distribution de films dans l'intérêt national, et notamment pour produire et distribuer des films destinés à faire connaître et comprendre le Canada aux Canadiens et aux autres nations.

I do not think I need repeat the names of our officers.

To fulfil this important national mandate, the Board produces films and related materials in its operational headquarters building in Montreal where it has creative staff and all the technical facilities for film production, including a laboratory and sound recording studios. I might go further and say that it is perhaps the most complete, if not the largest, facility on this continent.

The Board consists of the Government Film Commissioner, who is the Chairman, and eight other members, three of whom are selected from the Public Service—three Deputy Ministers, that is, on our Board—and five who represent the main geographical regions of Canada.

[Interpretation]

Je suis très heureux d'avoir la possibilité de venir témoigner devant votre comité, monsieur le président, et je voudrais faire une brève déclaration préliminaire au sujet du rôle et des attributions de l'Office national du film. Il y a deux ans, les membres du Comité ont passé un jour au siège social de l'Office du film, à Montréal. M. Grant McLean, commissaire suppléant de l'Office national du film, et ses collègues ont été très heureux de montrer les bâtiments aux membres du Comité, et de leur expliquer les services et le travail des techniciens et des producteurs. Vous savez sans doute que l'Office occupe un terrain de onze acres situé dans le prolongement des pistes d'atterrissage de Dorval, et qu'il ressemble un peu à une boîte à biscuits. C'est la première fois que le budget de l'Office national du film est étudié par le Comité.

Before tackling this subject Mr. Chairman, I would like to invite you very cordially, you and members of your Committee to come again and pay us a visit in Montreal, either officially or unofficially so that you get more familiar with activities of the National Film Board.

It might be worthwhile now to say a few words about the National Film Board which according to the National Film Act, 1950 was established to help—making and distributing of films in the national interest and specifically to produce and distribute films to help people to understand Canada and know Canada better.

Je pense que je n'ai pas besoin de vous répéter le nom de deux de mes collaborateurs qui sont ici avec moi aujourd'hui.

Pour remplir cette tâche importante, l'Office produit des films, documentaires et autres, dans son bâtiment central d'exploitation à Montréal, où il dispose d'un personnel de création et de toutes les installations techniques nécessaires à la production des films, y compris un laboratoire et des studios d'enregistrement. Je pourrais même aller jusqu'à dire qu'il possède les installations les plus complètes, sinon les plus grandes de ce continent.

Le conseil d'administration de l'Office national du film se compose du commissaire, qui est aussi président, et de huit autres membres, dont trois sont choisis dans la fonction publique—trois sous-ministres, du moins dans notre conseil—et dont les cinq autres représentent les principales régions géographiques du Canada.

[Texte]

The Board's distribution activities are undertaken in close collaboration with its Production Branches and all films are designed for one or more of the three main film distribution channels, that is cinemas, or commercial theatres, television and non-theatrical distribution, the last including screenings in schools, community halls and elsewhere. The Board's productions are available in both English and French and many of them are produced in other languages—or versioned in other languages is a better way of putting it. The distribution staff works in all the main centres in Canada as well as in a number of important cities abroad.

Apart from its main task to produce and distribute films, the Board is also responsible for advising the Governor in Council on film matters and carrying out research, as well as for operating a stills photo laboratory for the use of government departments in Ottawa.

Avant de conclure ces remarques générales sur l'ONF, j'aimerais, monsieur le président, indiquer que nos services sont groupés en sept directions, comme suit:

Finance et Administration

Personnel

et les Services techniques qui servent les besoins de la Production, laquelle pour raisons d'ordre culturel est divisée en deux directions autonomes, l'une française, l'autre anglaise; et finalement la Distribution.

On October 31, the Secretary of State in his opening remarks on his department and certain agencies for which he is responsible made a brief statement concerning the increase in the National Film Board's Estimates for 1968-69. During the process of translating and transcribing the remarks into English, some errors occurred which I would like to correct. In the fourteenth line of the section dealing with the National Film Board—this is the transcript for October 31, page 78, in the fourteenth line—there is reference to the Film Board's program Challenge for Change, the real purpose of which is to help with the fight against poverty. Costs of the change-over from black and white to colour is obviously not related as indicated in the English version of the Secretary of State's remarks. Challenge for Change and the change from black and white to colour processing somehow got mixed.

[Interprétation]

Les activités de distribution de l'Office se font en collaboration étroite avec les diverses directions de la production. Tous les films sont produits pour l'une au moins des trois voies principales de distribution, à savoir, les cinémas, la télévision et la distribution non commerciale—c'est-à-dire les séances de projection dans les écoles, dans les centres récréatifs, et ailleurs. Les films produits par l'Office sont disponibles en anglais et en français et un grand nombre d'entre eux sont aussi produits dans d'autres langues—ou, plus exactement, on en fait des versions dans d'autres langues. Le personnel de distribution travaille dans tous les centres principaux du Canada ainsi que dans un certain nombre de villes importantes à l'étranger.

En plus de sa tâche principale, qui est de produire et de distribuer des films, l'Office est aussi chargé de faire des recommandations au gouverneur en conseil sur les questions relatives aux films et aux travaux de recherche, et de diriger un laboratoire de photographie à l'usage des ministères fédéraux à Ottawa.

Before concluding my general remarks, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that our organization includes the following:

Finance and Administration Staff;
Ottawa Office;

Technical Services to meet the requirements of production which for cultural reasons is divided into two independent branches, one French, the other English.

Then there is Distribution.

Dans ses observations préliminaires du 31 octobre à l'endroit de son ministère et de certains organismes qui relèvent de lui, le secrétaire d'État a fait une brève déclaration au sujet de la hausse des prévisions budgétaires de l'Office national du film pour 1968-1969. J'aimerais corriger quelques erreurs qui se sont glissées dans la traduction et la transcription vers l'anglais de ses observations. À la quatorzième ligne de l'article qui traite de l'Office national du film, voici la transcription du 31 octobre, page 78, quatorzième ligne:

On parle du programme de l'Office national du film «Challenge for Change» ou «Construire demain», dont le but réel est d'appuyer la campagne contre la pauvreté. Les frais de changement du noir et blanc à la couleur ne sont évidemment pas rapportés comme dans la version anglaise des observations du Secrétaire d'État.

[Text]

In the seventeenth line on page 78 reference is made to improvement of "urban broadcasting services in Canada". In this case, the correct words are "urban distribution services in Canada".

Turning now to the figures before you in the book of Estimates, you will note a total appropriation required of $10 million for 1968-69 and a functional breakdown of how it is being used within the various branches of the Board.

You no doubt have noticed both in Public Accounts and the Annual Report of the Board in other years that the total activity carried out by the Film Board is somewhat greater than the amount of the appropriation. This activity in excess of vote is made up principally of three things: film work carried out for other government departments, our sponsored program, sales of films or film prints in the public sector and rentals and royalties earned from the use of the Board's films on television, in theatres and through contract arrangement with foreign film distributors. The latest figures that have appeared in Public Accounts and the Board's Annual Report to which you may have referred are for 1966-67 and show income from work completed for government departments at $4,084,889; sales to others, $988,555 and rentals and royalties earned, $821,223. These activities, added to the main program of the Board for which appropriation is provided, plus the estimated cost of free services from other departments and the cost of depreciation, produced a total activity of $15,119,127, for that year. The comparable figure budgeted for 1968-69 is some $17 million.

Income of the Government Photo Laboratory here in Ottawa at Tunney's Pasture has averaged slightly over a half million dollars annually and this is in addition to the amounts just mentioned. And the Photo Laboratory, I might add for members who are not familiar with our work, is run as a business, self-sustaining and indeed profit-making. It has been a totally clean and, in my view, useful operation.

[Interpretation]

«Challenge for Change» ou «Construire demain» et le changement du noir et blanc à la couleur ont été mêlés d'une façon ou d'une autre.

A la ligne dix-sept de la page soixante-dix-huit, on parle de l'amélioration des «services de radiodiffusion urbaine au Canada». Dans ce cas, les termes exacts sont «services de distribution urbaine au Canada».

Passons maintenant aux chiffres qui figurent dans le livre des «Prévisions budgétaires». Vous remarquerez un total de crédits requis de 10 millions de dollars pour 1968-1969, et la répartition opérationnelle de l'emploi de ces crédits dans les différentes directions de l'Office.

Vous avez sans doute remarqué dans les Comptes publics et le Rapport annuel de l'Office des autres années que les activités de l'Office du film dépassent un peu le montant des crédits alloués. Cet excédent d'activité sur les crédits comprend trois éléments principaux: le travail cinématographique exécuté pour les autres ministères du gouvernement, notre programme commandité, les ventes de films ou d'impressions de films au public, les locations et les redevances qu'ont rapportées l'emploi des films de l'Office à la télévision, dans les cinémas et les dispositions contractuelles conclues avec les distributeurs de films à l'étranger.

Les derniers chiffres qui ont figuré dans les Comptes publics et le Rapport annuel de l'Office et que vous avez peut-être mentionnés sont ceux de 1966-1967, et ils indiquent un revenu provenant de travaux exécutés pour les ministères du gouvernement se montant à $4,084,889, des ventes aux autres pour $988,555 et un revenu provenant de locations et de redevances de $821,223. Ces activités budgétaires, ajoutées au programme principal de l'Office pour lequel un budget est prévu, plus le coût estimatif des services gratuits aux autres ministères et le coût de la dépréciation, ont donné un budget total de $15,119,127 pour cette année-là. Les chiffres du budget de 1968-1969 qui s'y comparent s'élèvent à quelque $17 millions.

La moyenne annuelle des revenus du Laboratoire photographique du gouvernement, situé à Tunney's Pasture, à Ottawa, a légèrement dépassé le demi-million de dollars, en plus des montants que je viens de mentionner. Pour les membres qui ne sont pas familiers avec notre travail, je devrais ajouter que le Laboratoire photographique est dirigé comme une entreprise commerciale indépendante et, bien entendu, rentable. A mon avis c'est une exploitation tout à fait honnête et utile.

[Texte]

Voilà, monsieur le président, la conclusion de mes remarques préliminaires et nous sommes maintenant à votre entière disposition pour répondre aux questions que vous souhaiteriez nous poser. Je vous remercie.

The Chairman: Thank you, Dr. McPherson. I think that perhaps the members of the Committee would like to accept your kind invitation to visit you, perhaps early in the new year, so that we can have a look at your production facilities and see some of the work in progress. Are there any questions?

• 0955

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I arrived late this morning and I think we have a quorum now. I believe you started without a quorum. Before we begin questioning Dr. McPherson, I wonder if we could conclude formally the matter that we were discussing for some weeks. I believe we discussed this in the agenda committee and I think it would clarify the issue if I moved a formal motion...

The Chairman: I think perhaps you might give us notice of a motion; we lack a quorum.

Mr. Dinsdale: Do we still lack a quorum?

The Chairman: Mr. Rose is not a member of the Committee at the present time and neither is Mr. Nowlan.

Mr. Dinsdale: Well, I will just give you the notice of the motion.

The Chairman: Perhaps you might do that and when an opportune time arrives we could deal with it.

Mr. Dinsdale: I can distribute copies now, but the preamble winds up with the tatement:

In view of the fact that the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts was not able to pursue the investigation to the level of Treasury Board and policy making in Cabinet, where the real problem lies,...

I am referring to the subject of the National Arts Centre, of course.

...I move that the matter be referred to the Public Accounts Committee with a view to setting up the necessary procedural machinery for Parliamentary control of expenditures of public funds so that similar fiscal fiascos can be avoided in the future.

The Chairman: Do you have sufficient copies for all members?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes.

[Interprétation]

Mr. Chairman, that is the conclusion of my preliminary remarks. We are now of course at your disposal and we will answer any questions you might wish to put to us. Thank you.

Le président: Merci, monsieur McPherson. Sans doute le Comité voudra-t-il accepter votre aimable invitation de vous rendre visite peut-être au début de l'année prochaine, afin de se rendre compte de vos installations de production et de voir le travail s'accomplir sur les lieux. Est-ce qu'il y a des questions à poser?

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, je suis arrivé en retard ce matin, mais je pense que nous sommes en nombre suffisant.

Cependant, avant que nous ne nous mettions à interroger M. McPherson, nous pourrions peut-être terminer officiellement la question qui nous intéresse; cela faciliterait-il les choses si je proposais officiellement une motion?

Le président: Peut-être, mais nous n'avons pas quorum.

M. Dinsdale: Nous n'avons pas encore de quorum?

Le président: MM. Rose et Nowlan ne font pas partie de ce comité.

M. Dinsdale: Je vais simplement vous donner l'avis de motion.

Le président: Oui et nous pourrions étudier la motion au moment opportun.

M. Dinsdale: C'est un préambule et je vais en distribuer des exemplaires. On y soutient que:

le Comité permanent de la radiodiffusion, des films et de l'assistance aux arts n'a pu poursuivre son enquête au niveau du Conseil du Trésor et de la prise des décisions, niveau du Cabinet, où repose véritablement le problème.

Je parle évidemment du Centre national des arts.

Je propose de confier cette question au Comité des comptes publics: il pourra mettre sur pied des rouages pour le contrôle par le Parlement des déboursés de fonds publics pour éviter la répétition de telles catastrophes.

Le président: Avez-vous un exemplaire pour chacun?

M. Dinsdale: Je le crois.

[Text]

The Chairman: I wonder if you would give them to the Clerk so that he can circulate them, and perhaps when we do finally arrive at a quorum we can discuss it then.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose it would be proper to get into the merits of the motion at the present time, but I think the moment should not pass without my making it perfectly clear that I suggest this motion is completely out of order as being beyond the terms of reference of this Committee.

The Chairman: Mr. Stanbury, I am not prepared to make a ruling on that until the motion is brought up formally before the Committee.

Mr. Osler: Is the motion not rather extraneous anyway, because that Committee can call people at its own will? Can it not?

The Chairman: This is something we will deal with when the matter comes up formally.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Stanbury might be right that this motion is beyond the competence of this Committee to deal with, but I hope that he will have some alternative suggestions. Obviously the way in which this Committee dealt with the subject matter is unsatisfactory. Nothing has been resolved; no concrete course of action has been taken. I am wondering if Mr. Stanbury can advise or make some suggestions as to how to proceed from here.

Mr. Stanbury: Well, we are getting into the discussion of a motion, Mr. Chairman. I will be glad to do that if you so indicate.

The Chairman: No. We can all restrain our enthusiasm and proceed with the business at hand. When we have a quorum, or perhaps at the completion of the testimony of the National Film Board and before that of the Canadian Film Development Corporation, the Committee could take time to discuss this matter.

Mr. Dinsdale: Well, I will just leave the matter before you. While we are dealing with irregularities, Mr. Chairman, we have been functioning without a quorum this morning, and this is quite irregular, too. If we are going to get technical on procedural matters, in view of the problem we are having with the multiplicity of committees to maintain quorums we will have to start to be pretty firm on this matter. Here we are hamstrung. We cannot operate, unfortunately, because we do not have a quorum, and yet we are proceeding to conduct business which...

[Interpretation]

Le président: Je me demande si vous pourriez les donner au greffier qui pourra les distribuer et nous pourrions discuter la question dès que nous aurons quorum.

M. Stanbury: Je ne pense pas qu'on puisse discuter la motion pour l'instant mais je pense qu'on devrait dire très clairement, je dois dire clairement maintenant que la motion est complètement irrecevable et qu'elle dépasse complètement le mandat du comité.

Le président: Je ne peux pas prendre de décision pour l'instant tant que la motion ne sera pas soumise.

M. Osler: Le Comité peut faire comparaître qu'il veut au besoin?

Le président: C'est quelque chose que nous ferons en effet au besoin.

M. Schreyer: Cette motion dépasse les attributions du comité. Peut-être aura-t-il quelque autre idée à nous présenter? Il est clair que la façon dont ce comité a traité de la question n'est pas satisfaisante. Rien n'a été réglé, rien de concret n'a été fait. Je me demande si M. Stanbury pourrait nous dire ce que nous allons faire maintenant.

M. Stanbury: Cela me fera plaisir.

Le président: Peut-être pourrions-nous toujours restreindre nos enthousiasmes et attendons la fin des témoignages de la société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne et de l'office national du film pour reprendre l'étude de cette question.

M. Dinsdale: Nous y reviendrons donc, monsieur le président et, puisque nous parlons d'irrégularités, je vous signale que nous n'avons pas le nombre de membres requis pour fonctionner. Et si nous devons être stricts sur les questions de procédure, il faudra l'être sur cette question car il devient de plus en plus difficile d'obtenir des quorums quand les comités se multiplient. Nous avons les mains liées; impossible de faire quoi que ce soit: nous n'avons pas quorum.

The Chairman: The procedure we have followed in this Committee has been that when we have witnesses to hear we do them the courtesy of hearing them. Those members who are interested in one aspect of the Committee's business are not necessarily interested in all aspects, and we have tried to function on the basis that it is far better to have people who are interested here than to whip into line those who perhaps are not interested. The usual procedure has been that we have always reached a point where we have had a quorum and we were able to continue without any administrative difficulties. Should we ever reach a point where we do not have a quorum, then it is necessary for us to pass a motion giving permission to the Committees Branch to print the minutes as if there had been a quorum there. This is the procedure followed in the last House and I think it is a perfectly appropriate procedure for this Committee to follow.

● 1000

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, you have a procedure now which you did not have in the last House. There are 10 or 11 committees meeting on Tuesdays and Thursdays. I am a member of another committee interested in Dr. McPherson of the National Film Board and wanted to ask questions, but I must say I was somewhat surprised that no matter how much one might have co-operated in the past you evidently started your proceedings before the Chairman of our Committee was here. Certainly if that is going to be the case then I think we are going to have to insist on quorums before we even hear the witnesses. No one wants to hold up the witnesses but we have to do something to bring this question of committees to a head. Fortunately Thursdays going to be set aside as committee day, but you still have the problem of 10 or 11 committees, I believe, sitting this morning. And that is more than sat on any one day, I am informed, in the last session.

That still does not end the dilemma here but we have a motion that someone wants to move and on which he wants some discussion. Do we proceed irregularly or do we start to bring this problem of a multiplicity of committees sitting at the same time to a head? Something has got to give.

The Chairman: As I said, we could proceed with the business at hand, which is the questioning of witnesses, and when we do have a quorum then I am prepared to interrupt the questioning of witnesses to bring up Mr. Lindsay's motion or to give him an opportunity to move it.

Le président: Voici comment procède le Comité dans ces cas-là. Quand nous avons des témoins à entendre, nous les entendons. Mieux vaut que cela ne se fasse qu'en présence de gens qui sont réellement intéressés. Ordinairement, nous finissons par obtenir le nombre de gens requis et il ne se pose plus de problème. S'il est impossible d'obtenir quorum, on passe une résolution demandant à la direction des Comités d'imprimer les procès-verbaux tout comme s'il y avait eu quorum. Je crois que c'est ce qu'il y a de mieux à faire.

M. Nowlan: Il y a toutefois quelque chose de différent au cours de la présente session: dix ou onze comités se réunissent le mardi et le jeudi. Je suis membre du Comité qui se penche sur le cas de l'O.N.F. et suis surpris que vous ayez ouvert la séance ici sans attendre un quorum. Une telle situation peut se reproduire: Il faudrait insister sur le quorum.

Il est malheureux d'avoir à retirer les témoins; il faut faire quelque chose pour régler le problème. On veut faire du jeudi une journée réservée aux Comités—mais il ne faut pas oublier qu'onze comités se réunissent ce matin. C'est un record. Allons-nous continuer dans l'irrégularité ou tenter de régler le problème de la simultanéité des séances?

Le président: La procédure habituelle est d'entendre les témoins et, quand on a le quorum, d'interrompre l'interrogatoire des témoins pour soumettre la motion.

[Text]

Mr. Givens: Mr. Chairman, with great respect I do not think that is really the point. You are Chairman of this Committee and, of course, you are interested in seeing that the proceedings of this Committee are properly carried out. But Mr. Nowlan has raised a point which I think is important. I think we have reached an impasse in committees. As a new member here I have been sitting by waiting patiently to see whether the situation would shake itself down, but the whole procedure of committees seems to be idiotic. It is just impossible to be a member of two committees and to function properly. In just coming in here for an hour and talking about the National Film Board and then going to the Finance Committee or any other committee that we may be interested in, it is not possible for a member to be a member of two committees and to function properly. If this is going to go on ad infinitum, where we are going to proceed with meetings with a lack of quorums, this is basically wrong. Something has to be done and I think the issue should be forced. As far as those above us are concerned who are supposed to be the traffic cops around here, they should get this matter resolved one way or another. This is, I say, idiotic and I use the term advisedly. How business ever gets done here I just do not understand. Even on Thursday you are going to have 11 balls being juggled up in the air at once.

The Chairman: At the present time there are only four committees meeting in the House at 9.30 a.m.—Broadcasting, Public Accounts, Veterans Affairs and Regional Development.

Mr. Givens: What about at 11 o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Nowlan: There are 11 this morning.

The Chairman: At 11 o'clock there will be Finance, Broadcasting again, Labour, and External Affairs and National Defence.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I would not have raised the point but I agree with Mr. Givens. I would not have raised it but then I heard that our Chairman was not even here when you started to hear the number one witness and that you were proceeding without a quorum. Every other committee, including the Committee upstairs, Public Accounts, with officials of the Treasury Board, who are rather important, waited until it got a quorum. I do not think the Chairman would have even thought of proceeding to hear the witness, who was the Secretary of the Treasury Board, at least until our Chairman was there. That Committee has been getting under

[Interpretation]

M. Givens: Je comprends qu'en tant que président de ce Comité, vous vouliez que le travail avance; mais le problème soulevé par M. Nowlan est très important; nous en sommes rendus à une impasse. Étant nouveau, j'ai attendu patiemment que les choses se remettent en ordre mais tout ceci me paraît absolument idiot. Il est impossible d'être membre de plus d'un comité et de bien travailler.

Parler de l'Office national du film pendant une heure puis, ensuite, aller à un autre pour parler finances, d'autres choses, c'est impossible. Il est impossible de travailler intelligemment. Est-ce que cela doit se poursuivre indéfiniment en tenant des séances même sans quorum; cela ne devrait pas se faire. Il faudrait qu'au niveau de l'organisation on trouve une solution. Cela ne peut durer! Comment voulez-vous qu'on fasse du bon travail? Quand je pense que le jeudi, il y aura onze séances!

Le président: A l'heure actuelle, il n'y a que quatre réunions de comités à 9h. 30.

M. Givens: Et à 11 heures?

M. Nowlan: Cinq! Il y en a 11 ce matin.

Le président: A 11 heures, les comités des Finances, de la Radiodiffusion, du Travail et des Affaires extérieures siégeront.

M. Nowlan: Monsieur le président, je n'aurais pas soulevé la question, mais je suis d'accord avec M. Givens. J'ai appris que le président n'était même pas arrivé quand on a commencé à entendre le premier témoin tandis qu'aux autres comités, par exemple, le comité des Comptes publics, on a fait attendre des hauts fonctionnaires du Conseil du trésor tant qu'on a pas eu le quorum.

Ce Comité n'aurait jamais commencé à entendre les témoins si le président n'avait pas été là. Tous les autres comités ne fonctionnent que s'ils ont quorum; si nous ne faisons pas de même, il y a aura détérioration de la situation; si nous voulons travailler en way about ten minutes after its time and it is perhaps the best functioning committee, quorumwise, that we have. Every other committee that I know of, Mr. Chairman, functions with a quorum at least, and if we are not going to observe a quorum, then this whole system is going to break down further and we are not going to resolve the dilemma which is pretty fundamental if we are starting to move into the committee type of work which I think we have to do.

But if we cannot do it properly, then we have to really look to see where we are going and have the people upstairs, as Mr. Givens says, re-assess the whole picture. That is the only reason I am making the objection at the moment.

Here we have moved into a point of procedure and we are hamstrung in discussing that. If we just keep acquiescing and accepting this ad hoc procedure, then there is not going to be anything fundamental done to improve the committee system and we are just going to have a farce, which I think we have had for—well, certainly the brief time I have been here—two and a half years. I think we are trying to move into a new area. I think there were constructive steps taken by the government to develop it, but I think we have run into a fundamental point right here this morning that we are just getting too many committees meeting at the same time; unless we observe the fundamental principle of some type of parliamentary form, that is a quorum, this thing is just going to degenerate. I think you, as Chairman, have to take us up with the steering committee and people further up the ladder on the totem pole if we are going to have any change in the type of committee we have been having, which is sort of charade.

The Chairman: Strictly speaking our problem up until this point has not been that of a quorum. Our problem has been getting scheduled. Our scheduling problems have been rather fierce and distracting, to say the least, and it has been extremely difficult for us to find time to get on to conduct our business.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate our dilemma and perhaps this is a break, but we all know that the rules are being seriously considered and perhaps, hopefully, reviewed. I understand that a lot of that review is going to concentrate on the extension of the committee system, but if it is the extension of the present committee system then we are going to be going from the frying pan into the fire. Unless there is some reversion to those who were discussing the

[Interprétation]

Comité, il faudra le faire comme il faut et demander à la haute direction, selon la suggestion de M. Givens, de réexaminer ce problème.

Actuellement, tout ce que nous faisons, c'est piétiner sur place. Si nous avions tout simplement accepté la procédure spéciale qu'on nous proposait, rien n'aurait été fait pour améliorer la situation au Comité et nous aboutirions à une immense farce; depuis que je suis ici, le système ressemble presque à de l'opéra bouffe et il y a à peine deux ans et demi que je travaille ici. Le gouvernement a pris des mesures constructives pour améliorer la situation, mais le problème que nous abordons ce matin est un problème fondamental: trop de comités se réunissent en même temps. Et s'il nous faut renoncer à ce minimum de procédure qu'est le quorum, la situation ne pourra aller qu'en se détériorant. Il vous incombe en tant que président de signaler cette situation aux hautes autorités pour que nous puissions espérer voir un changement se produire et la farce actuelle prendre fin.

Le président: Jusqu'ici, notre problème n'a pas été un problème de quorum, mais un problème d'horaire. Il nous a été extrêmement difficile de nous fixer un calendrier qui convienne pour faire notre travail.

M. Nowlan: Je comprends la situation ingrate dans laquelle vous vous trouvez, monsieur le président, mais nous savons tous que l'on est à revoir les règlements pour, je l'espère, les améliorer. Cette révision portera sans doute sur une expansion du système des comités; si toutefois, on ne fait qu'étendre le système actuel des comités, alors nous tombons de Charybde en Scylla. Il faudrait que les hautes autorités qui auront cette révision à faire sachent quels sont les problèmes auxrules coming from your steering committee—and I guess you, as Chairman, will be on the steering committee—then the powers that be might just lay down new rules that really are not going to help the parliamentary procedure in this twentieth century.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out to Mr. Nowlan that any decision to proceed short of a quorum has been by agreement at each succeeding meeting. I do not know whether that agreement was realized here this morning or not, as I was ten minutes late coming in and the meeting was already under way. But certainly there has been no consultation with me on that matter. I did understand that we were going to report back from the agenda committee before we proceeded to discuss the business at hand today. I would like to point out that there are six members from the opposition parties here, so we are holding up our share of the quorum requirements.

The Chairman: That is correct.

Mr. Nowlan: We have to face this problem. We cannot have it both ways. Either Parliament is going to do this work or the committees are going to do this work; but if the committees are going to do the work the members have to start to be here.

You used the expression "corral" members or "track them down" and the old stamp procedures of the British Empire—what is it—the press gang. We are going to have to start to get a press gang going to get members here if they are going to function on committees. Certainly on our side, even though we have depleted numbers, there is quite a bit of rivalry to get positions on committees because we only usually have eight members per committee. You have many more members, Mr. Chairman. You have an impartial office as Chairman, but the party you represent has many more members. Surely there must be a vying for positions on committees. The use of a press gang might avoid this one procedural point at the moment. But to start proceedings without a quorum when our own Chairman is not here—and I am not a member of the Committee and I did not consult with him before I raised this point—to me indicates the problem at hand and I think it should come to a head.

The Chairman: What do you suggest we do?

Mr. Nowlan: I suggest you get a quorum.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Chairman, that does not answer the fundamental question as to the traffic engineering of the committees. I do not quels nous avons à faire face; je crois justement que comme président, vous aurez à faire partie de ce comité.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, j'aimerais faire remarquer à M. Nowlan que toutes nos décisions de procéder même si nous n'avions pas le quorum ont reçu l'approbation des membres. Je ne sais pas si on en est venu à une telle entente ce matin, étant donné que je suis arrivé dix minutes en retard et que la séance était déjà en cours. En tout cas, on ne m'a pas consulté à ce sujet. Je crois que nous allons discuter de l'horaire avant d'entreprendre le travail d'aujourd'hui. J'aimerais faire remarquer la présence de six membres de l'opposition; nous sommes donc numériquement assez nombreux pour avoir un quorum.

Le président: C'est exact.

M. Nowlan: Il nous faut faire face au dilemme: ou bien c'est le Parlement qui fait l'ouvrage ou bien les comités s'en chargent; si les comités doivent faire l'ouvrage, c'est ici que devront être alors les députés.

Si l'on veut que les députés soient présents aux séances des comités, il faudra prendre les moyens de s'assurer de leur présence. De notre côté, même si nous avons un nombre réduit de membres, il existe une sorte de rivalité pour obtenir des postes aux comités car nous n'avons ordinairement que huit membres par comité. Monsieur le président, vous êtes impartial en tant que président, mais le parti que vous représentez compte beaucoup plus de membres que le mien au comité. Il existe donc là aussi une certaine sorte de rivalité. Le recours à des mesures de presse pourrait régler nos problèmes de procédure actuels. Mais que l'on aille entreprendre une séance sans avoir le quorum et en l'absence du président...et je ne suis pas membre du Comité et je n'ai consulté personne avant de soulever le présent problème...indique toute l'urgence et l'importance du problème.

Le président: Quelle solution nous proposez-vous?

M. Nowlan: Que nous ayons un quorum.

M. Givens: Monsieur le président, cela n'attaque pas le mal à la racine: il s'agit d'un problème d'organisation que nous ne pouvons think we can solve that here. In the interests of keeping things moving and as we have these important people here, I think we should proceed with what you intended to do at the outset. But I do suggest, Mr. Chairman, with great respect, that you communicate the displeasure of this Committee. There is displeasure in other committees too. I have not been around here long enough to indicate a solution, but surely one solution should be that members limit their services on various committees to the committees that can meet at different times rather than at contemporaneous times where meetings coincide. We cannot continue to have meetings rather as a farade, where we do some window-dressing. We either do, or do not, fulfil a function. I do not come here to be a bump on a log. I would like to serve on this Committee and to make a contribution, if I can, but I cannot if I am to serve on other committees meeting at the same time. That should be communicated to whomever it should be—which is still a mystery in my life. I am going to find out one of these days. To continue this way is just ridiculous.

[Texte]

1010

The Chairman: Perhaps you could see me later. I will tell you to whom you should communicate your displeasure.

Mr. Givens: That should not be done by me but by you. You are the boss.

The Chairman: The big problem is that the weeks that members lead leave them only two effective days, Tuesdays and Thursdays; on Mondays Members are coming back to, and on Fridays they are leaving, Ottawa; Wednesdays are taken up with party business; and there is a disposition on the part of Members not to sit while the House is sitting. This means that they must concentrate their meetings within a limited number of sitting periods.

The second aspect is that at the present time there are 20 committees, each of which performs a certain number of duties prescribed by the House. There just is not enough time or space to handle what we are given to Consequently, to try to get some of the work done, we have been forced to ignore some of the current regulations.

At the moment, can we have agreement on continuing the questioning of the National Film Board?

Mr. Nowlan: I certainly agree with the displeasure expressed by Mr. Givens, and would like that mine also be extended to the others—that-be.

pas résoudre ici. Afin de ne pas retarder inutilement les importantes personnes qui sont ici et notre travail, je crois que nous devrions suivre la façon de procéder que vous avez suggérée dès le début.

Mais j'aimerais, monsieur le président, que vous transmettiez le mécontentement du Comité. Ce mécontentement se fait jour dans d'autres comités aussi. Je suis trop nouveau ici pour pouvoir vous suggérer une solution, mais une solution serait certes que les membres limitent leur appartenance à des comités qui se réunissent à des moments différents et non pas de façon simultanée. Nous ne pouvons continuer à venir parader à nos réunions, à venir là donner un spectacle. Ou nous sommes sérieux, ou nous ne le sommes pas. Je ne viens pas ici faire le pitre. J'aimerais pouvoir rendre service au Comité, si je peux, mais cela m'est absolument impossible si je dois participer au travail de plusieurs comités qui siègent en même temps. Je n'ai pas le don d'ubiquité. Il faudrait faire part de cette situation à qui de droit; j'aimerais bien savoir, une fois pour toutes, qui est ce qui de droit. La situation actuelle ne peut durer.

Le président: Venez me voir après la réunion et je vous indiquerai avec qui vous mettre en rapport.

M. Givens: Ce ne devrait pas être à moi de le faire, mais à vous: c'est vous le chef ici.

Le président: Le grand problème, c'est que les députés ont un horaire très chargé qui ne leur laisse que deux jours, les mardis et les jeudis pour les comités; le lundi, c'est le retour à Ottawa; le vendredi, le départ. Le mercredi est consacré au travail du parti. Et d'autre part, les députés ne peuvent siéger en comité au moment où la Chambre siège. Ce qui ne leur laisse donc que de rares moments pour participer au travail des comités.

Il ne faut pas oublier, d'autre part, qu'il existe 20 comités, chacun s'occupant d'un certain nombre de fonctions précisées par la Chambre. Chacun a à peine le temps et l'espace nécessaires pour s'acquitter de la tâche confiée. Pour accélérer le travail, il a donc fallu oublier certains des règlements. Pour le moment, il faut s'entendre pour poursuivre la période de questions au sujet de l'Office national du film.

M. Nowlan: Je partage le mécontentement de M. Givens et j'aimerais aussi qu'on fasse connaître mon ressentiment à qui de droit. Ce qui est en cause, c'est le concept même des

[Text]

As you say, it gets down to the fundamental concept of committees. Perhaps, as an experiment, we should reserve Thursday for committees this week. That would be a progressive step.

Perhaps we should reserve two days a week only for committees and have Parliament meet the other three days. Those members who want to flit home on Mondays and Fridays to Toronto and Montreal and other places close at hand will have to pay the price when we call votes on these days.

The Chairman: I will take this up with those responsible, and also the recommendation of the Committee that perhaps the House be empowered not to sit on Tuesdays and Thursdays if committees are sitting. It is quite clear that the present system is collapsing.

Perhaps, Mr. Nowlan, you might like to begin the questioning.

Mr. Nowlan: Oh, no; after Mr. Dinsdale.

Mr. Dinsdale: With reference to the matter I brought before the Committee, Mr. Chairman, I believe we now have a quorum.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: Here is the motion. I will repeat it in a revised form that may make it acceptable and within the terms of reference of the Committee:

In view of the fact that the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts was not able to pursue the investigation of the National Centre for the Performing Arts to the level of Treasury Board and policy making in Cabinet where the real problem lies, I move that the Committee recommend to the House that the matter be referred to the Public Accounts Committee with a view to setting up the necessary procedural machinery for Parliamentary control of expenditures of public funds so that similar fiscal fiascos can be avoided in the future.

The Chairman: Do you have a copy of that amended motion?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Chairman, I would like to move as an amendment, that consideration of this motion be deferred until a later meeting. My reason for doing this is that, with great respect, I think it is wrong to introduce such a motion at this time without due notice.

We have enough trouble trying to determine in advance what is going to be discussed at these meetings. I was told last night that the National Film Board and the Canadian comités. À titre d'expérience, pourrait-on peut-être consacrer, cette semaine, la journée de jeudi entière au travail de comité. Peut-être pourrions-nous consacrer deux journées de la semaine uniquement au travail des comités et ne tenir des réunions parlementaires que les trois autres jours. Ceux qui ont leurs pénates à Montréal, à Toronto ou ailleurs, prendront les dispositions qu'ils peuvent pour être ici les lundis et vendredis pour les votes.

Le président: Je ferai connaître votre sentiment à qui de droit et ferai part aussi de la recommandation du comité visant à éliminer les séances de la Chambre les mardis et jeudis lorsque les comités siègent. Il me semble évident que le système actuel n'est plus satisfaisant.

Monsieur Nowlan, vous voulez poser des questions?

M. Nowlan: Après vous, monsieur Dinsdale.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, j'avais soumis un problème au comité et je crois que maintenant nous avons le quorum.

Le président: En effet.

M. Dinsdale: Je vais donc répéter ma motion sous une forme qui paraîtra acceptable et conforme aux attributions du Comité.

Vu que le Comité permanent de la Radiodiffusion, des films et de l'assistance aux arts n'a pas pu poursuivre son examen de la question du Centre national des Arts jusqu'au niveau du conseil du Trésor, et de l'élaboration d'une politique à l'intérieur du Cabinet, où se situe le vrai problème, je propose que le Comité recommande à la Chambre que la question soit déferée au Comité des Comptes publics, de façon à établir des mesures parlementaires adéquates de contrôle des dépenses publiques afin de prévenir des fiascos financiers de ce genre plus tard.

Le président: Avez-vous une copie modifiée?

M. Dinsdale: Oui.

M. Givens: Je voudrais proposer un amendement, à l'effet, que l'examen de cette motion soit différé à plus tard. La raison pour laquelle je le propose c'est que, et je parle ici en toute déférence, je ne pense pas qu'il soit acceptable de présenter une motion de ce genre dans les circonstances actuelles sans préavis suffisant et j'estime que nous avons déjà assez de mal à déterminer d'avance ce qui va se passer à ces réunions. On Film Development Corporation would be appearing before the Committee today. Under the circumstances, this motion comes as rather a surprise at this particular time.

Mr. Dinsdale may have a point in bringing the matter up, but I certainly do not think a motion with such far-reaching implications should be discussed at this time with the limited notice that we have had, namely, about five minutes. I make that amendment.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, in the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure I did give notice of my intention to move such a motion. I thought it would have been introduced by the Chairman at the beginning of the proceedings this morning.

I have no objection to the amendment, if the Committee wishes to give it further consideration before voting on it.

Out of courtesy to our distinguished visitors I have no objection to a more formal notice of the motion in this manner.

• 1015

The Chairman: Mr. Stanbury?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I suggested originally that this motion was out of order, and I do not think there was any question about its being out of order in its original form. The change which Mr. Dinsdale has made may make it slightly less out of order, but I suggest there is nothing in our terms of reference to permit this Committee, in effect, to instruct another committee, or to recommend to the House what another committee should do.

It is superfluous, as well, in that the whole matter of the National Arts Centre is already before the Public Accounts Committee in the Auditor General's Report. That Committee, on its own initiative, can take whatever action and hear whatever evidence it sees fit. It is surely not for this Committee to instruct the Public Accounts Committee which, after all, is headed by a member of the opposition and is quite competent to make whatever investigations it feels are warranted.

I suggest that the motion is still out of order, and certainly superfluous, because the Public Accounts Committee is already seized of this whole subject.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, the reason for bringing the subject matter before the Committee in the form of a motion is to bring the whole question to a head.

I suggested the other day that it might be helpful if this Committee made interim reports. The reason for doing that, as Mr. Givens and others have said this morning, is that our m'a dit hier soir que nous parlerions ce matin de l'Office national du Film, qui sera représenté ici, ainsi que la société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne. Cette motion, en somme, nous prend au dépourvu. M. Dinsdale peut avoir raison en nous la présentant. Je ne pense pas qu'une motion d'une aussi grande portée devrait être discutée maintenant à cinq minutes d'avis. Alors, je propose cet amendement.

M. Dinsdale: J'ai donné avis au Comité du programme de l'intention que j'avais de présenter ma motion. J'aurais pensé qu'elle pourrait être présentée au début de la séance, ce matin, par le président. Je ne vois aucun inconvénient à l'amendement si le comité veut en discuter plus longuement avant et je ne vois pas d'inconvénient à donner un avis plus formel, en signe de courtoisie, envers nos distingués visiteurs.

Le président: Monsieur Stanbury.

M. Stanbury: Il me semble que la motion est irrégulière, sous sa forme primitive elle l'était certainement. Le changement apporté par M. Dinsdale pourra la rendre un peu plus acceptable, mais je ne pense pas qu'il y ait quoi que ce soit dans nos attributions qui permette au Comité de recommander à la Chambre ce que doit faire un autre comité. Elle est, en outre, superflue, en ce sens que toute la question du Centre national des arts se trouve actuellement devant le Comité des Comptes publics et au rapport de l'Auditeur général.

Ce comité peut, de sa propre initiative prendre des mesures ou entendre tous les témoignages qu'il jugera à propos. Ce n'est pas à nous de donner des instructions au Comité des Comptes publics, présidé somme toute par un député de l'Opposition et parfaitement compétent pour prendre les initiatives qu'il désire. Cette motion de M. Dinsdale me paraît à la fois irrégulière et superflue en ce sens que le Comité des Comptes publics est déjà saisi de toute la question.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, la raison pour laquelle j'ai soumis la question au Comité sous forme de motion est que je voudrais que nous en venions à une conclusion. J'ai dit l'autre jour qu'il me semblerait utile que le Comité fasse des rapports provisoires, des rapports détaillés de la question. Le travail des comités ressemble à une charade.

[Text]

committee work tends to be a charade. We have representatives of the various government branches before us and we ask questions. We do not come to any conclusions we do not make any reports. It all evaporates into thin air.

We were blocked in bringing the Minister and Treasury Board before the Committee. I think we should proceed by way of a motion, even if it is ruled that it is irregular and out of order. At least we should make an interim report expressing such conclusions as have been reached by this Committee as a result of its extended deliberations. Otherwise it is futile and becomes a charade.

We are trying to make our committee work a little more meaningful and to reduce the burden of the Parliamentary workload by the more efficient and effective use of committees. I suggest that this is one way of doing it.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, a motion such as that proposed by Mr. Dinsdale is, in itself, a charade, knowing as he does that this matter is already before the Public Accounts Committee to the extent that that Committee chooses to discuss it.

Before this Committee are the estimates of the National Arts Centre as well as those of other agencies. If Mr. Dinsdale feels that some action should be taken on the National Arts Centre he is free to move deletion of, or a change in, the Estimates. That is the matter before this Committee and that action is open to him. If he wishes the Committee to make a report that is the kind of report this Committee could make, but he has not proposed that.

I am sure he could take up with his colleague, the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, his desire that the Public Accounts Committee examine the National Arts Centre Corporation and the Public Works Department, and perhaps the Chairman of that Committee would set the wheels in motion to do that; but for this Committee to move that that Committee do something is, I suggest, quite irregular.

• 1020

The Chairman: I may say that I am totally out of sympathy with Mr. Givens' comments that proper notice was not given. I do not believe that that type of notice is required in a matter of this kind.

However, I am seized of the comments that Mr. Stanbury has made, and I ask if I could have until next Thursday afternoon to consider my judgment on this, to make sure that my sources are correct and that I make a proper judgment.

[Interpretation]

Nous posons des questions aux différents représentants des services de l'État, et nous n'arrivons à aucune conclusion. Nous ne faisons pas de rapport. Tout s'évapore dans le vide. Nous avons été bloqués parce que nous avons voulu faire venir un ministre au Comité, il s'agissait du président du conseil du Trésor, si nous faisons une motion et si elle est déclaré irrecevable, nous devrions au moins faire un rapport provisoire donnant une idée des conclusions auxquelles le Comité en est arrivé à la suite de ses délibérations. Ou bien, alors, nous nous trouvons dans une situation futile. Nous jouons un jeu de charade.

En fait, il s'agit de faire du travail des comités quelque chose de plus significatif. On essaie de réduire le fardeau de notre travail parlementaire en nous servant mieux de nos comités, c'est-à-dire de façon plus efficace. Et c'était une façon de le faire, à mon avis.

M. Stanbury: Monsieur le président, une motion telle que celle proposée par M. Dinsdale est une charade en soi. Cette question est déjà soumise au Comité des Comptes publics, c'est à lui de décider de la façon dont il en discutera.

Et, ce qui est soumis au comité, ici, c'est le budget du Centre national des arts et des autres organismes. Si M. Dinsdale pense que l'on devrait faire quelque chose en ce qui concerne le Centre national des arts, il peut proposer un changement ou une modification du budget. Voilà la question qui est étudiée au Comité et il peut agir de cette façon s'il veut qu'un rapport soit fait. C'est ce genre de rapport que ce Comité devrait faire, mais il ne l'a pas proposé.

Je suis certain qu'il pourrait soumettre à son collègue, le président du Comité des Comptes publics la possibilité d'étudier la question du Centre national des arts et peut-être que le président du Comité l'acceptera. Mais que celui-ci décide qu'un autre comité fasse quelque chose de cet ordre, me semble tout à fait inacceptable.

Le président: Je ne suis pas d'accord avec M. Givens qui dit que nous n'avons pas eu de préavis; je ne crois pas que ce soit nécessaire dans le cas présent. J'ai écouté ce qu'a dit M. Stanbury et je voudrais qu'on me laisse le temps, qu'on me laisse jusqu'à jeudi pour rendre une décision. Je veux être sûr d'avoir une base solide pour prendre une décision qui soit tout à fait valable.

[Texte]

If that is agreeable to the Committee I would—

Mr. Dinsdale: We have Mr. Givens' amendment.

Mr. Givens: The point of order, of course, takes priority, and you have to rule whether it is, or is not, in order. If it is out of order then the whole matter is functus and we go on from there. If you rule that it is in order we have to discuss the amendment and Mr. Dinsdale's motion.

The Chairman: That is correct.

Mr. Givens: Therefore, if you are reserving judgment until Thursday—

The Chairman: Yes; the Committee will be meeting at 3.30 o'clock on Thursday afternoon. The CRTC and Mr. Juneau will be here.

Mr. Givens: Do you so rule?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: I so rule.

Mr. Dinsdale, you may begin the questioning.

Mr. Dinsdale: Having the privilege of opening the questioning may I say that it is a pleasure to meet Mr. McPherson for the first time.

A matter that has always concerned me about the operations of the NFB has been the semi-monopoly it has in doing films for the Government. I believe the present percentage of allocation of film work for Government departments is approximately 97 per cent to the NFB and 3 per cent to our struggling and yet thriving private film industry.

This is the only branch of government with a monopoly of this kind. Even the Printing Bureau allocates about 50 per cent of its work do outside agencies, and the same applies to similar Government services.

What is the reason for the continuing insistence by the NFB and the Government that the vast majority of government films be done by NFB?

Dr. McPherson: Mr. Dinsdale, I am not quite able to accept the terms of your question. The National Film Board has operated with something close to a monopoly, but it is not a rigid monopoly.

I will try to answer this question in two ways. One, the film business is an extremely complex and highly technical one. The equipment associated with the making and exhibition of film is extremely expensive. No government, in its right mind would be without some agency able to give it expert information and advice in this field.

[Interprétation]

M. Dinsdale: Nous avons l'amendement de M. Givens.

M. Givens: Le point d'ordre a priorité et vous devez décider s'il est recevable ou non. Si c'est irrecevable, alors c'est la fin et nous recommençons; si au contraire, elle l'est, alors, on doit discuter l'amendement de M. Dinsdale.

Le président: C'est exact.

M. Givens: Si vous réserver votre jugement jusqu'à jeudi.

Le président: Le Comité se réunira jeudi après-midi. Et, M. Juneau sera là.

M. Givens: D'accord?

Des voix: D'accord.

Le président: Qu'il en soit ainsi. Vous pouvez poser nos questions, monsieur Dinsdale.

M. Dinsdale: Eh bien, je suis très heureux d'avoir rencontré M. McPherson pour la première fois. Et, une question qui m'a toujours préoccupé, en ce qui concerne le fonctionnement de l'Office national du Film, c'est le quasi monopole dont il dispose pour les films du gouvernement. Je crois que le pourcentage actuel d'attribution de films pour les ministères du gouvernement, est quelque chose comme 97 p. 100 à l'Office national du Film et 3 p. 100 à notre industrie cinématographique privée qui fait tous les efforts possible et qui s'en sort assez bien, finalement. Un service du gouvernement a un monopole, c'est un monopole comparable à celui de l'imprimeur de la reine et pourtant il confie 50 p. 100 de son travail à l'extérieur. Pour quelle raison l'Office national du Film et le gouvernement insistent-ils toujours pour que la vaste majorité des films de l'État soient faits par l'Office.

M. McPherson: Monsieur Dinsdale, je ne peux pas tout à fait accepter les termes de votre question. L'Office du film a fonctionné avec un quasi monopole, mais ce n'est pas un monopole rigide. Je voudrais répondre à cette question de deux façons: premièrement, l'industrie cinématographique est un domaine extrêmement complexe et technique. Le matériel nécessaire pour la fabrication et la projection des films est extrêmement onéreux et aucun service ou ministère de l'État, aucun gouvernement ne pourrait vraiment se passer d'un organisme lui donnant des conseils, des données d'expert dans ce domaine.

[Text]

The Act designates the National Film Board as the government's adviser in film matters, and as the organization to make, or have made, films.

In the past—I think I can say this without prejudice to the private sector—film work of the quality that the government may wish has not always been available from private industry. The situation is changing, and I am on record as suggesting that we should read more carefully the part of our Act which says that we are to encourage the private industry.

The first 15 months of my mandate—and perhaps I will repeat for this Committee what that mandate was—was to re-focus, redefine and reorganize the work of the National Film Board with a view to looking not at our past achievements, which are well known, but looking into the 1970's and into the electronic period that we are moving into.

• 1025

In implementing that mandate I am very interested in the private industry and in seeing that the Board can do as much as possible and to that end we have undertaken a cost study which will reveal to us what the level of economic operation of the Board is. In short, we must be able to provide a quality service and we must maintain a volume which will make that quality possible. Beyond that it seems to me entirely possible that we might contract out to the private industry government-sponsored films. I would like to say that I have the answer that the problem is solved at this moment, but in any case it is on the way to solution.

I am making every effort to improve our relations with private film-makers. As you may know, I am a member of the board of the Corporation of which Mr. Georges-Emile Lapalme is the President and here is another step that the government is taking to bring to fruition, if you like, the aspirations of the private industry in the major field of feature film making. I do not feel like a monopolist and I do not like playing monopoly.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I find the observations of Mr. McPherson encouraging, if not reassuring, on this point. He is a new man on the job and it is refreshing to know that he is giving some earnest consideration to this problem. The monopoly has existed for 30 years and perhaps in the first instance it was necessary to encourage the development of films in Canada, but as I have followed the situation over recent years, it seems to me

[Interpretation]

En fait, l'Office est le conseiller du gouvernement en matière de films et dans le passé, je peux dire cela sans aucun préjugé vis-à-vis les secteurs privés, des travaux cinématographiques de la qualité exigée par l'État, ne pouvaient être obtenus des firmes privées. La situation évolue, bien sûr, et j'ai déjà dit que nous devrions mieux utiliser la partie de la Loi où il est dit que nous devons encourager l'industrie privée.

Au cours des quinze premiers mois de mon mandat, qui était de redéfinir, de réorganiser, et de préciser le travail de l'Office national du film, afin d'examiner nos réalisations passées qui sont bien connues mais, en fait, de prévoir les années 1970 et la période électronique que nous attaquons maintenant. Dans l'application de ce mandat, l'industrie privée m'intéresse beaucoup et je veux m'assurer que l'Office fasse tout son possible pour l'aider.

C'est pourquoi nous avons entrepris une étude qui nous permettra de connaître le niveau de fonctionnement économique de l'Office et, dès qu'il sera déterminé, nous pourrions choisir le genre de services, la qualité, que nous voulons, et nous devrions maintenir le volume de production nécessaire à cette qualité. De plus nous pouvons utiliser le système des sous-traitants de l'industrie privée. J'aimerais vous dire que le problème est résolu; le problème n'est pas encore résolu, mais nous entrevoyons une solution.

Je fais tous les efforts possibles pour améliorer nos rapports avec les producteurs privés et, comme vous le savez, je suis membre de la Société dont M. Georges-Emile Lapalme est président. Voilà une autre mesure prise par l'État pour satisfaire aux aspirations de l'industrie privée dans le domaine particulier de la production de longs métrages. Je ne me sens pas du tout monopolisateur, et d'ailleurs je n'aime pas jouer au Monopoly.

M. Dinsdale: Je trouve encourageantes, voire rassurantes, les observations de M. McPherson. Il vient tout juste d'entrer dans ses fonctions actuelles mais il a déjà beaucoup réfléchi à ces questions. Ce monopole existait depuis 30 ans. À l'origine, il était peut-être nécessaire pour favoriser les progrès de l'industrie cinématographique au Canada. Mais maintenant, l'industrie privée canadienne du cinéma est active, elle a reçu that we do have a very thriving private industry which is winning honours and awards here, there and everywhere and I would think that a little direct competition with the excellent services and the facilities of the National Film Board would be in the mutual interest of both. If there is no other questioning on this particular point, I would like to proceed to another matter.

The CBC does a considerable amount of filming. In fact, I believe its filming operations are larger than those of the NFB, and I presume that the CBC operates as a separate entity, or does it work in close collusion with the NFB with reference to its film needs for broadcasting purposes?

Dr. McPherson: The CBC, and I cannot quote figures, Mr. Dinsdale, does make a great many films now for its own programming. It is understood, I think that the kind of production done by the CBC is very different. The objectives in their programming are very different from ours. They are filling thousands of broadcast hours a year and they want to make films on a one-shot basis, so to speak, which will fill out a program series.

The Board attempts to make films of much greater durability and the life of some of our films is up to 20 years in some cases, but 8, 9, 10 years is not a long, not an unusual life, for the kind of programming we do and we attempt to look at subjects not for the immediate and topical interest but en profondeur to look at them as deeply as we can.

• 1030

Concerning our relations with the CBC, the policy established about 12 or 13 years ago was that a certain part of the National Film Board's program merited, and should be seen nationally by, the biggest audience we could get which is the television audience. I think that principle still stands and in the past three months I have begun conversations with Dr. George Davidson where, again, we are going to try to define what most usefully the National Film Board can do in relation to the programs of the CBC.

Those discussions as yet have not come to an end but it seems to me that there are subject areas of national interest that should be seen by that very large audience and I have found Dr. Davidson very, very sympathetic to this view. I wonder if that gives you what you want.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am interested to know that there are conversations going on to co-ordi-des prix, des récompenses et des honneurs un peu partout.

Je crois que la concurrence qu'elle fait aux films de l'Office ne peut que servir l'intérêt général. S'il n'y a pas d'autres questions, je voudrais passer à autre chose.

Radio-Canada fait beaucoup de cinéma; j'ai même l'impression qu'elle fait plus de cinéma que l'ONF. La Société Radio-Canada à cet égard opère-t-elle comme une entité distincte, ou travaille-t-elle en étroite collaboration avec l'ONF pour la production des films dont elle a besoin?

M. McPherson: Radio-Canada fait en effet beaucoup de films, mais je ne saurais dire combien. Il est entendu, je pense, que les deux productions sont extrêmement différentes, les objectifs poursuivis par chacun des organismes étant très différents. Radio-Canada doit produire des films pour occuper les milliers d'heures de programmation qu'elle fait par année. L'ONF fait des films beaucoup plus durables; dans quelques cas, nos films sont projetés pendant une vingtaine d'années. Le genre de films que nous produisons dure normalement huit ou dix ans. Nos films traitent de sujets non seulement à la mode du jour mais les traite en profondeur.

Nos rapports avec Radio-Canada, depuis treize ans, car c'est à cette époque que remonte la politique établie en ce domaine, suivent la ligne de conduite suivante: Une certaine partie des films de l'ONF méritent d'être vus par les auditeurs de la télévision d'un bout à l'autre du pays, c'est-à-dire par un auditoire le plus nombreux que possible. Ce principe reste valable et, depuis trois mois, en particulier, j'ai eu plusieurs entretiens avec M. George Davidson.

Encore une fois, nous allons, ensemble, chercher à définir ce que pourrait être la contribution la plus utile de l'ONF à la programmation de Radio-Canada. Ces entretiens n'ont pas encore abouti, mais nous avons l'impression que certaines questions d'intérêt national devaient être vues par un auditoire national. M. Davidson s'est montré très réceptif à cet égard. Est-ce que cela répond bien à votre question?

M. Dinsdale: C'est avec intérêt que j'apprends que des conversations se poursuivent nate more effectively the film-producing facilities of both the CBC and the NFB because I have had the impression in the past that there was not this sort of co-ordination and co-operation taking place and apparently Mr. McPherson has somewhat the same feeling in this regard. If you have opened conversations with Dr. Davidson, at least you are beginning to tackle the problem.

Dr. McPherson: If I may say so, without presuming on any of the Ministers' prerogatives, I believe that my Minister is considering film activity in government agencies. The present government, as I understand it and certainly if I follow my own personal interests, realize that we are moving into a period when audio-visual communications are revolutionizing our lives. This means that agencies such as the CBC, the CRTC, the CFDC, the National Film Board, take on an importance that they never possessed in the past.

Marshall McLuhan has become a kind of cartoon figure, le grand maréchal, I think he is in French, le Maréchal McLuhan. That is all at a theoretical level but some of the ideas that he is talking about must be taken up at a practical level and this is one of the reasons I am sorry we are . . .

Mr. Givens: The Prime Minister is . . .

Dr. McPherson: The Prime Minister, Mr. Givens, has started at the theoretical level with le Maréchal!

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, Mr. McPherson takes the Committee into a very interesting area if we were to pursue McLuhanism this morning and his message is that the medium is the message and also the impact culturally of film making and broadcasting generally as a means for what you might call instant electronic folklore which can produce a folklore atmosphere almost overnight and have tremendous impact on the cultural content of the thinking of the people, but I do not think we will pursue that any further at this stage.

Reverting to the former question, would it be necessary to have a change in the National Film Act to make it possible for government departments to use the facilities of private film making on a larger percentage?

[Interpretation]

pour coordonner plus efficacement les moyens de production et de Radio-Canada et de l'ONF.

J'avais eu l'impression dans le passé qu'il n'y avait pas entre les deux organismes la coordination et la collaboration qu'il aurait fallu. Or, monsieur McPherson, vous venez de me dire que vous aviez un peu le même sentiment. Si vous avez commencé des entretiens avec M. Davidson, vous avez certainement fait un pas dans la bonne voie.

M. McPherson: Sans présumer des intentions du ministre responsable de l'ONF, je crois qui est en train d'envisager l'activité cinématographique de l'État dans son ensemble.

Le gouvernement actuel, si j'ai bien compris, s'est rendu compte que nous entrons dans une période où les communications audiovisuelles vont révolutionner notre vie. C'est en tout cas mon sentiment. Et cela veut dire que, pour les institutions comme Radio-Canada, l'Office national du film, la Commission de radio-télévision canadienne, la Corporation de développement du film, etc., prennent une importance qu'elles n'avaient jamais eue jusqu'ici.

Marshall McLuhan, par exemple, est devenu une espèce de symbole, le grand maréchal, comme j'ai lu quelque part dans un journal français, le maréchal McLuhan. Tout cela se situe sur le plan théorique, mais certaines des idées dont il parle doivent être reprises à un niveau pratique. C'est pourquoi je déplore tellement que . . .

M. Givens: Le premier ministre est . . .

M. McPherson: Le premier ministre lui-même, monsieur Givens, a commencé au niveau théorique avec le maréchal.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, M. McPherson a soulevé une question très intéressante. Nous pourrions discuter du mcluanisme, d'après lequel le médium est le message, et de la répercussion culturelle de la radiodiffusion et de la projection de films, qui deviennent une sorte de folklore électronique instantané, qui nous amène du jour au lendemain dans un folklore nouveau, si vous voulez, et qui a beaucoup influencé la façon de penser des gens.

Mais, nous n'irons pas plus loin dans ce domaine pour l'instant. Pour revenir à ma première question: serait-il possible de modifier la Loi nationale du film, pour permettre aux services de l'État de se servir des installations de l'industrie cinématographique privée dans une plus large mesure?

[Texte]

• 1035

Dr. McPherson: As I understand the Act and my impression of my Minister's attitude on this, Mr. Dinsdale and again I must not intrude on the prerogative of my Minister—the government is unwilling at this point to allow a totally free competition in the field of government-sponsored films. In short, there must be some monitor. Perhaps I had better express this as the view of my Board of Governors with which I have discussed the matter.

If we want to extend this a little farther, there will be co-production agreements with various countries in the feature film area. The Board has a responsibility there. The government is not willing to leave such matters open to chance or open to private agreement but feels that there must be someone responsible to see that there is a kind of coherence, if you wish, and to see that departments are being properly served or that the national interest is being adequately served. I see no sign as yet that that will change and it might take legislation to change it.

Mr. Dinsdale: This is the question. Would it require an amendment to the Act as it stands in order to decentralize this control over a very powerful medium? As the medium becomes more powerful and influential as an educational and even a propaganda influence, I think some sort of decentralization is even more desirable.

Dr. McPherson: I would not like, Mr. Dinsdale, to debate the question of what government policy might be in this area. I would say very clearly, though, that the National Film Board has never been used as a propaganda agency. This is one of the marvellous things about Canada; the National Film Board has been extremely free and we pride ourselves, among other things, on behaving responsibly and I suppose if we began to behave irresponsibly in the area of film, it might be cause for alarm.

We have had no pressure to follow government policies; we have not been asked to do anything more than to make intelligent, responsible productions and to do it with integrity. This is one of the reasons that the National Film Board has such an incredible international reputation. There is not another agency in the world like it and other countries find it extremely difficult to understand how it ever happened in Canada.

The Chairman: Mr. Nowlan, on a supplementary.

[Interprétation]

M. McPherson: D'après mon interprétation de la loi et d'après l'attitude du ministre responsable dans ce domaine, monsieur Dinsdale, le gouvernement ne désire pas, je crois une concurrence parfaitement libre dans le domaine des films parrainés par l'État.

Il pense qu'il doit y avoir une direction. C'est là le point de vue de mon Conseil d'administration qui a discuté la question.

De même, si nous voulons aller un peu plus loin, il y aura des accords de co-production avec divers pays, pour la production de longs métrages, et l'Office est responsable dans ce domaine. Le gouvernement ne veut pas laisser le champ complètement libre dans ce domaine, mais il pense plutôt qu'il doit y avoir un organisme responsable d'une certaine cohérence, s'assurer que l'intérêt de tous est respecté, que tous les ministères sont servis équitablement, et, pour l'instant, il n'y a aucun signe permettant de prévoir un changement.

M. Dinsdale: Faudrait-il modifier la loi dans son état actuel pour décentraliser ce contrôle sur un médium de plus en plus puissant? A mesure que ce médium devient plus puissant, à titre d'organe d'éducation et de propagande, la décentralisation est de plus en plus souhaitable.

M. McPherson: Monsieur Dinsdale, je ne voudrais pas discuter de la politique du gouvernement dans ce domaine. Je dirai très nettement que l'Office national du film n'a jamais été utilisé comme organisme de propagande. Voilà une chose assez extraordinaire, car l'Office national du film a toujours été extrêmement libre. Nous sommes très fiers, entre autres choses, d'avoir toujours agi de façon responsable, mais si nous agissions de façon irresponsable, dans le domaine cinématographique, cela nous entraînerait toutes sortes de difficultés.

On n'a fait aucune pression sur nous pour que nous suivions la politique du gouvernement. On ne nous a rien demandé d'autre que de produire des œuvres intelligentes, responsables, intègres. C'est une des raisons pour lesquelles l'ONF a une aussi bonne réputation internationale. Aucun pays au monde n'a un organisme comparable et les gens se demandent vraiment comment la chose est possible au Canada.

Le président: Monsieur Nowlan veut poser une question supplémentaire.

[Text]

Mr. Nowlan: I have a supplementary and then a couple of other questions. I will ask the supplementary first.

Mr. Dinsdale's question was whether any legislative enactment was required to empower the Board to let other agencies produce a feature film. As I understand it, under the Act the Board is commissioned to do government work. That means you can do it yourself or you could commission someone outside your own Board to do it, so in answer to Mr. Dinsdale's question, is it not correct that there is no legislative change required, it may be a change of policy but there is no act that has to be changed?

• 1040

Dr. McPherson: Perhaps I have not made myself very clear on this, Mr. Nowlan. I think that the Board cannot reduce what it is doing to the level that we would endanger either the technical or the production quality of what we do. The government must have that service available. Beyond that it would seem to me as policy very useful to give as much as we can to the private industry also to ease, if possible, the tendering procedures. We do not want to look like an exclusive agency but, on the contrary, to look like an agency that is serving the Canadian nation in the best possible way and this is why I say I hope to be able, without endangering the quality of what we are able to do in Montreal, to serve the private industry.

Mr. Nowlan: This leads me to...

The Chairman: Is this a further supplementary?

Mr. Nowlan: It is not a further supplementary but it leads quite naturally to another line of questioning.

The Chairman: Our procedure has been, Mr. Nowlan, that we go on a topical basis...

Mr. Nowlan: This is topical.

The Chairman: When the topic is exhausted then we go back, so I return the floor to Mr. Dinsdale.

Mr. Osler: I have two supplementaries.

The Chairman: That is fine.

Mr. Dinsdale: Before you ask them, Mr. Osler, I have a return that was brought down in the House last year. It was question 794 and the reason I have opened this line of questioning this morning is because that return indicated the NFB was increasing its operations in the field of film production for

[Interpretation]

M. Nowlan: M. Dinsdale demandait s'il faudrait changer la loi pour autoriser l'Office à permettre à des agences de produire des longs métrages. Si je ne m'abuse, au terme de la loi, l'ONF est chargé de la production cinématographique pour le compte du gouvernement. L'Office national du film peut produire ses propres films, ou les faire produire par d'autres.

La réponse, à la question de M. Dinsdale, est donc qu'il n'y a pas besoin pour cela de changements législatifs, un changement de principes peut-être, mais pas nécessairement législatifs.

• 1040

M. McPherson: Je veux être très clair à ce sujet, monsieur Nowlan. Je crois que l'Office ne peut pas réduire son travail au point de menacer la qualité technique ou artistique de son travail, car le gouvernement a besoin de ce travail de qualité. De plus, il me semble qu'il serait bon de céder le plus de commandes possible à l'industrie privée, de manière à faciliter les appels d'offres. Nous ne voulons pas être un organisme exclusif. Au contraire, nous voulons être un organisme qui sert le mieux possible la nation canadienne.

C'est pourquoi je dis que, sans mettre en jeu la qualité de ce que nous faisons à Montréal, j'espère pouvoir servir l'industrie privée.

M. Nowlan: Ceci m'amène à...

Le président: Est-ce une autre question supplémentaire?

M. Nowlan: Ce n'est pas une autre question supplémentaire. C'est une question qui découle de la première.

Le président: Notre procédure était de discuter une question à la fois.

M. Nowlan: J'en suis toujours à la même question.

Le président: Nous continuons sur le même sujet.

M. Osler: J'ai deux questions supplémentaires.

Le président: C'est bien.

M. Dinsdale: Auparavant, je rappelle que l'an dernier, j'ai reçu une réponse à la question 794 que j'avais inscrite au Feuilleton. La raison pour laquelle j'ai commencé, ce matin, à poser des questions sur ce sujet, c'est que cette réponse me donnait à entendre que l'ONF augmentait ses opérations dans le government departments rather than decreasing them.

In 1962-63, for example, there was $284,000 expended; in 1966-67, $759,000 and it occurred to me that this must be rather difficult competition for our private industry to cope with and also, now that Canada is becoming mature in the media field, it might be the opportune time to be a little more competitive and let the National Film Board specialize in these extraordinarily fine documentaries that you do so well. It seems to me, as Dr. McPherson has mentioned, Mr. Chairman, that this is where NFB can perform an outstanding service.

I used to be a teacher and we used to use NFB films in our visual education program quite frequently, but for films with commercial overtones I think it would be beneficial if the commercial film makers had a greater opportunity.

I would imagine that their government production, according to this return I received, is limited to provincial governments. I know they do a lot of work for provincial governments and according to this return—and it is only a few months old—the question was, original motion pictures produced under contract by commercial film companies. It is 1133 and so forth. There is hardly any federal government work being done by these people.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler on a supplementary.

Mr. Osler: I have two supplementaries. Getting back to the relationship between the CBC and the National Film Board, I would like to ask if you have any idea what ratio there is in a place like Hollywood where it is completely commercial between the people who specialize in film making and those who specialize in television-making because, it seems to me, the two are quite different. If you are filling a wide screen for a general film you do things that are wonderful for that medium but on a television screen you will probably get half the people in the country to shut their screens off because the time lapse is too great.

If you are doing a beautiful pan of scenery or lead into something you might take a minute and a half to do it and television, if it did it at all, would take 15 seconds because the mediums are that different. Would you comment on that general line? Is there an inability for the two to co-operate beyond a point? It is not as easy as it might appear to have the National Film Board filling orders or the CBC and vice versa, is it, and I do not think it is in the commercial work either.

domaine de la production cinématographique pour le compte des ministères. En 1962-1963, par exemple, il y avait une augmentation de $284,000 et en 1966-1967, de $759,000.

Il me semble que ce doit être une concurrence assez difficile pour notre industrie privée. Il me semble aussi, maintenant que le Canada se développe de plus en plus dans le domaine des moyens de communication, qu'il serait peut-être bon de laisser un peu la concurrence et de permettre à l'ONF de se spécialiser dans les documentaires qu'elle fait si bien. C'est là, comme le disait M. McPherson, que l'on peut servir le plus.

Quand j'étais professeur, nous utilisions très fréquemment les films de l'ONF. Mais, en ce qui concerne les films commerciaux, il serait peut-être préférable de s'en remettre aux producteurs privés. D'après la réponse que j'avais reçue, l'ONF travaillait aussi pour le compte des gouvernements provinciaux. Cette réponse est assez récente et elle indique que les industries privées travaillent beaucoup plus à des productions cinématographiques qu'à des projets du gouvernement fédéral.

Le président: M. Osler, question supplémentaire.

M. Osler: J'ai deux questions supplémentaires. L'une concerne la collaboration entre Radio-Canada et l'ONF. Je voudrais savoir si vous avez une idée de la proportion, à Hollywood où les films sont entièrement commerciaux, entre ceux qui se spécialisent dans la production de films destinés à la projection et ceux qui se destinent à la production de films pour la télévision.

Car il s'agit de deux choses.

Si on fait un film pour un grand écran, il peut être très bon dans les cinémas, mais non à la télévision.

Si vous faites un magnifique panoramique d'un paysage, il durera une minute et demie à la télévision et quinze secondes sur le grand écran, car il y a une grande différence entre ces deux média. Est-ce qu'il y a une limite à la collaboration entre les deux? Il est très difficile pour Radio-Canada de faire du travail pour l'Office national du film et vice versa. N'est-ce pas?

[Text]

Dr. McPherson: I hardly know where to start in answering that, Mr. Osler. One or two very obvious differences come to mind immediately. The size of the screen in television has a very important relation to the kind of production that is done through that medium and a good deal of work that would be highly successful in cinema may not be suitable for television at all.

Some of it, however, is. There is an area between, if you like, the two poles in which film can be used on television very successfully and then have a further life in various kinds of screening uses, but I think the Director of Production, Mr. Spiller, may be able to come closer to giving you a more expert answer than I can on this.

• 1045

Mr. F. Spiller (Director of Production (English)): We do not have a lot of information about the situation in the industry in Hollywood but I would say there seems to be apparent at least this kind of distinction at the moment. I think the major studios are involved in quite a lot of package TV shows which are done largely on a series basis. They use the same kind of technical facilities, to some extent; in fact, very often they use major studio facilities, but the whole method of approaching the production is quite different when they are doing major features or even short documentaries.

It involves a completely different kind of discipline. The way you set out your staffing and crewing of these documentaries and features is quite different and I know there has been some difficulty in relating the resources of the motion picture feature industry to the needs of television. There have been some recent examples where long features—one and a half hours—have been produced exclusively for television but they tend to be on a single unit basis rather than series. There is quite a difference between the two approaches.

Dr. McPherson: The industry is still exploring this whole problem, Mr. Osler. Most feature films now find some television market and producers and distributors are very conscious of the television use in helping finance film production, and some American distributors and film makers now are saying that they would like films made for commercial distribution, but built into the original conception is final television use and that seems a funny switch, so the relation of the two media, I think, can only be described as fluid and the situation as exploratory at this moment.

[Interpretation]

M. McPherson: Je ne sais pas très bien comment répondre à votre question, monsieur Osler. Il y a une ou deux différences très évidentes qui me viennent tout de suite à l'esprit. La taille de l'écran à la télévision a un rapport très direct avec le genre de productions pour la télévision. Certaines œuvres, qui seraient très bonnes pour le cinéma, ne seraient sans doute pas appropriées pour la télévision. Il y en a quelques-unes qui le sont. Il y a, si vous voulez, une zone intermédiaire. Il s'agit de films qui peuvent être utilisés à la télévision et qui peuvent être ensuite projetés de diverses façons. Je crois que le directeur de la production, M. Spiller, pourra vous donner une réponse plus précise.

M. F. Spiller (Directeur de la Production (anglaise)): Nous n'avons pas beaucoup de renseignements sur la situation à Hollywood. Cependant, j'ai l'impression qu'il y a une distinction actuellement. Les grands studios préparent beaucoup d'émissions de télévision en séries. Ils utilisent, jusqu'à un certain point, les mêmes moyens techniques. Il arrive assez souvent qu'ils utilisent les grands studios pour produire des films pour la télévision. Mais le processus de production est assez différent, lorsqu'on monte les longs métrages ou même de courts documentaires.

On se trouve plongé dans une discipline entièrement nouvelle. La méthode pour la formation des équipes de travail est très différente pour ces documentaires.

Je sais que l'on a éprouvé certaines difficultés lorsqu'il s'est agi d'établir un rapport entre les ressources de l'industrie cinématographique classique et les besoins de la télévision. Par exemple, ces derniers temps, on a présenté des longs métrages d'une durée d'une heure et demie à la télévision. En général, ce sont des émissions qui sont présentées d'un seul trait. Ce ne sont pas des séries.

M. McPherson: Nous examinons toujours la question. La plupart de ces films trouvent facilement honneur sur le marché. La télévision est un moyen extrêmement intéressant pour le financement de longs métrages. Un grand nombre de distributeurs ou de producteurs américains conçoivent des films qui sont faits pour la distribution commerciale, mais qui sont finalement utilisés par la télévision. Les rapports entre les deux moyens de diffusion sont actuellement assez vagues. Nous n'en sommes encore qu'au premier tâtonnement.

[Texte]

Mr. Osler: Thank you.

The Chairman: May I ask a supplementary on that? With respect to the three productions the National Film Board did in co-operation with the CBC last year, such as The Ernie Game, for example. What changes would this cause because it was being done for television in your normal method of operation? Mr. Spiller did mention new techniques, different approach to crewing and what not. What has been your own experience in this area?

Dr. McPherson: Fortunately, The Ernie Game and Waiting for Caroline, the two films done in co-production with the CBC, happened before I became the Government Film Commissioner and Chairman of the National Film Board, for what that is worth. As co-productions, there was a sharing of staff, a sharing of responsibility for the films. Again, Mr. Spiller may have something to say about this. That was an experiment which produces certain difficulties—frankly, authority difficulties. If two organizations are going to share production, then where is the center of authority?

I think nobody will claim that the experiment was entirely successful. Is there more, Mr. Spiller, that ought to be said for Mr. Osler's information on this?

Mr. Spiller: I think one of the great difficulties—and I think this sort of difficulty really exhibits itself not only in this relationship, let us say, between film and television, it occurs in almost every kind of film making that you undertake. If you try and compromise your objectives, try and fill more than one single objective, then I think it often results in enormous difficulties in terms of execution.

• 1050

In the case of the co-productions we were certainly attempting to fill two needs, a television need and a theatrical distribution. I think if you look at the history of the average feature you see on television it, of course, was originally produced for the theatres—that was the prime purpose—and the television discipline, discipline of length, discipline imposed by the fact that you are dealing with a smaller screen, did not enter into the thinking at all and so I think there are disadvantages when you try to produce something really for two objectives. It poses certain constraints which are very limiting factors in many cases.

Mr. Osler: I have one more question and that is, Mr. Chairman, if the National Film Board does more outside work, how does it propose to judge that work and how does it

[Interprétation]

M. Osler: Merci.

Le président: Est-ce que je peux poser une question supplémentaire? En ce qui concerne les trois productions que l'Office national du film a fait en collaboration avec Radio-Canada, l'an dernier, est-ce que cela modifie un peu votre façon normale de procéder? Est-ce que cela modifie votre technique et votre point de vue sur la constitution des équipes de tournage? Quelle a été votre expérience de ces questions?

M. McPherson: Nous avons fait deux films: Waiting for Caroline et The Ernie Game. Ces films ont été tournés avant que je devienne commissaire. Ce sont des co-productions. Nous avons donc partagé le personnel et les attributions. M. Spiller aurait peut-être quelque chose à ajouter. Il s'agissait d'une expérience qui suscite certaines difficultés en ce qui concerne l'autorité. Si deux organisations veulent se lancer dans une co-production, où se trouve l'autorité finale? Personne ne prétendra que l'expérience a eu un succès incontesté. Est-ce que M. Spiller pourrait ajouter quelque chose pour l'information de M. Osler?

M. Spiller: Cette difficulté se manifeste non seulement dans le rapport entre les films et la télévision, mais aussi dans presque toutes les productions cinématographiques que l'on peut réaliser. Si l'on cherche à réaliser plus d'un objectif à la fois, cela suscite assez souvent d'énormes difficultés dans l'exécution.

Dans le cas des co-productions, nous avons certainement cherché à répondre à deux besoins: celui de la télévision et celui du cinéma. Si vous regardez, par exemple, l'histoire du long métrage que vous voyez à la télévision, vous verrez que ces bandes avaient été primitivement produites pour les salles de cinéma. Cela est incontestable. La discipline de la télévision, discipline de longueur, discipline imposée par le petit écran, n'entraîne pas en ligne de compte à l'origine.

Il y a donc des inconvénients lorsqu'il s'agit de poursuivre deux objectifs à la fois. Ce sont des limitations.

M. Osler: Si vous faites plus de travail à l'extérieur, comment, dans ces conditions, l'ONF entendra-t-elle juger de la qualité de ce travail et comment l'ONF entend-elle évi-propose avoiding the kind of troubles that the CBC has had on occasion? It seems to me that if Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures of Canada, Limited, for instance, subcontracted a film to somebody and they decided not to use it for various reasons, that would be the end of that and there would be some business saw-off and if it had not come up to standard, whoever was responsible would lose some money, and all the rest of it.

It also seems to me that whenever the CBC has had to make a decision in its own wisdom that it will not run a certain film because, in their wisdom, it is unsuitable for their purposes, they end up by paying for it completely and having a big political hoo-ha over it as well. My question, therefore is, if you use the facilities of the private industry to an increasing degree, who will be the arbiter of the standard, who will decide that it is unacceptable if it is unacceptable, and who will take the financial loss?

It seems to me that it has got to be a two-way street. If somebody is being offered a chance to make some money, they have got to be offered a chance to lose some money too, and I would hate to see the National Film Board as nothing but an order clerk that pays the price regardless of the results.

Dr. McPherson: The National Film Board does not in any way stand to lose—and may I ask Mr. Jobbins, the Director of Distribution, to speak to this—on any work tendered out but our function in tendering is to advise departments whether someone who submits a tender is, indeed, in business and whether he can do the film. We then do not evaluate films for government departments. They find out soon enough if they have a film they do not like and they pay for it, and it is entirely possible that a department might wish to go ahead, ask for our agreement, if you wish, that a certain private film maker will make a film for them. There are risks involved, but...

Mr. Osler: Does this mean, then, that you visualize yourself as adviser solely and the film when it is marketed does not come out under your stamp? You do not either reject it or accept it? You just advise the government that film company No. XYZ is suitable and probably could do a good job on that.

Dr. McPherson: I think I will pass this one to Mr. Jobbins or Mr. Spiller who are in much closer touch with the details.

Mr. Spiller: This is a very complex problem. We have heard several references to the ter les ennuis qu'a pu éprouver, à l'occasion, Radio-Canada? Par exemple, si Metro Goldwyn Mayer confiait la production d'un film à quelqu'un et qu'elle décidait, pour diverses raisons, de ne pas utiliser le produit de ce contrat, les responsables perdraient de l'argent, surtout si le film n'était pas de qualité suffisante.

Si Radio-Canada décidait de ne pas montrer certains films qu'elle jugeait inacceptables à ses propres fins, elle finirait par payer les frais de l'opération et par s'attirer des ennuis politiques. Si vous affermez de plus en plus des films à l'industrie privée, qui décidera de la qualité? Qui décidera si le film est acceptable et qui paiera les pots cassés?

Il me semble que si l'on donne à quelqu'un la chance de faire de l'argent, on devrait lui donner aussi la chance d'en perdre. Je ne voudrais pas que l'Office national du film se transforme en commis qui paie les pots cassés.

M. McPherson: L'Office national du film ne risque pas de perdre quoi que ce soit. Lorsque nous affermons un contrat de travail, nous cherchons à savoir si la personne, à qui nous affermons ce travail, est vraiment sérieuse. Nous n'évaluons pas la qualité des films pour les ministères du gouvernement. Les ministères remarquent assez vite si la qualité du produit est inférieure à leurs exigences et ils payent. Il est tout à fait concevable qu'un ministère veuille demander notre accord, lorsqu'il s'agira d'affermir ces travaux. Il y a évidemment des risques.

M. Osler: En somme, vous pensez que vous jouez le rôle de conseiller purement et simplement. Le jugement en ce qui concerne la qualité des films ne dépend pas de vous. Vous conseillez simplement au ministère d'accepter ou de ne pas accepter les services de la compagnie «Y» ou «Z».

M. McPherson: Je pense que je ferais mieux de confier cette réponse à M. Jobbins ou à M. Spiller qui sont beaucoup plus renseignés sur cette question, qui en connaissent les détails.

M. Spiller: C'est un problème très complexe. Nous avons entendu rappeler plus fact that we have a growing commercial industry. This is true, I think we do and I think it is growing very rapidly. Certainly we are finding that the kind of work turned out by the industry, when we contract out work to them, is of quite a high order. On the other hand, I think your question is really perhaps directed at those cases where things do not work out very well. In this case, certainly the Board has to remain responsible on behalf of the government for getting the kinds of results that have been predetermined in conjunction with the Department.

I think over the years we have had a pretty successful record, although there have been one or two cases where we have had to put our own resources and money in to correct problems which have occurred. This is an interesting point because our objective after all is to assist in the development of commercial industry. This does require taking some calculated risks too because you cannot always assess as accurately as you would like the competency of a particular company.

Mr. Osler: When I was on the CBC Board there were two films rejected by the CBC. One was rejected just before I went on the Board the Prime Minister's film, and the other was on "Warrendale". Whether or not these things should have been rejected by the CBC is besides the point. They, as clients, decided in their wisdom that these things were useless, so far as they were concerned, on their tube. However, they still ended up by paying for the film and by having to allow the original producer to be free to do what he could with it.

So that in theory at least you have the situation where a Crown corporation has guaranteed payment for something which they are then free to make commercial property from. It seems to me that one should not have it both ways, that it is unbusinesslike to pay a man for something that you cannot use and then allow him in turn to go out and make it a commercial property. Is this the kind of situation you can get into or do you operate in an entirely different way?

Dr. McPherson: That is not a situation that the National Film Board can get into, and I cannot speak for the CBC on this because I have no idea of what the contractual relations over Warrendale were.

I think it is true, and it happens very rarely, that a film however well intended, however good the planning was, turns sour, and if it is indeed sour you feel that it falls below the quality standard that your agency sets d'une fois que l'industrie cinématographique canadienne est en pleine croissance. C'est exact. J'ai l'impression, du reste, que cette croissance est très rapide. Il est certain que nous constatons que le genre de travail fait par l'industrie, lorsque nous lui affermons des films, est très élevé.

Vous songez probablement à des réussites moins sensationnelles. Il est certain que l'ONF doit être responsable au gouvernement et doit répondre des résultats obtenus requis par le ministère.

Jusqu'ici, nous n'avons pas trop mal réussi. Il est arrivé que nous avons dû utiliser nos propres ressources, notre propre argent pour corriger des situations malheureuses. Tout ceci est assez intéressant. Notre but est d'aider au développement de l'industrie privée jusqu'à un certain point. Cela exige que nous prenions certains risques. On ne peut pas toujours mesurer aussi précisément que possible de la compétence de telle ou telle maison.

M. Osler: Lorsque je siégeais au Bureau de Radio-Canada, on a rejeté deux films produits pour Radio-Canada: un film sur le premier ministre et un autre sur la clinique des enfants arriérés de Toronto, Warrendale. Que Radio-Canada ait bien fait ou non de rejeter ces films, au fond n'a rien à voir avec ce que nous discutons. Radio-Canada avait décidé que ces deux films ne lui étaient pas du tout utiles. Mais, en définitive, Radio-Canada a dû payer les frais de l'opération et permettre au producteur de faire ce qu'il voulait du film déjà tourné.

Voilà donc une situation, où Radio-Canada a payé des films qui, en fait, ont pu être exploités librement par d'autres que Radio-Canada. Il me semble qu'on ne doit pas jouer perdant sur les deux tableaux: on ne devrait pas payer quelqu'un pour un produit inutilisable, pour ensuite permettre au producteur de se servir du film pour faire des bénéfices. Rencontrez-vous parfois des situations de ce genre, ou si votre façon de procéder est différente?

M. McPherson: Cela n'arrive jamais à l'ONF. Je ne peux pas parler au nom de Radio-Canada. Je ne sais pas du tout quels étaient les rapports contractuels entre Radio-Canada et les producteurs de Warrendale.

Il est assez rare, qu'un film tourne court, quelles que soient les bonnes intentions des producteurs, quels que soient les soins qu'on apporte à sa production. Lorsqu'un film est inférieur à la qualité généralement exigée, en and such a film would have to be scrapped. But that, fortunately, is a very rare occurrence; it has not happened to my knowledge in the last 15 months with the Board.

The further built-in advantage to the National Film Board is that even if you make a film that turns out not to be something that you want to exhibit the footage remains. We have a huge stock-shop library and any part of that film might be used in a variety of ways. So that there is never a total loss—even if you decide not to release a particular work you have that material available for other use. One of the things we are wondering about is how this stock-shop resource is going to be used under Educational Television. That may give us some answers.

Mr. Schumacher: My question deals with the relations of the Board with government agencies. Is there a continuing liaison between the Board and the various government agencies to help them plan their programs and to get their message across.

Dr. McPherson: There is a continuing relation, sir, and that relation is going to improve. I will try to be fairly brief.

• 1100

I have decided, and my Board has approved, upon the creation of a branch in Ottawa. We want the Board to have a stronger presence in the national capital. Part of that branch will be made up of a strong group of liaison officers who will discuss with departments their various needs. As all your visual communications play a larger and larger role, we feel that it is not just enough to go out and say yes, you need a film and we will make it for you. I would prefer that our liaison officers were really what I would call media consultants. We may, in some cases, even find it far wiser to say to a government department that what they really need is a film strip, maybe a printed publication—in short, we would find the medium that is going to have the greatest impact. Departments welcome that kind of advice.

There is one further point that I would make on this. We have done a number of studies for departments, looking at their five-year needs. The Public Service Commission for example, is one of these. Through liaison officers and people in production they let us know what they are hoping to do in the way of training, or whatever it is, in their department, and a program is laid out. So, in short, they become coherent in the way a department is using film and the media.

général on doit s'en débarrasser, mais ceci est assez rare. Cela ne s'est pas produit une seule fois depuis quinze mois que je suis à l'Office.

A l'Office national du film, même si on a un film qu'on ne veut pas montrer, on conserve néanmoins la bande. Nous avons une cinémathèque spéciale à cet égard, et des parties de ce film peuvent être utilisées de diverses façons. En somme, il n'y a jamais de pertes sèches. On peut utiliser ces bandes ou des parties de ces bandes, pour d'autres fins. Nous pourrions peut-être à la fin utiliser ces bandes, ou des parties de ces bandes, pour la télévision éducative. C'est une question, en tout cas, que nous nous posons.

M. Schumacher: Quels sont les rapports entre l'ONF et les autres institutions du gouvernement. Y a-t-il une liaison continue entre l'Office et les autres institutions gouvernementales?

M. McPherson: Il y a certainement une liaison continue et ces rapports vont encore s'améliorer.

Mon bureau a approuvé la création d'une filiale à Ottawa. Nous voulons que l'ONF soit mieux représenté dans la capitale nationale. Une partie du personnel, de cette succursale sera formée d'agents de liaison qui discuteront avec les ministères leurs divers besoins. Au fur et à mesure que les moyens audiovisuels jouent un rôle de plus en plus important, il ne suffira plus de dire: Vous avez besoin d'un film, nous le ferons. Nous préférierions que nos agents de liaison soient de véritables conseillers en information, pouvant conseiller aux diverses agences gouvernementales la forme de publicité la plus appropriée à leurs besoins, que ce soit un film, une brochure, etc. Les ministères accueillent avec satisfaction des avis de ce genre.

Nous avons fait un certain nombre d'études pour les ministères portant sur leurs besoins pour une période de cinq ans, la Commission de la fonction publique, par exemple. Des agents de liaison et des producteurs ont découvert avec eux ce qu'ils s'attendaient d'avoir, dans le cadre d'un programme de formation, par exemple, puis ils ont mis au point un programme. Voilà un exemple de la façon dont un ministère du gouvernement se sert de l'Office.

[Texte]

Mr. Schumacher: Has it been found that certain departments have had films made but then found them impossible to use? If so, could you give us such an example?

Dr. McPherson: I would love to tell you a story in confidence but this is hardly a confidential situation.

The Chairman: Not when everything is being recorded.

Dr. McPherson: Nevertheless, I will tell you, for example, that one of our production branches undertook a film for a department not long ago, the department ended up being rather unhappy with the film and decided that this really was not what they wanted. The Production Branch liked it, took the film over and put it on its regular program and the high official involved in the government department—I believe I am correct—ended up by saying yes, that it was a very good show, that it did not fully serve the purpose they wanted but they admired it.

Mr. Schumacher: I am not asking for specific cases but has it happened with any degree of regularity in, say, the last five years, that it has been unused?

Dr. McPherson: Again, I am going to speak to the head of English Production, or Mr. Dignard of La Production Française.

Mr. Spiller: We have not really had cases that have tended to work out that way. Most of the time we spend quite a lot of time and effort in the planning stage, so the chances of something coming out at the other end which is not acceptable and which cannot be distributed to achieve the objectives is very rare.

Mr. Schumacher: I have one last question.

The Chairman: I wonder if you could hold your question. Mr. Nowlan has another committee meeting to go to, and he has been very patient.

Mr. Nowlan: My question is not on this subject but it has to do in a general way with a lot of the discussion here, and it gets very fundamental.

In view of the developing commercial field, the fact that there is television, a private industry which was not in existence when the Film Board was first developed, and in view of your discussion here today about refocusing and redefining, would you not agree that the Board is really at a crossroads today and that there has to be a real hard assessment as to what future purpose it is going to play with your Film Development Corporation, your CBC and your private industry?

[Interprétation]

M. Schumacher: Est-il arrivé que l'Office national du film ait tourné des films pour les ministères, films que les ministères n'ont pas utilisés? Si le cas s'est présenté, à quelle occasion?

M. McPherson: Je vais vous raconter une petite histoire en confidence.

Le président: Ce n'est pas l'endroit, tout est enregistré.

M. McPherson: Je vais quand même vous citer un exemple: une de nos divisions avait entrepris la production d'un film pour un ministère, il n'y a pas tellement longtemps. Le ministère, n'étant pas tellement content du produit final, avait décidé que ce n'était pas ce qu'il voulait. Par contre, nos producteurs l'ont aimé et l'ont inscrit à leur programme régulier. Un haut fonctionnaire du ministère en cause a fini par se dire, que c'était vraiment un très bon film. Mais cela ne satisfaisait pas entièrement à leurs exigences, mais néanmoins, c'était un film très bien fait.

M. Schumacher: Est-ce que cela s'est produit souvent? Depuis cinq ans, mettons, est-ce qu'il y a eu régulièrement des films non utilisés?

M. McPherson: M. Spiller ou M. Dignard, respectivement chef de la production anglaise et française, répondra à votre question.

M. Spiller: Le cas est assez rare. Nous consacrons beaucoup de temps et d'énergie à préparer nos productions. Les cas où le produit final ne peut pas être utilisé pour la réalisation des objectifs sont assez rares.

M. Schumacher: J'ai une dernière question.

Le président: Pourriez-vous différer votre question, car M. Nowlan doit s'absenter et il veut poser une question.

M. Nowlan: Voici une question essentielle. Vu l'évolution du domaine commercial, vu l'existence de la télévision et d'une industrie privée du cinéma qui n'existaient pas au moment de la création de l'Office national du film, vu aussi la nécessité de redéfinir la politique de l'Office, comme vous l'avez dit aujourd'hui, ne croyez-vous pas que l'Office national du film approche d'un tournant? Ne devons-nous pas nous poser des questions sur son rôle futur parallèlement au développement de l'industrie privée, de Radio-Canada ou de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique?

[Interpretation]

• 1105

Dr. McPherson: Yes, I think this is a moment of profound change. It is not a change that troubles me. I simply want to see this society move ahead. I keep talking about the languages that we read. We are reading a whole spectrum of languages now and our young people are reading more audio-visual images than print. It is this kind of problem that faces agencies such as ours and faces the government as well.

Mr. Nowlan: But do you not think, with this emancipating industry and the audio-visual field, that Canada is moving, say, from short stories to long novels and, in like fashion, with films, it is moving from short films to the feature film that may be developed by the Film Development Corporation or the CBC?

Dr. McPherson: I am puzzled by that. It seems to me the role of the Film Development Corporation is very clear in creating the feature film industry.

Mr. Nowlan: That is right. Yours are short films.

Dr. McPherson: No, Mr. Nowlan. It would be very peculiar, would it not, for an agency to say—let me use the Canada Council for an illustration—that they are interested in poems, they are interested in essays, they are interested in short stories but they will never touch novels. Media do not work in this way. You must be free to use the medium most appropriate and the form most appropriate for the thing you want to communicate. So that to suggest that the Board should be limited to statements of a half hour would seem to me a crippling limitation to impose on it. But at the same time it is very clear that we are not, as Mr. Lapalme is, in show-bizz in the sense that we are making mass audience entertainment films. These are not the objectives of the Board.

Mr. Nowlan: But coming back to my first question, since there was not any private industry at the beginning and no other visual aid, since television was not there, these were the two motivating reasons that the Film Board was established, as I understand it, from the old motion picture bureau of the Trade and Commerce Department, and in its evolution it has gone from sort of trade and commerce to war and patriotism, and then after the war to the Canadian image. With that evolution with television and with your Film Development Corporation, certainly the very purpose of the Board must be examined in this re-assessment. Is that not correct?

M. McPherson: Oui, ce sont là des changements profonds qui s'annoncent. Ce n'est pas le changement qui me préoccupe, j'aimerais que cette société puisse aborder une autre période. Je parlais des langues que nous lisons. La jeunesse lit moins de choses imprimées qu'elle ne lit d'images audio-visuelles. C'est justement le genre de problèmes qui se posent à des organismes comme la nôtre, et au gouvernement.

M. Nowlan: Mais ne pensez-vous pas que le Canada est en train de passer de la nouvelle au roman, ou pour parler le langage du cinéma, du court métrage ou long métrage? Est-ce que ce long métrage ne pourrait pas être préparé par la société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique ou par Radio-Canada?

M. McPherson: Je ne comprends pas très bien. Le rôle de la Société de développement est très clair: aider à la création du «grand film».

M. Nowlan: D'accord. Vous produisez uniquement des courts métrages.

M. McPherson: Non, monsieur Nowlan. Un éditeur ne peut dire qu'il s'intéresse au poème, à la nouvelle, à l'essai, mais pas au roman. Ainsi en est-il de la production dite visuelle. Le producteur de cinéma doit choisir le genre le plus apte à transmettre le message. Dire que l'Office ne doit produire que des documentaires serait, en ce qui nous concerne, d'une limitation excessive. Mais nous ne produisons pas, non plus, comme M. Lapalme, des longs métrages d'intérêt général, des films romanesques, par exemple. Ce n'est pas pour cela que nous existons.

M. Nowlan: Pour revenir à ma première question, l'Office national du Film, a été créé au moment où il n'y avait ni télévision, ni industrie privée. Il est issu du «Picture Bureau» du ministère du Commerce, il fut adopté par la «guerre» et le «patriotisme», puis, après la guerre, il fut consacré à l'image du Canada. Avec l'avènement de la télévision et de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique, il me semble qu'on devrait revenir sur la raison d'être de l'Office national du Film.

[Texte]

Dr. McPherson: We are thinking very deeply about the purposes of the Board. I would say in an age of the kind we are in that the need for the kind of work the Board does is greater than ever. I do not think you want me to go into the way we read our Act. For example, our reputation of informing the world about Canada is fabulous.

If we take the part of the Act that says we are to inform Canadians about themselves and in general make films in the national interest, there is a whole area and a vital area there, it seems to me, which a commercial producer is not likely to pick up because he is not going to make dollars out of it. The CBC is not likely to pick it up because it is a day-to-day entertainment and information service. If I wanted to talk about one of these things, I would talk about the biggest program we are doing now called "Challenge for Change"—"construire demain", which is a whole series of films on the problem of poverty.

Mr. Nowlan: Could not that be contracted out, and subsidized by the government?

Dr. McPherson: I do not know how that could be contracted out. I do not know whether you would want to ask a commercial producer to make films on a subject of this importance, a subject really very close to government policy. Have you any comments, Mr. Spiller?

• 1110

Mr. F. Spiller (Director of Production (English)): I would say that certainly parts of such a program could be contracted out, but I think the significance of the concept, this concept of Challenge for Change as a program, is a very new one and a very important one because rather than considering the aspects of film-making as divided into the development of ideas, production and distribution, this in essence is a total program which involves an integration of all these various elements into one logical concept. It is not a case of just a convenient way of putting it all together. It is one of these things where you develop some reduction ideas, new concepts, you test them. You get evaluative readings on how this is working, and the Board in this sense is in a very unique position because of its distribution system, because of the facilities it has at its disposal to test some of these new concepts.

I think already we are finding that there are many commercial agencies, even agencies

[Interprétation]

M. McPherson: Nous réfléchissons profondément aux objectifs de l'ONF. Vu le caractère de notre époque, le besoin d'un travail du genre de celui qu'accomplit l'Office est plus considérable que jamais auparavant. Vous ne voudriez pas, je pense, que je vous explique l'interprétation que nous donnons de notre loi. La réputation que nous avons en ce qui concerne les renseignements que nous donnons sur le Canada au monde entier est extraordinaire.

La partie de la loi qui nous oblige à informer les Canadiens sur eux-mêmes et à faire des films d'intérêt national représente un autre domaine de notre activité. Ce n'est pas là, si vous voulez, un genre de production qui pourrait tenter les producteurs commerciaux et qui pourrait tenter aussi Radio-Canada qui a bien d'autres préoccupations quotidiennes. Par exemple, nous avons un grand programme que nous appelons «Challenge for Change» ou «Construire demain». C'est une série de films sur le problème de la pauvreté.

M. Nowlan: Est-ce que vous n'auriez pas pu affirmer cela?

M. McPherson: Je ne sais pas comment nous aurions pu affirmer un travail de ce genre. Je ne sais si vous voudriez demander à un producteur commercial de tourner des films sur un sujet de cette importance, un sujet vraiment très près de la politique gouvernementale. Avez-vous des commentaires, monsieur Spiller?

M. F. Spiller (Directeur de la production anglaise): Je pense que certaines parties de ce programme pourraient être affermées, mais ce programme «Construire demain» répond à une conception nouvelle et importante. Au lieu de considérer les aspects du film selon la planification des idées, de la production et de la distribution, il s'agit d'intégrer ici tous les éléments cinématographiques en un seul concept logique. Il ne s'agit pas en somme de chercher une formule commode. Il s'agit de mettre au point des idées de production, des conceptions nouvelles, et d'en faire l'expérience de façon à obtenir des réactions mesurables.

L'Office se trouve à cet égard dans une situation très particulière à cause de ses circuits de distribution, à cause des facilités dont il dispose pour mettre à l'épreuve certaines de ces conceptions.

Déjà nous constatons qu'un grand nombre de bureaux commerciaux, et même des of the US government, who have been observing our techniques here and adopting some of them. I suggest that the facility to make the experiment is something that we are in the unique position to do, and I do not think that kind of capability exists anywhere else. To answer your point, I think you could subcontract certain parts of such a program.

Dr. McPherson: May I elaborate on that just for a moment because this is very close to my heart. Challenge for Change and the techniques of making those films and using them is a revolutionary development in the use of audio-visual things. It is another first for the National Film Board, and it seems to me it is such an important first that we feel that the technique is exportable, that it could be used in underdeveloped countries. The United Nations has asked us for a demonstration of what we are doing in that area, and the American Office of Economic Opportunity, having borrowed a couple of our people, have planned three pilot projects to see if they, in their poverty program, can use the same technique. So I am—that kind of program I am tremendously proud of.

Mr. Nowlan: I would like to explore this further, Mr. Chairman. In considering the future of the Board and the question of refocusing and redefining, has the Grierson Report ever been tabled before this Committee? I understand it was the report that set up the Board?

The Chairman: I doubt very much, because this is a relatively new Committee, but I will look into it and let you know later.

Mr. Nowlan: This report set out the purposes of the Board back in the 1930's, or 1939 whenever it was, and I would like to know if it is possible to table that report before the Committee so they could look at it, and in reviewing it could either next year or later on this year, if Dr. McPherson comes back, ask meaningful questions in trying to develop the purposes then and the changing concepts for the future. Would it be possible to get that report and table it before this Committee?

The Chairman: I would imagine that report would be available from the library, but I will check and if it is not I will see if I can obtain sufficient copies.

Mr. Nowlan: Is it in the library?

The Chairman: I would imagine it would be.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not think it is.

[Interpretation]

bureaux du gouvernement américain, ont observé nos techniques ici et ont adopté certaines de nos idées. Toutefois, permettez-moi de vous dire que nous sommes particulièrement bien placés pour faire des expériences.

Ce genre de capacité, il me semble, n'existe nulle part ailleurs. Il est certain en tous cas que nous pourrions passer à des sous-traitants certaines parties de notre programme.

M. McPherson: C'est une question qui me touche de près. Me permettez-vous de m'arrêter un peu là-dessus? La façon technique dont nous procédons ici pour faire «Construire demain» et nous servir de ces films est une évolution dans le domaine audiovisuel. C'est encore une grande innovation pour l'Office national du film. Dans la mesure où l'on pense que cette technique est exportable, où elle pourra être utilisée dans des pays en voie de développement, la chose aura un intérêt particulier. Les Nations Unies s'y sont intéressées; le American Office of Economic Opportunity, qui nous a emprunté déjà quelques-uns de nos spécialistes, a lancé trois projets pilotes pour voir s'il ne pourrait pas employer les mêmes techniques dans sa lutte contre la pauvreté. Je suis donc très très fier de ces initiatives de l'Office.

M. Nowlan: J'aimerais poser une autre question, monsieur le président. On a parlé tout à l'heure de redéfinir, de refaire le point sur l'avenir. Est-ce que le rapport Grierson a jamais été déposé au Comité? Je crois que c'est précisément grâce à ce rapport que l'Office a été fondé.

Le président: J'en doute beaucoup, car le présent Comité est relativement nouveau, mais je me renseignerai.

M. Nowlan: Ce rapport, qui expose les buts de l'Office remonte aux années 30 ou à 1939, peut-être, et je me demande s'il serait possible de le déposer au Comité. Le Comité pourrait plus tard cette année ou l'an prochain revenir sur cette question. On pourra alors poser des questions plus utiles à M. McPherson en ce qui concerne l'évolution des buts et les changements de conception. Serait-il possible d'obtenir ce rapport et de le déposer au Comité?

Le président: Je suppose qu'on pourrait obtenir ce rapport à la Bibliothèque. Sinon, je verrai si je puis en obtenir un nombre suffisant de copies.

M. Nowlan: Ce rapport est-il à la Bibliothèque?

Le président: J'imagine qu'il y est.

M. Nowlan: Je ne pense pas.

The Chairman: But I will check and find out, and if we cannot find it in the library I will see if I can obtain a copy which we will lodge with the Clerk, and anybody wanting it can get it from him. Mr. Rose.

Mr. Rose: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to say in preamble that I share Mr. Givens' frustrations as a new Member of Parliament with the Committee work. It seems that the work around here tends to be legislation by exhaustion, or perhaps it is confusion. I am not certain.

The Chairman: Mr. Rose, your frustrations are nothing compared to those who have been around longer.

Mr. Rose: In visiting these Committees with all these experts around here I somewhat feel I am facing a tank and armed with a pea shooter. Nevertheless, I would like to say that there is some doubt, as far as I am concerned, cast upon the artistic competence of the members that are here with us from the National Film Board because there does not seem to be a beard or a way-out haircut in the lot.

An hon. Member: You should see the back-room boys.

Mr. Rose: I hope you will be as tolerant with me in regard to questions related to the topic as you have been previously. I would like to ask Dr. McPherson—first of all I would like to say that I have enjoyed hearing about his work. He is obviously enthusiastic and I congratulate him on his appointment and wish him all the best for his future with the Board.

I am particularly interested, sir, in educational films and films for TV, and I would like to know what percent of your production is devoted to that field?

Dr. McPherson: This one is very difficult to answer, Mr. Rose. For constitutional reason, education is dropping out of our vocabulary.

Mr. Rose: You have a euphemism?

Dr. McPherson: Let me put it this way, we make films for children and young people. This is our biggest audience, our most important audience. It is the Canada of tomorrow, and we feel it in the national interest to make as big a statement as we can, and films for children and young people would constitute—that percentage of the program, Mr. Spiller?

[Interprétation]

Le président: Je vais me renseigner, et si nous ne pouvons le trouver à la Bibliothèque, j'essaierai d'en obtenir une copie que je confierai au secrétaire et les gens qui s'intéressent à la question pourront le consulter là. Monsieur Rose.

M. Rose: Merci, monsieur le président. Je voudrais dire tout de suite que je partage les frustrations de M. Givens qui est un nouveau député et qui comprend mal le travail des comités. Le travail ici semble orienté vers une mesure législative par la méthode d'exhaustion, ou peut-être est-ce la confusion. Je n'en suis pas sûr.

Le président: Vos frustrations ne sont rien à côté de celles de ceux qui ont été là très longtemps.

M. Rose: Ces comités avec tous ces experts me troublent. C'est comme si je me trouvais armé d'un tire-poix en face d'un char d'assaut. Néanmoins, en ce qui me concerne, je me demande si les membres de l'Office national du film qui se trouvent parmi nous sont vraiment des artistes: personne n'a de barbe ni de cheveux longs.

Une voix: Vous devriez voir les sans-grades.

M. Rose: J'espère que vous serez aussi tolérant avec moi que vous l'avez été auparavant en ce qui concerne le sujet attaqué. Je voudrais demander à M. McPherson—tout d'abord, je voudrais dire que j'ai été très intéressé par ce qu'il nous a dit au sujet de son travail. Quel enthousiasme il manifeste! Je le félicite de sa nomination. J'espère que tout ira bien pour lui à l'Office.

Je m'intéresse particulièrement aux films éducatifs et aux films pour la télévision. Quel pourcentage de votre production est consacré à ce domaine?

M. McPherson: Il est très difficile de répondre à cette question, monsieur Rose. Pour des raisons constitutionnelles, l'éducation ne peut pas être utilisée dans notre vocabulaire.

M. Rose: Est-ce que c'est un euphémisme?

M. McPherson: Disons que nous faisons des films pour les enfants et les jeunes. C'est le Canada de demain, c'est notre public le plus grand, le plus important, et nous pensons qu'il est dans l'intérêt national de faire... de nous adresser à eux dans toute la mesure du possible et les films pour les enfants et les jeunes constituent... quel pourcentage de nos programmes, monsieur Spiller?

[Text]

Mr. Spiller: Approximately one-eighth, I would say, perhaps more, one-sixth.

Dr. McPherson: Yes, specifically films directed at that youthful audience, about one-eighth. If we looked at the total production patterns, we could get a different figure because many of the films we use are multiple, have multiple uses. We find that some of the most far-out things we have done are—that high school students dig them like mad, and they were not designed for that audience, but here are these people just wild to read these documents.

On the television side, again I would have to ask one of the directors for the figure. Again it will not be a large percentage of the program done specifically for television.

Mr. Spiller: Our total television effort would be something of the order of about one-eighth, perhaps, of our total effort.

Mr. Rose: But since you would like to avoid the term "educational films", could we say that they are entertainment films, or knowledge films, or how do you describe this?

Dr. McPherson: You might call some of them general interest, a great many of them general interest films, but they really cover the whole range from animation, things like The Drag which we did for Miss LaMarsh and she gave up smoking. It worked.

Mr. Dinsdale: So did Mr. Munro.

Dr. McPherson: He must have seen The Drag too. To film strips on the federal Houses of Parliament, for example. To a film called Phoebe which was intended for an adult audience. It deals with teenage pregnancy. It turned out to be an extraordinary film technically, and we find that it has been very widely used in the schools. It is difficult to...

• 1120

Mr. Rose: I wonder if you could elaborate on this business of visual aids other than films, either for TV or for projection within the classroom or auditorium. Such things as film strips, loops and that sort of thing. Could you give the Committee some idea of your efforts in this regard?

Dr. McPherson: The efforts are extensive. I was talking to one of the leading American commercial producers not long ago, and he is in the educational field. Of all the audio-visual materials, film occupies about 85 per cent of the work of his firm. Film strips are the second most useful and second most in demand. We have had a film strip program that goes back some distance.

[Interpretation]

M. Spiller: Environ un huitième, peut-être un peu plus, un sixième.

M. McPherson: Des films pour le public jeune, un huitième, mais si on examine l'ensemble, le chiffre est différent car nombre de films ont de nombreux usages. Certaines des choses les plus avancées que nous avons faites sont parfaitement comprises, pigées par les élèves des écoles secondaires. Ils n'étaient pas prévus pour ce public-là. Vraiment, ça les intéresse beaucoup; ils veulent absolument avoir ces documents.

En ce qui concerne la télévision, une fois de plus je dois demander à un des directeurs quels sont les chiffres. Ce ne sera pas un gros pourcentage du programme pour la télévision.

M. Spiller: Il s'agit de l'ensemble de notre travail pour la télévision. C'est de l'ordre d'un huitième de notre travail.

M. Rose: Comme vous voulez éviter le mot «film éducatif», pourrions-nous dire qu'il s'agit de films scientifiques, de films pour la distraction, ou quelque chose d'autre?

M. McPherson: Certains sont des films d'ordre général. Ce sont des films d'ordre général mais qui couvrent tous les domaines possibles depuis les dessins animés. «The Drag» que nous avons fait pour M<sup>lle</sup> LaMarsh... Elle a cessé de fumer. Cela a réussi.

M. Dinsdale: M. Munro aussi.

M. McPherson: Il a dû voir «The Drag». Des films sur le Parlement fédéral ou encore un film qui s'intitule «Phoebe», destiné aux adultes, et qui a pour sujet les jeunes filles enceintes. Ce film s'est révélé extraordinaire au point de vue technique et nous constatons qu'il a été très suivi dans les écoles. Il est difficile...

M. Rose: Pourriez-vous nous donner des détails au sujet des audiovisuels en dehors des films, que ce soit pour la télévision ou pour la projection dans la classe ou l'auditorium. Des choses comme les films fixes, les bouts de film ou des choses comme ça? Que faites-vous dans ce domaine?

M. MacPherson: Nous faisons beaucoup de choses. J'ai parlé à un des producteurs américains commerciaux des plus importants; il s'occupe des films éducatifs. De tous les matériels audiovisuels, les films représentent 85 p. 100 du travail de sa société. Les films fixes sont le deuxième élément le plus important et le plus en demande. Nous avons déjà eu un programme de projection fixe.

[Texte]

Film loops is a technique that is not solidly established as yet. We are reviewing our program at the moment in loops, wondering whether this will finally catch on, but we are being rather cautious. Still photographs of course we produce by the thousands a year, and we have a huge library here available.

Mr. Rose: In the matter of film strips, do you watch the commercial market from the United States very carefully to see that you are not duplicating such things that might—various instructional things or science strips so that you will avoid unnecessary expenditure at this level, if this material is available elsewhere. You are very conscious...

Dr. McPherson: I would say we are highly, acutely conscious.

Mr. Rose: Do you tend to avoid an area that might be pretty well established commercially to avoid competing even though the Board might be perhaps in a position to make a better film, or film strip?

Dr. McPherson: This has become a major policy question, and again it takes me right back to what is in the national interest. We aim at making materials that might not be available elsewhere, for which there is a felt need. We are very conscious of Canadian content, of a Canadian orientation in everything we do really, but certainly for the youth audience. Somehow or other our production is extremely small.

My Director of Planning informed me not long ago that if we devoted our total production to films for school age and if classrooms across Canada had half an hour a day of film, that everything we make would occupy 0.4 of one per cent of that appetite. It is staggering to think of what is going to be needed. Then if we think it is our role in the national interest to have some Canadian material in that tremendous program, it is vital that we do this if we are going to survive, if we are going to keep an identity of our own.

Mr. Rose: May I as a member encourage you to do so. Perhaps you are aware that this Committee is also interested in aid to the arts. I have been a teacher and I was particularly impressed—perhaps the proper word would be “depressed”—with the quality of the films that deal with various forms of music and art that are available through all sources. Could you tell us anything about your production in that area? Most of the films I have seen are commercially available, but usually they are very ancient and not very good.

[Interprétation]

Les bandes de films sont d'une technique non encore établie de façon bien précise. Nous étudions nos programmes pour l'instant. En ce qui concerne ces bouts de films, nous nous demandons si cela prendra, mais nous sommes prudents. Les photographies de films sont produites par milliers; il y a une énorme photothèque disponible.

M. Rose: En ce qui concerne les films fixes, est-ce que vous examinez très attentivement ce que font les Américains pour ne pas reproduire ce qu'ils font comme les films éducatifs ou des films fixes scientifiques, pour éviter des dépenses inutiles à ce niveau si ce matériel existe ailleurs. Vous vous rendez bien compte...

M. McPherson: Nous en sommes très conscients.

M. Rose: Est-ce que vous essayez d'éviter un domaine bien établi du point de vue commercial pour éviter de faire concurrence même si l'Office peut faire un meilleur film ou un meilleur film fixe?

M. McPherson: C'est une question politique importante. Cela nous ramène à ce qui est dans l'intérêt national. Nous essayons de produire du matériel qui n'est pas disponible ailleurs, pour lequel un besoin très net se fait sentir. Nous sommes parfaitement conscients du contenu canadien ou d'une orientation canadienne dans tout ce que nous faisons, vraiment, mais pour les jeunes en particulier. D'une façon ou d'une autre, notre production est très faible.

Mon directeur de la planification m'a dit récemment que si nous consacrons l'ensemble de notre production aux films pour les enfants d'âge scolaire et si les classes au Canada, d'un bout à l'autre avaient une demi-heure par jour, tout ce que nous ferions satisferait à 0.4 p. 100 de ces besoins. Ces besoins sont absolument effrayants.

Si nous estimons que, dans l'intérêt de la nation, nous nous devons d'avoir quelques éléments canadiens dans ce programme énorme, il est vital que nous y veillions si nous voulons survivre, si nous voulons conserver notre identité.

M. Rose: Permettez-moi, à titre de député, de vous y encourager vivement. Vous savez peut-être que ce comité a aussi un intérêt dans l'assistance aux arts. J'ai fait de l'enseignement, et j'ai été particulièrement impressionné—ou plutôt déprimé—par la qualité des films traitant de diverses formes de musique ou d'art que l'on peut se procurer des différentes sources.

Pourriez-vous nous parler de ce que vous produisez dans ce domaine? Les films que j'ai vus sont disponibles dans le commerce, mais

Dr. McPherson: Perhaps one of the production people would like to speak to this. We do film strips on painting and sculpture. In the past few years we have done a couple of films on ballet. We have done some on music, and these have ranged from Paul Anka's Lonely Boy—lonely Ottawa boy—to even very serious musical experiments. My background is very much involved with the arts and I hope we will do even more, but at the moment I am satisfied with the program that we are doing. Mr. Dignard?

M. Dignard: Depuis le début de l'année, nous avons déjà cinq films qui parlent d'art, la production française, quoi, sur l'art, soit les peintres ou la musique.

Dr. McPherson: Did Mr. Dignard give you enough information, Mr. Rose?

Mr. Rose: Yes. I would merely like to say that I do not feel there is enough available. I am not acquainted with it and perhaps that is my fault. However, I get the distinct feeling that this might be an area in which we might move.

Dr. McPherson: Yes.

Mr. Rose: I do not want to presume upon the time of the Committee much longer, but I have a very general question that has been touched on a number of times before. You mentioned several times the program Challenge for Change which deals with the matter of poverty. To many people this is often a regional and a political question. On a matter as controversial as poverty how do you avoid the possibility of political, social, cultural and religious bias without ending up in a very, very gray area or producing a gray product, an emasculated product?

Dr. McPherson: Perhaps there are two sides to this. We feel that the overriding policy in production, when we touch on any matter dealing with public affairs, is that the treatment must be balanced. So, we avoid editorializing; we try to record in order to make what seems to be an honest statement. At the same time we are aware that statements of this kind will not please everyone. If they did, they surely would not be worth making. So, films that the Board has made have repeatedly come under attack from various quarters.

[Interpretation]

ils sont généralement très vieux et pas très bons.

M. McPherson: Peut-être que l'un des responsables de la production pourrait nous en parler. Nous faisons des films sur la peinture et sur la sculpture. Au cours des dernières années, nous avons produit deux films sur le ballet. Nous en avons fait sur la musique, depuis le «Lonely Boy» de Paul Anka—le solitaire d'Ottawa—jusqu'à des expériences musicales très sérieuses. Je me suis toujours beaucoup intéressé aux arts, et j'espère que nous ferons encore mieux mais, pour le moment, je suis satisfait du programme que nous suivons, Monsieur Dignard?

Mr. Gilles Dignard (Director of Production (French): We have art production. Since the first of the year we already have had five French art films...all of which dealt either with painting or music.

M. McPherson: Est-ce que ces renseignements vous suffisent, monsieur Rose?

M. Rose: Oui. Je voudrais simplement dire qu'à mon avis, il n'y a pas suffisamment de films disponibles dans ce domaine. Je ne suis pas tellement au courant, et c'est peut-être de ma faute. Mais j'ai l'impression très nette que c'est un domaine dans lequel nous pourrions agir.

M. McPherson: Oui.

M. Rose: Je ne veux pas faire perdre trop de temps au Comité. Mais il y a une question très générale dont on a déjà parlé bien des fois. Vous avez parlé plusieurs fois de la série de films intitulée «Construire demain», qui traite de la question de la pauvreté. Pour bien des gens, cela constitue souvent une question régionale, et une question de politique. Dans un domaine qui prête autant à controverse que la pauvreté, comment évite-t-on la possibilité de préjugés politiques, sociaux, culturels et religieux sans aboutir à des résultats très confus ou sans fournir un produit terne, un produit sans vigueur?

M. McPherson: Il y a peut-être deux aspects à cette question. Nous estimons que la politique prédominante en matière de production, lorsque nous traitons de questions relatives aux affaires publiques, est de veiller à traiter la question de façon équilibrée. Nous évitons de faire des éditoriaux; nous essayons d'enregistrer en vue de faire ce qui nous semble être une déclaration honnête. D'autre part, nous savons que des déclarations de ce genre ne peuvent plaire à tout le monde. Heureusement, d'ailleurs, sinon elles ne vaudraient certainement pas la peine d'être faites. Donc,

[Texte]

People have asked us to withdraw a film which deals with their district. We are able to say that on balance there has been a lot of favourable comment as well and we feel we must have the courage to present this statement. It is always a difficult line to walk, if you wish, but I think it is very clear—and I hope you will agree—that if we made merely bland films then we would indeed be—I do not know—a propaganda agency.

Mr. Rose: No, I would agree. This is what I was coming to, and I think Mr. Dinsdale touched on the same thing. I would hope that you would be extremely controversial. Thank you very much, Dr. McPherson. I also wish to thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was hoping that you might elaborate on your specific plans for the future of your Board. I felt that you were suggesting a refocusing, but I was not really satisfied with the way in which you had aimed the focus or whether it was broadened or narrowed, and I hope that perhaps someone else can have an opportunity to discuss this further. Thank you very much.

Mr. Givens: I am trying to understand the end relationship between the CBC and the National Film Board. I take it that your primary intention is always, if not educational—because that is a bad word federally—it is intellectual osmosis, because the message must come across. Is that right?

Dr. McPherson: Right.

Mr. Givens: So that primarily what you are producing generally is what in the broad sense is good for Canadians.

Dr. McPherson: We do not like to put it that way, Mr. Givens.

Mr. Givens: Would you ever consider just telling a story, a romance, because it happens to be authored by a Canadian or because it is a Canadian romance or a Canadian love story?

Dr. McPherson: Yes, indeed.

Mr. Givens: You would?

Dr. McPherson: Indeed.

Mr. Givens: I think I understand. All right.

[Interprétation]

à de très nombreuses reprises, des films produits par l'Office ont été critiqués par divers secteurs de la population.

Certaines personnes nous ont demandé de retirer un film se rapportant à leur région. Nous pouvons dire que, pour compenser, il y a eu aussi beaucoup de commentaires favorables, et nous devons, à notre avis, avoir le courage de présenter cet aspect des choses. C'est toujours une position difficile à soutenir, je l'admets, mais j'espère que vous reconnaîtrez que, de toute évidence, si nous ne faisons que des films édulcorés, nous ne serions rien d'autre qu'un organisme de propagande.

M. Rose: Je suis entièrement de votre avis. Voilà justement où je voulais en venir, et je crois que M. Dinsdale en a vaguement parlé lui aussi. J'espère bien, que vous faites des films qui prêtent extrêmement à controverse. Merci beaucoup, monsieur McPherson, et vous, monsieur le président. J'espérais que vous alliez pouvoir nous donner avec plus de détails vos projets pour l'avenir de l'Office. J'avais l'impression que vous parliez d'une remise au point, mais je n'ai pas vraiment saisi dans quel sens elle se ferait, ou s'il s'agirait d'un élargissement ou d'un rétrécissement. J'espère que quelqu'un d'autre pourra peut-être reparler de cette question. Merci beaucoup.

M. Givens: J'essaie de comprendre les rapports qu'il y aura finalement entre Radio-Canada et l'Office national du film. Je crois comprendre que votre intention primordiale est toujours de réaliser, sinon un objectif éducatif—car c'est là un mauvais terme au niveau fédéral—du moins une osmose intellectuelle, car il faut que les deux groupes se comprennent. Est-ce exact?

M. McPherson: Oui.

M. Givens: Donc, fondamentalement, ce que vous produisez en général est ce qui est, au sens large du terme, au goût des Canadiens.

M. McPherson: Nous n'aimons pas envisager la chose sous cet angle, monsieur Givens.

M. Givens: Est-ce que vous envisageriez de raconter une histoire, ou une histoire d'amour, simplement parce qu'il se trouve que l'auteur en est un Canadien ou que c'est une histoire d'amour canadienne?

M. McPherson: Oui, bien sûr.

M. Givens: Vraiment?

M. McPherson: Mais oui.

M. Givens: Je crois que je comprends. Entendu.

[Text]

Dr. McPherson: If I may just add one sentence to this. We are in the communications field and we recognize that there are occasions when the best way to make a statement is to make it in fictional terms. Feature films are the dominant communication form today once we get beyond newspapers, and so on. If we feel that through a theatrical film we can achieve something that is close to our interests, then that is the way to do it. Quite a few of our films take this theatrical form.

• 1130

The Chairman: Mr. Osler, on a short last question.

Mr. Osler: On the last question?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Osler: My question really goes back to the program Challenge for Change, and although it may change the direction of the questioning a bit I think you will probably allow it. Presumably the program Challenge for Change is to be designed with very definite objectives in mind; exposing poverty, suggesting means of alleviating poverty, showing what the challenge is, and so on. Who sees a film like that? I have always been worried about your distribution facilities and if the Chairman will allow it I would like you to give an expanded answer to that question rather than a narrow one. I am just referring to Challenge for Change.

Dr. McPherson: I will first have to go into the technique of the program a bit. Film makers, very often working with community development workers, go into a problem area. They get to know the people and they get close enough to the people to take advice on what should be filmed. They are going to make a record. When they have done the shooting they go back to the community with some rough assemblies and say to the people, "Have we stated the problem as you understand it?" Simply by the act of making the film and editing it the people in the community begin to understand, it seems to me, in a way that could not be done by any speech that you could make or by any official document you could give them. Very often these people are not great readers of books.

In the project we did on Fogo Island in Newfoundland the next step was to go to the provincial Cabinet. The Cabinet saw the film and they felt they understood the Fogo Island problem in a way they had never realized before. If we receive permission at each step

[Interpretation]

M. McPherson: Si vous me permettez d'ajouter quelques mots. Nous travaillons dans le domaine des communications, et nous reconnaissons qu'il y a des cas où la meilleure façon de transmettre un message est de le présenter sous forme d'œuvre d'imagination. Les longs métrages sont la forme dominante de communication à l'heure actuelle, mis à part les journaux, etc. Et si nous pensons que grâce à un film spectaculaire nous pouvons arriver à quelque chose qui est conforme à nos intérêts, c'est alors ce qu'il nous faut faire. Un nombre assez important de nos films sont de ces films spectaculaires.

Le président: Monsieur Osler, une dernière question brève?

M. Osler: Sur le dernier sujet?

Le président: Oui.

M. Osler: Ma question, au fait, nous ramène au programme «Construire demain», et, bien qu'elle puisse modifier un peu l'orientation du questionnaire, je pense que vous n'y verrez pas d'inconvénient. Je suppose que la série de films «Construire demain» va être conçue suivant des objectifs très précis: montrer la pauvreté, proposer des moyens de la soulager, exposer en quoi consiste le défi, et ainsi de suite. Qui va voir des films de ce genre? Je me suis toujours demandé quelles étaient vos possibilités de distribution, et, avec la permission du président, j'aimerais que vous répondiez à cette question en détail. Je veux seulement parler de la série de films «Construire demain».

M. McPherson: Il faut que j'expose un peu l'aspect technique du programme. Les producteurs, qui travaillent très souvent avec des travailleurs sociaux, vont dans une région à problèmes. Ils font la connaissance des gens, et ils établissent des rapports assez étroits avec eux pour leur demander leur avis sur ce qui devrait être filmé. Ils font les prises de vue, ils retournent dans le village, montrent aux gens quelques montages, et leur demandent: «Avons-nous bien rendu le problème tel que vous le voyez?» En faisant le film et en faisant le découpage, les gens de la collectivité comprennent mieux il me semble, qu'avec n'importe quel discours ou n'importe quel document officiel. Très souvent, ces gens lisent assez peu.

Après les prises de vues que nous avions faites à l'île Fogo, à Terre-Neuve, nous nous sommes rendus au Cabinet de la province. Les ministres, après avoir vu le film, ont estimé qu'ils comprenaient le problème de l'île Fogo beaucoup mieux qu'avant. Lorsque nous we can distribute these films more broadly. However, their initial purpose is achieved when the thing is done in the community. Some of these films will be suitable for perhaps national or international distribution, and with proper permission they may be distributed in that way.

They are also extremely useful for professional welfare people or people in the field of sociology, who can see how the technique works and will be able to apply the technique to other situations. The distribution department is very intimately involved in this. It is a new kind of distribution. Our people in the field are involved in the total communication process.

Mr. Osler: May I stop you for a moment. Is the concept of this, really, that confession is good for the soul, that in a way this is therapeutic psychology or psychiatry? As I see it, what you are doing is showing people how things actually are and how solutions might come about or how they might be suggested. They play this back almost like somebody on a psychiatrist's couch, or something, and from that they gain self knowledge, so that the audience could have been the people that made the film?

Dr. McPherson: Yes.

• 1135

Mr. Osler: And that is it.

Dr. McPherson: It is a palliatory process. In many ways it seems to me it is very close to the kind of thing Mr. Trudeau is talking about when he speaks of participatory democracy, in which somehow or other these people who cannot write it in a letter and who, as I say, are often not very great readers, but here it is and they say that this is how they feel, so it is a new and, in my view, an extremely important communications technique.

Mr. Osler: But then it does not necessarily have anything to do with what we, as ordinary people who are not particularly with it, would consider to be a film production. From an ordinary man's point of view it may be something that never is, in fact, produced.

Dr. McPherson: I notice that both heads of production want to speak to this because they are both involved.

Mr. Osler: I am wondering if this is it.

obtenons à chaque étape la permission nécessaire, nous pouvons distribuer ces films à une échelle plus vaste. Toutefois, le but principal du film est atteint si ce dernier porte ses fruits dans la collectivité intéressée. Certains de ces films pourront peut-être être distribués à l'échelle nationale ou internationale, si nous obtenons l'autorisation nécessaire.

Ils peuvent être utiles également pour les travailleurs sociaux professionnels ou pour les sociologues, qui peuvent voir comment marche cette technique, puis l'appliquer à d'autres situations. Le service de la distribution s'occupe de façon très directe de ces travaux. C'est une nouvelle forme de distribution. Ceux de nos collaborateurs qui font ces travaux sur place ont à s'occuper de l'ensemble du processus de communication.

M. Osler: Permettez-moi de vous interrompre un instant. Est-ce que tout cela se fonde vraiment sur le principe que la confession soulage et qu'il s'agit, en quelque sorte, de psychologie ou de psychiatrie thérapeutique? Il me semble que ce que vous faites, au fond, c'est de montrer aux gens la situation réelle, et comment arriver à des solutions ou comment les proposer? Ils font défiler tout cela, presque comme le patient sur le divan du psychiatre et, par ce moyen, ils apprennent à mieux se connaître. Donc, les spectateurs pourraient être, en fin de compte, les gens qui ont fait le film?

M. McPherson: Oui.

M. Osler: Et c'est d'ailleurs le cas.

M. McPherson: C'est un processus curatif. En bien des sens, il me semble que cela se rapproche beaucoup de ce que veut dire M. Trudeau quand il parle de démocratie de participation. Très souvent, ces gens, qui ne sont pas capables d'écrire une lettre et qui, je l'ai dit, lisent fort peu, peuvent alors dire: «Voilà ce que nous ressentons». C'est une technique de communication nouvelle et, à mon avis, très importante.

M. Osler: Mais cela n'a alors pas forcément grand-chose à voir avec ce que nous, en tant que personnes ordinaires qui ne sommes pas particulièrement concernées par la chose, considérerions comme étant une production cinématographique. Pour l'homme de la rue, ce peut être un film qui, en fait, n'est jamais produit.

M. McPherson: Les deux directeurs de la production veulent en parler, car cela les intéresse.

M. Osler: Je me demande si c'est bien cela.

[Text]

Mr. Dignard: That is the new concept in which film enters into the picture now. We have discovered that most social situations are related to a lack of communication and we have discovered with responsible people that film is the best channel to permit that communication. As soon as that objective is achieved we consider that the film has attained its "raison d'être". We are satisfied with it and if it can be used in other regions where similar problems exist, that is good, but we consider that to be a secondary objective.

It is also amazing to see that once the film is started, problems already start to be solved by responsible persons. Sometimes the film has already been passed when it is shown in its final form. The events are already ahead of the film and we consider this of great significance for the use of the medium that we foresee.

Dr. McPherson: But we should add, Mr. Osler, that we think of three phases in this program too. There are some of the films which are used in a very local way and which may never be seen outside a community or a province, that kind of audience. You perhaps remember the program we did for television a year ago called The Things I Cannot Change. That film was designed for a national audience. There are others that are designed for people who go to a theatre for entertainment and they bear on different questions. One of them was a series of drawings of Indian people by John Gould. It was an artistic record of phases of Indian life.

Mr. Osler: I am sorry to labour this point, Mr. Chairman, but if you went into a community—and I will try and keep it at the federal level and not step on anyone's toes—and you decided to do a series on Indian problems and you get, as you say, permissions all the way up presumably, then, the Indian Affairs department at some point would have to be in on the decision-making process. If the Indian Affairs department at some level said, No, then that is censorship from a propaganda point of view. If the Indian Affairs department says, Yes, it could still be construed as censorship from a propaganda point of view.

I do not know that these dangers are, in fact, real but it seems to me that it would be possible to have a situation that could become very unhealthy unless you people had so much integrity that you said, "To hell with it," and blew the whole story wide open.

In other words, you have to be a completely impartial agent or there would be danger

[Interpretation]

M. Dignard: C'est une nouvelle conception selon laquelle le film entre immédiatement en ligne de compte.

Nous avons constaté que la plupart des situations sociales viennent d'une absence de communications et que les films sont le meilleur moyen d'établir ces communications. Dès que cet objectif est atteint, nous considérons que le film a sa raison d'être. S'il peut être utilisé dans d'autres régions où des problèmes comparables existent, c'est très bien, mais nous considérons que c'est un objectif secondaire.

Il est surprenant de voir que, une fois que le film est commencé, les problèmes commencent déjà à être résolus par les responsables. Parfois le film est déjà dépassé lorsqu'il est montré sous sa forme finale. Et les événements dépassent le film. Et cela, croyons-nous, a une grande signification pour le moyen de diffusion, pour l'utilisation du moyen de diffusion.

M. McPherson: Et, nous devons ajouter, monsieur Osler, qu'il y a trois phases dans le programme. Certains films sont utilisés sur un plan purement local. Parfois, ils ne seront jamais vus en dehors d'une localité d'une province. Il y en a d'autres. Vous vous souvenez peut-être de ce qu'on a fait pour la télévision, il y a un an: «The Things I Cannot Change». Ce film était destiné au Canada entier. Il y en a d'autres qui sont prévus pour les cinémas, pour les gens qui vont au cinéma pour se distraire. Il y en a de toute sorte. Il s'agit par exemple de films sur les Indiens, comme celui qu'a fait John Gould. Il s'agit d'un témoignage artistique sur la vie des Indiens.

M. Osler: Je suis désolé de continuer, monsieur le président, mais si vous alliez dans un village et essayiez de rester au niveau fédéral sans marcher sur les plates-bandes de personne, et que vous fassiez une série sur les problèmes des Indiens, et que vous ayez toutes les permissions nécessaires.

Il est à supposer que le ministère des Affaires indiennes devrait participer à la prise de décisions. Si le ministère des Affaires indiennes, à un certain moment, disait non, alors c'est en quelque sorte de la censure au point de vue propagande. Si le ministère des Affaires indiennes dit oui, cela pourrait aussi être considéré comme de la censure au point de vue propagande.

Je ne sais pas si ces dangers sont réels, mais il me semble que la situation pourrait devenir très malsaine, à moins que vous ne soyez assez intégrés pour dire: «au diable!» et que vous racontiez tous ce que vous êtes complètement impartiaux, des agents complètement impartiaux, ou alors, vous risquez de devenir une agence de propagande pour les of you becoming a propaganda agency for either Indian Affairs or the local fire department, or you name it, whoever you have to get permission from. Right?

Dr. McPherson: The danger is always present, I suppose. I must say we have done a series of films on Indian problems as part of the "Challenge For Change" program. Some aspects of those documents, as I would call them, were rather disturbing for the people in Indian Affairs and I must say to the credit of the integrity of the people involved in that Department that they saw the films, did not feel that they were entirely complimentary and accepted them, because they felt that the statement was honest. Would you like to speak to that, Mr. Jobbins?

• 1140

Mr. Jobbins: Yes. Not all the films that have been used on these programs are of a type that describe a situation in a community. Some of the films are used by people who are already engaged in doing something in the poverty field to help the work they are doing.

There are places in some of our urban communities where children—pre-schoolers—are almost unable to talk. They have not had the practice of talking in their homes and this is one of the problems the schools have with them. The teachers are quite ready to use material that will help them to train the children to talk and in most cases they are using more and more films that were not intended primarily for the poverty programs but were intended initially for other uses.

This allows the teachers and some of our people an opportunity for creative use of film of a very wide variety. Some films on art, and so on, are used to teach children to talk and to communicate with each other.

The Chairman: With the indulgence of the Committee, may I end the questioning here? We do have the Canadian Film Development Corporation to hear before one o'clock. I wonder, too, if I might also ask Dr. McPherson whether, when we come down to Montreal to tour the Board's premises, he might also provide a showing of a variety of these films which you have been discussing, in both English and French? This might, I think, greatly assist us in questioning you more extensively. Perhaps next year when we meet to discuss your estimates—probably in January or February—we might take the precaution of going down to Montreal before having a questioning period, and perhaps we might Affaires indiennes, ou pour les pompiers d'un endroit quelconque, etc., peu importe qui vous donne la permission. Pas vrai?

M. McPherson: Le danger existe toujours, sans doute. Je dois dire que nous avons fait une série de films sur les problèmes des Indiens, dans le cadre du programme «Construire demain».

Certains aspects de ces documents, comme nous les appelons, étaient assez troublants pour les gens du ministère des Affaires indiennes, mais je dois dire, et cela prouve l'intégrité des gens du ministère, qu'ils ont vu les films, n'ont pas pensé que ces films étaient très flatteurs, mais les ont acceptés, car ils pensaient que le témoignage était honnête. Est-ce que vous voulez parler monsieur Jobbins?

M. Jobbins: Tous les films de ce genre ne décrivent pas la situation d'un village ou d'une collectivité donnée. Certains sont utilisés par des gens qui font déjà quelque chose dans le domaine de la pauvreté, pour aider à leur propre travail.

Dans certaines de nos collectivités urbaines, les enfants d'âge préscolaire ne peuvent presque pas parler et n'ont pas eu l'occasion de parler à la maison; c'est un des problèmes qu'ils posent aux écoles. Les instituteurs sont prêts à se servir de films pour aider les enfants à parler; la plupart du temps ils se servent de films qui n'étaient pas prévus, au départ, pour les programmes de lutte contre la pauvreté, mais qui étaient destinés à d'autres utilisations.

Cela permet aux instituteurs et à certaines de nos gens de se servir des films de façon créatrice, des films très divers, des films sur l'art, par exemple. Ce qui permet d'apprendre aux enfants à parler, à communiquer les uns avec les autres.

Le président: Nous devons mettre fin à la période des questions car nous devons recevoir la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique avant une heure. Monsieur McPherson, lorsque nous irons à Montréal pour visiter les installations de l'Office, est-ce que vous pourrez nous montrer certains de ces films, en français et en anglais, qui nous aideront à mieux vous interroger?

Peut-être que l'année prochaine, lorsque nous étudierons le budget, en janvier ou en février, nous pourrions aller à Montréal avant de vous interroger, ou même tenir un interrogatoire à Montréal, ce qui conviendrait peut-être davantage, étant donné le genre de com-even arrange to have an examination at your quarters in Montreal, which I think would be a bit more appropriate, given the type of communications in which you are involved. Perhaps we might end up making a film as a Committee ourselves.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, I think it would save time, if it is agreeable to the others, to have if possible some kind of statement from the Board about their distribution habits. As a layman I do not see as many National Film Board pictures as I would like to and I am told that it is difficult to get into theatres; for instance, it is difficult to reach the general public. I would like some commentary on that. Probably it could be done in a written form if you do not want to do it now.

The Chairman: You do not want it in film?

Mr. Osler: Not in film, no.

Dr. McPherson: I would be very happy to speak to that briefly, Mr. Osler, because I think it is one of the most serious problems facing the National Film Board today. The reason, to be very blunt about it, is the more urban we get the more difficult it gets for urban people to see National Film Board films. We get fine distribution through our own branch in schools, in community halls, in rural areas; there is no problem here at all, but in commercial theatres people tell me repeatedly that they feel they are not seeing our work.

We happen to know there is no major distributor of Canadian origin. Am I right in saying that, Mr. Jobbins? I know of one Canadian distribution company but the major distributors are not based in Canada. We tend to see all kinds of films about water skiing in the Everglades and skindiving off New Mexico and somehow or other NFB shorts do not turn up on these programs as often as we would wish.

The problems related to this distribution block—I think it is getting worse, and, as I say, the bigger our cities get the greater the problem grows—is one of the most challenging things that I have to solve as Government Film Commissioner and I think it is my responsibility to solve it, not just for the National Film Board but, to come back to Mr. Dinsdale's interest, to solve it for Canadian film makers.

Mr. Osler: Is this a thing that should go before the Consumer and Corporate Affairs Department or is it a natural business problem you think can be solved?

[Interpretation]

munications dont vous vous occupez. Nous ferons peut-être un film nous-mêmes, en tant que Comité.

M. Osler: Monsieur le président, nous pourrions gagner du temps, si vous êtes d'accord, si l'Office nous faisait un exposé de ses méthodes de distribution. Je ne vois pas autant de films de l'Office national du film que je le voudrais. Et on me dit qu'il est difficile de les projeter dans les cinémas. Il est difficile alors d'atteindre le grand public. Vous pourriez peut-être faire une déclaration à ce sujet, une déclaration écrite, si vous ne voulez pas la faire tout de suite.

Le président: Vous ne voulez pas qu'on en fasse un film?

M. Osler: Pas de film pour l'amour du ciel!

M. McPherson: Je serais très heureux d'en parler, brièvement, monsieur Osler, car c'est un des problèmes les plus importants qui se posent présentement à l'Office national du film. Et la raison est celle-ci:—je vais être brutal, franc—plus le Canada s'urbanise, plus il est difficile aux citadins de voir les films de l'Office national du film. Nous avons une bonne distribution dans les écoles, dans les salles de loisirs, dans les régions rurales; il n'y a aucune difficulté. Mais en ce qui concerne les cinémas commerciaux, les gens nous disent tout le temps qu'ils ne voient pas nos œuvres.

Il n'existe pas de distributeur important d'origine canadienne, n'est-ce pas, monsieur Jobbins? Je connais une seule et unique compagnie de distribution canadienne, mais les grandes compagnies ne sont pas canadiennes. Nous aimons voir beaucoup de films, par exemple, sur le ski nautique dans les Everglades et sur la plongée sous-marine au Nouveau-Mexique, mais les courts métrages de l'Office national du film ne traitent pas de ces sujets aussi souvent que nous le voudrions.

Le problème, en ce qui concerne la distribution, est du reste un problème qui s'aggrave; plus grandes sont nos villes, plus grave est le problème. Et c'est l'un des défis les plus importants que j'ai à relever en ma qualité de commissaire de l'Office national du film, et je dois le relever, non pas seulement pour l'ONF, mais aussi, pour en revenir à ce que disait M. Dinsdale, pour les producteurs canadiens.

M. Osler: Ce problème devrait-il être soumis au ministère de la Consommation et des Corporations ou pourriez-vous le résoudre vous-même?

Dr. McPherson: I am not ready, Mr. Osler, to give an answer on that. I would wish to explore the question. The Canadian Film Development Corporation, when it gets into operation, is going to have a similar problem to solve and I would hope to co-operate with the Chairman of the Canadian Film Development Corporation, but it seems to me a major question to which we do not have an immediate answer.

Mr. Osler: You do not own a chain of theatres?

Dr. McPherson: No.

The Chairman: Mr. McPherson, on behalf of the Committee I would...

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, are we closing off questions.

The Chairman: We have the Canadian Film Development Corporation and we do have a deadline of one o'clock. We have a limitation of time and space and since both these groups have come down from Montreal we are not as flexible as we are with Ottawa-based people.

Mr. Dinsdale: I do not think we can arbitrarily close off questioning, again if the Committee is going to function successfully. You mentioned the tour in Montreal but the tour is not on the record and this actually is an extension of our Parliamentary procedure. I am a reasonable individual and I have questions that overlap actually with the Canadian Film Development Corporation, but there was one branch of the activities of the NFB which has not been questioned at all today and I refer to your Still Photos Division, could I have a brief comment on this? It is an excellent part of your activities under Lorraine Monk, I believe?

Dr. McPherson: Yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: She has done an outstanding job and I think it is the resources of the Still Photos Division of the NFB that have gone into some of the excellent books that were produced during Centennial year. I have heard that this work has been discontinued. There are no funds available to still photographers to carry on this very important work of recording Canada on film and it is creating quite a difficult situation amongst our free-lance photographers who are also facing a cut-back by reason of the discontinuation of two major publications like the Family Herald and the Toronto Star.

M. McPherson: Je ne me sens pas très compétent pour répondre à cette question. Je devrai y réfléchir. Lorsque la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique aura commencé à fonctionner, on aura à résoudre une difficulté semblable. J'espère bien pouvoir collaborer avec le président de cette société, mais cela me semble une question à laquelle nous ne pouvons pas répondre immédiatement.

M. Osler: Vous ne possédez pas une chaîne de cinémas?

M. McPherson: Non.

Le président: Merci, monsieur McPherson, au nom du Comité, je...

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, est-ce que vous allez mettre fin aux questions?

Le président: Nous allons entendre la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique. Nous devons ajourner à une heure, mais comme tous ces gens sont venus de Montréal, et non pas d'Ottawa, je pense que nous devrions les entendre.

M. Dinsdale: Nous ne pouvons pas, à mon avis, mettre fin arbitrairement à l'interrogatoire. Si nous voulons que le Comité fonctionne convenablement, il ne faut pas faire cela.

Vous avez parlé d'une visite à Montréal, mais la visite à Montréal ne fait pas partie de notre programme. Je m'intéresse à la procédure parlementaire, je suis raisonnable et j'ai des questions qui intéressent à la fois l'ONF et la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique.

Il y a un aspect de l'activité de l'ONF dont on n'a pas parlé aujourd'hui: la Division de la photographie. J'avais des questions à poser là-dessus. Il s'agit là d'une partie remarquable de votre activité, dirigée par M<sup>me</sup> Lorraine Monks, si je ne m'abuse.

M. McPherson: Oui.

M. Dinsdale: Elle a fait du très bon travail. Je pense que ce sont les ressources de sa Division qui ont servi dans l'édition de magnifiques volumes pendant l'année du centenaire. J'ai entendu dire que ce travail a été interrompu. Il n'y a plus d'argent pour que les photographes puissent poursuivre ce travail très important; ce travail qui consiste à photographier, en quelque sorte, le Canada. La situation de nos photographes à la pige en est devenue difficile, si l'on songe qu'ils ont dû aussi subir les conséquences de la disparition de deux grands journaux comme le «Family Herald» et le «Star» de Toronto. J'ai

It seems that our publishing business is in difficulty and it will not be helped, of course, by the recent Post Office changes. I also understand that the National Film Board is no longer utilizing the services of these people. Is this true and for what reason?

Dr. McPherson: I am afraid, Mr. Dinsdale, that you have not been accurately informed on this question. The Budget of the Still Photos Division is roughly $300,000 a year. Am I right? We have one staff photographer in the Still Photos Division; all other work is put out on commission to still photographers.

• 1150

I feel that the Board cannot be all things to all photographers. We would like to do as much as we can. I know that the people in professional group of still photographers feel themselves in a sad situation and they are beginning to say: "The government has created a Film Development Corporation, the Canada Council is looking after other people, but there is nobody to look after the still photographer."

I do not know what the government might think the real plight of the still photographers is, but the Film Board has been the major support for still photography. We do as much as we can and our resources at this point do not allow for anything further, unhappily. But the commissioning of still photographers goes on in the usual way and we add something like 15,000 to 18,000 photographs a year to our still photograph collection.

Mr. Dinsdale: There has been no cut-back in this activity?

Dr. McPherson: Am I right in saying there has been no cut-back, Mr. Dignard?

Mr. Dignard: No; no cut-back.

Mr. Dinsdale: So the problem, then, would seem to arise from the difficulties that the publishing industry finds itself in—the decreased demand for the work of what I suppose you would call "film journalists"?

Dr. McPherson: Yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: I do understand that several of them are contemplating moving to the United States where the fields are richer and greener in this regard, and they do so with l'impression que notre industrie de l'édition se trouve en difficulté, difficulté qui est compliquée d'ailleurs par les dernières modifications apportées à la Loi sur le ministère des Postes.

Je crois savoir que l'Office national du film n'utilise plus les services de ces gens. Est-ce vrai? Si oui, pour quels motifs?

M. McPherson: Monsieur Dinsdale, vous n'avez pas été, je pense, bien informé au sujet de cette question. Le budget de la Division est, en gros, de $300,000 par année; est-ce exact? Nous avons un photographe permanent; tout le reste du travail est affermé à des photographes à la pige.

Je ne pense pas que l'Office national du film puisse servir tout le monde. Nous aimerions bien le faire si nous le pouvions. Je sais que les photographes se trouvent eux-mêmes dans une situation difficile. Ils commencent à dire: «le gouvernement a créé une Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique, le Conseil des Arts s'occupe d'autres catégories de personnes, mais personne ne s'occupe des photographes».

Je ne sais pas ce que peut penser le gouvernement de la situation des photographes, mais l'Office national du film a fait tout ce qu'il a pu pour eux. Nos ressources, actuellement, ne permettent pas d'en faire davantage, malheureusement. Nous produisons encore de 15,000 à 18,000 photos par année que nous ajoutons à notre collection.

M. Dinsdale: Il n'y a pas eu de diminution?

M. McPherson: Non, n'est-ce pas, monsieur Dignard?

M. Dignard: C'est exact.

M. Dinsdale: Bon, s'il n'y a pas eu diminution, le problème semble venir des difficultés dans lesquelles se trouve l'industrie de l'édition, et aussi de la demande moins considérable des services de ceux qu'on appelle les journalistes photographes.

M. McPherson: Oui.

M. Dinsdale: Je crois comprendre qu'un certain nombre d'entre eux envisagent de déménager aux États-Unis où la situation serait, à leur point de vue, meilleure.

[Texte]

great hesitation because they have found the challenge of photographing Canada on film is quite a creative one. There is no cut-back?

Dr. McPherson: There is no cut-back. I happen to know personally two or three very outstanding photographers in Canada and I am also aware that as these magazines fold their market has disappeared. It would be marvellous if we could provide a solution to their problems but we are also going through the austerity situation and no expansion of the program is possible.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, it would be very interesting as a sidelight to find out what percentages there are between the United States and Canada in the folding of magazines and weekly newspapers. They seem to be in trouble in the United States, too. It would suggest that the medium is changing and those that are trying to keep on the old route are noticing the change. They usually find it hard to eat.

The Chairman: This is true.

Dr. McPherson: Mr. Chairman, if I may add one other bit of information for Mr. Dinsdale, it is true that in Centennial year there were a whole series of special projects and something like between $300,000 and $400,000 went into our publications—that was a Centennial grant. That grant is not available this year.

Mr. Dinsdale: I was just going to suggest that perhaps it was a sort of "from riches to rags" proposition as a result of the Centennial activities.

Dr. McPherson: Yes.

The Chairman: Perhaps on that note I might thank Dr. McPherson and his colleagues. We look forward to visiting Montreal in the new year and also seeing some examples of your work. Thank you; it has been most enlightening.

Dr. McPherson: I am very flattered, Mr. Chairman, by your interest and the interest of the Committee and you will be more than welcome at Cote de Liesse Road in St. Laurent.

The Chairman: Thank you.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I presume that Dr. McPherson and his colleagues will remain in the wings.

[Interprétation]

Mais ils hésitent à le faire, car ils ont eu beaucoup de plaisir à photographier le Canada, ce qui leur a semblé être un art très créateur. Il n'y a donc pas de diminution?

M. McPherson: Non, il n'y a pas de diminution. Je connais deux ou trois grands photographes canadiens. Je crois aussi savoir que si ces magazines ont disparu, c'est que le marché a disparu. Ce serait magnifique, si nous pouvions, à notre tour, trouver les solutions de leurs problèmes, mais nous aussi, nous sommes frappés par le programme de restrictions et aucune expansion, dans ce cas, n'est possible.

M. Osler: Monsieur le président, il serait intéressant de savoir quelle est la différence, entre le Canada et les États-Unis, du pourcentage de disparition des journaux hebdomadaires et des revues. Il me semble que la situation aux États-Unis est la même qu'ici. Les anciens ont du mal à se faire à ces changements.

Le président: C'est vrai.

M. McPherson: Monsieur le président, est-ce que je pourrais ajouter un renseignement à l'intention de M. Dinsdale à ce sujet.

Il est vrai qu'au cours de l'année du centenaire, on a réalisé toute une série de projets spéciaux. Nous avons consacré de $300,000 à $400,000 à nos publications. Mais cette année, nous ne disposons pas de la subvention spéciale que nous avions pour l'année du centenaire. Il y a donc eu, de ce point de vue-là, une diminution.

M. Dinsdale: De riches, vous êtes devenus pauvres, en somme. Vous étiez riches l'année dernière.

M. McPherson: Oui.

Le président: Je voudrais remercier M. McPherson et ses collègues. Nous nous ferons un plaisir de visiter Montréal l'an prochain pour voir comment vous travaillez.

M. McPherson: Je suis très flatté, monsieur le président, de l'intérêt que vous portez à notre travail; vous serez certainement les bienvenus à Saint-Laurent, Côte de Liesse.

Le président: Merci.

M. Dinsdale: M. McPherson et ses collègues peuvent bien rester s'il le désirent.

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I would like to present the officials of the Canadian Film Development Corporation. On my immediate right is Mr. Georges-Émile Lapalme, the Chairman, and Mr. Michael Spencer, the Acting Secretary of the Board.

I will now ask Mr. Lapalme to make an opening statement.

M. Georges-Émile Lapalme (président de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne): Monsieur le président, Messieurs, nous avons fait préparer une déclaration par écrit, ...and I think that this statement has been circulated to the members of this Committee. Do you wish me to read it or just give a resumé of it?

The Chairman: That would be fine.

Mr. Lapalme: Of course everybody here knows that the objects and powers of the Corporation, as set out in the Act, are to invest in individual Canadian feature film productions to make loans to producers, to make awards for outstanding accomplishments in the production of Canada feature films, to make grants to film-makers and film technicians, to advise and assist the producers of Canadian feature films in the distribution of such films. ...

The Act states that the feature film so produced will have significant Canadian content.

Section fourteen of the Act establishes that the Ministry may on the recommendation of the Corporation appoint an advisory group.

The financial side of the Corporation is looked after by the Department of Finance which has set up a special account to be known as the Canadian Film Development Advance Account and has appropriated the sum of $10 million which can be drawn on as required by the Corporation. In effect, the Corporation has a credit line of $10 million from the Department of Finance to be used for loans and investments and for the expenses of the Corporation, including administration. Je vais maintenant demander à M. Lapalme de faire une déclaration.

Mr. Georges-Émile Lapalme (Chairman, Canadian Film Development Corporation): Mr. Chairman, gentlemen, we have had a written statement prepared. ...

Cette déclaration a été distribuée aux membres du comité. Voulez-vous que je vous la lise ou que je vous en fasse le résumé?

Le président: Le résumé ira très bien.

M. Lapalme: Tout le monde ici sait que les buts de la Société, tels qu'ils sont définis dans la Loi, consistent à faire des placements dans des productions de longs métrages canadiens réalisés individuellement, consentir des prêts aux producteurs, accorder des récompenses pour les réussites remarquables dans la production de longs métrages canadiens, accorder aux cinéastes et techniciens du film des subventions et conseiller et aider les producteurs de longs métrages canadiens, en ce qui concerne la distribution de ces films.

La Loi stipule que les longs métrages ainsi produits comporteront une forte participation canadienne.

Selon l'article 14, le ministre peut, sur la recommandation de la Société, nommer un groupe consultatif.

Le ministère des Finances, qui s'occupe des questions financières de la Société, a constitué un compte spécial, le Compte des avances de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne et lui a affecté un crédit de dix millions de dollars dans lequel elle peut puiser suivant ses besoins. En fait, la Société dispose de ce crédit pour ses prêts, ses placements et ses dépenses, notamment ses frais d'administration. Le montant de $300,000 indiqué dans les prévisions budgétaires de l'année correspond à la somme que la Société avait envisagé d'affecter à ses dépenses à fonds perdu, soit les frais d'administration, les subventions et récompenses.

able expenses—administration, awards and grants.

The Corporation is in effect a specialized bank established to provide financial assistance on the basis of which a Canadian feature film industry can be launched. Like the Industrial Development Bank, it is prepared to finance projects which the chartered banks might find too risky but if its operations are successful it is to be hoped that the banks will eventually take an interest in feature film production also. As a matter of fact they have already met representatives of a very important Canadian bank that seems to be interested in the future of the film making industry in Canada.

At its second meeting the Corporation established a policy of considering applications from producers who had scripts ready for production and it would invest or lend up to 50 per cent of the production cost as long as the producers had a valid distribution agreement and guarantee of completion. We realised that these conditions would be hard to meet but we felt that Canadian feature film producers should adhere to the standards which apply to feature film producers in other Western countries. At the same time, we decided to take a fairly flexible view of Canadian content. Realising that we may need some outside help in the initial stages, we are prepared to deal with each case on its merits with the clear understanding that the use of foreign technicians and artists should decrease—though never wholly vanish—as our own talents develop. The members of the Committee may be interested to know that we have received only a very few requests for loans or investments based on completed scenarios since we began our operations in the spring (in fact there have been eight) but we are aware of others still on their way to us.

• 1200

The Corporation has also decided that it would support producers with pre-production money (the cost involved in purchasing original stories and novels, writing scripts, negotiating with distributors, optioning talent, etc.) and we are presently dealing with some of them in the expectation of investing in their projects on a 50/50 basis.

[Interprétation]

La Société est en fait une banque spécialisée, constituée en vue d'aider financièrement à la création d'une industrie canadienne du long métrage. A l'instar de la Banque d'expansion industrielle, elle est disposée à financer des projets que les banques à charte pourraient trouver trop hasardeux. Il faut espérer que, si ses transactions sont couronnées de succès, les banques participeront à l'avenir au financement des longs métrages.

C'est un fait qu'elle a déjà pris des contacts avec des représentants d'une très grande banque canadienne qui semble s'intéresser au devenir de l'industrie cinématographique nationale.

La Société a décidé, lors de sa deuxième réunion, d'étudier les projets de films pour lesquels les scénarios et les budgets étaient prêts afin d'y investir un certain capital ou de consentir les prêts prévus à concurrence de 50 % du budget de la production cinématographique, lorsque les producteurs auront obtenu un contrat de distribution valable ainsi qu'une garantie de réalisation. Nous savions que ces conditions seraient difficiles à remplir mais nous avons estimé que les producteurs canadiens devraient appliquer à leurs longs métrages les mêmes principes que leurs homologues des autres pays occidentaux. Par ailleurs, nous avons convenu d'adopter une ligne de conduite vraiment souple quant au contenu canadien du film. Nous nous rendons compte qu'au moins au début, nous pourrions avoir besoin d'aide extérieure, et nous sommes donc prêts à juger de chaque cas suivant son mérite, étant bien entendu que le recours à des techniciens et à des artistes étrangers ira en diminuant, sans toutefois disparaître tout à fait, au fur et à mesure que nos propres talents s'affirmeront. Vous serez sans doute intéressés d'apprendre que nous n'avons reçu que très peu de demandes de prêts ou d'investissements appuyées sur des scénarios complets (huit en tout) car nos activités ne remontent qu'au printemps, mais nous savons que d'autres demandes vont nous parvenir.

D'autre part, la Société a décidé d'accorder aux producteurs une aide préalable à la production (acquisitions des droits afférents à des récits originaux et à des romans, rédaction de scénarios, négociations avec les distributeurs, sélection de talents, etc.) et elle étudie actuellement avec quelques-uns d'entre eux la possibilité d'investir à parts égales dans leurs projets.

[Text]

It is clear that the development of scenarios to the point where they can be presented to distributors can be quite a costly undertaking and we are convinced that serious Canadian producers should get our support for this. We have received requests to date for twenty-five projects along these lines and more are coming in each week. I understand that more have come in since this was written. We realise of course that some of these scripts may finally have to be abandoned but we are confident that others will make the grade. Perhaps I should add that we have of course received these proposals from both English and French-speaking producers.

Apart from the thirty or so projects which I have mentioned, others were incomplete for various reasons and there have been telephone calls from Hollywood and New York and innumerable discussions with producers who were obtaining information about our policy.

I should like to say at this point, Mr. Chairman, that the production of a feature film being partially an artistic and partially an industrial enterprise calls for a peculiar combination of skills. We have found that on the artistic side there is plenty of talent. On the other hand, it is clear also that the administrative side, including the complex distribution and production contracts which obtain in the feature film business, the questions of insurance, completion guarantees, copyright, budgets and cost control are all areas in which the Canadian feature film producer is going to have to acquire experience. It usually takes about a year to bring a film from a novel or an original idea to a script and another year to complete it. Since we have only been in operation for about six months, it is not surprising that we are only now approaching the point of signing contracts with a very limited number of producers.

Dans plusieurs pays, il y a une législation qui protège la coproduction. Il s'agit d'une législation qui protège la production locale, d'une législation instituée contre l'importation de films étrangers. On a adopté en règle générale un programme de subventions ou un programme de prêts ou une autre forme d'aide à l'industrie cinématographique nationale. Mais dans les cas où un accord de coproduction existe, les films autorisés en coproduction par les autorités gouvernementales respectives sont reconnus comme films nationaux et peu-

[Interpretation]

Il est évident que l'élaboration de scénarios jusqu'au stade de la présentation aux distributeurs peut être une entreprise coûteuse, et nous sommes persuadés que nous devrions épauler les producteurs canadiens sérieux dans cette entreprise. Nous avons reçu jusqu'à présent, pour des œuvres répondant à ces critères, vingt-cinq demandes d'aide préalable à la production et d'autres demandes nous parviennent chaque semaine. Depuis que ces lignes ont été écrites, je crois savoir qu'il y en a eu d'autres encore.

Nous nous rendons bien compte que certains de ces scénarios risquent d'être finalement abandonnés, mais nous sommes persuadés que d'autres réussiront à percer. Je devrais peut-être ajouter que ces projets nous viennent de producteurs d'expression anglaise aussi bien que de producteurs d'expression française.

En dehors des quelque trente propositions dont je vous ai parlé, d'autres n'ont pu être retenues pour diverses raisons et nous avons eu des appels téléphoniques de Hollywood et de New York, et d'innombrables entretiens avec des producteurs qui se renseignaient sur les principes directeurs que nous avons adoptés.

J'aimerais faire remarquer ici, monsieur le président, qu'étant donné le double aspect artistique et commercial de la production des longs métrages, cette industrie requiert un éventail de talents assez particuliers. Du point de vue artistique, nous ne sommes pas dépourvus de talents, loin de là. D'autre part, pour ce qui est de l'administration, les producteurs canadiens devront apprendre à se familiariser avec la complexité des contrats de distribution et de production, les questions d'assurance, les garanties de réalisation, les droits d'auteur, les problèmes de budget et de contrôle des dépenses. En général, il faut compter un an pour la préparation d'un scénario à partir d'un roman ou d'une idée originale et une autre année pour réaliser le film. Comme nos activités ne remontent qu'à six mois, il n'est pas étonnant que nous ne soyons près de signer que quelques contrats.

Several countries have legislation protecting co-production. This type of legislation protects local productions, and there is some legislation against the import of foreign films. Generally speaking the program adopted has been one of grants, loans, or other forms of assistance to the national film industry of the countries involved; however in those cases where there are co-production agreements in force those films which are authorized for co-production by respective government authorities are recognized as national films vent obtenir l'aide du gouvernement de chaque pays coproducteur. Le gouvernement du Canada espère procéder bientôt à la signature d'accords de coproduction avec le Royaume-Uni, l'Italie et, éventuellement, avec d'autres pays. Le seul accord existant à l'heure actuelle en est un avec la France.

• 1205

Étant donné que les producteurs étrangers ont plus d'expérience pour décrocher des contrats de distribution (difficiles à obtenir pour les producteurs canadiens en ce moment), il est évident que les possibilités offertes par les accords de coproduction aideront beaucoup les producteurs canadiens.

J'aimerais souligner ici que le principe de base de tout accord de coproduction veut que tous les films produits conformément à ces accords soient réalisés grâce à un apport à peu près proportionnel de chacun des pays, tant sur le plan financier et technique qu'en ce qui concerne la participation créatrice ou artistique même si la proportion des apports de chaque production peut varier.

Mr. Claude Degand of Le Centre national de la cinématographie of France, and Mr. John Terry of the National Film Finance Corporation of Great Britain, both of whom came to Canada to assist us, have been very helpful in this and other areas of our mandate.

The $300,000 which we have earmarked for the fiscal year 1968-69 for administration and awards and grants will include an amount for quality awards or, in French, primes de qualité. The Corporation proposes to make available an amount of $100,000 for feature films produced by Canadian private film producers and shown to the general public in Canada during the years 1967 and 1968. The scheme we propose to adopt is one which had already been successfully pioneered in Sweden. The amount of $100,000 will be shared between the eligible films according to a scale established by a panel of judges. It is our expectation that the winning producers will invest their awards in new projects, either for scripts or options on properties, or for some aspects of production.

The awards are intended to some extent to compensate those producers who have managed, without the assistance of the Canadian Film Development Corporation, to produce and release features for theatrical release. We hope that they will encourage the production of other films. It is probably more and are entitled to the financial assistance of each of the co-producing countries.

The Government of Canada hopes to be able to sign co-production agreements with the United Kingdom, Italy and possibly at some future date with other countries. The only agreement we have at the present time has been made with France.

Because of the fact that foreign producers have more experience in obtaining distribution contracts, which are very difficult to obtain from Canadian producers at this time, it is obvious that the possibilities opened by these co-production agreements will be of considerable assistance to Canadian producers.

I would also like to point out that at this stage that the basic principle of any co-production agreements required that every film producer under these agreements be met through an approximately proportionate participation from each country both financially and technically and also artistically involved even though the proportion of each of these elements may vary from one of these countries to the other.

M. Claude Degand, du Centre national de la cinématographie, en France, et M. John Terry, de la National Film Finance Corporation, de Grande-Bretagne, qui sont venus au Canada pour nous faire profiter de leur assistance, nous ont apporté une aide précieuse dans différents domaines de notre compétence, notamment celui qui nous concerne en ce moment.

Une certaine partie des $300,000 affectés aux frais d'administration, récompenses et subventions pour l'année budgétaire 1968-1969, sera attribuée aux primes de qualité. La Société se propose de réserver un montant de $100,000 aux longs métrages réalisés par des producteurs privés canadiens et qui auront été diffusés au Canada au cours de 1967 et 1968. La formule que nous comptons adopter a déjà été mise à l'essai en Suède avec succès. Les producteurs de films qui auront été retenus recevront la partie des $100,000 équivalant à la note donnée par un jury constitué à cet effet. Nous espérons que ces producteurs réinvestiront les montants reçus dans d'autres projets (scénarios, options sur des droits d'auteur, ou autres domaines de la production).

Ces récompenses ont été prévues afin de rémunérer les producteurs canadiens qui ont réussi, sans l'aide de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne, à produire et à lancer des films sur le marché. Il est sans doute plus important de faire des placements dans des scénarios que important to invest in scripts for the future than to compensate producers for past experience, but the principle of 'primes de qualité' is accepted by film-makers in Europe, and we think it has its place on the Canadian feature film scene.

Mr. Chairman, anticipating some of the questions which are going to be asked about distribution—which were also asked while the legislation was going through Parliament—we are well aware of the difficult problem which Canadian feature film producers face in this area. As you know, many of the important downtown cinemas in the big cities in Canada are controlled from outside the country and are serviced by a group of distributors whose head offices are in New York, and I guess that we, the majority of Canadians seem to be satisfied with most of them, their representatives, I mean imported feature films and, to some extent, the onus is on the feature film producer in Canada to try to create a demand for his productions. In this connection, we will have, the cooperation of Canadian distributors in arranging for Canadian features to be shown in the major houses. But we do not look upon these outlets as necessarily the only ones which would provide a financial basis for a continuing feature film industry in Canada. We think that television particularly is a growing and significant market and we are also hopeful that we can support some feature films which will earn at least some of their costs back from university circuits and cine-clubs in the United States and Canada.

• 1210

Il y a une importance toute spéciale à accorder à une étude des possibilités de distribution, afin de pouvoir aider et conseiller les producteurs canadiens dans ce domaine, les jeunes cinéastes, en particulier, tireront profit de ces conseils, étant donné que ceux qui ont déjà de l'expérience pourront, à notre avis, produire des films susceptibles d'avoir un succès à l'étranger.

J'espère, monsieur le président, que la prochaine fois que nous nous rencontrerons, nous serons en mesure de vous donner infiniment plus de renseignements que ce que nous vous donnons présentement, en vous rappelant que cette société n'existe que depuis, environ six mois. En réalité les membres du Conseil d'administration en sont l'exécutif, puisque une seule personne, dans le moment, joue ce rôle, c'est M. Michael Spencer, secrétaire intérimaire, qui sur les questions d'ordre technique, sera certainement en mesure de vous répondre.

As far as I am concerned, mine is not a full-time job; I am not an expert on this, and I have been trying to learn something de dédommager des producteurs pour un travail déjà fait, mais étant donné que le principe des primes de qualité est accepté en Europe, nous croyons qu'elles ont leur place sur la scène canadienne.

Monsieur le président, anticipant certaines questions au sujet de l'aspect distribution des films canadiens—questions qui ont déjà été posées lors de l'étude du projet de loi à la Chambre—j'aimerais souligner que nous sommes conscients du problème auquel les producteurs de films canadiens ont à faire face. Comme vous le savez, plusieurs grandes salles de cinéma au Canada relèvent de maisons de distribution qui ont leur siège social à New York. La grande majorité des spectateurs canadiens semblent parfaitement heureux de voir des films étrangers et il importe donc au producteur canadien de créer une demande pour ses productions cinématographiques. Je suis certain qu'en ce domaine nous aurons la collaboration des exploitants de salles canadiens qui n'hésiteront pas à présenter des films canadiens dans les principales salles de cinéma. Cependant, nous ne croyons pas que la permanence et la viabilité de l'industrie du long métrage au Canada dépendent entièrement de ces réseaux de distribution. La télévision offre des possibilités de plus en plus intéressantes et nous espérons que quelques longs métrages pourront recouvrer une partie de leurs coûts de production par une distribution dans les circuits universitaires et les ciné-clubs, tant au Canada qu'aux États-Unis.

We propose to give the highest priority to making a study of the distribution situation so that we can advise Canadian producers and give them as much help as possible in this area. This will be most particularly useful to the younger film-makers since some of the more established ones have a good chance, in our view, of producing films which will be acceptable for international distribution.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that when we next appear before your Committee, we will be in a position to give you much more information than we have this morning. I would remind you once again that our corporation was set up only six months ago. The members of the Board are also members of its Executive Committee. Our Board from this point of view is constituted by one single person, Mr. Michael Spencer, our acting Secretary, who will be able to answer your technical questions.

En ce qui me concerne, je ne suis que président à temps partiel, et bien que j'aie essayé de m'instruire, grâce à l'expérience de through the experience of Mr. Spencer. But just the same I will try to answer the questions on the subjects I know, and otherwise Mr. Spencer will answer those which are technical.

[Texte]

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Lapalme.

M. La Salle: Je pourrais dire un mot qui n'a pas de rapport, peut-être, avec la réunion, considérant que M. Lapalme, monsieur le président, est l'ancien député du comté de Joliette, me permettez-vous, de le féliciter—d'abord, je n'en ai pas eu l'occasion—comme président de la société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique, et de lui dire que j'aimerais bien connaître son expérience. Ça viendra peut-être avec le temps. Tant qu'à ses compétences, j'y renonce, je ne les posséderai jamais.

Il me fait plaisir de vous saluer au nom de la population de Joliette, monsieur Lapalme.

M. Lapalme: Je vous remercie monsieur La Salle, mais ne profitez pas trop de mon expérience, elle n'a pas tellement été concluante.

The Chairman: I should rule you both out of order.

Mr. Dinsdale: The emphasis on the Film Corporation seems to be to encourage the making of films, dramatic films, that would compete in the market with some of the films that the Canadian public is exposed to from Hollywood, largely, and also from the film production centres in the U.K. and other parts of the world. Am I right in this assessment?

Mr. Michael Spencer (Acting Secretary, Canadian Film Development Corporation): Yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: There have been some dramatic or theatrical films made by the NFB in the past that, through the theatre chain of Canada, have had exposure, through the CBC and I think too, some have been circulated abroad. Will the activities of the Film Corporation now getting under way supplement or supercede these former activities of the NFB?

Mr. Spencer: I think the answer is of course that we may well do both. As Mr. McPherson already said, the Film Board has every right to produce, and under its Act can produce feature films, but it seems to me that it is limited in respect to the fact that every film it produces has to be "in the national interest", and particularly interpretive of

[Interprétation]

M. Spencer, je me ferai néanmoins plaisir de répondre aux questions auxquelles je pourrai répondre. Faute de quoi, M. Spencer répondra à ma place, en ce qui concerne plus particulièrement les questions d'un caractère technique.

Le président: Je vous remercie, M. Lapalme.

Mr. La Salle: I might say something which has no real bearing on the meeting since Mr. Lapalme, Mr. Chairman, is the former member for the Joliette riding. May I, Mr. Chairman, congratulate him at this point on his appointment to the position he holds at this time. I wish I had his experience but perhaps I will with time; I will never be as competent as he is, I realize that.

Mr. Lapalme: Thank you very much. My experience in this field is not all that remarkable.

Le président: Je devrais vous déclarer tous les deux comme ayant enfreint le règlement.

M. Dinsdale: La société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique semble surtout se préoccuper de la production de films qui feraient, en somme, concurrence à ces films qui nous viennent d'Hollywood, de Grande-Bretagne ou d'autres parties du monde, et que peut voir actuellement le citoyen canadien. Ai-je bien raison?

M. Michael Spencer (Secrétaire intérimaire, Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique): Oui.

M. Dinsdale: Certains longs métrages répondant à cette définition ont été réalisés dans le passé par l'Office national du film, qui ont été diffusés dans les cinémas canadiens, qui ont été diffusés par Radio-Canada et qui ont même été diffusés à l'étranger.

L'activité de la société de développement qui commence à peine, complémentera ou remplacera-t-elle cette activité de l'ONF?

M. Spencer: Je pense que la réponse est que l'on poursuivra les deux buts à la fois. Comme le disait M. McPherson, l'ONF peut certainement, législativement produire des longs métrages, mais il doit agir dans l'intérêt national et il doit surtout chercher à interpréter le Canada aux Canadiens. Pour nous, les films qui ont une chance de participer au

Canada to Canadians. I think our feeling is that any film that has a chance of developing the Canadian film industry, even if that film is not particularly interpretive of Canada or Canadians, would still be considered and possibly invested in by us.

● 1215

Secondly, I think that the National Film Board has a responsibility to produce a wide spectrum of programs on all subjects, whereas the Canadian Film Development Corporation could presumably support a whole series of films on the same subject if that subject turned out to be one which was recently good box office, and which in fact returned our money back to us and the producer's and distributor's money back to them.

Mr. Dinsdale: It says on page 3 of the statement read by Mr. Lapalme, that the Canadian Government Film Commissioner is also a member ex-officio, which means he sits in at all discussions in an attempt to co-ordinate the activities of this new government branch in film-making.

Mr. Lapalme: Yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: This is the question I should have put to the NFB. They are still here, so perhaps they will be able to help with some supplementary information.

Some of the theatrical films that they have produced have been of the controversial kind, and unfortunately these are the ones that come to public attention in Parliament, through questions from Members, and so forth. One comes to mind, Waiting for Carolyn, which was a major theatrical production. I think it cost something like $500,000. Will the NFB still continue to function in this area of film production now that we have this new corporation.

Mr. Lapalme: I guess the NFB has the answer.

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale, while you were out of the room we had a fairly extensive discussion on this type of program, on Waiting for Carolyn and the Ernie Game which were produced under the same agreement; it was a co-production agreement with the CBC. The indication was from the Board that there had been some difficulties in working out proper arrangements in authority. It came up through a series of questions by Mr. Osler and by myself.

Mr. Dinsdale: It must have been a short discussion. I was out making a phone call, but progrès de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne, méritent de retenir notre attention à nous, même s'ils n'interprètent pas le Canada. Nous pourrions certainement y placer de l'argent.

J'ajoute que l'ONF est chargé de produire des films de tous les genres. D'autre part, la société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne pourra faciliter la production de toute une série de films dans la même veine pourvu qu'ils aient un succès public. Ce qui pourrait permettre aux producteurs de gagner de l'argent et nous permettrait à nous de rentrer dans notre argent.

M. Dinsdale: A la page 3 de sa déclaration, M. Lapalme note que le commissaire de l'Office est aussi membre de la société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique canadienne. En somme, on tente de coordonner l'activité.

M. Lapalme: C'est exact.

M. Dinsdale: Bon. C'est la question, du reste, que j'aurais dû poser à l'Office national du film tout à l'heure. Si ces gens-là sont toujours là, ils pourront peut-être nous aider en nous donnant des renseignements supplémentaires.

Certains des films produits par l'Office du film ont prêté à controverse et ce sont précisément ceux dont on parle le plus souvent, qui suscitent des demandes de la part des députés. Je parle d'un film, «Waiting for Caroline», qui a coûté quelque chose comme cinq cent mille dollars. Est-ce que l'Office national du film continuerait à réaliser des films de ce genre, maintenant que nous avons une société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique?

M. Lapalme: C'est à l'O.N.F. de répondre à cette question.

Le président: Monsieur Dinsdale, lorsque vous n'étiez pas là, nous avons eu une assez longue discussion sur le genre de programme du type de «The Ernie Game» ou de «Waiting for Caroline», réalisés en collaboration avec Radio-Canada. On a donné à entendre de la part du ONF, que cela avait donné lieu à certaines difficultés. Il avait été difficile d'en arriver à des accords en ce qui concerne la répartition de l'autorité. Ces questions ont été posées par M. Osler et par moi, et les réponses que je viens d'indiquer ont été données.

M. Dinsdale: La discussion n'a pas dû être très longue, j'étais simplement sorti télépho-the point I am trying to establish in all this questioning this morning is that we are creating a whole series of ad hoc bodies operating in the one area of film production, without any attempt to co-ordinate. It would seem to me that this sort of production that came under somewhat critical discussion in the House of Commons—there were others besides Carolyn—I would think will now fall under the responsibility of the new Corporation inasmuch as you are emphasizing theatrical productions as opposed to cultural or educational, if I may use that banned phrase, which has been one of the chief functions of the NFB hereto. Will you be moving into theatrical production exclusively or will there still be overlapping on the part of the CBC and on the part of the National Film Board?

Mr. Lapalme: I would like to remind you that, as I said in the statement, the Corporation is a bank. We are not film makers. We will have to invest, make loans, in feature films only. I will object to the words "opposed to cultural films", not our own films, but filmmakers can make cultural films if they want to; it may be a feature film just the same. We are just investing money and making loans. So when somebody comes to us with a script, or with the idea of a script, we ask him if he could get some money himself. If so, from where? Could he have his film distributed? We do not want to invest money in films that will remain in cans. Does he have a distribution contract? Who is to be the star of the film? Who is to be the director of the film?

• 1220

We do not have to judge the quality of the script, because we do not know what will happen with the script. A publisher does not know what will happen with a book. Of course, if the script contains pornography or things like that, we may decide at once not to invest, but when these conditions are met by the film-maker, we are in a position then to say we will or will not invest or make a loan.

Mr. Dinsdale: So in other words you are an industrial development bank for film-making. Why do we need a new industrial development bank? Why could it not be incorporated in present activities?

Mr. Lapalme: The main objective of the act in creating the Corporation is to create a ner. Mais si nous voulons créer toute une série d'institutions spécialisées dans le même domaine, et sans liaison entre elles, cela risque de susciter des difficultés. Je crois me souvenir que la création de la société avait, que les productions dont je viens de parler comme «Waiting for Caroline» avaient provoqué certaines critiques à la Chambre.

[Interprétation]

Ces productions, je pense, maintenant dépendent de la Société de développement de l'industrie cinématographique. Vous allez vous occuper surtout de films romanesques plutôt que de films éducatifs ou documentaires dont s'est surtout occupé jusqu'ici l'ONF. Est-ce que vous allez commencer à produire des films de ce genre ou est-ce qu'il y a là toujours chevauchement de la part de l'ONF et de Radio-Canada?

M. Lapalme: Je vous rappelle que la Société est une banque. Nous ne réalisons pas de films. Nous aurons à placer de l'argent et à faire des prêts simplement pour des longs métrages. Je n'aime pas beaucoup qu'on oppose ce genre de films à des films de valeur culturelle. Nos réalisateurs peuvent réaliser des films d'intérêt culturel qui soient en même temps des longs métrages. L'un n'empêche pas l'autre. Tout ce que nous faisons c'est placer de l'argent, faire des prêts. Lorsque quelqu'un vient nous trouver avec un scénario, par exemple, nous lui demandons: «Est-ce que vous pouvez trouver de l'argent vous-même?» Et si la réponse est affirmative, «Où la prendrez-vous?» «Qui va distribuer ce film?» Nous ne voulons pas placer de l'argent dans des films qui ne seront jamais projetés. «Avez-vous un contrat de distribution?» «Qui va être votre étoile, qui va être votre metteur en scène?»

Nous n'avons pas à juger de la qualité du scénario car nous ne savons pas ce qu'on fera du scénario pas plus que l'éditeur ne sait, au fond, le sort qui sera réservé à ses livres. Évidemment si le scénario est pornographique, etc, nous pourrions décider tout de suite de ne pas placer d'argent. Mais lorsque ces conditions sont remplies par le réalisateur ou le cinéaste, nous pouvons décider si nous devons placer de l'argent ou n'en pas placer, prêter de l'argent ou n'en pas prêter.

M. Dinsdale: Vous êtes donc une banque de développement industriel pour l'industrie cinématographique? Pourquoi avons-nous besoin d'une nouvelle banque de développement industriel? Pourquoi ne pourrait-on pas incorporer cette activité à l'activité actuelle de la banque de développement industriel.

M. Lapalme: Le but principal de la loi qui créait la Société, était de créer une industrie feature film industry in Canada, and it means that we will have to pour some money into it in order to start it, or to support it, as they did in France or in Great Britain, or in Sweden. The only difference here is that the funds come from the government, while in England they come from the box office, or in Sweden where they come also from the box office.

Mr. Dinsdale: There seems to be a little bit of conflict of interest here. One of the reasons why we have not developed a stronger private film-making industry in Canada than we might have otherwise done, is because of the strong competition of the NFB, and I think this is a fair conclusion from what I have read. And now we have another arm of government that is going to move in and try to encourage a film industry which has withered to a certain extent because of overly strong competition from another government body. We seem to be working at crossed purposes here.

Mr. Spencer: Mr. Dinsdale, I think one reason why the Film Commissioner is a member ex officio on the Board of the Canadian Film Development Corporation, is an attempt to achieve the kind of co-ordination that you are thinking about. We did think when the legislation was first being thought about that it would be important for the Film Commissioner to know what the plans of this corporation were and what its intentions were on investment.

The second question had to do with the reason for setting up this body and why the Industrial Development Bank would not handle it.

Indeed, that was our first suggestion, and we did have some discussions with the Industrial Development Bank. The Bank felt, however, that this was a very complex and difficult area for investment and that, in terms of changing their existing policies, it would be more of a problem for them to get into it than it would be for a new agency to be established. I think it is one of the main reasons for the government having decided to do it that way.

The Chairman: Given your present overhead, that is certainly a reasonable investment.

Mr. Spencer: Of course, we have a revolving fund, as we have mentioned, and it is the responsibility of this corporation to administer that revolving fund in such a way as to keep it up as much as possible, not let it go down too far, and to deal with producers in such a way as to develop the industry.

du long métrage au Canada. Ce qui voudrait dire qu'il faudra y mettre de l'argent pour lui donner un bon départ comme en Grande-Bretagne, en France ou en Suède. La différence, c'est que l'argent vient du gouvernement tandis qu'en Suède ou en Grande-Bretagne, l'argent vient du public payant pour voir les films.

M. Dinsdale: Il semble y avoir une espèce de conflit d'intérêts. C'est l'une des raisons pour lesquelles nous n'avons pas pu donner à notre long métrage, notre industrie du long métrage au Canada, une plus grande expansion. Cela tient à la concurrence vive de l'ONF. Et voici maintenant qu'une nouvelle institution gouvernementale va chercher à encourager une industrie qui n'a pas progressé à cause d'une concurrence un peu trop forte d'une autre institution gouvernementale. Nous semblons nous tirer les uns les autres dans les jambes, n'est-ce pas?

M. Spencer: L'une des raisons pour laquelle le commissaire du film est d'office membre de la société du bureau de direction de la société est précisément pour nous permettre d'en arriver à la liaison dont nous parlions. Il serait peut-être bon que le commissaire à la cinématographie connaisse les intentions de la société dans le domaine des investissements.

Vous avez aussi demandé pourquoi la Banque de développement industriel ne s'occupait pas de cette question. C'est ce que nous avons d'abord proposé. Nous avons discuté la chose avec la Banque de développement industriel mais la banque pensait que c'était un domaine extrêmement complexe, et qu'il lui serait beaucoup plus difficile de modifier sa ligne de conduite pour s'y adopter que de fonder une société nouvelle. C'est l'une des principales raisons pourquoi le gouvernement a pris cette décision.

Le président: Si l'on songe à vos frais généraux, la décision semble assez sage.

M. Spencer: Nous avons un fonds de roulement, et c'est la responsabilité de la société que d'administrer ce fonds de façon qu'il ne diminue pas trop vite. Nous avons à traiter avec les réalisateurs de façon à créer vraiment une industrie. Cette réalité n'existe pas dans le domaine du long métrage. Il existait

[Texte]

I do not think that exists in the area of feature films. It seems to me that there is a gap there which this corporation cannot fill. It probably could be filled in other ways, but it has, in fact, been decided to fill it by means of a special corporation; and we hope, or expect, of course, that, with the money we have, 50 per cent of the other money to make these films will come from other sources.

Presumably, our $10 million will go into the private film-making sector several times over the next four or five years and be matched by equivalent amounts of money from distributors and other sources.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, that is an explanation of the decision to proceed through a new government agency rather than an existing one, but it seems to me that there is proliferation of government activities in the very sensitive and important area of mass communication. Instead of government receiving from that area, as the impact of the media becomes more profound on Canadian society it is increasing.

I hope that this new corporation might co-ordinate through the Film Commissioner and through the existing bodies so that we might strengthen the private sector.

We have an excellent film production industry in Canada, but it has financial difficulties. It cannot compete with the rich American industry, largely because its chief competitor is the Government of Canada.

This is a fundamental mistake and one of the reasons for our not having gone farther in this industry than we have at the moment.

Looking at the Massey Report on Films and the Arts and so forth, the whole emphasis is that we should, in the long run, depend upon private encouragement for development of the arts and the sciences. We are moving in the opposite direction in Canada.

All I can say is that I hope there will be closer co-ordination, otherwise we are going to end up in a worse state than we are at the moment.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, that seems irrelevant to me. In terms of its being a bank, the same statement could be made about every other form of industrial development bank. It would be government dabbling rather than government attempting to assist something that quite obviously needs assistance.

The Chairman: It was my understanding that setting it up as a bank was a way of encouraging the private developers with badly needed capital which they lack at the present une lacune que l'Office national du Film ne pouvait pas remplir. On a décidé de procéder autrement et de créer une société de développement à cette fin. Nous pensons que la moitié de l'argent consacré à la production de ces films viendra d'ailleurs. Nos 10 millions seront consacrés au secteur privé. Ces 10 millions serviront plusieurs fois d'ici cinq ou six ans, et à ce montant s'ajoutera l'argent des distributeurs et d'autres sources.

M. Dinsdale: Voilà une explication de la création d'une nouvelle institution gouvernementale, mais j'ai l'impression qu'il y a prolifération d'activités gouvernementales dans ce domaine très important des communications de masse. Le gouvernement, au lieu de retirer des profits à mesure que l'influence des communications sur la société canadienne augmente, il doit encore déboursier.

Je souhaite que la nouvelle société coordonnera les efforts de l'Office national du Film et des autres agences de manière à renforcer l'industrie du film au Canada. Celle-ci est excellente, mais elle a des difficultés financières; elle ne peut concurrencer la puissante industrie américaine surtout parce que son grand concurrent est le gouvernement du Canada.

Ceci me semble être une erreur fondamentale et l'une des raisons pour lesquelles nous ne sommes pas rendus plus loin dans cette industrie. Le rapport Massey sur les films et les arts, je me rappelle, insistait que nous devrions surtout songer à encourager l'initiative privée dans les arts, les sciences, etc. Or, j'ai l'impression que nous faisons le contraire. Tout ce que je peux dire c'est que j'espère qu'il existera une coordination plus étroite à l'avenir que ça n'a été le cas jusqu'ici, car la situation pourrait encore s'aggraver.

M. Osler: Si la Société est une banque, on doit je pense, attendre d'elle la même chose que des autres banques du gouvernement. Autrement, on pourrait accuser le gouvernement de louvoyer au lieu d'aider là où il doit aider.

Le président: Je croyais qu'il s'agissait, pour la Société de développement, d'aider une industrie malade avec de nouveaux capitaux. Sinon, de quoi s'agit-il?

time. If it is not that, I do not know what it is.

Mr. Dinsdale: It is a proliferation of government agencies in the film production field.

Mr. Osler: But that does not mean anything. It is just words.

The Chairman: It is an agency designed to help the private sector which you want to see assisted. One could even argue that had there been no National Film Board there would be no film-making capability in Canada at all.

Mr. Dinsdale: Quite.

The Chairman: I, for one, would be prepared to argue that the establishment of the Film Development Corporation is a step to do two things: first of all, to provide the private sector with proper financing, to enable it to compete against subsidized films from other countries and in the United States which has a vast market to draw upon; and, secondly, to create effective counter-forces against dominance of the new media by one or two agencies such as the National Film Board or the CBC.

Mr. Givens: There are no ideological structures on the film Development Corporation as there are on the NFB. You do not have to produce what is good for Canadians. That is not your over-riding determination?

Mr. Spencer: We do not have to produce at all, sir. We just have to invest in whatever will develop the industry.

Mr. Givens: You are bankers. You are doing the very thing that Mr. Dinsdale says we should be doing.

Mr. Osler: Yes.

The Chairman: Mr. Schumacher?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Dinsdale is desperate.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, perhaps we could get down to the ...

The Chairman: That is out of order, Mr. Stanbury.

Mr. Dinsdale: I think the hon. Parliamentary Secretary is desperate with a comment like that, if that is the best contribution he can make to our discussion.

Mr. Stanbury: I have not had a chance. Mr. Dinsdale has had about two hours of this morning's meeting.

The Chairman: The comments on both sides are out of order. We should proceed with the questioning. We only have a half an hour.

M. Dinsdale: De la prolifération d'institutions gouvernementales dans le domaine de la production des films.

M. Osler: Mais ça ne veut rien dire!

Le président: Il s'agit d'une agence gouvernementale pour aider là où le besoin se fait sentir. On peut même dire que, sans l'Office national du Film, il n'y aurait peut-être pas de cinéma du tout au Canada.

M. Dinsdale: Vraiment.

Le président: Je pense que cette Société a pour but, d'abord de financer le secteur public de façon à lui permettre de concurrencer l'industrie étrangère et de distribuer ses films aux États-Unis où il existe un grand marché dont elle pourrait profiter, et ensuite de lutter contre la dominance des nouveaux moyens de communication par des agences, telles l'ONF et Radio-Canada.

M. Givens: Mais la Société n'a pas de fondement idéologique, comme c'est le cas pour l'ONF. Vous pouvez placer votre argent n'importe comment, vous n'avez pas à favoriser l'identité canadienne.

M. Spencer: Nous ne sommes pas des producteurs: nous prêtons de l'argent là où il va contribuer à bâtir l'industrie.

M. Givens: Vous faites exactement ce que M. Dinsdale voudrait que vous fassiez?

M. Osler: Oui.

Le président: Monsieur Schumacker?

M. Stanbury: Monsieur Dinsdale est désespéré.

M. Osler: Monsieur le président, peut-être pourrions nous...

Le président: C'est inacceptable, monsieur Stanbury.

M. Dinsdale: L'honorable secrétaire parlementaire est désespéré, si un tel commentaire est ce qu'il peut faire de mieux dans cette discussion.

M. Stanbury: C'est tout ce que j'ai pu dire, M. Dinsdale a tenu le plancher pendant deux heures ce matin.

Le président: Ces deux propositions sont irrecevables. Reprenons les questions.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, the statement is on the record that I have monopolized the discussion this morning. I challenge that statement.

The Chairman: I am sure, Mr. Dinsdale, that anybody going over the written record will be able to make their own decision. I for one would say that you have spent so much time moving to and from the room that it is impossible for you to have dominated the proceedings.

Mr. Dinsdale: Thank you very much.

Mr. Stanbury: I amend my comment.

Mr. Schumacher: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask a question pertaining to the investment of the Corporation in the Canadian film industry.

• 1230

What provision are they making to avoid making investments in projects which are really not Canadian but may have a Canadian front to get money out of the large resources of the federal government, and to make sure that these are really bona fide Canadian productions? Do you feel there is any danger in this area from what might be called off-shore raiders?

Mr. Givens: You mean an American subsidiary coming up here and using a Canadian front—

Mr. Schumacher: Yes.

Mr. Spencer: The answer is that because we are only dealing with a very limited number of projects at the moment—and probably will always be dealing with a limited number of projects—we study each case on its merits; and since the copyright in the film must be held by a Canadian company, or a company established in Canada, and so on, in the cases where people are getting in touch with us directly from the United States and the United Kingdom and elsewhere we are insisting that they come to us. We can talk to them, but we cannot consider their applications unless they reach us by way of a Canadian company.

In so far as we can see a pattern emerging at the moment we are trying to put Americans in touch with Canadian companies. We say, Why do you not talk to so-and-so about this project? If he is interested in it he can come to us with his proposal, because it is necessary that we make our contracts with, and our investments in, Canadian companies."

I realize that the question of the actual ownership of the company can also be a prob-

M. Dinsdale: La déclaration figure désormais aux comptes rendus. On a dit que j'ai monopolisé cette discussion ce matin. Je conteste cette déclaration.

Le président: Si quelqu'un regarde le compte rendu, il pourra en arriver aux conclusions qu'il voudra. Pour ma part, j'ai constaté que vous aviez souvent quitté la pièce, il vous a donc été impossible de dominer la discussion.

M. Dinsdale: Merci beaucoup.

M. Stanbury: Je modifie ma remarque.

M. Schumacher: Je voudrais poser une question en ce qui concerne l'argent qu'on a investi dans la Société. Quelles mesures a-t-on prises pour éviter que l'argent serve à des entreprises qui, sans être vraiment canadiennes, auraient une façade canadienne? Qu'est-ce qu'on fait pour s'assurer que ces productions soient vraiment canadiennes? Est-ce que la présence des braconniers étrangers présente certains dangers?

M. Givens: Vous parlez d'une succursale américaine qui se donnerait un visage canadien pour obtenir des fonds du gouvernement fédéral, n'est-ce pas?

M. Schumacher: Oui.

M. Spencer: Vu leur nombre restreint, nous étudions chaque projet à fond. Nous exigeons que les droits d'auteur soient entre les mains d'une compagnie canadienne ou établie au Canada. J'ai dit tout à l'heure que des gens entraient en contact avec nous, des États-Unis et du Royaume-Uni, ou d'ailleurs. Ces gens doivent venir nous voir, et nous ne pouvons pas considérer leurs demandes à moins qu'ils traitent avec nous par l'entremise d'une compagnie vraiment canadienne.

Nous essayons maintenant de songer à une formule où, par exemple, nous leur suggérons des entreprises canadiennes. Nous disons, par exemple, consultez donc un tel, et si la chose l'intéresse, lui pourra nous présenter cette demande; car nous sommes tenus d'investir notre argent dans des compagnies canadiennes.

Quant au droit de propriété même de la compagnie, c'est une question qui préoccupe lem, and the Canadian Radio and Television Commission is, of course, very much concerned with that kind of thing. Again if we had two conflicting applications we would probably give some kind of priority to the Canadian company rather than to the one which appeared to be owned abroad.

We do, however, have the problem of getting distribution. If a Canadian producer can work with an American producer and make a film in Canada—which is the kind of film we would like to see—and if it is going to get international distribution through a foreign distribution company, then I think, on balance, we would be wise to invest in that rather than to reject it.

Mr. Schumacher: You do not have any prohibition against investing in Canadian companies that are in fact owned by foreigners?

Mr. Spencer: It is difficult to say whether or not we have a prohibition, because we have not had an application of that kind.

Mr. Osler: May I ask a supplementary to that? Do any of you gentlemen know the relative figures involved in the profits derived from the making of a film and the distribution of it? In other words, could we be lead down the garden path by investing in a film that was owned by a Canadian company which was, in fact a dummy company? They could then make sure that the film either broke even or made a minimum profit and take all their profits out of the theatre chain that they owned as another part of their corporate business.

In other words, the Canadian government could then become a 50 per cent bankroller in a foreign entrepreneur's work and the foreign entrepreneur would be making his money out of something that was not part of the Canadian company; therefore, the Canadian company would have very little chance of doing more than breaking even. Do you understand what I mean?

Mr. Spencer: On the first question, dealing with the percentage that a producer might expect to get, there are various formulas about that. Usually he would get about 20 per cent of the gross box office under normal distribution circumstances. The exhibitor keeps 50 per cent; 50 per cent goes to the distributor who deducts his costs, including prints and advertising, and so on; and the balance is then shared between the distributor and the producer. That generally leaves the producer with about 20 per cent.

On the second question: Of course, it is very possible that that situation could arise, beaucoup, par exemple, le Conseil de la radio-télévision canadienne.

A mon avis, s'il y avait deux demandes contraires, nous donnerions la préférence à la compagnie canadienne plutôt qu'à celle qui semblerait appartenir à des étrangers. Mais, il y a le problème de la distribution. Que le producteur canadien travaille avec un producteur américain, pour produire au Canada un film qui aura une audience internationale, voilà qui nous semblerait une bonne idée, et je crois qu'il serait sage d'y investir.

M. Schumacher: Rien ne vous empêche d'investir dans des compagnies canadiennes qui, en fait, sont aux mains d'étrangers?

M. Spencer: Il est difficile de savoir si c'est interdit ou non, parce que nous n'avons pas encore eu de demande de cet ordre.

M. Osler: L'un d'entre vous, messieurs, connaît-il la proportion des bénéfices obtenus de la production d'un film et de sa distribution? Autrement dit, est-il possible que la Société de développement investisse dans une compagnie canadienne qui, en fait, serait une compagnie fantoche, possédée par d'autres, qui calculeraient un bénéfice minimum au Canada mais ensuite des bénéfices substantiels faits grâce à une chaîne de cinémas à l'étranger? Autrement dit, le gouvernement canadien financerait à 50 p. 100 le travail d'un entrepreneur étranger, qui, en définitive, ferait son profit sans s'occuper de son associé canadien, celui-ci ne pouvant que couvrir ses frais. Vous voyez ce que je veux dire?

M. Spencer: Au sujet du pourcentage que le producteur peut espérer recevoir, disons qu'habituellement il reçoit 20 p. 100 des recettes brutes. Le propriétaire du cinéma garde 50 p. 100. De l'autre 50 p. 100, le distributeur déduit ses frais, impression, distribution etc. et ensuite le reste est réparti entre lui et le producteur. Disons que le producteur retire environ 20 p. 100.

Pour ce qui est de votre deuxième question, ce genre de situation pourrait éventuellement but as a condition of our investment we insist upon seeing all the contracts; and if we got to the point of seeing that that kind of situation would occur I guess we would not invest.

Mr. Osler: Historically, does a film company make money out of making films or out of distributing them?

• 1235

Mr. Spencer: A film production company makes money out of producing films, and its distributor makes money out of distributing them.

Mr. Osler: Sometimes they are the same people.

The Chairman: A supplementary, Mr. Givens?

Mr. Givens: I should imagine that if this became a major problem it would indicate the great success of your operation. If we had to start worrying about all the money we were making in the United States I would be very happy indeed. Would you not?

Mr. Spencer: That is a possibility, sir.

The Chairman: We will worry about that when we come to it.

Mr. Osler: No; I am sorry; it would be the other way would it not? It would be sucked out if the production company operated at break even and the distribution company which took all the profits was owned outside the country?

Mr. Givens: I understand what you mean.

Mr. Spencer: No; we would see the contracts between the producer and the distributor as well as between the distributor and the exhibitor.

The only thing we have to do is to invest or not invest; and we insist upon seeing all the contracts. If our lawyers say, "Look, if you do this, this will be the result," then I think we probably would not invest.

The Chairman: If I may ask a supplementary in this general field, how would the film, The Luck of Ginger Coffey, qualify under the current thinking of the Development Corporation? Here is a Canadian property, done by a sort of American company, using Canadian actors and technicians and filmed in Montreal.

Mr. Spencer: That would have qualified very easily because Mr. Crawley had a distribution contract with the Walter Reid Organization before he began to make the film. The majority of the creative side of it did come from the Canadian end. I think the director was an American, but pretty well everything se produire, mais avant de faire toute transaction, nous examinons tous les contrats. Et si une telle situation semblait menacer de se présenter, aucun prêt ne serait consenti.

M. Osler: Est-ce que l'on fait plus d'argent en distribuant ou en produisant?

M. Spencer: Une compagnie de production gagne de l'argent en produisant des films, une société de distribution, en les distribuant.

M. Osler: C'est parfois la même compagnie.

Le président: Vous avez une question supplémentaire, monsieur Givens?

M. Givens: Si c'était votre difficulté majeure, cela montrerait que vos résultats sont excellents. Si nous devions nous préoccuper des profits que nous faisons aux États-Unis, j'en serais très heureux. Pas vous?

M. Spencer: Peut-être.

Le président: Nous nous occuperons de cette situation quand elle se présentera.

M. Osler: Je crois qu'à ce moment la situation serait l'inverse de celle-ci. Il serait assez déplorable que la compagnie de production ne fasse qu'un profit minimum, alors que la société de distribution, elle, retirerait tous les bénéfices?

M. Givens: Je comprends.

M. Spencer: Il est certain que nous examinerions les contrats aussi bien entre producteur et distributeur qu'entre distributeur et propriétaire de salle. Nous pouvons investir ou ne pas investir. Si nos avocats nous préviennent que cette situation peut se présenter, nous ne consentirons pas au prêt.

Le président: Je voudrais poser une question supplémentaire dans ce domaine; le film The Luck of Ginger Coffey aurait-il mérité la considération de la Société? C'était un film canadien, tourné à Montréal, par une compagnie américaine, avec des comédiens et des techniciens canadiens.

M. Spencer: M. Crawley avait un contrat de distribution avec la Walter Reid Organization avant de commencer le tournage, et la plupart des créations sont venues du personnel canadien. Le réalisateur était américain mais tout le reste était canadien, et l'histoire se déroulait à Montréal. Là, il n'y a pas de else was Canadian; and the story was based in Montreal. That very easily qualifies. I think we could be faced with much more difficult problems than that in terms of Canadian content.

The Chairman: Mr. Guilbault?

M. Guilbault: Je m'inquiète du fait que l'exposé ne fait aucunement mention des normes de qualité qu'on voudrait atteindre.

Je vois que le but de la Société est de promouvoir le développement d'une industrie cinématographique. Tantôt, on a semblé dire qu'on ne regardait pas les scripts tellement sous l'angle de la qualité, mais qu'on tentait plutôt d'établir si la production est rentable. Par exemple, je vois qu'on fait des placements dans les productions; c'est entendu que, si on fait des placements, on se demande, en premier lieu, si la maison est bien établie. Est-ce qu'ils ont déjà eux-mêmes des sources de financement? Est-ce que la production a des chances d'intéresser le public? Est-ce qu'elle va rapporter des recettes?

Si vous agissez comme banque, je comprends que ce soit un point à surveiller. Cependant est-ce que vous pensez à la qualité? Est-ce que vous désirez développer une industrie cinématographique de bonne qualité? Car, si on compare cela à la télévision, ce sont souvent les émissions de moins bonne qualité artistique qui tiennent les plus hautes cotes d'écoute. Ce sont des programmes que l'on connaît bien et qui n'ont pas souvent un intérêt culturel très élevé.

Je me demande comment vous allez équilibrer le côté qualité et le côté rentabilité financière, étant donné que vous êtes les banquiers.

• 1240

M. Lapalme: Il y a une chose à laquelle nous devons penser, c'est de ne pas écouler les fonds que nous avons à notre disposition, dès la première année, en finançant des choses que l'un des membres ou quelques-uns des membres de la Société croiraient belles, artistiques, intellectuelles, etc., mais qui, en réalité, seraient désastreuses.

Nous ne pouvons pas normalement faire intervenir nos goûts au point de vue intellectuel et au point de vue culturel, dans la confection d'un film, à moins qu'il y ait des choses extraordinaires. Si nous nous érigeons en juges seulement à la vue ou à la lecture d'une esquisse ou d'un scénario, nous risquerons grandement de nous tromper. Ceux qui inves-difficultés. Dans certains cas, le contenu canadien est beaucoup plus compliqué à définir.

Le président: Voilà un sujet que personne n'a attaqué. Mais j'aimerais poser une question. Pardon, je suis désolé, monsieur Guilbault.

Mr. Guilbault: Mr. Chairman, I am beginning to be a little concerned we find here no standards of quality, I see that the purpose of the corporation is to promote the development of a Canadian film industry. We were told a while ago that we were not too much concerned about the quality of the scripts but mostly concerned about economics of the situation. If we invest our first concern is the soundness of the investment.

Well the first question that comes to mind at this point is the company involved well established, do they have their own sources of financing, is the production going to be successful with the public and so on?

If you are a bank, of course, I can well understand your concern with those matters. But do you have any concern at all for quality? Do you wish to develop a quality film industry? If we compare with TV I sometimes think that the worst productions have the best ratings. While the ones that are least listened to are the better ones culturally. How are you going to reconcile those two points? After all you are bankers.

Mr. Lapalme: We, of course, have given some thoughts not to dribble away our funds right off the bat. One of us might find that one particular script offers every promise from the artistic point of view but financially it might be a disaster. We certainly cannot rely on our own intellectual tastes alone, our own cultural or artistic tastes unless the script is remarkable. If we attempt to judge a script at first sight or at first reading of a scenario, we might go very, very far wrong because we know very well that some people put their own money into what they think are good scripts and end of with financial disaster on their hands.

[Texte]

tissent des sommes énormes dans des scénarios qu'ils croient bons, s'en vont très souvent vers des désastres.

Si nous nous permettons de juger la valeur des scripts au point de vue culturel ou intellectuel, nous ne serions plus alors une banque. Si une banque avance de l'argent à une industrie qui veut s'agrandir et intervient en même temps sur le plan architectural de la future construction, on dira que c'est un territoire dans lequel la banque s'aventure et où elle n'a pas tellement de juridiction. C'est, en grande partie, notre cas.

Qu'un scénario vienne devant nous et soit, à première vue, pornographique, il est bien évident que nous ne voudrions pas subventionner, par un investissement ou par un prêt, un tel film. Si on vient devant nous avec un scénario qui contient ce que nous appelons communément des idées subversives, nous n'irons pas non plus placer ou prêter de l'argent dans ce film. Mais quelqu'un peut nous présenter un scénario qui peut ne pas nous plaire mais qui est appuyé, par exemple, dans un cas de co-production, par la France.

Je pense à un cas où le producteur est arrivé avec un scénario dont je n'aime pas l'histoire, mais qui peut devenir, une fois filmé, une bonne histoire. De plus, ce producteur avait un dossier presque complet. La France avançait un montant considérable grâce à son institution spéciale. Un anglais ou un américain y plaçait des fonds assez considérables et, enfin, un prêteur américain y avançait environ $300 mille. On vient alors nous demander $200 ou $250 mille.

Nous ne pouvons pas être, comme on dit en français, plus catholiques que le pape. Nous avons des gens sérieux qui sont placés en face d'un scénario qu'ils aiment, dans lequel ils sont prêts à investir un montant considérable et qui a un côté canadien appréciable et reconnu par nous. Nous avons alors à décider si, au point de vue financier, nous pouvons nous aventurer.

Nous ne savons pas ce que sera le film, une fois terminé. Je dois dire que nous avons reçu, ces jours-ci, un scénario français très bien fait. Je ne dirais pas qu'il contient un message important, mais c'est un scénario très bien fait. En lisant ce scénario, on se dit qu'on peut en faire un film exécrable ou un film merveilleux. Nous allons courir au hasard. Le scénariste ou le producteur arrive avec une promesse de fonds de l'entreprise privée, et, peut-être, avec une promesse de fonds de co-production. On vient nous

[Interprétation]

If we were to judge our scripts from an intellectual and cultural point of view we would not be a bank anymore. For a bank to advance money to a company who wants to build something and at the same time we put conditions with regard to the type of structure that is supposed to go up would be, I think, interfering in an area which is none of its concern. We are somewhat in the same position, that if we were faced with a script which were very obviously pornographic it is quite obvious that we would be unwilling to finance or invest in or make a loan to the production of such a film. If we have to consider a script which might be commonly described as violently subversive we might not want to put money into that film either.

But when somebody comes before us with a script which might not please us but has support as in the case of the co-production with France—I have a case in mind at the present time.

A producer came to see us with a script which I did not like personally. It might be a good story once it is translated into film. Besides, this producer came to see us with a script, plus one near-complete file indicating that France was advancing a considerable amount of money, thanks to the co-production agreements to which I referred earlier.

There was an Englishman or an American investing considerable funds also and there was also reference made to the fact that an American was lending $300,000 also. We are being asked to advance a mere $200 for $250,000.

We cannot, I think, be too difficult. We have had responsible people looking at a script into which they are ready to invest considerable amounts. There is an appreciable Canadian content recognized by us. In that case all we have to decide is purely and simply if we can go forward financially. All we can do is answer yes or no. We do not know what the film will be once it has been shot. I might say though that in the last few days we received the French script, a very, very good script. I would not say that it contains a message of enormous importance, but it is a very good script. In reading this script over you can say, you can make a very good picture or a very bad picture.

This is a risk we feel should be taken. Supposing the producer arrives with a promise of funds from private enterprise or for a promise of funds on a co-production basis, in that case if we advance money, even if the demander de l'argent et nous consentons. Mais, dans ce cas, où il s'agit d'un scénario qui me plaît, qui, je crois, plaît à M. Spencer et qui va certainement plaire à d'autres gens, nous ne savons pas si, lorsque le film paraîtra sur les écrans, vous, par exemple, ou un autre membre de ce Comité, y trouverez une valeur culturelle, intellectuelle ou morale très grande. Nous ne pouvons jamais savoir ce que sera le produit final.

M. Spencer: J'aimerais ajouter un mot. Nous connaissons, naturellement, les gens qui travaillent dans le film. C'est toujours important, car, si M. Untel a fait quelques bons films dans le passé, on a une assez bonne garantie qu'il continuera probablement à faire de bons films. La chance est beaucoup plus grande si ce sont de nouveaux réalisateurs qui n'ont jamais fait un film auparavant.

M. Lapalme: Mais, en face de quelqu'un qui, dans le passé, nous a offert le spectacle d'un homme qui a réussi de bons films, nous ne savons pas, cette fois, si son film aura la même valeur que ses films précédents. C'est très aléatoire. Comme nous avons à notre disposition l'argent du public, nous devons, en même temps que nous aidons à la création d'une industrie cinématographique, voir à ce que les fonds durent le plus longtemps possible par rotation. Nous ne pouvons pas mettre de côté la partie commerciale ou rentable d'un film.

● 1245

La National Film Finance Corporation d'Angleterre, qui dure depuis vingt ans et qui a encore, je crois, un million de livres à sa disposition, a pu faire tourner ainsi le fonds original 6 ou 7 fois. Ils ont aidé à la production d'un certain nombre de films qui furent bons, d'autres qui furent très bons, d'autres qui furent excellents, mais aussi de films qui se sont révélés mauvais, une fois terminés et présentés au public. C'est à peu près tout ce que je peux répondre.

M. Guilbault: Monsieur le président, si je comprends bien, je crois que le but de votre organisme est uniquement de régler le problème financier qui existe au Canada dans la production des films.

M. Lapalme: De longs métrages.

M. Guilbault: Ainsi votre but est de régler le problème qui durait depuis longtemps, c'est-à-dire le manque d'argent pour monter des longs métrages.

M. Spencer: C'est vrai, monsieur.

[Interpretation]

script pleases me and pleases Mr. Spencer and a great many people, still we cannot say if, when the film is shown to you or another member of this Committee, you will find that it is of cultural, intellectual or moral value. We can never know what the final product will be.

Mr. Spencer: I might add a word. We know the people who work in the industry. This is a very major consideration. If the names provided to us are the names of very experienced people we have a pretty good assurance that he will produce a film which will be equal to the quality of his former work. It is much better for us than if we are dealing with a new producer who has never produced anything.

Mr. Lapalme: But even there, even if we are dealing with a man who has produced good films in the past, we still do not know if his film will be of value equal to his preceding work. It's very risky. But since we are dealing with public money we must both attempt to help the setting up of a feature film industry and, at the same time, ensure that this fund of ours remains with us as long as possible through a turn over process. We cannot ignore the economics of the operation.

The National Film Finance Corporation of Great Britain which was set up 20 years ago and which still has 1 million pounds at its disposal was able to turn over its original funds six or seven times. Some of the films produced with their assistance were films of value. They helped in the production of a certain number of films. Some of these were good, some of them were very good, some were excellent, but at the same time they did assist in the production of bad films which were shown up to be bad when they were put on public display. That's about all I can say.

Mr. Guilbault: If I understand properly I believe that the purpose of your organization is to deal with the financial problems besetting the Canadian feature film industry.

Mr. Lapalme: The feature film industry.

Mr. Guilbault: Yes. Your purpose is to solve this financial difficulty which has long been with us interferes with the production of feature films in Canada.

Mr. Spencer: Yes, sir.

[Texte]

M. La Salle: Une question supplémentaire, monsieur le président. Est-ce que je pourrais demander au président, si, dans son opinion, on a, dans nos compagnies cinématographiques au Canada, de la qualité? Avez-vous beaucoup d'espoirs dans ces compagnies déjà existantes?

M. Lapalme: Je crois que je devrais étendre la portée de votre question. Nous considérons que nous avons, premièrement, des compagnies sérieuses; deuxièmement, le talent; troisièmement, presque toute la partie technique, au Canada, pour produire des films. C'est précisément du côté financier que se trouve l'obstacle.

Il faut envisager le côté financier de deux façons. Premièrement, pour produire un film de qualité, on dépense habituellement beaucoup d'argent; jusqu'à maintenant l'entreprise privée a eu beaucoup de difficultés à le trouver. Deuxièmement, la distribution d'un film dans une partie du monde, est une chose nécessaire; c'est précisément la distribution qui est l'un des obstacles les plus durs à surmonter.

M. La Salle: Si nos compagnies sont financièrement bien appuyées, pourront-elles éventuellement, dans un avenir rapproché, faire concurrence à des pays identiques au nôtre en population, par exemple?

M. Lapalme: C'est notre souhait. Je voudrais vous rappeler un fait assez récent, qui montre qu'il y a des choses possibles. Un producteur de film a récemment réussi sans aide de qui que ce soit, à franchir ce mur, en présentant son film à New York. Nous sommes convaincus que le film fera le tour du monde. Il s'agit d'une actrice canadienne, Isabel, qui a commencé à avoir du succès à Paris, après avoir fait du théâtre à Montréal. Le marché canadien est insuffisant au point de vue de la distribution. Le film canadien présente l'avantage je ne dirai pas bilingue, mais d'être fait dans les deux langues. Vous avez le secteur français et le secteur anglais. Vous avez ce que le secteur anglais peut comprendre le monde. Aujourd'hui nous sommes obligés, pour réussir financièrement un film de langue française, de le distribuer dans la francophonie.

M. La Salle: En deux mots, ce n'est pas le talent qui manque au Canada.

M. Lapalme: Non.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler.

Mr. Osler: I would like to ask two questions. What are your criteria on 10 (d), the making of grants to film-makers and film

[Interprétation]

Mr. La Salle: In our companies, in our commercial Canadian companies do we have quality? Have you any expectations of quality from these firms?

Mr. Lapalme: I think I should extend the scope of that question. We feel that we have here (a) responsible companies, (b) that we have talent, (c) that we have almost every possible technical facility we need to produce these films in Canada. It is from the financial point of view that we find the difficulties appearing. We should look at these from two points of view.

The first difficulty is that to produce a film, a quality film, it takes generally a great deal of money and up to now private enterprise has had a great deal of trouble in finding the money.

The second difficulty is that the distribution of feature films to at least a part of the world is necessary. It is from the distribution point of view that we meet the larger obstacles.

Mr. La Salle: Does this mean that if our companies are financially well supported it will be possible for them soon to compete with countries compared to us in population?

Mr. Lapalme: That is our hope but I would like to remind you of a fairly recent fact which shows what the possibilities are. We had a case of a film producer who without any assistance from anybody has managed to cross an obstacle by presenting his film in New York and we are convinced that his film will go around the world. We are dealing here with a Canadian actress, Isabel, who had had some success in Paris, after having done some acting in Montreal. Canadian market distribution is inadequate. This is not a bilingual film, you know a film done in two languages. You know what the English speaking world represents from the film distribution point of view so to have a successful French film you have to be sure of distributing—the French-speaking countries of the world.

Mr. La Salle: In other words, we are not lacking in talent in this country.

Mr. Lapalme: No.

Le président: M. Osler.

M. Osler: Je voudrais poser deux questions. Quels sont vos critères en ce qui concerne les subventions aux producteurs et aux techni-technicians? It strikes me that that could be a very slippery road to go down. It is right at the beginning, page 2 of the written text.

[Text]

Mr. Lapalme: Oh yes. It reads:

(d) Make grants to film-makers and film technicians resident in Canada to assist them in improving their crafts; and

Mr. Osler: That could become a sort of a pseudo Canada council type of thing.

• 1250

Mr. Lapalme: May I remind the members of this Committee that after this corporation was formed we met of course the film commissioner, who is a member of the Board, the Chairman, Mr. Pierre Juneau, Mr. Davidson, Mr. Dwyer and Mr. Boucher of the Canada Council, and we discussed this situation because we had seen in the arts council report that some of our film-makers had been given grants, subsidies or some form of assistance—I do not know exactly what—to study the cinema either here, abroad, or in the United States. There is an agreement between the council and ourselves that we discuss these matters together in order not to give money from both sides to any film-maker or technician that comes to us.

Mr. Osler: On page 4 you said:

The Corporation has also decided that it would support producers with pre-production money and we are presently dealing with some of them in the expectation of investing...

This is like a publisher's advance, I suppose, but again the area becomes tricky—at least until you are well into business.

Mr. Lapalme: Yes, it is tricky, as you said. Mr. Spencer could you comment on that.

Mr. Spencer: I think our policy there is to be as flexible as possible, to look at the people rather more than the project, to some extent, because if an established producer has a novel that he is very anxious to make into a film and he has an idea for a director and how the film could be produced, it would seem to us that we should give him a chance to see if he can make it go. The limitation will be that after a certain period of course we will probably have to say, well, we are only going to go so far down this line and we will have to see how we make out. Another way of putting it is to say that we are trying to help producers to establish track records of one sort or another. We do not see that they can go to New York or anywhere else with an idea on the back of an old envelope. I think ciens? A mon avis, cela semble être un terrain délicat. C'est à la page 2 de votre texte.

[Interpretation]

M. Lapalme: Oui, on peut lire:

(d) accorder aux cinéastes et techniciens du film qui résident au Canada des subventions pour les aider à accroître leur compétence technique; et...

M. Osler: Ce serait une sorte de conseil canadien.

M. Lapalme: Je voudrais rappeler aux membres du Comité qu'après la création de notre Société, nous avons rencontré bien sûr, le Commissaire du film qui fait partie de la Société, le président, M. Pierre Juneau, M. Davidson, M. Dwyer et M. Boucher du Conseil des arts. Nous avons discuté cette situation, car nous avons vu dans le rapport du Conseil des arts que certains de nos producteurs avaient reçu des subventions pour étudier le cinéma soit ici, soit à l'étranger, soit aux États-Unis.

Un accord entre le Conseil et nous-mêmes a été conclu pour discuter cette question et pour ne pas faire une double subvention à des techniciens ou à des producteurs.

M. Osler: A la page 4, vous dites:

D'autre part, la Société a décidé d'accorder aux producteurs une aide préalable à la production...et étudie actuellement avec quelques-uns d'entre eux la possibilité d'investir...

C'est comme une avance d'éditeur, mais, une fois de plus, c'est un terrain dangereux, aussi longtemps que votre Société ne sera pas bien installée.

M. Lapalme: Oui, c'est délicat.

M. Spencer: Nous essayons de faire preuve d'autant de souplesse que possible. Nous examinons peut-être plus la personne que son projet. Si un producteur, qui veut faire un film a une idée du metteur en scène et de la réalisation du film nous essayons de lui donner toutes les chances possibles. Mais, après quelque temps, nous aurons à nous limiter et à progresser au fur et à mesure. Nous essayons d'aider les producteurs à se faire, d'une façon ou d'une autre, des antécédents. Comment pourraient-ils en effet se présenter à New York ou ailleurs avec pour seul bagage une idée derrière la tête? A mon sens, ils doivent vraiment faire preuve de sérieux, montrer qu'ils ont bien poli leur scénario et qu'ils ont la notion du prix de revient.

[Texte]

they pretty well have to show that they are serious, that they have worked out the script and that they have some idea of the price.

Mr. Osler: But this almost enters the area of a personal bank loan rather than the business phase, which is the next phase.

Mr. Spencer: That is correct.

Mr. Osler: In other words, if I have 100 pages of a book written but I do not have time to finish it without somebody paying for the groceries in the meantime, and if I have a reputation I can get my publisher to perhaps advance something. But that is only an advance towards the production of that book. So much money is involved, and you are only 50 per cent of that money at the best of times, so that it would seem to me that you could help a lad along with an advance against royalties or whatever it is, but you are only 50 per cent of that deal; he ultimately has to find somebody else as well, does he not?

Mr. Spencer: This is right. We do not really want to deal with people who have ideas like that; we would rather deal with producers. We consider that the big thing to do is to create the entrepreneurial aspect of this whole thing. If a man had an idea of the kind you have stated, I think we would say, "Well, as far as we are concerned it is interesting, but if you can persuade Mr. So and So, a producer who already is dealing with us on other properties, it would be a good idea. We would be glad to hear from him that he thinks your idea is a good one".

Mr. Lapalme: Yes, the script writer does not come alone.

The Chairman: I have a supplementary. In your statement, Mr. Lapalme, you mentioned that the skills that seemed to be lacking in Canadian film-making were those of the entrepreneur, the man who can put the thing together, who has skill in distribution and cost accounting and that kind of thing.

Mr. Lapalme: Yes.

The Chairman: Why are we lacking these types of skills in the film industry?

Mr. Osler: Why are we lacking them in very other industry?

The Chairman: Well, there are shortages, I'm sure, but it seems particularly acute in this particular area.

Mr. Stanbury: We never had such an industry.

[Interprétation]

M. Osler: Mais ne s'agit-il pas là pour ainsi dire d'une sorte de prêt bancaire personnel, plutôt que des transactions commerciales qui viennent en deuxième phase?

M. Spencer: C'est exact.

M. Osler: En d'autres termes, si j'ai écrit 100 pages d'un livre mais que je n'aie pas le temps de le finir sans que quelqu'un subviene au matériel entre temps, si d'autre part j'ai une certaine réputation, peut-être mon éditeur me fera-t-il une avance. Mais cette avance ne concerne que la réalisation de l'ouvrage. Or, dans le cas qui nous intéresse, il faut beaucoup d'argent, et vous n'en fournissez au mieux que 50 p. 100. Ainsi, vous auriez beau faire une avance sur les droits d'auteur, vous vous arrêtez à 50 p. 100. L'auteur ne devra-t-il pas alors s'adresser ailleurs? N'est-ce pas?

M. Spencer: C'est exact. En fait, nous ne voulons pas traiter avec des gens qui ont des idées de ce genre. C'est aux producteurs que nous nous intéressons. Notre grosse affaire, c'est la mise sur pied de toute l'œuvre en tant qu'entreprise. Si quelqu'un se présentait à nous avec le genre d'idées dont vous avez fait état, nous lui dirions: «Très bien, en ce qui nous concerne, votre idée est intéressante, mais si vous pouviez convaincre monsieur un tel, producteur déjà en rapport avec nous sur d'autres droits d'auteur, ce serait bien mieux. Nous serions heureux de l'entendre nous faire part du cas qu'il fait de votre idée».

M. Lapalme: C'est vrai, le scénariste n'est pas tout seul.

Le président: Question supplémentaire. Vous avez dit, monsieur Lapalme, que ce qui manque, semble-t-il, au cinéma canadien, c'est la compétence du chef d'entreprise, de celle de l'organisateur, qui s'y connaît notamment en distribution et en comptabilité des prix de revient.

M. Lapalme: C'est bien cela.

Le président: A quoi faut-il attribuer cette lacune de notre industrie cinématographique?

M. Osler: Et de toutes nos autres industries?

Le président: Certes, il y a des manques partout j'en suis sûr, mais c'est particulièrement vrai dans le cas qui nous occupe.

M. Stanbury: Une industrie cinématographique? Nous n'en avons jamais eu!

[Text]

Mr. Spencer: Perhaps that is one of the answers, as Mr. Dinsdale said earlier. In my opinion it has been an effect of government domination of the industry.

The Chairman: The government domination has been good for the technical end, but not good for the entrepreneurial.

● 1255

Mr. Spencer: That is right.

Mr. Osler: If we have time, Mr. Chairman, the other question is, to me, the "crunch" question. Assuming that you have something that can be developed, which I think we all assume, and we are thrilled with the idea of doing, is this distribution problem going to be licked?

Mr. Lapalme: That is the $64,000 question.

Mr. Osler: That is the "crunch" question.

Mr. Lapalme: In some cases it is the $1 million question.

Mr. Spencer: That is right. It is difficult to generalize about the answer. I think, in fact, that we probably will lick it in two or three cases within the next two or three months, but will we lick it for everybody all the time? That is another question. It depends, again, on the property, the kind of person who is putting it together, what his contacts are, and whether he can sell it. There are all sorts of opportunities and I think we can lick it in certain cases, but I do not think we could say that we can lick it for everybody.

Mr. Osler: If you think of a man as a theatre owner he does not really give a damn where his play comes from if it is a good play and it is going to bring people in, but the film industry seems to be so organized that you wonder, when you are talking about movie theatres, whether the same thing applies. Or do these distributors have a great financial urge to put nothing but their own properties into their films?

Mr. Spencer: Again that depends on the distributors, Mr. Osler.

Mr. Osler: I see.

Mr. Spencer: For instance, you could not say that about United Artists Corporation because they do not have any facilities; they buy everything outside. The Walter Reid Organization gets everything from outside. You would have great difficulty in selling anything to MGM and maybe to Paramount Pictures Corporation, because I think they do have

[Interpretation]

M. Spencer: On trouve là sans doute une des réponses, comme l'a déjà fait remarquer M. Dinsdale. C'est, à mon avis, la conséquence de la domination exercée par l'État sur l'industrie.

Le président: Sur le plan technique, la domination de l'État a certainement été bonne, mais non sur celui de l'entreprise.

M. Spencer: C'est juste.

M. Osler: Encore une question, si nous en avons le temps, monsieur. Il s'agit du «mordant». Admettons qu'il y ait quelque chose à réaliser. Nous l'admettons tous, n'est-ce pas? Va-t-on alors résoudre ce problème de distribution?

M. Lapalme: C'est vraiment la question aux $64,000!

M. Osler: Oui, le «mordant»!

M. Lapalme: C'est parfois la question au million de dollars!

M. Spencer: Certes, il est difficile de faire des généralisations sur la réponse. En fait, nous résoudrons probablement deux ou trois cas au cours des deux ou trois prochains mois. Mais le ferons-nous toujours pour tout le monde? Cela, c'est autre chose. Cela dépend, je le répète, des droits d'auteur, des qualités de l'organisateur, de ses rapports et des possibilités de vente de l'œuvre. Il y a toutes sortes de solutions, que nous pouvons, je crois, trouver dans certains cas, mais non pour tout le monde.

M. Osler: Prenons le cas d'un propriétaire de salles de cinéma. Cet homme se soucie fort peu de la provenance de sa pièce pourvu qu'elle soit bonne et qu'elle attire les spectateurs. Or, l'industrie cinématographique semble être organisée de telle sorte que l'on se demande, à propos des salles de cinéma, si la même chose ne s'y applique pas. Ou alors, l'état des finances des distributeurs les pousse-t-il à ne diffuser que les films de leurs propres réseaux?

M. Spencer: Encore une fois, tout dépend du distributeur.

M. Osler: Je vois.

M. Spencer: Vous ne pourriez pas, par exemple, dire cela de la United Artists Corporation, car elle ne dispose d'aucune installation. Elle achète tout à l'extérieur. Il en est de même pour la Walter Reid Organization. Il est difficile de vendre quoi que ce soit à la MGM ou à la Paramount Pictures Corporation, car elles ont évidemment des installa-production facilities and they are inclined to give a priority to them. The whole market is very broad and very flexible. A producer who can study it a bit—and we hope to help him study it—should be able to sell his product some way or other.

[Texte]

Mr. Osler: I see.

The Chairman: Mr. Stanbury.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, could the witnesses indicate whether or not the entrepreneurial abilities which they feel are lacking are in the film field generally or primarily in the field of feature films?

Mr. Spencer: I think primarily in the field of feature films. I think in the area of information films and in the area of educational films there is a good deal of entrepreneurial ability. I do not know the field very well, but my impression is that it is in the feature film field, which is new to everybody and very complex. Some people have said it is the last place for the buccaneers and the tycoons and the sharks.

Mr. Stanbury: Has there been very much government activity in feature films in the past?

Mr. Spencer: Not very much, apart from what the National Film Board has done.

Mr. Stanbury: How many has the National Film Board done?

Mr. Spencer: Oh, not very many. The Film Board in one area, of course, has been extremely useful to us. I do not think that Mr. Gilles Carle, for example, would ever have got off the ground if he had not first of all made "La Vie Heureuse" de Leopold Z.

Mr. Stanbury: There have been less than a handful of feature films produced by the Film Board.

Mr. Spencer: Oh, yes, there have been a very small number of the kind of feature films that we are interested in as opposed to long documentaries.

Mr. Stanbury: Then it is hardly true that government has dominated the feature film industry in Canada if there has not been an industry to dominate.

The Chairman: It has been, really, an export market for the United States.

Mr. Stanbury: Is it not true that the real reason why we have not developed a feature tions de productions et elles sont portées à donner priorité à leurs productions. Tout le marché est très étendu et très flexible. Un producteur qui peut l'étudier un peu—et nous voulons l'aider à le faire—devrait pouvoir vendre son produit d'une façon ou d'une autre.

[Interprétation]

M. Osler: Je vois.

Le président: Monsieur Stanbury.

M. Stanbury: Monsieur le président, je me demande si le témoin pourrait dire si les capacités d'entrepreneur, d'homme d'affaires et je me demande si les témoins pourraient nous dire s'ils croient que c'est dans le domaine cinématographique, en général, ou essentiellement dans le domaine des longs métrages, que l'esprit d'entreprise fait défaut?

M. Spencer: Essentiellement, je pense, dans le domaine des longs métrages. Dans le domaine de l'information, dans le domaine des films éducatifs, nous avons au Canada un esprit d'entreprise assez actif. Je n'ai pas une très longue expérience de ces questions, mais j'ai l'impression que le domaine des longs métrages est très compliqué, très nouveau. Certaines personnes ont dit que c'était le dernier endroit pour les pirates, les gros bonnets et les requins (de la finance).

M. Stanbury: Est-ce qu'il y a eu beaucoup d'activités gouvernementales dans le domaine des longs métrages dans le passé?

M. Spencer: Pas tellement, mis à part ceux qu'a produits l'Office national du film.

M. Stanbury: Combien l'Office national du film en a-t-il produits?

M. Spencer: Oh, pas beaucoup. L'Office national du film nous a été très utile dans un certain domaine, naturellement. Par exemple, je ne crois que M. Gilles Carle aurait jamais été lancé s'il n'avait pas fait d'abord "La vie heureuse de Léopold Z".

M. Stanbury: Mais ils ne sont pas très nombreux les longs métrages qu'a produits l'Office du film.

M. Spencer: Il y a très peu de longs métrages du genre qui nous intéresse, par opposition aux longs métrages documentaires.

M. Stanbury: Le gouvernement n'a donc pas tellement dominé l'industrie du long métrage au Canada, s'il n'y a pas eu d'industrie à dominer.

Le président: Cela a été surtout un marché d'exportation pour les États-Unis.

M. Stanbury: Est-ce que la vraie raison pour laquelle nous n'avons pas créé une film industry is that governments in the past have not taken the steps which were taken some years ago in other countries which you have mentioned to stimulate and encourage such an industry?

In Canada we neither produced feature films through our government agencies nor did we stimulate private industry to produce them. Only a very few feature films have been produced by the National Film Board. Now what we are hoping for is that through government action of the same kind, and perhaps some new kind, as well as that which has been taken in other countries, we will give an impetus to the private feature film industry of the kind that has built up in Britain, Italy, France and Sweden as a result of some government interest. Is that correct?

• 1300

Mr. Spencer: Yes, sir.

Mr. Lapalme: May I make a resume of what has been told us by producers and distributors? To create a feature film industry in Canada we need a good story, we need money and we need distribution. These are the three problems; otherwise we have the actors, we have technical skill, and we have studios.

Mr. Stanbury: You hope to help private film makers acquire good stories through encouraging the writing of scenarios, and you hope to help them with distribution problems by studying them yourselves and advising the government on co-production treaties which might help in this field, but your prime role is in the second field of financing.

Mr. Lapalme: Yes.

Mr. Stanbury: Thank you.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Chairman. In the statement read by Mr. Lapalme on page 3, it says that:

Since the Corporation can share in the profits of successful films...

What is the basis of the sharing?

Mr. Spencer: The basis is usually this. Where the film is going to cost about $200,000 and the Corporation is going to put up $100,000, it has put up 50 per cent of the total amount required. When the film goes into a profit, the normal practice is for the producer to get 50 per cent of the profits and for the other 50 per cent to be shared among the industrie du long métrage, c'est que les gouvernements, par le passé, n'ont pas pris les mesures qui ont été prises il y a déjà quelques années dans les pays dont vous avez parlé, en vue de stimuler, de favoriser la création d'une industrie de ce genre?

Au Canada, nous ne produisons pas de longs métrages du tout, ni par l'entremise de nos organismes d'État, ni par l'entremise de l'industrie privée, que nous n'encourageons pas. L'Office national du film ne produit que très peu de longs métrages. Ce que nous espérons, c'est que, grâce à l'intervention du gouvernement, intervention analogue à ce qui s'est fait dans d'autres pays, voire grâce à l'application d'idées nouvelles, il nous sera possible de favoriser l'industrie canadienne du long métrage, de façon à faire de cette industrie quelque chose d'analogue à ce qui s'est fait en Grande-Bretagne, en Italie, en France, en Suède. Est-ce exact?

M. Spencer: Oui.

M. Lapalme: Est-ce que je peux résumer ici ce que nous ont dit producteurs et distributeurs? Pour créer un long métrage au Canada, il faut un bon scénario, de l'argent et de la distribution. Ce sont nos trois problèmes. Car nous avons les acteurs, les techniciens et les studios.

M. Stanbury: Vous voulez donc aider les producteurs privés à acheter de bons scénarios, à favoriser ainsi la rédaction de bons scénarios; vous souhaitez aussi les aider à surmonter leurs problèmes de distribution en examinant la question vous-même, et en conseillant le gouvernement en ce qui concerne la conclusion de contrats de coproduction qui pourraient être utiles dans ce domaine, mais votre grand rôle, c'est dans le deuxième domaine, celui du financement.

M. Lapalme: Oui.

M. Stanbury: Merci.

M. Dinsdale: J'ai une question supplémentaire à poser, monsieur le président. A la troisième page de la déclaration de M. Lapalme on dit que «la Société peut partager les bénéfices du film». Est-ce qu'il existe une formule à cet égard?

M. Spencer: Quelle est la formule à appliquer? Pour commencer, supposons que le film coûte $200,000. La Société avance $100,000, soit 50 p. 100 du montant. Lorsque le film réalise un bénéfice, normalement, le producteur touche 50 p. 100 des bénéfices, les autres 50 p. 100 étant partagés entre les investisseurs; dans ce cas-ci, nous aurions donc 25 p.

[Texte]

investors. In that case, if we had put up 50 per cent, we would be 50 per cent of the investors; we would therefore get 25 per cent of the profits.

Mr. Dinsdale: So there is a formula.

Mr. Spencer: This seems to be the formula, but we have discovered that as soon as we state that a formula exists we are then approached by all kinds of producers who have other better and more interesting formulas which they would like us to use.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is the Board provisional, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Not to my knowledge. It has been appointed. One thing that the Corporation has not done as yet—and I can be corrected—is to appoint your advisory council.

Mr. Lapalme: No, we cannot appoint them. Upon our own recommendation the Minister may appoint an executive director and a secretary. Our recommendations were made at the last meeting and presented to him last month.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, is Mr. Spencer provisional? I notice that his position is emporary.

Mr. Lapalme: Yes, that is right. Sometimes emporary means permanent, but this I could not say at the moment.

Mr. Dinsdale: Well, he has displayed ompetence and I trust it is permanent.

Mr. Spencer: Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions? If not, I would like to thank Mr. Lapalme and Mr. Spencer for coming up from Montreal. We know that you are a beginning rganization and that perhaps next year we will have some examples to look into of your xpertise in this field. We wish you a sound, ccessful, and even financially profitable uture. Thank you.

Mr. Lapalme: Thank you, sir.

[Interprétation]

100 des bénéfices, soit la moitié de la part qui revient aux investisseurs.

M. Dinsdale: Cela semble être une formule.

M. Spencer: Mais dès que nous disons qu'une formule existe, on voit arriver toute sorte de producteurs qui ont de meilleures formules, et autrement plus intéressantes, et qui aimeraient qu'on les utilise.

M. Dinsdale: Le Conseil d'administration est-il provisoire?

Le président: Pas pour autant que je sache. Il a été nommé régulièrement. La Société n'a toutefois pas encore nommé son comité consultatif, à moins que je ne fasse erreur.

M. Lapalme: Non, nous ne pouvons pas les nommer à notre diligence. Le ministre peut nommer, sur notre avis, un directeur exécutif et un secrétaire. Nous avons fait nos recommandations à la dernière réunion et les lui avons présentées le mois dernier.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, M. Spencer est-il traité à base provisoire? Je constate qu'il a une situation provisoire.

M. Lapalme: Oui, c'est vrai. Il arrive parfois que provisoire signifie permanent, je ne saurais me prononcer là-dessus pour le moment.

M. Dinsdale: Il a montré assez de compétence, je pense. Je crois que c'est permanent.

M. Spencer: Merci.

Le président: D'autres questions? Si non, je voudrais remercier M. Lapalme et M. Spencer d'être venus de Montréal. Nous savons que votre organisation est à ses débuts et que l'année prochaine, peut-être, nous verrons des résultats de votre expertise dans ce domaine. Nous vous souhaitons beaucoup de succès et un avenir financier solide. Merci.

M. Lapalme: Je vous remercie, Monsieur.

This official bilingual edition contains the speeches as delivered in the English or French language in the left-hand column of each page of Evidence. The right-hand column of each page of Evidence utilizes the oral translations rendered by Simultaneous Interpreters with minor necessary revisions only. For the Minutes of Proceedings, the English text appears in the left-hand column and the French text or Translation on the right.

The purpose of this format is to make available the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence in both languages in the same edition.

This edition is available by subscription to the Queen's Printer.

Cette édition bilingue officielle présente les interventions faites en français ou en anglais dans la colonne de gauche de chaque page. D'autre part, dans la colonne de droite, on utilise la transcription in extenso de l'interprétation simultanée à laquelle n'ont été apportées que de légères modifications de style ou de grammaire. Le texte anglais des procès-verbaux apparaît dans la colonne de gauche et le texte français ou la traduction dans la colonne de droite.

Le but de cette formule est d'accélérer la publication des procès-verbaux et témoignages dans les deux langues dans la même édition.

Cette édition peut être obtenue de l'Imprimeur de la Reine.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

THURSDAY, November 28, 1968.

(14)

The Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts met this day at 2.20 p.m. The Chairman, Mr. John M. Reid, presided.

Members present: Messrs. Corbin, De Bané, Dinsdale, Givens, Guilbault, La Salle, Matte, McCleave, Mongrain, Osler, Reid, Schreyer, Schumacher, Stafford, Stanbury, Stewart (Cochrane)—(16).

Members also present: Messrs. Forrestall and Gibson.

In attendance: From the Canadian Radio-Television Commission: Messrs. Pierre Juneau, Chairman; Harry J. Boyle, Vice-Chairman; Paul E. Lamy, General Assistant to the Chairman; and Frank K. Foster, Secretary.

The Chairman made a statement in which he ruled that the motion of Mr. Dinsdale of November 26, relating to the National Arts Centre, was out of order.

The Committee proceeded to the consideration of the Revised Main Estimates 1968-69 of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission.

On Item 40, the Chairman introduced Messrs. Juneau and Boyle; Mr. Juneau made a statement on the operations of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission and the policy issues they are dealing with, and was examined thereon, assisted by Mr. Boyle.

At 3.40 p.m., the Committee recessed until 3.50 p.m. when the examination of Messrs. Juneau and Boyle was resumed.

The examination of witnesses being concluded, the Chairman thanked them.

The following items were then called and carried:

Item 40—Canadian Radio-Television Commission.

PROCÈS-VERBAL

Le JEUDI 28 novembre 1968.

(14)

Le Comité permanent de la radiodiffusion, des films et de l'assistance aux arts se réunit cet après-midi à 2 h. 20 sous la présidence de M. John M. Reid.

Présents: MM. Corbin, De Bané, Dinsdale, Givens, Guilbault, La Salle, Matte, McCleave, Mongrain, Osler, Reid, Schreyer, Schumacher, Stafford, Stanbury, Stewart (Cochrane)—(16).

Aussi présents: MM. les députés Forrestall et Gibson.

Et aussi: du Conseil de la radio-télévision canadienne: MM. Pierre Juneau, président; Harry J. Boyle, vice-président; Paul E. Lamy, adjoint général au président; Frank K. Foster, secrétaire.

Le président rend sa décision sur une motion de M. Dinsdale du 26 novembre au sujet du Centre national des arts, et la déclare irrecevable.

Le Comité examine ensuite le budget principal révisé des dépenses pour 1968-1969 du Conseil de la radio-télévision canadienne.

Au moment de l'étude du crédit 40, le président présente MM. Juneau et Boyle; M. Juneau fait un exposé sur le fonctionnement et la ligne de conduite du Conseil de la radio-télévision canadienne et répond aux questions portant sur ces sujets en compagnie de M. Boyle.

A 3 h. 40, le Comité suspend sa séance pendant dix minutes; la période de questions reprend ensuite.

L'interrogatoire terminé, le président remercie les témoins.

Les crédits suivants sont alors proposés et adoptés:

Crédit 40—Conseil de la radio-télévision canadienne.

Item 70—National Museums of Canada.

Items 55 and 60—National Film Board.

Item 50—National Arts Centre (Carried on division).

Items 1 and 2—Secretary of State.

Item 30—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Loans, Investments and Advances—Item L1—Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation.

The Chairman advised that a meeting of the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure would meet next week to consider a Report to the House.

At 6 p.m., the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chair.

Crédit 70—Musées nationaux du Canada.

Crédits 55 et 60—Office national du film.

Crédit 50—Centre national des arts (adopté sur division).

Crédits 1 et 2—Secrétariat d'État.

Crédit 30—Société Radio-Canada.

Prêts, placements et avances—Crédit L1—Société canadienne des télécommunications transmarines.

Le président annonce que le sous-comité du programme et de la procédure se réunira la semaine prochaine pour préparer son rapport à la Chambre.

A 6 heures du soir, le Comité s'ajourne à l'appel des présidents.

Le secrétaire du Comité

M. Slack,

Clerk of the Committee.

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le jeudi 28 novembre 1968

• 1422

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I would like to call this meeting to order. I see a quorum.

The first order of business is the status of Mr. Dinsdale's motion. As you will recall, when it was introduced I took under advisement to consider it, and I have to say that it is out of order.

There are two aspects to this question. The first concerns the authority of this Committee over matters referred to it by the House of Commons, and the second concerns the ability of this committee to direct another Committee. To deal with the second situation first, there is apparent agreement that one Committee cannot direct another.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I have the impression there are some members of the press who do not have places to sit. Could they be allowed to sit at this table?

The Chairman: Perhaps they could sit at the end of this table to my left.

Mr. Mongrain: That is fine.

The Chairman: In any event the question of the National Arts Centre is currently before the Public Accounts Committee. On page 225 of the 1967 Report of the Auditor General to the House of Commons, under Special Audits and Examinations, there is a fairly extensive accounting of the accounts of the National Arts Centre. In addition there is a second mention of the National Arts Centre in the Auditor General's Report, and so the motion is it presently stands to request the House of Commons to request the Public Accounts Committee to investigate it is redundant. Redundancy, in my personal opinion, is not sufficient grounds to declare the motion out of order, and on those grounds alone I would be inclined to permit the motion to come to a vote, but there is another aspect of the problem and this deals with the powers of this Committee. The business of this Committee deals with items which have been referred to by the House of Commons, which must be dealt with by this Committee and reported to

Le président: Messieurs, j'ouvre la séance, puisque nous avons quorum. Nous allons d'abord étudier la motion de M. Dinsdale. Vous vous souvenez que lorsqu'elle a été présentée la dernière fois, je devais l'étudier. C'est maintenant chose faite, et je la déclare irrecevable.

Il y a deux aspects dans cette question: d'une part, les pouvoirs du Comité sur les questions que lui transmet la Chambre des communes, et d'autre part, le droit, pour le Comité de donner des instructions à un autre comité. Au sujet de la deuxième partie de la question, nous semblons être d'accord sur le fait qu'un comité ne peut en diriger un autre.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, j'invoque le règlement: J'ai l'impression que certains journalistes ne sont pas assis. Peut-être pourraient-ils s'asseoir à cette table-ci?

Le président: Peut-être pourraient-ils prendre cette table, à ma gauche, s'ils le désirent?

M. Mongrain: Très bien.

Le président: Quoi qu'il en soit, la question du Centre national des arts est actuellement étudiée au comité des comptes publics. Dans le rapport de l'auditeur général à la Chambre des communes, pour l'année 1967, à la page 225, au chapitre des vérifications et examens spéciaux, on trouve d'assez longues explications sur la régie des comptes du Centre national des arts. En outre, il en est question ailleurs dans le même rapport. Ainsi donc, la motion, telle qu'elle est actuellement présentée, qui prie le Comité des comptes publics d'étudier cette question, est tout à fait superflue. Mais, à mon avis, cette question de superfluité ne suffit pas à ce que je déclare la motion irrecevable. Mais il est un autre aspect de la question. La juridiction de ce Comité. Celle-ci s'étend aux questions dont nous avons été saisis par la Chambre des communes. Notre comité doit donc les étudier et en faire ultérieurement rapport. Saisir de l'une de ces mêmes questions un autre comité, ne serait pas à mon avis agir régulièrement.

the House of Commons. A suggestion to refer some of these items to another Committee would not, in my opinion, be in order.

I would like to quote Beauchesne, Fourth Edition, pages 244 and 245, citation number 304:

304. (1) A committee can only consider those matters which have been committed to it by the House.

(2) A committee is bound by, and is not at liberty to depart from, the order of reference. In the case of a Select Committee upon a Bill, the Bill committed to it is itself the order of reference to the committee, who must report it with or without amendment to the House.

Further, the Provisional Reprint of the Standing Orders of the House of Commons which governs the activities of this Committee reads as follows: This is 65(4):

● 1425

(4) The standing committees shall be severally empowered to examine and enquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the House; to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon;...

"Thereon" in this particular case refers to the estimates. As this motion seeks to do something other than to give "observations and opinions", I am therefore forced to declare it out of order.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I do not have my Beauchesne with me this afternoon. I am not going to make a legalistic argument here on this occasion. You did say in your report that this Committee has no power to direct another Committee. Actually what I was endeavouring to do in putting forward this motion was to obtain a consensus concerning a very vital matter of public expenditure that had been reported to this Committee.

Mr. Givens: On a point of order. Mr. Chairman, did you rule this motion out of order?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Givens: Well then, is not the only recourse now to appeal your ruling, that it is not debatable?

The Chairman: That is correct. However, I was going to permit Mr. Dinsdale to make a brief statement.

Mr. Stanbury: I suppose each of us will have that opportunity then, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I would think so.

[Interpretation]

Qu'il me soit permis de citer Beauchesne, aux pages 250-251, article 304.

(1) Un comité ne peut étudier que les questions qui lui ont été déferées par la Chambre.

(2) Un comité doit s'en tenir à l'ordre de renvoi, et ne saurait y déroger. Dans le cas d'un comité spécial chargé de l'examen d'un bill, ce bill constitue par lui-même l'ordre de renvoi, et le comité doit en faire rapport à la Chambre, avec ou sans modification.

En outre, l'article 65 du Règlement qui vise l'activité notre Comité se lit comme suit:

(4) Les comités permanents doivent être individuellement autorisés à faire étude et enquête sur toutes les questions et les choses que peut leur confier la Chambre, à faire rapport à l'occasion de leurs observations et avis à ce sujet...

«A ce sujet», ici, concerne évidemment les crédits. Puisqu'il s'agit de faire autre chose que des observations et des opinions, je me vois donc obligé de déclarer la motion irrecevable.

Mr. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, je n'ai pas mon «Beauchesne» avec moi cet après-midi, et je ne voudrais pas engager un débat juridique. Vous dites, dans votre rapport que ce Comité n'est pas habilité à diriger les débats d'un autre comité. En fait, l'idée de cette motion était de chercher à obtenir le consensus général sur une question d'importance primordiale concernant des comptes publics, et qui nous a été rapportée.

Mr. Givens: J'invoque le règlement, est-ce que vous avez déclaré la motion irrecevable?

Le président: Oui.

Mr. Givens: Dans ce cas le seul recours est d'en appeler de votre décision, puisque nous ne pouvons en discuter. N'est-ce pas?

Le président: Oui, néanmoins j'allais permettre à M. Dinsdale de faire une brève déclaration.

Mr. Stanbury: Alors nous aurons tous l'occasion de le faire aussi, monsieur le président.

Le président: Je le crois.

[Texte]

Mr. Givens: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect...

The Chairman: The Chair has no desire to stop people from making statements on this. It is a bit of a precedent, and I understand it does work a certain hardship on members.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect, the motion as I see it now to be in order should be that your ruling is appealed. If the Chair is upheld, you go on to the next order of business. If the Chair is not upheld, then the motion stands and everyone can start making their statements. There is nothing before us now except your ruling. It is not a matter of being legalistic, you have to have some finality.

Mr. Mongrain: That would be my impression too.

Mr. Givens: The motion of Mr. Dinsdale, with great respect, should be that he appeals your ruling, then you take a vote. Then we either go on to the next order of business or we debate the motion.

The Chairman: Well, if Mr. Dinsdale is going to appeal my ruling, which is his right, then I think I would be prepared to allow him to make a very short statement on it. Perhaps one other short statement from someone else opposing it, and then we could call a vote immediately.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. An appeal ruling is not debatable. You take a vote on it.

The Chairman: Well again, as I say, I do not want to be closed in by being too legalistic. I would like to permit Mr. Dinsdale to make his statement and then go on. If this is agreeable to the Committee then I would...

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, if you do that, how can you refuse other members to make statements afterwards?

Mr. Chairman: I would hope there would be a consensus among Committee members to permit this.

Mr. Mongrain: Well I am not sure.

Mr. Givens: If you allow Mr. Dinsdale, then you have to allow Mr. Mongrain and everyone else.

Mr. Mongrain: I will insist on making a statement.

[Interprétation]

M. Givens: Monsieur le président, sauf le respect...

Le président: Là, je ne veux empêcher personne de faire des déclarations à ce sujet. C'est en quelque sorte un précédent, et les membres de ce Comité en sont un peu remués.

M. Givens: En toute déférence, monsieur le président, pour que la motion soit recevable, il faudrait que l'on présente une motion en appelant de votre décision. Si votre décision est acceptée, nous passons à l'article suivant de l'ordre du jour. Si votre décision n'est pas confirmée, nous passons en conséquence à la motion de M. Dinsdale, pour en discuter. Actuellement, nous discutons de votre décision. Elle doit être irrévocable.

M. Mongrain: C'est aussi mon avis.

M. Givens: La motion de M. Dinsdale, en toute déférence, devrait être qu'il en appelle de votre décision; vous mettez cette motion aux voix, puis nous passons à l'article suivant de l'ordre du jour, ou bien au débat de la motion.

Le président: Si M. Dinsdale veut en appeler de ma décision, c'est son droit, je suis disposé à lui permettre de faire une très courte déclaration, sur ce sujet. Peut-être quelqu'un d'autre opposé à sa motion pourrait-il faire une courte déclaration également.

M. Givens: D'après le règlement, il ne peut pas y avoir de débat sur une telle décision. Elle doit immédiatement être mise aux voix.

Le président: Je ne voudrais pas ne pas permettre à M. Dinsdale de faire une déclaration. Je ne veux pas me montrer trop pointilleux. Si le Comité n'y voit pas d'inconvénients...

M. Mongrain: Si vous accordez cette permission, comment pouvez-vous empêcher à un autre membre de faire une déclaration par la suite.

Le président: Eh bien, j'espère qu'il y aura un avis unanime des membres du comité pour que cela soit permis.

M. Mongrain: J'en doute.

M. Givens: Si vous acceptez la déclaration de M. Dinsdale, vous devrez aussi accepter celle de M. Mongrain et de tous les autres.

M. Mongrain: Et je tiendrai à en faire une.

[Text]

The Chairman: In that case there is no consensus, and we will go on to the next order of business.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, if I may have the floor once again. The other day, you and others made the statement that our Committee system is breaking down, because it has become a charade and a ritual.

The Chairman: I do not think I ever used the words "charade" or "ritual". What I did say was that the system is breaking down, because of limitations of time and space.

Mr. Dinsdale: If I could be allowed to talk, please. I think there is still freedom of speech in the House of Commons and in these parliamentary committees, I would trust.

In view of the fact that you, in your wisdom, have laid down the decision that it is impossible for a Committee to proceed in this fashion, I would like to at least suggest that if the Committee system is going to function at all as an extension of the House of Commons—and that is what our Committee systems are—we have some means of reaching conclusions, of coming to some decision, of reaching a consensus on the important matters that are before the Committee.

• 1430

In the brave new world into which we are supposed to be ushered, participatory democracy was to be the order of the day and a part of that participatory democracy was to be a more effective use of the Committee system. I have served on Committees for 17 years and this is the first time I have seen such a rigid restriction in freedom of expression. Because of that I say that the opinions that were expressed, not by myself, but by Mr. Givens and others here the other day, that the Committee system is a charade as it is operating at the present time are well borne out.

If we are not going to have the Committee system collapse, if we are not going to have this brave new experiment into the brave new world of participatory democracy, as it is carried out through an expanded activity of the Committee system, collapse completely that we should at least make interim reports from time to time. I would trust that the Agenda Committee get together to make such an interim report on this matter.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Chairman, on a point of privilege. The hon. member mentioned my

[Interpretation]

Le président: Eh bien, dans ce cas, il n'y a pas d'avis unanime; par conséquent nous passons à la question suivante de l'ordre du jour.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, l'autre jour, vous-même et un certain nombre d'autres membres avez fait une déclaration selon laquelle le système des comités était en train de se désintégrer parce que c'était devenu une charade, une routine.

Le président: Je n'ai pas parlé de «charade», ni de «routine». Mais, j'ai dit que la désintégration venait du manque d'espace et de temps.

M. Dinsdale: S'il vous plaît, je crois que la liberté de parole existe encore à la Chambre des communes.

Monsieur le président, puisque, dans votre sagesse, vous avez statué qu'un comité ne peut siéger de cette manière, je suggérerais que, si le système des comités peut fonctionner en tant que prolongement de la Chambre des communes, et tel est le cas, nous pouvons en arriver à certaines conclusions, à faire l'unanimité sur les questions que nous étudions.

Dans le meilleur des mondes dans lequel nous semblons nous introduire il semblait que les principes de la démocratie de participation fût à l'ordre du jour et que la démocratie de participation impliquât une utilisation plus efficace du système des comités. Eh bien, il y a dix-sept ans que je siége dans des comités et c'est là la première fois que je vois une restriction aussi rigide de la liberté d'expression.

C'est pour cette raison que je dirais que les avis exprimés, non par moi-même mais par M. Givens et un certain nombre d'autres personnes l'autre jour, selon lesquels le système des comités est une charade et que leur mode de fonctionnement actuel est désuet, sont fondés.

Si nous ne voulons pas voir l'effondrement du système des comités, si nous ne voulons pas que cette meilleure des expériences dans ce meilleur des mondes se désintègre par un effondrement du système des comités, il faudrait qu'au moins, nous puissions faire des rapports intérimaires de temps en temps. Par conséquent, j'espère que le Comité du programme pourra se réunir pour faire une déclaration à ce sujet.

M. Givens: Je pose la question de privilège, monsieur le président. Quand je parlais de name. When I applied the term "charade" I applied it for the very sort of reason that Mr. Dinsdale is initiating here today. I pointed out to the Chair that the only motion he can make preferly under the rules is to appeal your ruling, which he did not do. Instead he made a speech about the brave new world. All of us are capable of making speeches about the brave new world. If that is what we are going to do for the rest of the afternoon, we might as well go back and deal with our correspondence in our offices.

The Chairman: There seems to be a lack of knowledge of what the powers of the Committee are with respect so estimates. If any member is in disagreement with any part of the estimates, he has the same recourse in this Committee as he does in the House of Commons in Committee of Supply: that is, he moves a reduction in the amount of money available to that particular branch or institution, as the case may be. This is the proper way. It is possible for the Committee to make reports from time to time at the beginning, the end, or the middle of its hearings as to its opinions and its considerations.

If there are any motions of that nature, the Chair would be quite happy to entertain them. But there have not been. There was a specific motion which I felt was outside the rules under which we operate. I do not make the rules; I only interpret what I am given to interpret. I would suggest that if there is dissatisfaction with the way the Committee system is working those members who are dissatisfied should get in touch with those members of their respective parties who are on the Procedure Committee to ensure that these things are properly worked out before the new Committee system comes into operation. This would be the proper way of going about it. Mr. Mongrain?

Mr. Mongrain: On your ruling, Mr. Chairman,

Je pense que M. Dinsdale a encore le droit de discuter son point à la Chambre des communes, quand ces estimés viendront devant la Chambre des communes. C'est son privilège le plus absolu. Je m'oppose, d'abord, pour les raisons que vous avez mentionnées et, aussi, parce que je trouve que la motion de M. Dinsdale contient des termes que je n'admets pas et que, je crois, un bon nombre de nos collègues n'admettront pas.

The Chairman: Mr. Mongrain, if I may interrupt, you are out of order. That motion has been disposed of and has been declared charade, c'était justement pour décrire les interventions du genre de celle faite il y a un instant par M. Dinsdale. Je disais que la seule motion qu'il pouvait présenter conformément aux termes du règlement était d'en appeler de votre décision, ce qu'il n'a pas fait. Il a plutôt fait un discours au sujet du meilleur des mondes, ce que tous nous pouvons faire. Si c'est ce que nous devons faire cet après-midi, pourquoi ne rentrons-nous pas dans notre bureau pour répondre aux lettres qu'on nous envoie.

Le président: On ne semble pas connaître exactement les attributions du comité en ce qui a trait aux crédits. Si un député n'est pas satisfait des crédits, il peut faire ici au Comité ce qu'il pourrait faire dans la Chambre en Comité des subsides: proposer une diminution du montant d'argent à la disposition de cette institution, ou de ce service. C'est ainsi qu'on doit procéder. Le Comité peut présenter à l'occasion, des rapports de ses délibérations pour indiquer ses opinions.

S'il y avait eu des motions à ce sujet, il m'aurait fait plaisir de les recevoir, mais rien de tel n'a été fait. La motion qui nous a été présentée était à mon avis contraire au règlement. Ce n'est pas moi qui ai fait le règlement, je l'interprète au meilleur de ma connaissance. Ceci n'a rien à voir avec la façon dont les comités fonctionnent. Les députés qui en seraient mécontents peuvent se mettre en contact avec les membres de leur parti qui font partie du comité des procédures, de façon à faire les changements nécessaires avant que le nouveau système n'entre en vigueur. Voilà comment nous devrions procéder.

M. Mongrain: Au sujet de votre décision, monsieur le président.

I believe that it is up to Mr. Dinsdale to bring his views forward to the House when the matter comes back before the House. That is his right, an absolute right which he enjoys. However, I object first for the reasons you indicated yourself. I object also because Mr. Dinsdale's motion contains terms which I will not admit.

Le président: Monsieur Mongrain, votre question est irrecevable parce que la motion a déjà été déclarée irrecevable. Par conséquent out of order and I think it would be to the benefit of all if we were to proceed with business.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, on a point of privilege. When you allowed Mr. Dinsdale to talk I told you that I would insist on doing it if he was making a statement. Mr. Dinsdale did make a statement. Why should I not make one?

The Chairman: Mr. Mongrain, in logical sense you have the Chairman where he deserves to be put. However, I would ask, since the matter seems to have been disposed of, that it be allowed to die and that we get along with the business of the day. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• 1435

Mr. Mongrain: We will agree with you, Mr. Chairman, for the sake of harmony.

The Chairman: This afternoon we are considering the estimates of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission.

Secretary of State
E—Canadian Radio-Television Commission

40 Salaries and Other Expenses $1,714,000

The Chairman: We have with us as our chief witnesses the Chairman of the Commission, Mr. Pierre Juneau and the Vice-Chairman, Mr. Harry J. Boyle. I might say the Canadian Radio-Television Commission is probably going through the same type of birth pangs as we are going through in this committee, as an extension of the House of Commons, in figuring out what its powers are, what it can do and how it can enforce its decisions.

Mr. Juneau has a very brief statement to make and after that we will have questions until the Committee is satisfied. I will now ask Mr. Juneau to proceed.

M. Pierre Juneau (Président, Conseil de la radio-télévision canadienne): Vous avez parlé, monsieur le président, des douleurs de l'enfantement. Il y a d'autres douleurs auxquelles nous sommes soumis à l'heure actuelle, mais je pense que ça n'est que justice. Le Conseil de la radio-télévision soumet constamment les il serait bon de passer à une autre question.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, j'invoque la question de privilège. Monsieur le président, lorsque vous avez permis à M. Dinsdale, de faire une déclaration, je vous ai dit que j'allais insister pour faire la même chose. Or il a fait sa déclaration, Donc pourquoi ne pourrais-je pas en faire une moi-même?

Le président: Monsieur Mongrain, on peut dire que vous avez mis le président «à sa place» et qu'il l'a bien mérité. Puisque nous semblons avoir vidé cette question, nous pourrions maintenant passer à la question suivante de l'ordre du jour.

Des voix: D'accord.

M. Mongrain: Nous sommes donc de votre avis, parce que nous aimons la paix et l'harmonie.

Le président: Voilà ce que je voulais entendre. Cet après-midi, nous étudions les prévisions budgétaires du Conseil de la radio-télévision canadienne.

SECRÉTAIRE D'ÉTAT

40—Conseil de la radio-télévision canadienne Traitements et autres dépenses $1,714,000

Le président: Nous avons avec nous le président du Conseil, M. Pierre Juneau, et son vice-président, M. Harry J. Boyle. Je dois dire que le Conseil de la radio-télévision canadienne connaît les mêmes difficultés que nous dans ce Comité, en tant que prolongement de la Chambre des communes à savoir quelles sont ses attributions, ce qu'il peut faire et comment il peut faire appliquer des décisions. M. Juneau fera une déclaration très brève, à la suite de quoi nous pourrions poser des questions. Monsieur Juneau, voulez-vous prendre la parole s'il vous plaît.

Mr. Pierre Juneau (Chairman, Canadian Radio-Television Commission): Mr. Chairman, you were speaking of birth pangs and we have other pains too at the present time. However it is only fair the Canadian Radio-Television Commission submit broadcasters to inquiries, puts question and it is only proper radiodiffuseurs et d'autres groupes à des enquêtes et à des systèmes de questions. Il n'est que normal que nous nous soumettions à notre tour devant l'autorité compétente, à peu près la seule en fait qui s'exerce sur nous, pour répondre aux questions.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank you for your courtesy in allowing the CRTC, myself and the Vice Chairman, Mr. Boyle, to come before you today in a sort of informal way. You have very graciously recognized the fact that we are under pressure at the moment and have allowed us to come here to speak rather informally before members of the Committee. With your permission, then, what I would like to do is to perhaps speak for just a few minutes to give you what I might call the framework within which we are working at the moment and the main points on which we are working and the main issues of policy that we are dealing with. Perhaps that might help in establishing the plan for the questions you may want to ask, without of course limiting it in any way.

As you are in a very good position to know, the new Broadcasting Act was passed on April 1, 1968 so it coincides with the estimates which are before the House at the moment. The new Commission has met since April 1 on six different occasions. It met immediately after the passing of the Act on April 1 and then in May, September October, November and will meet again next Monday and Tuesday. Those were all meetings, only four of those occasions being actual hearings of the CRTC. These meetings and hearings were held in Ottawa, Winnipeg, Moncton, Regina and Ottawa again, and the next meeting of the Commission next week will be in Ottawa.

We have during that time either inherited or received 1,000 applications. Many of those are cable TV applications which were received by the Department of Transport before April 1, given a licence by the Department of Transport and transferred to the CRTC on April 1. Those number 632, if you are interested. The broadcasting applications number 196 and there are share ownership applications, applications for transfers of ownership numbering 161. The total is roughly 1,000.

During that period the Commission has taken—and I realize those are only figures—395 decisions, many of which of course are easier than others. The attendances at the hearings and the meetings of the Commission have been quite remarkable, coming very close to 100 per cent by the new members who number 15.

that we should appear in turn before competent authority, the only authority in fact to which we are responsible at the present time.

Ceci dit, monsieur le président, je vous remercie de l'occasion offerte au Conseil, à votre serviteur, à M. H. J. Boyle et à nos collègues de comparaître devant vous plus ou moins sans façons. Vous savez qu'actuellement nous sommes soumis à certaines pressions, et notre comparution aujourd'hui grâce à vous ne revêtira pas un caractère trop solennel.

J'aimerais vous donner brièvement le cadre général à l'intérieur duquel nous travaillons actuellement, et vous dire un mot des grandes lignes de notre politique. En somme tout cela constituera la toile de fond à vos éventuelles questions.

Vous êtes assurément bien placés pour savoir que la nouvelle loi de la radiodiffusion a été adoptée le 1<sup>er</sup> avril 1968 et qu'elle coïncide avec les estimés budgétaires dont la Chambre est actuellement saisie. Le nouveau Conseil s'est réuni six fois depuis le 1<sup>er</sup> avril. Il s'est réuni juste après l'adoption de la loi le 1<sup>er</sup> avril, puis au mois de mai, et en septembre, octobre, et novembre. Il se réunira la semaine prochaine, lundi et mardi. Quatre de ces réunions ont été des audiences publiques. Ces audiences ou réunions se sont tenues à Ottawa, Winnipeg, Moncton, Regina et de nouveau à Ottawa. La prochaine réunion du Conseil, celle de la semaine prochaine, se tiendra à Ottawa.

Nous avons pendant ce temps reçu environ mille demandes. Dans bien des cas, il s'agit de demandes d'installation de télévision par câble, demandes reçues avant le 1<sup>er</sup> avril par le ministère des Transports. Ce ministère avait, dans ces cas, émis un permis puis transféré la demande à notre Conseil à partir du 1<sup>er</sup> avril. Il y a eu 632 demandes de ce genre exactement. Quant aux demandes de radiodiffusion, il y en a eu 196. Il y a eu aussi des demandes de modification du régime de propriété au nombre de 161 ce qui donne en gros 1,000 demandes. Voici quelques chiffres approximatifs: durant cette période, le Conseil a pris 395 décisions, dont quelques-unes étaient évidemment plus faciles que les autres. Le nombre de personnes qui ont assisté à nos audiences et à nos réunions a été remarquable. A peu près tous nos membres, c'est-à-dire une quinzaine, ont assisté à toutes les séances.

The various issues that we are dealing with—and I am sure you are familiar with many of them, because many of them are the subject of public discussion, or have been subject to parliamentary discussion also. One, of course, is the matter of extension of service. Very often people have referred to second service or alternate service, but we prefer to refer to extension of service in general and perhaps break it down in the following way: extension of first service, because, as you know, there are places in the country which still do not have first service.

Such places do not represent a very large percentage of the population, although they sometimes represent very important locations in the north for instance, or very important locations as far as the French population is concerned. Therefore, there is a matter of French service in English and in French. Recently the Commission has dealt particularly with the question of extension of first service in French in the Maritimes.

Then there is the question of alternate service proper, again in English and in French, and this has been of great concern to the Commission recently. At the three hearings held in Moncton, Regina and Ottawa we dealt with the first of these issues and very much with the second one and also to some extent with the third issue, namely, third service, because this issue, as you know, has also been raised. There has been, of course, no opinion expressed by the Commission on this matter. On the question of second service you know there are a number of precedents already, for at least 75 per cent of the country, if you base that percentage on the population.

Then, always in the field of extension of service, there is also the question of the northern service which it is practical perhaps to consider separately, because the problems are, to a large extent, peculiar. There also perhaps one should consider the problem under three headings. The Commission tends to do that. One is the provision of service by tape. The CBC uses the phrase "frontier package".

The question of local service in the north, which has been raised forcefully recently before the Commission by a representative from Fort Nelson. Finally—and these, we think, are three related but separate matters—the question of network service. Always in the field of the extension of the broadcasting system, another very important issue

[Interpretation]

Voici les diverses questions que nous devons étudier. Vous en connaissez, du reste, la majeure partie, ne serait-ce que parce qu'elles ont fait l'objet de discussions publiques ou en Chambre au Parlement. Je songe notamment ici à la question de l'extension du service. Il est arrivé souvent qu'on parle de deuxième ou de transmission alternative. Nous préférons l'expression «extension du service», ou même extension du premier service, parce que, dans bien des endroits du Canada, il n'y a même pas de premier service à l'heure actuelle.

Ces endroits ne couvrent évidemment pas une grande partie de la population, mais ils couvrent parfois des territoires très importants, dans le Nord, par exemple, ou des localités à forte concentration française. Pour les francophones, il y a donc les nouveaux services français ou anglais. Le Conseil, par exemple, s'est saisi de la question de la mise en place de premiers services français dans les Maritimes.

La question des services alternatifs, français et anglais, nous a beaucoup préoccupés dernièrement. Au cours des audiences de Moncton, de Regina et d'Ottawa, nous nous sommes occupés un peu des premières solutions et beaucoup des secondes et jusqu'à un certain point de la troisième. Celle-ci consisterait en la mise en place d'un troisième service. Vous savez, en effet, que cette question s'est également posée.

Vous savez aussi que le Conseil n'a exprimé sur ce point de vue aucune opinion. Vous savez qu'en ce qui concerne le deuxième service, il existe déjà plusieurs stations qui peuvent couvrir 75 p. 100 de la population de notre pays.

Encore au sujet de l'extension des services, n'oublions pas qu'il y a les services des régions du Nord. A mon avis, il est bon d'aborder cette question distinctement, car les problèmes qui se posent là-bas sont assez particuliers.

Il serait donc bon d'étudier ces questions en utilisant trois rubriques distinctes. C'est d'ailleurs ce que désire faire le Conseil. Il y a d'abord l'extension des services par bande magnétique. Radio-Canada parle ici du «colis frontière».

Ensuite, la question des services locaux dans le Nord qui a été évoquée assez énergiquement devant la Commission par un représentant venu de Fort-Nelson et enfin la question des réseaux. Nous considérons ces trois questions comme connexes, mais distinctes. Sans quitter le domaine de l'extension des services de radiodiffusion, disons que la quesbefore the Commission is the question of CATV, and I would just like to refer to the various sub-items of policy that are of concern to the Commission at the moment.

I am sure that you are aware of many of these problems and may want to discuss them. They are the problems which make the reaching of decisions by the Commission on CATV rather difficult. One is the duration of the licence; another, whether the licences should be exclusive or non-exclusive; and another is the ownership and control of the CATV systems which really just make a little more complicated and complex the whole problem of ownership; the obligations under which the CATV systems would operate in terms of simple delivery of service; if they have a territory, how long would they be allowed to service that territory; whether they should be allowed to alter programs or not; the number of channels and the type of channels that they should carry, Canadian channels as against American channels.

How far would a channel be in relation to the CATV system if you are going to demand that the channel be carried; the question of local origination of programs by CATV systems; financial reports to the Commission in the same way as the broadcasting systems have to report to the Commission at the moment; the carrying of commercials, should they be allowed or not; the carriage of distant stations by the use of microwave, whether they be Canadian or non-Canadian stations; the prohibition of carrying the same programs as are carried by the local station; the copyright implications; the carrying of educational programs; the forming of networks between CATV systems; the use of the same head end to serve several CATV system.

Among the other policy matters that affect either directly or indirectly the work of the Commission at the moment I would like to list also the development of Canadian domestic satellite and in what way it would affect the development of the Canadian broadcasting system and the decisions that the Commission has to take at the moment as some of those decisions have long term implications; the general matter of copyright; the question of fees, and so on.

One matter the Commission has to consider constantly because it arises with very many of the applications that come before the Commission is the question of ownership, of course. Here again, it is useful—at least, it has been useful to us—to break it down under three different headings. One is foreign ownership and not that matter as you know, we have received a directive from the Governor in Council which establishes the policy. However, tion des antennes communautaires revêt une grande importance aux yeux du Conseil, de même que quelques questions connexes.

Vous n'êtes pas sans connaître un certain nombre de ces problèmes et vous voudrez peut-être en discuter. Ce sont du reste des problèmes qui rendent la tâche du Conseil assez compliquée. D'abord la durée des permis, et leur exclusivité. Ensuite, le problème de la propriété, de la direction des antennes communautaires rend encore plus complexe et plus compliquée toute cette question du régime de propriété. Quelles seront les obligations des responsables des livraisons de services dans telle région? Doit-on leur permettre, par exemple, de modifier les émissions? Combien doit-il y avoir de canaux et de quel genre? Canaux américains ou canadiens?

Il y a aussi la question de la production d'émissions par les sociétés exploitant des antennes collectives. Mais, il s'agit ici des rapports financiers à présenter au Conseil. Ce sont des obligations analogues à celles qui sont imposées aux postes ordinaires de radio-télévision. Est-ce que ces postes doivent être autorisés à transmettre des messages commerciaux? Il y a aussi l'apport par micro-ondes des programmes venant de postes éloignés canadiens ou américains. Devrait-on leur interdire de transmettre les mêmes programmes que les postes locaux?

Parmi les questions de politique générale qui, directement ou indirectement, touchent au travail du Conseil, il y a le développement d'un satellite canadien de télécommunications qui pourrait influer sur l'évolution de la radio-télévision, chez nous? Le Conseil aura à prendre certaines décisions à cet égard. Décisions importantes si on songe à leurs effets à long terme.

Il y a aussi la question des droits d'auteurs, la question des honoraires, etc.

Il est une autre question dont le Conseil doit se saisir constamment. Il s'agit, ici, de la question des propriétaires. Nous avons jugé bon, nous-mêmes, ici, de répartir la question sous trois rubriques différentes.

D'abord, propriété étrangère. A cette question nous avons reçu du gouverneur en conseil une directive qui établit les principes généraux auxquels nous devons nous conformer. Toutefois, cette directive nous ménage, er, the directive does leave some room for interpretation by the Commission so that there are some policy decisions under that heading which preoccupy the Commission.

[Text]

A second heading is the question of concentration of ownership—whether they involve foreign ownership or just Canadian ownership, the development of very large concentration of ownership—involving either only broadcasting media or broadcasting media and other media of communication.

A third point that has also preoccupied the Commission and on which the Commission has made one or two decisions is the question of local ownership as against distant ownership, or the balance between local ownership and distant ownership in a given broadcasting operation. I refer you to the decision that the Commission has taken concerning a television station in Kelowna a few months ago.

Then, of course, there is the whole field of program policy, all the rest being housekeeping, as someone said. In program policy in some cases the Commission has taken decisions that at least form the beginning of a policy, namely in the licensing or refusal to license some FM stations. The Commission has denied some FM applications in the last few months on the grounds that the program policies presented by the applicants did not represent a significant enough difference from what is already offered by existing AM or FM stations.

The Commission has announced, of course, that it would do a great deal of further work in order to define an FM policy but has said that in the meantime it would only consider FM applications which represented a very significant contribution to the area to be serviced by the applicant.

• 1450

The Commission has also taken a few—not very many, two or three—decisions concerning AM licences in areas that are already covered by a number of existing AM stations and has denied these applications on the ground that they were based almost exclusively on the possibility of taking a supposedly existing balance of commercial revenue in the area without supplying a significant enough addition to the programs that were already provided by the existing stations. I malgré tout, une certaine liberté de manœuvre en ce qui concerne l'interprétation; ainsi donc, le Conseil aura des décisions à prendre en ce domaine.

[Interpretation]

Il y a ensuite la question de la concentration de la propriété, qu'il s'agisse de la propriété entre les mains des étrangers ou de la propriété concentrée entre les mains de Canadiens seulement. Il faut considérer ici, non seulement la propriété des systèmes de radio-télévision, mais aussi la concentration entre quelques mains de systèmes de radio-télévision et d'autres moyens de communication.

Il y a, enfin, une troisième rubrique. Nous nous sommes aussi préoccupés de la propriété qui est entre les mains de personnalités locales et de la propriété qui serait entre les mains de personnes n'habitant pas les localités en cause. Je rappelle ici la décision prise par le Conseil en ce qui concerne un poste de radio-télévision ouvert, il y a quelques mois, à Kelowna.

Il faut aussi songer à tout le domaine des émissions. Tout le reste étant, comme on l'a déjà dit, question d'administration courante.

Dans certains cas, le Conseil a pris des décisions qui, tout au moins, constituent l'embryon d'une politique, notamment, en ce qui concerne la délivrance des licences ou le refus de la délivrance des licences à quelques stations FM.

Il est, en effet, arrivé au Conseil de refuser quelques certaines demandes portant sur l'établissement de postes en modulation de fréquence, pour le motif que les projets d'horaires, présentés par les demandeurs, n'étaient pas assez différents des programmes proposés actuellement par les postes diffusant en modulation d'amplitude ou de fréquence.

Le Conseil devra d'ailleurs beaucoup travailler à la précision de ces principes en matière de modulation de fréquence. Dans l'intervalle, tout au moins, il a décidé de ne délivrer des permis d'exploitation de postes FM que là où les programmes proposés sont suffisamment différents.

Il a aussi pris deux ou trois décisions en ce qui concerne les postes en modulation d'amplitude, dans des régions où existent déjà un certain nombre de postes en modulation d'amplitude. Il a refusé ces demandes pour le motif que ces demandes étaient à peu près exclusivement fondées sur la possibilité qu'elles prendraient une certaine partie des recettes commerciales possibles dans les régions en cause, sans améliorer pour autant la quantité de programme, à la disposition des habitants am referring to those decisions only because they indicate a trend in the establishment of a policy.

In the broader general field of program regulations the Commission, as you know, by the Act still operates under the policies and regulations of the Board of Broadcast Governors. Most of those regulations have not been revised by the Commission. The staff and some of the members of the Commission are working on the review of program policies but no regulations have been published yet for public hearing. The fact is that the Commission, by the force of circumstances, has had to deal mainly with licensing issues and the issues that come up in a very forceful way when the Commission has to decide on a particular licence.

Under program policy, of course, the Commission is concerned with the balance between news and entertainment, the encouragement of Canadian talent which is a subject which the Act emphasized very strongly, the development of the related industries such as the record industry or the film industry.

The problem of the production in Canada of commercials has been brought to the attention of the Commission very forcefully but the Commission has not, of course, taken any decision on that or proposed any new regulation. The question of the percentage or the proportion of commercials in broadcasting as against other forms of programming is, of course, also an issue which the Commission will have to deal with and has started to study but on which no new regulations have been published.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the whole field of the organization of the work of the Commission, the development of the staff and the reorganization of the structure of the Commission is also a matter which has required a fair amount of time and attention by the Commission simultaneously with the other matters.

With your permission I would like to stop here and answer any questions that you or the members might have to ask.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Juneau. I have Mr. Dinsdale, Mr. McCleave and Mr. Mongrain in that order on major questions.

[Interprétation]

de la région, émissions dont ils pouvaient déjà bénéficier grâce à l'existence d'autres stations déjà en place. Je mentionne ces choses simplement pour vous montrer le sens général dans lequel nous travaillons.

En ce qui concerne la réglementation des programmes, domaine plus vaste, vous savez que le Conseil, aux termes de la loi, se conforme toujours aux principes et aux règlements anciennement appliqués par le Bureau des gouverneurs de la radiodiffusion.

La meilleure partie de ce document n'a pas encore été révisée par le Conseil. Le personnel du Conseil, et certains membres du Conseil travaillent précisément à revoir les principes que nous avons appliqués en matière de programmation. Mais, nous n'avons publié encore aucun règlement; aucune audience publique n'a été tenue qui est permis d'évoquer ces questions. Par la force des circonstances, le Conseil a dû s'occuper, essentiellement, de délivrance de permis, à s'occuper, en somme, des questions qui se posent d'une façon parfois assez aiguë, lorsque le Conseil a à se prononcer sur l'intérêt que peut présenter la délivrance d'un permis en particulier.

Du point de vue programmation, évidemment, le Conseil se préoccupe de l'équilibre entre information et divertissement. Il se préoccupe aussi de l'utilisation de talents canadiens, aspect, évidemment, souligné assez fortement par le texte législatif. Il se préoccupe aussi des progrès éventuels des industries connexes, industrie cinématographique, industrie de l'enregistrement.

Il se préoccupe aussi de la production au Canada, de réclames commerciales télévisées. Mais le Conseil n'a pris aucune décision à cet égard, ni proposé de nouveaux règlements. Il y a aussi la question du pourcentage ou de la proportion des réclames commerciales dans les émissions ordinaires. C'est une question dont il a commencé à s'occuper mais il n'en est arrivé, jusqu'ici, à aucune nouvelle réglementation.

Enfin, monsieur le président, le Conseil s'est saisi de toute la question d'organisation dans son propre travail. Il a eu à s'occuper de la constitution de son personnel, de la réorganisation de ses structures, etc. Ce sont là des questions qui ont exigé beaucoup de temps et, avec votre permission, donc, je m'arrêterai là et je me ferai un plaisir de répondre aux questions que vous voudrez bien me poser.

Le président: Je vous remercie beaucoup, monsieur Juneau. M. Dinsdale, M. MacLean et M. Mongrain, dans l'ordre, poseront des questions.

[Text]

Mr. Dinsdale: The burning question I would like to bring up at the moment, Mr. Chairman, is the problem relating to second channel service. Now that we have two systems available it is understandable that the public in all parts of Canada is beginning to demand the right to view both channels and, of course, in connection with the French network, the third channel as well.

There are, I think, two channel services available in most of the major communities in Canada, the more populous communities, and I presume it would be communities like Saint John, Fredericton in the Maritimes—and I am more familiar with the Prairies—my own community of Brandon and other communities in Alberta that are denied the second channel service at the moment. Has the CRTC come to any conclusions with respect to the solution of this problem? The demand is becoming quite vociferous.

● 1455

Mr. Juneau: The Commission indeed has spent a lot of time on this issue because it was one of the most pressing issues with the BBG when the Commission took over. The Commission decided in May that it would hold three hearings on that subject and other aspects of extension of service and those were the hearings I referred to.

We started in Moncton because it was in the Maritimes that the issue was most pressing, but then we thought we should have hearings on the same subject in other parts of the country and we held a hearing in Regina and another in Ottawa. The last one we attended was in Ottawa last Friday evening.

After the Moncton hearing the Commission undertook in a public announcement to take decisions and announce decisions on this matter as it applied in the Maritimes. It has undertaken to study the matter for the whole country through these three hearings but it has not undertaken to publish decisions on the rest of the country before the end of the year but in the case of the Maritimes, because the issue was more pressing there although you may differ on that matter, the Commission said that it would announce decisions before the end of December, 1968.

This would affect the Saint John area, the Moncton area, the Fredericton area, the PEI area and the Cape Breton area. A large part of Nova Scotia does have two services at the moment, but not all parts.

[Interpretation]

M. Dinsdale: La question explosive que je voudrais poser actuellement, monsieur le président, concerne les problèmes portant sur les services d'un deuxième canal. Maintenant que nous avons deux systèmes disponibles, il est compréhensible que le public du Canada tout entier demande le droit de se servir des deux canaux. Et, bien sûr, dans le cadre du réseau français, du troisième canal.

Alors, je pense qu'il existe dans la plupart des localités canadiennes un service en deux canaux et dans la plupart des endroits peuplés; c'est dans certaines localités comme, Saint-Jean, dans les provinces Maritimes, dans les Prairies, dans ma propre localité de Brandon et dans d'autres villes de l'Alberta qu'il n'y a pas de second canal. Ces endroits ne peuvent pas tenir le deuxième canal pour le moment. Est-ce que le Conseil a déjà tiré des conclusions quant à la manière de pouvoir résoudre ce problème? La demande devient de plus en plus importante.

M. Juneau: Le Conseil, effectivement, a beaucoup étudié ce problème parce que cela était une des questions les plus urgentes à régler lors de la «cession des pouvoirs» du Conseil des gouverneurs du B.G.R. Lorsque le Conseil a pris la relève en mai, il a été décidé qu'on allait avoir trois audiences sur cette question et sur d'autres aspects de l'expansion des services. Et, c'est de ces audiences dont j'ai parlé.

La première a eu lieu à Moncton, parce que c'est dans les Provinces Maritimes que le problème était le plus aigu. Puis, nous avons pensé que nous devrions siéger dans d'autres parties du pays. Il y en a eu une réunion à Ottawa, la semaine dernière.

Après la réunion de Moncton, le Conseil a fait une déclaration publique pour lui permettre de prendre des décisions et de les rendre publiques sur cette question, dans la mesure où cela est valable pour les provinces Maritimes. Mais le Conseil a accepté d'étudier, donc, la question pour l'ensemble du pays, par l'intermédiaire de ces séances. Mais, il ne s'est pas engagé à publier les décisions pour l'ensemble du pays, avant la fin de l'année. Mais, comme le problème était plus aigu, comme vous le savez, dans les Maritimes, le Conseil a dit qu'il ferait connaître sa décision avant décembre 1968.

Et, cela affectera la région de Saint-Jean, de Fredericton, de Moncton, de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, du Cap-Breton. Il y a une grande partie de la Nouvelle-Écosse qui bénéficie déjà du double service, mais pas l'ensemble.

[Texte]

Mr. Dinsdale: Recently CTV I think made a gesture that on the surface would seem to help in solving the problem by offering a certain number of programs to TV stations operating in these less populous areas which would, perhaps, provide the way for a twin stick operation. Has this proposition been put before CRTC?

Mr. Juneau: Very forcefully and in great detail by the CTV people, and the Commission has also received comments and differing views from various parties including the stations that would be affected by this proposal. It does represent an important departure from the position the CTV network had taken until then, and certainly the Commission feels that it is worth a great deal of attention.

One thing one has to remember, of course, is that the situation varies greatly even between the stations that would be affected by a proposal of this kind. There is a great deal of difference between an area like Saint John or Moncton and Matane, Rivière du Loup or Lloydminster or Terrace or Red Deer and even a fair amount of difference between Brandon and Moncton, so it is difficult.

You understand, of course, that it is difficult for me to be too explicit on this question because we have to announce a decision between now and the end of December.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is there any twin stick operation in service at the moment anywhere in Canada?

Mr. Juneau: No, I do not think so.

Mr. Dinsdale: This would be a new policy on the part of the CRTC?

Mr. Juneau: Yes. The twin stick is slightly different from the CTV proposal. The twin stick is associated more with the group of small stations which number about 14. The present station usually is affiliated to the CBC. Let us take the case of Brandon, for instance. It is affiliated with the CBC, and according to the CTV proposal it would disaffiliate from the CBC, become affiliated to CTV, and the CBC would have a rebroadcasting station in Brandon. Then the affiliation to CTV of the present station would be different from the affiliation that the present CTV stations have with their network.

[Interprétation]

M. Dinsdale: Récemment, C.T.V. a proposé ce qui semble être une solution intéressante au problème, c.-à-d. d'offrir un certain nombre de programmes aux postes de télévision, dans ces endroits moins peuplés. Ce qui permettra peut-être la mise en place d'une opération double. Est-ce que cette proposition a été examinée par le Conseil?

M. Juneau: Oui, avec beaucoup de détails et catégoriquement par les représentants de la CTV. Le Conseil a également reçu des commentaires et des opinions divergentes de la part de différentes parties, y compris, d'ailleurs, les stations qui seraient affectées par cette proposition. Cela représente un élément particulièrement nouveau par rapport à la position prise antérieurement par le réseau CTV. Et, certainement, le Conseil considère que cela mérite d'être particulièrement étudié.

Il y a une chose, par contre, qu'il ne faut pas oublier, bien sûr, c'est que la situation varie beaucoup, même entre les stations qui seraient affectées par une proposition de ce genre. C'est-à-dire qu'il y a de grandes différences entre une région comme Saint-Jean ou Moncton et Matane, Rivière-du-Loup ou Lloydminster, ou Terrace ou Red Deer. Il y a même des différences entre Brandon et Moncton, par exemple. Vous comprenez qu'il m'est difficile d'expliquer ce projet en détail, puisque nous annoncerons notre décision d'ici la fin de décembre.

M. Dinsdale: Est-ce qu'il y a un service double actuellement au Canada?

M. Juneau: Non.

M. Dinsdale: Ce serait donc une nouvelle politique du O.R.T.C.?

M. Juneau: Oui. Je pense que le double service est très différent. Le système de double système s'applique davantage à un groupe de 14 petites stations. Le système actuel est que la petite station est affiliée à Radio-Canada. Prenons par exemple Brandon. Elle est affiliée à Radio-Canada. Alors, d'après la proposition de CTV, elle se dégagerait de Radio-Canada, elle s'affilierait au réseau CTV et Radio-Canada ouvrirait une station retransmettrice à Brandon. Voilà comment cela se passerait. Et puis, l'association à CTV des stations actuelles serait d'un caractère différent de celle que les stations actuelles de CTV ont avec leur réseau.

1500

The stations would have supplementary status. The way the revenue would be shared

Il y aurait un statut, disons, complémentaire. Le partage des recettes serait différent.

[Text]

would be different and also the CTV would not undertake to pay the microwave feed to that station, so it raises a certain number of problems at how much the cost would be increased and whether the revenues would be increased sufficiently for the station to be able to remain above the water line.

The twin stick system is slightly different. The present owner would be a sort of local distributor. Some people have called them soft drink bottlers; that example helps to understand the system.

They would operate two transmitters and two antennae and on one transmitter would distribute the CTV programs; on the other the CBC programs.

Mr. Dinsdale: I take it that this is not acceptable to CBC?

Mr. Juneau: Well, there is some argument with the CBC because they are not sure they could operate that way without some subsidy from the CBC.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is it still the policy of the CBC to pre-empt an area in the first instance and see that it is adequately supplied with CBC broadcasting or telecasting before moving on to a supplementary service?

Mr. Juneau: I am not sure that I understand your question.

Mr. Dinsdale: Well, the policy used to be emphasized that it was the role of the CBC to ensure that every part of Canada and every area of Canada was adequately serviced by their broadcasting facilities and I presume this is still the policy emphasis, and that before supplementary broadcasting or telecasting is made available the CBC would want to be assured that its service covers the area.

Mr. Juneau: That is right. I cannot speak for the CBC but so far as I understand their role and their interpretation of their role, and so far as we feel some responsibility also in this respect, the problem arises because of the need for second service.

At the moment the CBC does provide a service in all those places through an affiliated station. The problem arises when either the people want a second service through CTV, for instance, and the CBC wants to come in with its own broadcaster. The problem is then in the smaller markets, to what extent those markets are capable of supporting two stations and what intricate system you can develop and adopt in order to reduce the cost to meet the potential revenue, the

[Interpretation]

Et également, CTV ne s'engagerait pas à payer l'alimentation de cette station par hyper-fréquence. Par conséquent, cela poserait un certain nombre de problèmes quant à savoir quelle serait l'augmentation du prix de revient, et quant à savoir si les recettes seraient augmentées de façon suffisante pour que la station puisse subsister.

Le système double est légèrement différent. Le propriétaire actuel serait en quelque sorte un distributeur local. On les a appelés les vendeurs de boissons douces. Ceci permet, en somme, de comprendre le système.

C'est-à-dire qu'ils exploiteraient deux émetteurs et deux antennes. Un émetteur transmettrait le programme de Radio-Canada, et l'autre le programme de CTV.

M. Dinsdale: J'en conclus donc que Radio-Canada ne l'entend pas ainsi?

M. Juneau: Eh bien disons qu'ils discutent avec CTV parce qu'ils ne sont pas certains qu'il serait possible d'agir de la sorte sans obtenir des subventions de Radio-Canada.

M. Dinsdale: Radio-Canada a toujours, comme principe, d'occuper en priorité une région pour voir qu'elle soit bien alimentée en émissions radio-télévision de Radio-Canada avant de passer à un service complémentaire.

M. Juneau: Je ne sais pas si j'ai bien compris votre question.

M. Dinsdale: La politique était autrefois que c'était le rôle de Radio-Canada de s'assurer que toutes les parties du Canada soient convenablement servies par elle. J'imagine que c'est toujours un principe valable. Avant que l'on améliore ou qu'on augmente les services existants, Radio-Canada s'assurera que ses services s'étendent à toutes les localités intéressées.

M. Juneau: C'est exact. Je ne peux parler pour Radio-Canada, mais pour autant que je sache, c'est là comment ils conçoivent leur rôle et, dans la mesure où nous nous sentons responsables dans ce domaine, le problème se pose en raison du besoin qu'il y a d'avoir actuellement un deuxième service.

Actuellement, Radio-Canada fournit le service dans ces régions, par l'entremise d'une station affiliée. Mais le problème se pose lorsque les gens veulent un deuxième service par CTV et que Radio-Canada veut conserver son propre émetteur. Dans les plus petits marchés, dans quelle mesure ces marchés sont-ils suffisants pour soutenir deux stations, et quel est le système complexe que vous pourriez mettre sur pied et adopter afin de diminuer le prix de revient qui vous permettra de répon-revenue, of course, being partly the public funds available through the CBC and the advertising revenue available in the market.

Of course, if there were no limits on public funds there would be no problem; if there were no limits on commercial revenue there would be no problem, either.

Mr. Dinsdale: I suppose satellite telecasting would upset the applecart completely.

• 1505

Mr. Juneau: Of course, there are discussions about that, but in some areas it probably will reduce the cost of distribution. The cost of distributing CBC programs to the distant areas, either the middle north or the far north as you know, I am sure, would be extremely high and probably prohibitive, whereas with the satellite they would be of fair importance but they would be possible.

Mr. Dinsdale: I take it that much of this ground has been covered in your meetings. Is it possible to get minutes of the meetings?

Mr. Juneau: You can get transcripts. The minutes of the Commission, of course, are private, but the transcripts are public. They are available, but they are very long. Of more practical use would be the main briefs from the CBC, from CTV, from NTV and from the "twin stickers" as people have called them; that is, the stations that have grouped together. I may be forgetting some important briefs, but from reading those briefs which is possible—they are not too long—you would get a pretty good idea of the various...

Mr. Dinsdale: From what source are they available?

Mr. Juneau: You could have them through the Commission or through...

Mr. Mongrain: They must have them at the library.

Mr. Juneau: No, I am told by our secretary that they are not available at the library but you can get them through the Commission. It will be easier than going through the various parties.

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale, I will undertake to get in touch with the various people concerned and have copies of these briefs lodged as a practice with the clerk so that they will be available on call to members.

A supplementary, Mr. De Bané?

dre, de tenir compte des recettes, recettes qui, bien sûr seront les fonds de Radio-Canada et les revenus de la réclame?

S'il n'y avait pas de limites des dépenses publiques, évidemment il n'y aurait pas de problème. S'il n'y avait de limites dans les recettes commerciales il n'y aurait pas de problème.

M. Dinsdale: S'il y avait communication par satellite, cela bouleverserait les calculs, n'est-ce pas?

M. Juneau: Eh bien, bien sûr. On discute de la question actuellement, mais disons que dans certains cas, cela diminuera le coût de la distribution. Le coût de distribution des programmes de Radio-Canada à des régions éloignées, qu'elles soient dans le Nord moyen ou l'extrême Nord, je suis certain que vous vous rendez compte que cela a un coût très élevé et parfois même prohibitif, tandis que par satellite, le coût serait certes élevé, mais acceptable.

M. Dinsdale: On a discuté ces choses à vos audiences. Peut-on en obtenir le compte rendu?

M. Juneau: Bien sûr, le procès verbal est quelque chose de privé, mais disons qu'il y a eu une transcription de cela qui est public. C'est un document très long. Ce qui serait plus pratique d'utiliser, ce serait les mémoires, les principaux mémoires soumis par CTV, par Radio-Canada, par NTV. J'en oublie peut-être, mais, disons simplement qu'à la lecture de ces mémoires, et c'est possible parce qu'ils ne sont pas très longs, je pense que vous auriez une très bonne idée.

M. Dinsdale: Où peut-on les obtenir?

M. Juneau: Vous pouvez les obtenir en vous renseignant auprès du Conseil ou...

M. Mongrain: On doit les avoir à la bibliothèque.

M. Juneau: On ne peut pas les obtenir à la bibliothèque, mais vous pouvez les obtenir par l'intermédiaire du Conseil. Ce sera plus facile, je pense que d'aller auprès des différentes parties.

Le président: Je me mettrai donc en contact avec les personnes en cause pour que ces mémoires puissent être déposés auprès du secrétaire et que les députés puissent y référer.

Une question supplémentaire, M. De Bané?

[Text]

M. De Bané: Je voudrais savoir, monsieur Juneau, si vous pouvez nous donner des documents pour nous permettre de mieux comprendre le rôle, la fonction et le travail du CRTC. J'aurais beaucoup de questions à vous poser, mais j'aimerais avoir des documents pour m'éclairer.

M Juneau: Il y a plusieurs documents qu'on peut mettre à la disposition des membres, monsieur le président. En plus des mémoires, il y a des documents élémentaires. Je comprends bien votre situation parce que, quand je suis entré, il y a deux ans et demi, dans cette fonction, j'étais assez perdu. Nous avons des cartes qui sont faites par provinces et par médium, c'est-à-dire AM, FM et télévision, et qui indiquent tous les postes de radio et de télévision à travers le pays: ceux qui sont affiliés à Radio-Canada, ceux qui sont affiliés à CTV, ceux qui ne sont pas affiliés, etc. Delà, ça aide beaucoup à comprendre ce dont on parle.

The Chairman: A supplementary, Mr. Osler?

Mr. Osler: In view of the line of questioning that Mr. Dinsdale has been pursuing, is it not a fact that the CBC's obligations to and relationship with an area are fundamentally laid down in the new Broadcasting Act? In other words, it would be unfair to say it was CBC policy; it is Parliament's policy to say, for instance, that the public network is to fulfil certain functions, and that is it. Is that right?

Mr. Juneau: This is right.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions from the members on the second channel question?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Juneau, am I correct in understanding that for the development of some of these alternative services or extension of services in the Maritimes the priority will be guided by the extension of the French language service say, into Nova Scotia, and second to that perhaps the alternative or a second channel service in New Brunswick? Is this correct?

Mr. Juneau: We have said, yes. After the Moncton hearing we announced that it seemed obvious to the Commission that the main priority in the Maritimes is the extension of first service in French to the French-speaking population that did not have it, and also the creation of a local CBC production centre in the Maritimes because there is, of course, French service in parts of the Maritimes but all through rebroadcasting stations.

[Interpretation]

Mr. De Bané: I would like to know, Mr. Juneau, if you would provide us with documents which might make it possible for us to understand better the role of the CRTC. I have many questions to ask you.

Mr. Juneau: We have many documents which we could pass at the disposal of members, as well as memoranda. There are basic documents. I understand your position very well. I was completely lost when I came into this job a couple of years ago. We have maps by province, and by medium, both AM-FM and TV which show all TV and radio stations throughout the country. Those affiliated with the CBC, those affiliated with CTV and so on, and that sheds much light upon the situation.

Le président: Une autre question, M. Osler?

M. Osler: Vu les questions qu'a posées M. Dinsdale, n'est-il pas exact que les obligations de Radio-Canada et les rapports qu'elle entretient avec telle ou telle région sont bien précisés par la nouvelle loi. Il n'est pas juste de parler de politique de Radio-Canada. Il vaudrait beaucoup mieux parler de la politique du gouvernement, ou mieux, de la politique du Parlement. Il relève du Parlement de prescrire, par exemple, que le réseau public doit remplir certaines fonctions, etc.

M. Juneau: Vous avez raison.

Le président: Est-ce que les députés ont d'autres questions à poser sur cette question du deuxième canal?

M. McCleave: Ai-je raison de conclure que les principes qui orientent en général votre action en ce qui concerne la mise en place de nouveaux services, ou une extension de ceux existant dans les provinces maritimes sont les suivants: d'abord l'extension du service de langue française en Nouvelle-Écosse, et deuxièmement, la mise en place d'un deuxième service au Nouveau-Brunswick?

M. Juneau: Oui. Nous avons dit, à l'issu de notre réunion de Moncton, que nous étions persuadés que dans les provinces maritimes, nous accordions la priorité à un premier service en français aux francophones, qui n'en bénéficiaient pas encore. Nous avons aussi accordé priorité à la création d'un service de production locale dans les provinces maritimes. Il existait déjà un service de langue française dans certaines parties, du moins, Moncton, which is becoming a very important centre, has programs only from Montreal and the Premier of New Brunswick has a way of expressing that. If he wants to speak to the population of New Brunswick he has to go to New Carlisle in Gaspé or to Montreal, so we have said that in our opinion a very important priority is to have a production centre in Moncton.

Mr. McCleave: I do not quarrel with the priority, Mr. Juneau, but it seems to me it gives rise to one difficulty. The alternative English language service would be established, I take it, by the CBC in the Fredericton-Saint John area and if the CBC has difficulties in getting money the extension of the French service may have to wait for some time, but the alternative service will have to wait even longer. Has the Commission considered this aspect?

Mr. Juneau: We have. From the information we have, which in this case is public information, that problem does not seem to rise in practice. Our role was to say, from a policy point of view, what seemed to us to be the priorities. However, in practice there does not seem to be a problem because the CBC has applied for the stations that would be required to provide second service in English and our understanding is—and again that is public—that they are at the moment negotiating to establish a production centre in Moncton. It is a theoretical problem, apparently.

Mr. McCleave: That is that the CBC will be able to get the money for these capital expenditures? They do not anticipate difficulties in that direction?

Mr. Juneau: I can only conclude from the information I have that the answer to your question is, yes.

The Chairman: Perhaps Mr. McCleave will have an opportunity to question the CBC about that in January.

Mr. McCleave: Those are my questions supplementary to what Mr. Dinsdale raised.

The Chairman: Mr. Stanbury, did you have supplementary to Mr. Dinsdale's question?

Mr. Stanbury: Yes, Mr. Chairman, not so much a second channel question as a third or des provinces maritimes, mais il s'agissait uniquement de retransmission.

Moncton devient un centre très important. Tous ses programmes viennent cependant de Montréal. Le premier ministre du Nouveau-Brunswick a sa façon de s'expliquer là-dessus. S'il veut parler à la population du Nouveau-Brunswick, il doit aller à New Carlisle en Gaspésie, ou à Montréal. Nous avons dit qu'à notre avis, c'était là une question de haute priorité. Il fallait donc installer à Moncton un centre de production.

M. McCleave: Je n'en veux pas à cette priorité, monsieur Juneau, mais cela me semble susciter une difficulté. Un nouveau service, donc, de langue anglaise serait installé par Radio-Canada dans la région Fredericton-St-Jean. Or si Radio-Canada a du mal à trouver l'argent, l'extension du service français aura peut-être à être différé. Alors que le nouveau service de langue anglaise devra attendre encore plus longtemps. Est-ce que le Conseil a considéré cet aspect de la question?

M. Juneau: Oui. D'après les renseignements dont nous disposons, qui sont des renseignements mis à la disposition du public, dans le cas qui nous occupe, ce problème ne semble pas se poser dans la pratique. Nous avons, nous, cherché à établir les priorités que nous jugions valables. Toutefois, dans la pratique, le problème ne semble pas se poser. Radio-Canada a demandé, déjà, à installer des postes qui exigeraient la mise en place de nouveaux services de langue anglaise. Nous croyons comprendre qu'elle est en train de voir si elle peut organiser la création d'un centre de production à Moncton, le problème est donc théorique.

M. McCleave: Radio-Canada pense donc pouvoir recevoir l'argent qu'il lui faut pour ces dépenses? Elle ne prévoit pas qu'elle aura des problèmes à résoudre à cet égard?

M. Juneau: Tout ce que je peux vous dire c'est que les renseignements dont je dispose me font répondre oui.

Le président: Peut-être monsieur McCleave aura-t-il possibilité de poser cette question à Radio-Canada en janvier.

M. McCleave: Voilà donc les questions que je voulais poser.

Le président: Monsieur Stanbury, est-ce que vous auriez des questions à poser?

M. Stanbury: Non pas tellement en ce qui concerne le deuxième canal, mais en ce qui fourth channel question. In the aftermath of the Channel 3 affair, the old BBG was asked to survey all the available television channels across southern Ontario. It did so. As a result of that survey it indicated that there would not be an additional channel available in Toronto. I think, in effect, the channel which might have been available in Toronto went to London in the hope that some day the CBC would have its owned and operated station in London.

Now, it was only a minor storm that blew up over this, nothing compared to the one that blew up when you gave us a station we did not want, but would you mind explaining the rationale behind sending a channel to London for some distant future use when it might have been used immediately in Toronto?

Mr. Juneau: I think the CBC is on record as saying that it is ready to apply for a channel in London as soon as it is ready to apply for a transfer of its operations in Toronto from Channel 6 to Channel 5.

As you know, the delay there was caused by the lack of a decision on the choice of a tower site. I understand that decision has now been taken. So, from the information we have, the application for London is not in the far future; if we were working on a calendar it might not be further in the future than the proposal which has been rejected by the Commission.

● 1515

Mr. Stanbury: Has the CBC indicated to the Commission when it expects to proceed in London?

Mr. Juneau: In its last appearance before the Commission in Ottawa last week, the Commission said it was ready to apply for a London channel simultaneously, I think with the Toronto application.

Mr. Stanbury: And presumably it will have the funds to proceed when it applies.

The only other question I have relates to a second language channel. I suppose in view of your last answer it would have to be a UHF channel. However, have you any indication of when there might be a French language television channel in Toronto? I think I read somewhere that it is the fourth largest French-speaking city in Canada.

[Interpretation]

concerne surtout les troisième et quatrième canaux. Autrefois, on se rappellera que le Bureau des gouverneurs avait été chargé d'examiner toute la question des canaux de télévision en opération dans le sud de l'Ontario. C'est ce que le Bureau a fait. Il a donc conclu qu'il ne serait pas possible d'accorder un autre canal à la ville de Toronto. En fait, le canal qui aurait pu être mis à la disposition de Toronto a été accordé à London, dans l'espoir que Radio-Canada y aurait un jour son propre poste.

Cela a suscité une petite tempête, mais une petite tempête seulement, pas comparable à la tempête qui s'est produite lorsqu'on nous a donné une station dont nous ne voulions pas du tout. Mais pourquoi, pourrait-on nous expliquer pourquoi on a réservé un canal à London, canal réservé à un éventuel et hypothétique usage, alors que ce canal aurait pu être utilisé tout de suite à Toronto?

M. Juneau: Je crois que Radio-Canada a dit publiquement qu'elle est tout à fait disposée à demander un nouveau canal à London, dès qu'elle sera prête à demander le transfert de ses opérations à Toronto du canal 6 au canal 5.

Vous savez que le retard a été provoqué par l'absence d'une décision en ce qui concerne l'emplacement d'une tour. Je crois que cette décision a maintenant été prise en sorte que d'après les renseignements dont nous disposons, des demandes d'établissement d'un nouveau poste à London ne sont pas trop éloignées. Si nous travaillions sur un horaire, elles ne seraient pas plus incertaines que la proposition déjà rejetée par le Conseil.

M. Stanbury: Est-ce que Radio-Canada a indiqué au Conseil quand elle compte procéder à ses travaux à London?

M. Juneau: A sa dernière réunion, Radio-Canada nous a dit qu'elle était disposée à demander de créer un poste à London dès qu'elle serait autorisée à créer un nouveau poste à Toronto, c'est-à-dire un nouveau changement de canal.

M. Stanbury: Au moment de la demande, les fonds devront donc être, selon toute apparence, disponibles?

La seule autre question que j'ai concerne un canal dans une deuxième langue. D'après votre dernière réponse, ce canal devrait être un canal UHF. Pouvez-vous nous dire quand il pourra y avoir un canal de télévision de langue française à Toronto? On dit que c'est la quatrième ville de langue française au Canada.

[Texte]

Mr. Juneau: In its last brief before the Commission the CBC mentioned its intention of proposing a French television channel in Toronto and also I think in Windsor. I would prefer to go back to the brief and give you the information. It did not seem to be in the very far future, but I would prefer not to speculate.

Mr. Stanbury: It is in the works?

Mr. Juneau: That is the impression we had.

Mr. Stanbury: Thank you.

The Chairman: Mr. McCleave, on a new subject?

Mr. McCleave: I have two questions and I will hold the second until another round. The question I would like to raise now arises from the mail that the Commission has received and that I and others have received with regard to a CBC program. I realize this is a very touchy field when you have two Crown emanations, both Goliaths, who may or may not be set on a collision course, but I have great confidence in Mr. Juneau's diplomatic tact and so I dare to bring up the problem here. This arises from the segment on "The Way It Is" called "Listen America". I am sure that Mr. Juneau is familiar with that and I wondered, first, if the Commission under its regulatory power was dealing with that sort of problem and, second, what action if any it planned in this specific case?

Mr. Juneau: I would like to say, first, that you have been very kind in your remarks. I am sure that the avoidance of a conflict will not be due only to the supposed tact of the Chairman of the CRTC but also to the indoubtable wisdom and tact of the management of the CBC. I must say for my part that I have no fear whatever, if things go as they are going now, that there will be such a problem.

On the question which you raised, it seems to us that there are strong indications that Parliament intended the CRTC to establish, if necessary, general policies with regard to program matters in general and, if necessary, with the area you refer to in particular.

However, I do not want to avoid your question. You have used the words "specific case".

Mr. McCleave: Actually I had two questions: first, the matter of regulations in this

[Interprétation]

M. Juneau: Dans son dernier mémoire au Conseil, Radio-Canada a fait état de l'intention qu'elle avait de proposer la mise en place d'un nouveau canal de télévision de langue française à Toronto et d'un autre, si je ne m'abuse, à Windsor. Je préférerais revenir sur ce mémoire pour vous donner ce renseignement. Cela ne semble pas être pour un avenir très éloigné, mais je préfère ne pas faire de conjectures...

M. Stanbury: Les choses semblent-elles déjà en train?

M. Juneau: C'est l'impression que nous avons.

M. Stanbury: Merci.

Le président: Monsieur McCleave, sur une question nouvelle?

M. McCleave: Oui, deux autres questions. J'attendrai pour poser la deuxième que nous en soyons à un autre sujet. Je songe ici à un programme de Radio-Canada. Voici deux institutions de l'État, deux espèces de Goliath qui se dirigent l'un vers l'autre à toute vitesse et monsieur Juneau a tout le tact qu'on peut attendre d'un parfait diplomate, et c'est pour cela que j'ose soulever le problème ici: Il s'agit de quelque chose tiré de «The Way It Is» et qui s'appelle «Listen America». Je suis sûr que M. Juneau connaît bien la question. Je voudrais d'abord qu'il me dise si le Conseil dans l'exercice de ses pouvoirs de réglementation s'occupait de ce genre de problème et quelles mesures il envisageait dans le cas qui nous occupe.

M. Juneau: Je vous remercie de vos observations. Si nous évitons un conflit, cela ne sera pas dû entièrement, ce ne sera pas attribuable entièrement au tact supposé du président du Conseil mais surtout au tact incontestable de la direction de Radio-Canada.

Pour moi, je n'ai aucune crainte, si les choses continuent à marcher comme elles marchent, ce problème ne se posera pas.

En ce qui concerne la question que vous m'avez posée, il nous semble que tout laisse croire que le Parlement voulait que le Conseil établisse, s'il le fallait, les principes généraux en ce qui concerne les questions de programmation en général et, éventuellement, en ce qui concerne ce secteur que vous venez d'évoquer.

Toutefois, je ne veux pas éviter de répondre à votre question. Vous avez parlé en effet de «cas précis».

M. McCleave: J'avais en fait deux questions. Je pensais d'abord à la réglementation field and, second, the matter of what action if any was being taken with regard to this case?

Mr. Juneau: We have started to look into the problem of regulating that general field. I must say that it is an extremely difficult problem. It is difficult enough if you are managing an operation, it becomes even more difficult when you are regulating a total system. So I would not want to say at this point what the Commission will do eventually because very frankly the Commission is not in a position to say at the moment because it is just too difficult. It will go on studying the matter.

• 1520

In individual cases my personal opinion, and it is really only my own personal opinion until it is endorsed by the Commission is that these problems are usually so complex as you know, I have been involved in management and production in the field of communication—and so intricate that it is better to rest on the management of an organization to solve them. You cannot usually solve them in a theoretical way; you have to take into account all kinds of factors in solving a specific case—to use the phrase that you have used.

If you have a general policy which is well made, well established, well detailed, then if you have a specific case you can judge it as against the general policy. In exceptional cases you might expect an organization like the Commission to consider a specific case as against the general policy and establish a decision. If you absolutely have to, I would think myself that occasions like that should be limited to very very rare exceptions, again because these problems I think are better handled by management—and this I think would go for private stations as much as for the CBC.

Mr. McCleave: With regard to the second question, the action being taken, I take it that you have received complaints on this particular program? Would you draw that to the attention of the CBC, Mr. Juneau?

Mr. Juneau: This we have done in the past and we would do again. I understand in this case we have not had many complaints.

Mr. McCleave: I thought from Mr. Stanburys' answer to me in the House of Commons that perhaps there had been, but I do not want to quote him.

[Interpretation]

de ces questions et ensuite, aux mesures à appliquer éventuellement à ce cas.

M. Juneau: Nous avons commencé à étudier le problème de la réglementation, problème, je le reconnais, extrêmement ardu. La difficulté est déjà grande lorsqu'il s'agit de réglementer une seule activité, mais elle augmente lorsqu'on s'attaque à tout un ensemble. Je ne voudrais donc pas dire tout de suite ce que pourra faire un jour le Conseil car, et je parle franchement, le Conseil ne sait pas encore ce qu'il doit faire.

Il y a évidemment des cas précis. Je suis pour ma part persuadé et ce n'est vraiment que mon opinion à moi que ces problèmes sont généralement si complexes, et vous savez que je m'occupe des questions de gestion et de réalisation dans le domaine des communications depuis longtemps, ces problèmes sont si complexes et si compliqués qu'il vaut mieux s'en remettre à la direction d'une organisation pour les régler. Il est généralement impossible de résoudre ces problèmes d'une façon théorique. Toutes sortes de facteurs doivent entrer en ligne de compte lorsqu'il s'agit de la solution d'un cas précis, pour utiliser les mots que vous avez vous-même utilisés tout à l'heure.

S'il existe une politique générale bien conçue, bien comprise, bien circonstanciée, tant mieux, car chaque fois qu'on est saisi de cas précis, on peut comparer les circonstances qui entrent en ligne de compte avec des principes généraux. Il faut absolument le faire je pense, il ne faudrait pas demander trop souvent au Conseil de se pencher sur ces cas précis à la lumière de ces principes généraux. Car, je le répète, je pense qu'il vaut beaucoup mieux s'en remettre pour la solution de ces questions à la direction de telle ou telle entreprise, qu'il s'agisse de Radio-Canada ou du secteur privé.

M. McCleave: En ce qui concerne la seconde question, à savoir les mesures prises, vous avez certainement reçu des plaintes au sujet de ce programme en particulier. Est-ce que vous voulez signaler la chose à Radio-Canada, monsieur Juneau?

M. Juneau: Nous l'avons déjà fait dans le passé. Je ne pense pas qu'en l'occurrence nous ayons reçu beaucoup de plaintes.

M. McCleave: D'après ce que M. Stanbury a dit à la Chambre, je pensais qu'il y en avait eu, mais je ne veux pas le citer.

[Texte]

Mr. Stanbury: I said there had been some communications to the Commission.

Mr. McCleave: Perhaps then there was a segment of the population that appreciated having bedrooms brought into their living rooms by way of television.

Mr. Juneau: There may have been communications and there may have been the odd complaint. There have been situations in the past where the BBG had a great number of complaints, but in this case it has not happened, in fact.

The Chairman: Are there further questions on programming?

Mr. Schumacher: Could I ask a supplementary in that area?

The Chairman: By all means.

Mr. Schumacher: I am not too familiar with the Broadcasting Act but I understand from Mr. McCleave's question that there is a section of the Act that would allow you to make regulations. Is that correct, Mr. Juneau?

Mr. Juneau: I would think we could of a general policy nature, yes.

Mr. McCleave: Under section 61(1)?

Mr. Juneau: Yes, and the preamble would contain general expressions that would support action by the Commission.

Mr. Schumacher: Did I understand you to say that you were working on preparing some regulations or just studying the matter of whether you should make regulations?

Mr. Juneau: No, we are studying in a more general way the whole issue of policy in what you might call good taste. We are looking at what is being done, what has been done in Canada, what is the jurisprudence so to speak, what are the policies of the CBC, what are the policies of the stations, what are the policies in other countries, and so on.

It is somewhat like the problem of violence you know; everybody is very concerned with that problem but it is very difficult to decide what you should do about it. It is easy to decide what you think you might do but to decide what you should do and what you would be well-founded to do is difficult.

• 1525

M. Mongrain: Une question supplémentaire, monsieur le président, à ce sujet. Puisque M.

[Interprétation]

M. Stanbury: Il y a eu des notifications au Conseil.

M. McCleave: En somme, on a dû se plaindre de ce que les chambres à coucher pénétraient dans le salon grâce à la télévision.

M. Juneau: Il a pu y avoir des notifications, la plainte bizarre. Il est déjà arrivé que le Bureau du gouverneur ait été saisi d'un nombre innombrable de plaintes, mais dans l'affaire qui nous occupe, ce n'est pas ce qui s'est produit, en fait.

Le président: Est-ce qu'il y a d'autres questions sur la programmation?

M. Schumacher: Pourrais-je poser une question supplémentaire sur ce sujet?

Le président: Bien sûr.

M. Schumacher: Je ne connais pas assez la loi, mais si j'ai bien compris monsieur McCleave, il y a un article de la loi qui vous permet d'édicter des règlements, n'est-ce pas?

M. Juneau: Oui, à la lumière de principes généraux, certainement.

M. McCleave: Aux termes de l'article 61(1)?

M. Juneau: Oui. Dans l'exposé des motifs, on trouverait certaines considérations générales qui permettraient au Conseil d'agir en ce sens.

M. Schumacher: Vous étiez en train de préparer des règlements, si je ne m'abuse, ou est-ce que vous nous avez dit que vous étudiez l'opportunité de dicter des règlements?

M. Juneau: J'ai dit que nous examinons d'une façon générale toute la question de politique générale en ce qui concerne ce qu'on appelle, si vous voulez, le bon usage. Nous regardons ce qui s'est fait au Canada, quelle est la jurisprudence, pour ainsi dire, quels sont les principes de Radio-Canada, quels sont les principes des postes, quels sont les principes suivis dans d'autres pays, etc.

C'est un peu comme le problème de la violence, c'est une question qui préoccupe beaucoup de monde, mais il est extrêmement difficile de décider ce qu'on doit faire à ce sujet. On peut facilement envisager ce que l'on pourrait faire, mais il est malaisé de décider ce qu'on devrait faire, ce qu'on ferait de bien-fondé.

• 1525

Mr. Mongrain: A supplementary question Mr. Chairman on that point. Since Mr.

[Text]

Juneau nous dit que son organisme a un certain droit de regard sur la programmation, je pense que tous mes collègues seront de mon avis, que toutes les plaintes, ou presque toutes, que nous recevons de nos commettants au sujet de Radio-Canada, sont à l'effet que cette société semble vouloir donner une importance démesurée aux gens qui ont ces philosophies marginales, les hippies, les protestataires, les révolutionnaires, les séparatistes, les athées.

Vous seriez surpris de voir l'avalanche de lettres que nous recevons de gens qui se plaignent que Radio-Canada, institué originairement pour promouvoir l'union de tous les Canadiens, semble vouloir mettre l'accent sur tout ce qui provoque la désunion et le désordre au Canada et je pense que tous mes collègues, ici, doivent recevoir une correspondance volumineuse dans ce sens-là. Que pouvez-vous faire relativement à cet état de choses, monsieur Juneau?

M. Juneau: Je pense que monsieur Mongrain a tout à fait le droit de me poser cette question-là et que je dois essayer d'y répondre.

M. Mongrain: Vous allez m'excuser, monsieur Juneau, si je fais une parenthèse. Dans le nouveau Parlement, nos chefs nous ont dit que si ceux qu'on questionne ne sont pas capables de s'en tirer, on nous donne toute latitude pour les mettre en boîte, ils méritent de rester là.

M. Juneau: Bien, je pense que vous allez être obligé de repenser à mon poste de président du CRTC. Le problème que vous soulevez ne peut être considéré, je crois, que dans un contexte plus général, à savoir l'équilibre des opinions qui sont exprimées dans un système d'information, non seulement dans celui de la radiodiffusion mais de l'information, y compris la presse par exemple.

Je pense que d'autres gens pourraient se poser le problème, d'un point de vue universitaire, si je peux dire, d'un point de vue sociologique. On pourrait s'interroger aux fins de savoir si tous nos journaux représentent un équilibre très strict parmi les divers courants d'opinions dans le pays ou aller plus loin et se demander si, quelquefois, ils ne représentent pas très nettement un courant plutôt qu'un autre.

Les journalistes au Canada et dans d'autres pays, mais tenons-nous-en au Canada, des journalistes eux-mêmes, et ici, je réfère aux praticiens et non pas la direction des journaux, se posent très souvent le problème de savoir comment s'assurer que les journaux sont aussi fidèles que possible à la réalité, du moins dans la partie du journal qui est censée refléter la réalité.

[Interpretation]

Juneau has been telling us that his organization has a certain control over programming I believe that all my colleagues here will feel as I do, that almost every complaint we receive from our constituency with regard to the CBC is to the effect that the CBC seems to give excessive importance to these people who with marginal philosophies, hippies, revolutionaries, separatists, athiests and what have you.

You would be surprised to see the avalanche of letters we get complaining about the CBC on that account. The CBC was set up originally to promote the union of all Canadians and yet the CBC attempts it would appear to emphasize everything which produces disunity and disorder in this country.

I think all members of the House must be in the same position I am in. What can you do in this connection Mr. Juneau?

Mr. Juneau: I think Mr. Mongrain is perfectly entitled to put that question and I must attempt to answer it.

Mr. Mongrain: Will you excuse me if I say this. In this new Parliament we have been told by our leaders and if the people we question cannot answer we have been given every latitude to put them in an embarrassing position if we feel like doing so. And to keep them there.

Mr. Juneau: I think you will have to rethink this matter of my chairmanship of the Council. The question you have put can only be considered in a more general context; balanced expression of opinion in a public information system. I have in reference here to a general system of information; I mean not only broadcasting, but the press; the problem may be looked at from an academic point of view, or from a sociological point of view. We might wonder if all our newspapers are not definitely biased by emphasizing one of the many trends of public opinion in this country. I might go further, we might wonder if they are not perhaps...

Newspapermen in this country and in other countries, but let us not go outside Canada, for the moment, newspapermen, not editors, often wonder how newspapers can be true to life, at least—that part of the paper that is supposed to deal with fact.

[Texte]

M. Mongrain: Je pourrais vous citer deux cas spécifiques pour aider à mieux comprendre ce que je veux soulever.

Il y a quelques semaines, vous vous souvenez que nous avons eu au Québec toute une série d'occupations de certaines écoles, les CEGEP. A ce moment-là, dans tous les programmes que j'ai pu suivre à Radio-Canada et d'après les commentaires que j'ai reçus dans mon courrier, on a interviewé très largement les promoteurs de ces occupations. A cette époque-là, on n'a presque pas eu les porte-parole de ceux qui ne voulaient pas faire l'occupation. Je crois que c'était la très grande majorité.

Hier soir, il y avait, à Radio-Canada, un interview de quelques jeunes étudiants qui s'opposaient à l'occupation des écoles. Je sais que vous devez rapporter les nouvelles, bonnes ou mauvaises. Mais il me semble que dans les programmes, où vous invitez les gens à venir donner des opinions, on devrait simultanément entendre les deux points de vue. Il me semble que le point de vue de la majorité devrait être aussi valable que le point de vue de l'exception qui soulève de tels problèmes.

• 1530

M. Juneau: Si je prends votre dernière affirmation que vous posez en théorème, je pense qu'on ne peut qu'être d'accord avec vous. Le problème pour un organisme comme le nôtre, c'est d'établir, sur des questions comme celles-là, des règles qui ne soient pas trop rigides ou des règles qui manquent complètement de valeur pratique. Inversement, le problème est d'établir des règles qui soient pratiques de façon à ce qu'elles fonctionnent lorsqu'on essaiera de les mettre en pratique.

Aux États-Unis, on a établi de telles règles et, actuellement, on est en train de se demander si on ne devrait pas peut-être les abolir ou les changer, parce qu'elles sont devenues très embêtantes. Je ne dis pas cela pour militer dans un sens ou dans l'autre. A partir du moment où, sur des questions comme celles-là, on commence à établir des règles, il faut être sûr qu'elles sont très bonnes. Or, la simple vérité, c'est que cette question est tellement compliquée qu'on n'a pas eu le temps de consacrer l'étude nécessaire aux règles qui seraient peut-être utiles.

M. Mongrain: Comprenez bien ce que je veux dire, M. Juneau. Je pense que nous tous, au Parlement, réalisons que l'information a le droit de cité et nous sommes intéressés à entendre les points de vue de tout le monde. D'après les protestations que nous recevons, il semble qu'il y a un accent trop prononcé pour favoriser justement la propa-

[Interprétation]

Mr. Mongrain: We will give you a specific case so that you could understand what I am driving at. A few weeks ago we had the occupation of a number of schools in the Province of Quebec. The Junior colleges the promoters of those troubles were interviewed high, wide and handsome. Yet very little opportunity was given to those people who were opposed to the occupation of schools to have their views expressed over the air. I think they were a substantial majority. A few days ago, over the CBC we did hear a number of students who objected to the occupation of schools. You must report the news, whether the views are good or bad, but on those programs when you invite people, we should have the same—both points of view. It seems to me that the point of view of the majority should be given as much place, as the opinion of the minority.

Mr. Juneau: Let us take your last statement, assuming it is correct, I feel I must share your views. The problem for an organization such as ours is to establish in reference to questions like this rules which are not too rigid or rules would be entirely inapplicable in practice. Conversely, the problem is to establish practical rules so that when we apply them they will work properly.

In the United States rules of that type have been established and yet they are wondering if they should not be abolished or amended because they have become very embarrassing. I am not saying this in favour of one point of view over another but just to establish that from the moment we start establishing rules we should be sure that our rules are absolutely valid. The fact is that this matter is so complicated that we have not really had the time to decide which rules are worthwhile.

Mr. Mongrain: I think I should be clear. You should understand what I am driving at. All of us here in Parliament recognize that everybody has the right to be informed about the viewpoint of all kinds of people and we want to hear them. The protests we receive indicate excessive emphasis on those movements which I might for want of a better gande de ces mouvements que j'appellerai subversifs jusqu'à un certain point.

Je vais vous donner un autre cas. Au Québec, nous avons l'impression très nette que les mouvements séparatistes ont une espèce de préséance dans les programmes d'information de Radio-Canada ou du moins, qu'on leur donne une importance qui n'est pas commensurable avec le nombre de séparatistes qu'il y a au Québec. On nous a toujours dit que ce qui a inspiré l'installation de Radio-Canada, c'était de favoriser l'unité nationale, la compréhension dans le pays. Or, voilà des gens qui veulent disloquer cette unité nationale et qui vont donc contre les buts de Radio-Canada.

Je pense que personne n'aura objection à ce qu'aux nouvelles, on dise que M. Lévesque a fondé un nouveau parti ou que M. Lévesque vient de faire une déclaration fracassante. C'est de la nouvelle. Mais si, par exemple, tous les tenants du séparatisme sont invités à toutes sortes d'occasions à se prononcer, on leur donne alors une chaire pour diffuser leurs points de vue négatifs et destructifs quant à la Confédération. Je pense que mes collègues vont être unanimes pour dire que c'est le principal grief de nos commettants, un des principaux du moins.

M. Juneau: Est-ce que vous vous attendez à un commentaire de ma part?

M. Mongrain: J'espère que vous nous en donnerez un. Si vous n'avez pas suffisamment de pouvoir pour réglementer ces choses, j'imagine que ce sera notre responsabilité de légiférer pour vous donner les pouvoirs. J'aimerais avoir vos commentaires.

M. Juneau: Je pense que je ne peux pas affirmer que nous n'avons pas suffisamment de pouvoir. Je pense que la loi est très ambitieuse et que le CRTC a, actuellement, beaucoup de pouvoirs. Son problème est plutôt de trouver des moyens de les mettre en pratique.

Voici le commentaire le plus pratique que je pourrais faire au sujet de votre question. Une telle question exige une politique. Quand je parle de politique, je ne parle pas de la loi qui est une politique plus générale. Je veux dire une politique d'application bien étudiée et très travaillée, qui soit le résultat de consultations avec les organismes professionnels compétents, c'est-à-dire Radio-Canada et les postes privés, et aussi avec les organismes professionnels au sens strict, c'est-à-dire les associations de journalistes, les gens qui font l'information, de façon à ce qu'une telle politique ait des chances de succès en pratique.

D'ici à ce qu'une politique élaborée de cette façon puisse se réaliser, il me semble que la meilleure attitude possible devant le pro-term call subversive. I will give you another case. We, in Quebec, do feel that Separatists movements, for instance, have some priority in CBC news broadcasts or at the very least that they are given an importance which is not commensurate with the number of Separatists which we have in the Province of Quebec. We have always been told that reason for setting up of the CBC originally was to foster unity in this country. Now what we have here are people who want to put an end to this national unity who work therefore against the very raison d'être of the CBC.

I do not think anybody would object if on the news we were told that Mr. Lévesque has founded a new party, or has just said this or that. That is news, but if at every possible opportunity every separatist is brought before the mikes to air his views he is given here an opportunity to air negative and destructive points of view, points of views at least destructive of Confederation. I think my fellow members agree with me that that is the main grievance of our constituents.

Mr. Juneau: Do you expect a comment from me?

Mr. Mongrain: Yes, I hope you have something to offer. If you do not have enough power to regulate these matters then it will become our responsibility to legislate and to provide you with the powers you need. I would like to have your comments on this.

Mr. Juneau: I do not think I can claim that our powers in this connection are not extensive enough. I think the act is a very ambitious act and that the commission now enjoys considerable powers. The problem perhaps is to find the practical means to apply these powers. I think the most practical response I could make to your question is this: A question like this calls for a policy, and when I say "policy", I do not mean the Act. An act of Parliament is a general policy but I am speaking here of a regulatory policy, a well thought out, well rounded policy arrived at through consultation with competent professional organizations, the CBC, private stations and professional newspaper organizations, those people who report the news. I think that this is necessary for a policy like that to be successful in practice.

Until such time as we have a complete policy along these lines, it does appear to me that the best possible attitude to the problem blème que vous soulevez est de faire confiance aux gens qui dirigent ces systèmes au jour le jour. Car, encore une fois, ce sont, dans une large mesure, des problèmes de management, des problèmes de direction.

• 1535

Je voudrais être très clair là-dessus, je n'abdique pas du tout la responsabilité du CRTC dans ce domaine. Je dis que c'est une responsabilité qui peut être exercée efficacement, uniquement quand on a pris le temps d'établir une politique de façon très sérieuse.

Autrement dit, ce serait, je pense, une très mauvaise politique de la part du CRTC et, si je puis me permettre, ce serait malheureux que le Parlement insiste auprès de nous pour que nous essayons d'éteindre tous les feux qui peuvent se produire.

Vous me permettez une mauvaise façon d'aborder la question. Je pense que ce serait une des plus mauvaises choses qui pourrait arriver au CRTC et qui, dans une grande mesure, annulerait l'intérêt de la loi que vous avez passée, que de pousser le CRTC vers un rôle de censeur ou de police. Je pense que ce n'était pas l'intention de la loi. Il serait mauvais que nous, par la force des circonstances, nous laissions entraîner dans cette direction. Évidemment ce n'est pas notre intention à l'heure actuelle. Je suis bien sûr que ce n'est pas votre intention non plus.

Je répète encore une fois que ce n'est pas et que ce ne devrait pas être, de notre part, une abdication d'une responsabilité générale dans ce domaine. Le seul problème, c'est comment exercer cette responsabilité.

M. Mongrain: Vous m'amenez à un commentaire qu'on nous fait parvenir et que je voulais vous transmettre.

D'abord, je trouve que le législateur a été sage de ne pas donner au Parlement l'autorité de régir Radio-Canada, sauf pour ce qui est de vos budgets évidemment. Mais, au Québec en particulier, je ne sais pas pour le reste du pays, on nous répète que certains responsables de certains de vos départements ont justement des tendances séparatistes ou sont des amis des principaux militants séparatistes. C'est ce qui expliquerait que certains de ces dirigeants séparatistes ont plus que leur part dans la programmation de Radio-Canada. On nomme des noms que je ne voudrais pas nommer ici, mais que je pourrais vous transmettre dans l'intimité, si vous le voulez.

M. Juneau: Je pense que vous m'attribuez, sur Radio-Canada, une responsabilité que je n'ai pas.

[Interprétation]

you have raised is that of having some confidence in those people who direct these day to day operations. These, generally speaking are management problems.

This, being said and I want to be clear on that point, I do not deny the responsibility of the Commission in this area but I do think this responsibility can only be properly discharged if we have taken the time and the trouble to establish a very responsible policy. So it would be a very poor policy on the part of the Commission and it would be unfortunate if I may say so for Parliament to ask us to extinguish every fire that may break out. It would be I think a poor way of dealing with the problem.

I do think that the worse thing that could befall the council would be for of to act as a censor or police body. That would defeat the very purpose of the act you have passed. Such is not, I feel the intent of the Act. It would be a bad thing if we allowed the forced circumstances to draw us in that direction. It is not our intention at the present time I am convinced that it is not your intention either. What I want to say here is that this does not mean of course we are abdicating our general responsibility. The only problem is how we are to go about that meeting responsibility.

Mr. Mongrain: I now come to a problem which is often brought before us and which I want to put to you. To begin with I believe that it was not a good idea to make Parliament responsible for the CBC except as regards its budget. We are told that in Quebec in particular—I do not know if that is true of the rest of the country or not—that in Quebec certain people responsible for certain departments have Separatist tendencies. Or are friends of militant Separatists and that that would explain why certain of these Separatist leaders have more than their share of the CBC programs. Some names have been quoted. I would not like to give them here but I could give you these names off the record.

Mr. Juneau: I believe that you are assuming I have a responsibility for the CBC that I do not have.

[Text]

M. Mongrain: Je parle toujours de programmation. Tantôt vous m'avez dit que vous vouliez laisser la responsabilité aux chefs de service. Alors, ceci regarderait Radio-Canada.

M. Juneau: Ceci regarderait plutôt M. Davidson et M. Picard, qui sont président et vice-président de Radio-Canada, que moi qui suis président du CRTC.

M. Mongrain: Nous leur reposerons la question.

Le dernier sujet est un peu différent, mais se rapporte encore à la programmation de Radio-Canada. Pouvez-vous répondre à ces quelques questions? Avez-vous eu, disons depuis un an, des conversations avec les responsables de la province de Québec au sujet de la télévision éducative?

The Chairman: If I may interrupt, this is going off into another area of programming. We had been discussing programming and there are three other members who have supplementaries.

Mr. Mongrain: Educational television is not in the program?

The Chairman: Again, this is something for which the Commission is not responsible.

M. Mongrain: Est-ce que ceci relève de vous?

M. Juneau: C'est une question de politique qui relève du gouvernement à l'heure actuelle.

M. Mongrain: Il y a deux choses dans la télévision éducative: les facilités mécaniques ou techniques et le contenu de la télévision.

M. Juneau: Comme vous savez, il y a des programmes de télévision éducative produits par la province de Québec, qui sont diffusés, à l'heure actuelle, par les émetteurs de Radio-Canada.

M. Mongrain: Je voudrais préciser ma question. Lequel des deux départements relève de vous? Est-ce la technique simplement ou est-ce le contenu de l'émission qui relève du Conseil de la Radio-Télévision, dans le cas de la télévision éducative?

M. Juneau: Il est difficile de diviser les deux. Dans le cas de la télévision éducative, actuellement il n'y a pas de problème de technique parce que la télévision éducative ne fait

[Interpretation]

Mr. Mongrain: Well, I am still talking about programming. Earlier you said you wanted to leave it up to the heads of the Departments. In that case the CBC would be responsible.

Mr. Juneau: That would be more up to Mr. Davidson or Mr. Picard chairman and deputy chairman respectively of the CBC. They are more responsible for that than myself. I am president of the CRTC.

Mr. Mongrain: We shall ask them the question again. Now the last question might be a little different but still regards the programming of CBC. Could you answer these few questions? First of all, in the past year did you have talks with the officials of the Province of Quebec, as regards educational television?

Le président: Si je peux intervenir, cela concerne un autre aspect de la programmation. Nous avons parlé de la programmation, et, trois autres membres du Comité ont des questions supplémentaires.

M. Mongrain: La télévision éducative n'est pas dans le programme?

Le président: Encore une fois, c'est quelque chose dont n'est pas responsable le Conseil.

Mr. Mongrain: Is this your responsibility?

Mr. Juneau: This is a matter of policy which is presently the responsibility of the government.

Mr. Mongrain: Well, there are two things in educational television. You have the mechanical facilities, the technical facilities and you also have the content of television. So you have two elements there.

Mr. Juneau: As you know there are educational television programs produced by the Province of Quebec, which are broadcast at the present either through CBC transmitters...

Mr. Mongrain: I am sorry. I would like to be more specific. Which of these two departments are your responsibility? Is the technical part your responsibility or the content in the case of educational television?

Mr. Juneau: Well it is quite difficult to make a distinction. In the case of educational problem because educational television is only television at the present, there is no technical qu'utiliser des émetteurs qui existent déjà, soit ceux de Radio-Canada, soit ceux des postes privés.

M. Mongrain: Est-ce que vous avez eu des entrevues avec Québec?

• 1540

M. Juneau: Non, parce que le gouvernement du Québec produit des émissions qui sont diffusées par Radio-Canada. Radio-Canada a sans doute eu des discussions avec le gouvernement du Québec. Des émissions sont émises par des postes privés. Il y a eu des projets très importants dans le Lac Saint-Jean et ces programmes ont été diffusés par les deux postes privés du Lac Saint-Jean.

M. Mongrain: Alors, tout cela ne relève pas de votre juridiction.

M. Juneau: Peut-être de façon lointaine, mais ça ne posait aucun problème. Par conséquent, nous n'avons pas eu à nous prononcer sur ces questions.

M. Mongrain: Quelles pourraient être les incidences qui relèveraient de votre Conseil de la radio-télévision?

M. Juneau: Je n'en vois pas franchement. Il pourrait en avoir, si on faisait des demandes auprès de ces postes, qui menaceraient la vie des postes.

M. Mongrain: Si Québec vous demandait un permis d'opérer une chaîne de télévision éducative? Serait-ce de votre ressort?

M. Juneau: Si ça arrivait, ça relèverait de nous, dans la mesure où il y a une politique gouvernementale.

M. Mongrain: Ils ne vous ont pas fait de demande à l'heure actuelle.

M. Juneau: Aucune.

The Chairman: I wonder if we might have general agreement at this time to take a ten minute break. It is a long afternoon until 6 o'clock.

Mr. Mongrain: Why not keep on?

The Chairman: We now have Mr. Osler, Mr. Matte, Mr. De Bané, Mr. Givens and Mr. Dinsdale on supplementaries.

(After recess.)

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I think we should begin now. Mr. Osler was going to continue the questioning on programming.

using transmitters already in existence—either the CBC ones or private ones.

Mr. Mongrain: My question was did you have any contacts with Quebec officials about this?

Mr. Juneau: No we did not, because the Quebec Government produces programs which are distributed by CBC. CBC certainly had talks with the Government of Quebec; or there are programs that are transmitted via the private stations for instance, important projects in the Lac St-Jean area and these were transmitted by the two private stations of the area.

Mr. Mongrain: And these are not your responsibility?

Mr. Juneau: Well, let us say that in a distant way it could but there were no problems about them so we did not have to do anything about them.

Mr. Mongrain: Now, what could be the repercussions for your own department in this field, for the CRTC?

Mr. Juneau: Well, I do not see any really. There might be if there were requests made to these stations if there were threatening the continued existence of stations...

Mr. Mongrain: Supposing Quebec asked you for a permit to operate a chain of educational television stations. Would that be your responsibility?

Mr. Juneau: Yes, if it did happen it would be our responsibility in as much as there is a governmental policy in this matter.

Mr. Mongrain: But they did not make any requests?

Mr. Juneau: No they did not.

Le président: Je me demande s'il n'y aurait pas entente actuellement pour que l'on se détende un petit peu pour faire une pose-café; est-ce que vous êtes d'accord pour qu'on s'arrête dix minutes?

M. Mongrain: Pourquoi ne pas continuer?

Le président: Nous avons monsieur Osler, M. Matte, M. de Bané, M. Givens et M. Dinsdale, sur des questions supplémentaires.

Le président: Messieurs, nous allons reprendre maintenant. M. Osler posait des questions sur la programmation, je pense.

[Text]

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, if we can get away from the specific programs and criticisms thereof and the CBC and criticisms thereof, I would like to direct my questions to either of these gentlemen on the impact they feel they can make on general programming. What concerns me is that I think the industry, which is technically so advanced, is terribly old-fashioned in its thinking. What you see in the tube has not essentially changed in many cases and when you do get a change it is a shock value type of change, such as Mr. McCleave was talking about, which is really an editorial rather than an artistic problem. You either do or do not approve of a specific program, and you either do or do not approve of it because of your upbringing, because of your politics, because of your religion or because of something else; it is very subjective.

This may seem a long way of asking a question, and I hope you will abide with me, Mr. Chairman. I think we are in the field of images here. I was very impressed with the over-all and specific results that were seen at EXPO last year. It seems to me that in Canada there is far too much news and news analysis on the air. This is again a subjective thing. The same old fellows give the same old opinions all the time—they are supposed to be viewpoints—and the same news commentators take the same slants every time.

The Chairman: And the same old politicians.

Mr. Osler: That is right. I am interested in finding out whether this new body can push both the networks—the four networks, I suppose, the private and public in English and in French—towards using the exciting new possibilities that exist in the medium in order to show the people of Canada how they live. It is much more important to be able to expose the French way of life in a subtle manner on a day-to-day basis than it is to have some commentator giving his opinion on how bad or good the separatists are, and vice versa. What is significant about a city such as Winnipeg, with a huge mix of ethnic groups, that makes it different from somewhere else? How can you get these things on the air? Is there any way that you can by force ensure that programming will not be dominated by very conventional minds at network head offices?

Mr. Juneau: I think we can encourage, we can persuade and, if necessary, we can force. I think both the Vice-Chairman and I believe that we should try to work in that direction;

[Interpretation]

M. Osler: Monsieur le président, si nous pouvons nous écarter un tout petit peu des questions de programmes spécifiques, des critiques que cela comporte, et des critiques sur Radio-Canada, je voudrais poser ma question à l'un ou l'autre de ces témoins. Ma question porte sur le rôle qu'ils peuvent jouer dans la programmation générale. En effet, d'après moi, l'industrie, qui est si avancée dans certains domaines techniques, est très vieux jeu dans sa façon de penser. Disons qu'il y a un certain nombre de choses qui n'ont pas beaucoup changé; ce sont des changements parfois sans importance, comme l'a dit M. McCleave; il s'agit uniquement d'un problème de rédaction, plutôt que d'un problème artistique. Vous pouvez adopter ou non un programme donné, à cause de votre éducation, de vos principes politiques, de votre religion, etc.; ça peut être très subjectif.

Ma question semble peut-être longue, mais j'espère que vous me laisserez continuer, monsieur le président. J'ai été très impressionné par les résultats obtenus à l'Expo l'année dernière. Il me semble qu'il y a eu beaucoup trop d'information, et d'analyses d'informations, sur les ondes canadiennes, mais là encore, c'est une question qui est subjective. C'est toujours les mêmes vieux bonhommes qui rabâchent toujours les mêmes opinions, qui sont censées être des points de vue. Et les nouveaux commentateurs, toujours les mêmes, prennent toujours les mêmes points de vue.

Le président: Et toujours les mêmes vieux politiciens.

M. Osler: Oui. Ce qui m'intéresse, c'est de savoir si ce nouvel organisme peut forcer les quatre réseaux, c'est-à-dire les réseaux privés et publics français et anglais, à utiliser les nouvelles possibilités très intéressantes que ces systèmes d'information possèdent actuellement pour montrer aux Canadiens comment ils vivent. Il est beaucoup plus important de faire connaître, d'une façon subtile, le mode de vie des Canadiens français, plutôt que de faire entendre les commentaires subversifs d'un individu ou d'un autre. Par exemple, qu'est-ce qui différencie Winnipeg, ville très cosmopolite, des autres villes? Comment faire passer cela sur les ondes? Pouvez-vous faire en sorte que la programmation ne soit pas établie par des esprits traditionnels?

M. Juneau: Je pense que nous pouvons encourager, persuader et, si besoin est, forcer. Et je pense que le vice-président et moi-même devrions chercher à faire notre travail that is, encourage, persuade and, if necessary, enforce. Of course, if you use the system which is provided in the Act governing licensing, it gives the CRTC a considerable amount of authority. If you use the power to pass regulations it gives the CRTC a considerable amount of authority.

• 1555

Also, by studying and understanding situations which are very entangled, and which many people do not understand, and by bringing out some of the good solutions that have at times been found, I think you can have this kind of positive effect, which I understand is what you mean by pushing.

Let me give you an example. The Canadian Radio-Television Commission has received a number of letters and representations voicing the opinion that Canadian records are not used enough on Canadian radio. Of course, I will not pass an opinion on that for the time being. However, suppose that is an issue. As a matter of fact, the Commission heard last week about a group of stations in Quebec which belong to the same owner where about 35 per cent of the records they use are Canadian records. If you break down the figures a little further you will find that 50 per cent of those records are not only produced in Canada but the music is written in Canada and it is performed by Canadians.

I do not know if this takes place at all their stations, and if we are going to go into statistics I would have to check, but let us say that at least at their main station in Montreal this is the case.

On the other hand, I suppose you could find stations in Canada which hardly use any Canadian records, or very, very few. They might use those produced by the Canadian Talent Library. I think by finding out about situations of that kind, by finding out how they have come about, and by promoting successes of that kind the Commission could have quite a positive influence.

I think somebody used the words "trying to establish structures which will permit the development of Canadian talent". I think you can do that partly by regulations and partly by promoting some of the things that already happen, but which are not initiated enough by the rest of the industry. I think what you propose, in a way, is the whole subject of what proportion of what is going on in broadcast-dans ce sens, c'est-à-dire encourager, persuader, et forcer, si nécessaire. Maintenant, si vous utilisez le mécanisme qui est prévu dans la loi en ce qui concerne l'octroi des permis, cela donne au Conseil d'énormes pouvoirs. Si vous utilisez le pouvoir de voter des règlements, ça nous donne beaucoup de pouvoirs.

En étudiant les situations, on peut arriver à comprendre les rapports étroits qui existent entre toutes ces situations, ce qui est difficile pour certaines personnes, et en mettant en évidence les situations valables qui sont parfois trouvées, eh bien, on peut certainement obtenir des effets salutaires; c'est ce que je crois comprendre lorsque vous dites «pousser».

Par exemple, pour vous citer un cas, le Conseil de la radio-télévision canadienne a reçu un certain nombre de lettres et de plaintes selon lesquelles on ne fait pas jouer suffisamment de disques canadiens sur les ondes. Vous me permettrez pour le moment de ne pas donner mon avis à ce sujet, mais supposons par exemple que ce soit là un cas, un problème. Eh bien, le Conseil, la semaine dernière, a entendu parler d'un groupe de postes du Québec qui appartiennent au même propriétaire et qui font jouer des disques canadiens dans une proportion de 85 p. 100. Si vous faites une ventilation des chiffres, vous vous apercevrez qu'environ 50 p. 100 de ces disques non seulement sont produits au Canada, mais encore que la musique est écrite au Canada et que les artistes sont Canadiens.

Je ne sais pas si c'est vrai pour toutes les stations, mais disons que dans les principaux postes de Montréal, c'est le cas. D'autre part, vous pourriez, je suppose, trouver des stations au Canada qui se servent à peine de disques canadiens. Elles pourraient fort bien utiliser, par exemple, les disques de la discothèque canadienne, mais je pense que c'est en indiquant des exemples de ce genre, en voyant comment ces situations se produisent et en favorisant en quelque sorte les réussites de ce genre que cela pourra être salulaire.

Je pense que quelqu'un a dit: «chercher à établir des structures qui permettront l'épanouissement de talents canadiens». Eh bien, je pense que cela est possible grâce aux règlements d'une part, et d'autre part en favorisant un certain nombre de choses qui se déroulent déjà, mais qui ne sont pas suffisamment imitées par le reste de l'industrie. Je pense que le point que vous soulevez, d'une ing really represents a use of old recipes and what proportion of what is going on represents the development of new ideas. Perhaps the most important part of our role is to find out about the new ideas, discover the new ideas or the new personalities, and encourage the development of new ideas in every field.

I think, whether you are talking about the CBC or about private firms that in any field there are people who tend to try to get by as well as they can—and indeed some of them succeed very well—by using the established formula as effectively as possible. This is in both private business and public enterprises. There are other people who think that it is more fun to develop new ideas, try new ideas, promote new ideas. There is more risk, of course, and sometimes you slip and break a leg.

Mr. Osler: I would be interested to hear what the Commission's views are on radio. I think we tend to forget about radio and concentrate on television, but to me radio is about the most fascinating and flexible medium there is in the country, especially in a country this big where an awful lot of interesting things and people happen in areas where they are not going to necessarily have good television cameras handy.

Mr. Juneau: May I say one thing on that and give my colleague, Mr. Boyle, a chance to think about what he wants to say about this. I think there are more radio stations and this provides an occasion for diversity of choice, for multiplicity of choice, particularly with the FM stations that are developing. Certainly one of the big problems about broadcasting, being relatively limited in the number of channels, is a lack of choice, and anything which contributes to a multiplication of choice is good. In this way radio has a very definite contribution to make. It is cheaper also. Do you have anything to add, Mr. Boyle?

Mr. Harry J. Boyle (Vice-Chairman, Canadian Radio-Television Commission): One of the great difficulties, of course, is the fact that the multiplicity of radio stations has not produced a corresponding amount of initiative. It has really produced a duplication. In other words, the competition has produced a great deal of sameness. If there is a formula in a place they all seem to try and attempt the same thing.

[Interpretation]

certain façon, c'est de savoir dans quelle mesure ce qui est transmis sur les ondes constitue de vieilles recettes, et dans quelle mesure cela représente la création de nouvelles idées. Peut-être le rôle le plus important que nous ayons à jouer est-il de découvrir de nouvelles idées, de nouvelles personnalités et d'encourager la naissance de nouvelles idées dans tous les domaines.

A mon avis, que vous parliez de Radio-Canada ou d'entreprises privées, dans tous les domaines, vous avez des gens qui cherchent à s'écarter autant que possible, et parfois certains réussissent très bien à le faire, de la situation actuelle en utilisant la formule existante aussi efficacement que possible, aussi bien dans les entreprises privées que publiques. Par contre, il y a d'autres personnes qui pensent qu'il est plus drôle de développer de nouvelles idées, de favoriser de nouvelles idées. Bien sûr, cela entraîne un très grand nombre de risques; parfois, on se casse le cou.

M. Osler: J'aimerais savoir quel est le point de vue du Conseil en ce qui concerne la radio. Je pense qu'on a tendance à oublier un peu trop la radio et à s'occuper de la télévision mais, d'après moi, la radio est peut-être le moyen le plus extraordinaire, et le plus souple qu'il y ait dans un pays aussi vaste que le nôtre où il y a beaucoup de choses qui se passent dans les régions dont on n'entend parler que par la radio et où il n'y a pas la télévision.

M. Juneau: Eh bien! si vous me permettez de faire une remarque que M. Boyle pourrait peser avant de donner sa réponse, c'est que je pense qu'il y a plus de stations de radio et je pense qu'elles fournissent beaucoup plus de possibilités de choix, de multiplicité des choix, notamment, avec le développement des postes à modulation de fréquence.

L'un des grands problèmes de la radiodiffusion, c'est le nombre relativement limité des canaux, le manque de choix, et tout ce qui peut contribuer à multiplier le choix est un bien. Sur ce plan, la radio doit jouer un rôle bien déterminé. De plus, elle revient moins cher. Avez-vous quelque chose à ajouter, M. Boyle?

M. Boyle: L'une des difficultés qui se posent, c'est que la multiplicité des stations de radio n'a pas pour autant donné lieu à des initiatives du même ordre. Il y a eu double. Autrement dit, la concurrence n'a eu pour effet que l'uniformité. Si une formule se crée, chacun essaie de l'imiter et de l'appliquer.

[Texte]

The main point of our operation, I think, is to reinforce the fact, which some seem to forget, that they are operating in a public domain with frequencies which are owned by the public and that they have a responsibility greater than simply that of a rating.

Mr. Osler: Will you have a definite policy that will require FM radio, for instance, to be different than AM radio? I do know that in the area where I come from our own firm was approached to do some radio on FM and when you looked at what the private companies, objectives were they could not have been any different than the AM radio objectives were, namely, to make money and get as much advertising in as they could get away with. There was a sort of veneer of aristocracy or something in there because they were FM and this seems to me to be a terrible waste.

The Chairman: The formula is slightly different. That is all.

Mr. Boyle: Well, there is a veneer of Mantovani in all of this, you know; wall to wall, bland to bland, as somebody says. I think that there is in FM an opportunity to redeem the radio spectrum from what you refer to.

Mr. Osler: Is there anything that you can do about it to encourage this?

Mr. Boyle: Yes. At the moment one of our principal concerns is to determine the policy in regard to FM. As the Chairman has suggested, applications were rejected on the basis that they did not contribute anything that was significant in terms of programming. Now our great problem at the moment is to determine the yardstick by which you claim something as being significant and different.

There are two points, I think, which you bring up. One is in the field of experimentation in all programming, whether it is TV or radio. There must be in some way or another a reasonable number of open arms for those people who come along who want to make something else out of radio so that it does not just develop into the same old formula with the same old people.

The second point that concerns me personally very much is the fact that you have instruments of broadcasting ranging now from cable systems through radio, both AM and FM, to television; that inherent in the whole process of having a band which belongs in terms of the public domain, there is access to individuals. In other words there is access for two things: access for people who have talent, that they may be able to

[Interprétation]

Le rôle de notre Conseil, je pense, est de rappeler à ces compagnies de radio qu'elles utilisent des fréquences publiques et qu'elles n'ont pas seulement pour fonction de faire payer les gens.

M. Osler: Appliquerez-vous le principe selon lequel les émissions en modulation de fréquence, par exemple, devront être différentes de celles en modulation d'amplitude? Je ne sais si, dans ma région d'origine, la société de radio qui y émet a été sollicitée pour travailler en modulation de fréquence, mais si l'on considère les objectifs des sociétés privées, ils ne doivent pas beaucoup différer de ceux des émetteurs en modulation d'amplitude, à savoir, faire de l'argent et décrocher autant de publicité que possible. Il y a chez les émetteurs en modulation de fréquence une sorte de complexe de supériorité, qui me semble un beau gâchis.

Le président: La formule est légèrement différente, voilà tout.

M. Boyle: Il y a un vernis de Mantovani dans tout cela, le genre à l'eau de rose, comme on dit, Mais grâce à la modulation de fréquence, on devrait pouvoir tirer la radio de son bournier.

M. Osler: Y a-t-il quelque chose que vous pourriez faire dans ce sens?

M. Boyle: Oui. Je pense que, j'ai dit que la modulation de fréquence offre une possibilité de salut par rapport à la modulation d'amplitude telle que vous l'avez décrite. Notre actuel principe est de déterminer la politique en ce qui concerne la FM. C'est certainement l'objectif parce qu'elle n'ajoute rien de neuf du point de vue programmation. Le très grand problème pour l'instant, c'est de déterminer les moyens de mesures. Il y a le domaine de l'expérimentation et dans tous les domaines, télévision ou radio. Il faudrait que nous accueillions volontiers les gens qui veulent contribuer quelque chose de neuf à la radio, de façon que nous ne conservions pas les mêmes vieilles formules.

Le deuxième point qui m'intéresse beaucoup, c'est qu'il y a toutes sortes d'instruments de radiodiffusion maintenant; câbles, télévision, radio, AM, FM, etc. Supposons qu'une bande appartienne au domaine public. Le particulier peut y avoir accès, le particulier s'il a du talent, de façon à exploiter des idées qui viennent de divers endroits, comme cela a été le cas à l'Expo, mais un accès aussi en ce sens que, dans les villes de l'avenir qui explore and exploit ideas that come from various sources such as those displayed at Expo; and access in a very important way so that in the future, which appears to be that of highly congested and highly developed cities, the survival of the individual will come about because of his ability to interact and interrelate within community boundaries. In an age of electronic communication it is vitally essential for us that those means of communication exist so that individuals can relate to other individuals.

Mr. Osler: I take it this is not always a "hot line" type of proposition.

Mr. Boyle: Not at all. One of the great difficulties about television is that you have a channel and it is occupied and it has become highly competitive and very expensive, as is witnessed in the business of trying to relate second service to localities, because it is linked to the very important dollar.

• 1605

Through competition radio has also become highly competitive with a great sameness, and it is very difficult for individuals to have access to it. We must find some way, whether it is through FM or through the development of cable as a program source, so that individuals who have something to say to other individuals, not necessarily by just being prompted by the reaction to a "hot line" prompter but with something significant to say, will be able to say it irrespective of whether or not that really is listened to or viewed by a great majority of the people. Opinions do not necessarily have to be powerful simply to be heard by the majority of people. Very often the relation to a relatively small group of people is still very important in the whole democratic principle.

Mr. Juneau: May I, Mr. Chairman, quote for Mr. Osler the decision of FM which the Commission issued on May 28. It refers specifically to your question:

The Canadian-Radio Television Commission heard four applications for licences to establish and operate new FM broadcasting stations at the public hearing which had been scheduled by the Board of Broadcast Governors to begin on April 23, 1968.

Of course, by that time the CRTC was in operation.

The applicants did not undertake to provide significantly new or different programming opportunities to the com-sont immenses et encombrées, le salut de l'individu tiendra à ses possibilités de réaction personnelle à l'intérieur de ces villes.

Dans une époque comme la nôtre, une époque électronique, il faut que ces moyens de diffusion existent de façon à établir des liens de personne à personne.

M. Osler: A mon sens, ce genre de proposition ne revêt pas toujours ce caractère prioritaire, n'est-ce pas?

M. Boyle: Pas du tout. Une des grandes difficultés en ce qui concerne la télévision, c'est que, lorsqu'il y a un canal, il est occupé et que c'est une concurrence très vive et que cela coûte extrêmement cher. On s'en aperçoit bien quand on essaie d'utiliser celui de certaines localités.

La radio est également un moyen de diffusion où une concurrence violente s'exerce. Il est peut-être très difficile aux individus d'y avoir accès. Il faut trouver un moyen quelconque, ne serait-ce que par la modulation de fréquence ou par d'autres moyens, de façon que si quelqu'un a quelque chose à dire, il puisse le dire sans que ce soit nécessairement prioritaire ou urgent. Peu importe du reste que le nombre de téléspectateurs ou d'auditeurs soit considérable. Les opinions les plus fortes ne sont pas nécessairement celles qui sont le plus entendues. Les opinions, enfin, de seulement une petite partie de personnes qui ont une importance démocratique souvent énorme.

M. Juneau: Pour M. Osler, j'ai ici la décision sur la modulation de fréquence que nous avons eue le 28 mai:

Le Conseil, en date du 4, demande des droits de permis en vue de l'établissement d'un nouveau poste de modulation de fréquence en matières publiques, organisé par le Bureau des gouverneurs, pour le 23 avril 1968.

Évidemment, à ce moment-là, le CRTC existait.

Les requérants n'ont offert rien de nouveau pour les réquisitions en cause, le Conseil étant donc déterminé à dévelop-munities concerned. FM channels are public assets, and the Commission is determined that they be developed in such a way as to contribute to a more varied program service which will complement and enrich services already available from existing stations.

A study of FM broadcasting will be undertaken to ensure its orderly development. During the period of the survey applications for new FM stations, or for amendments to existing licences, will be examined for their contribution to the program developments sought by the Commission.

And since then the Commission has not licensed any FM stations.

The Chairman: Mr. Matte?

M. Matte: A ce propos, les questions de M. Mongrain m'ont beaucoup inspiré et j'aimerais y revenir. D'abord, qu'il y ait beaucoup de protestations au sujet de la programmation de Radio-Canada, il me semble que cela devrait nous réjouir, puisque ce serait un malheur, à mon sens, que les émissions qu'on y donne soient tellement insignifiantes que personne n'en parle.

Deuxièmement, lorsque M. Mongrain dit que l'ensemble du Parlement aurait les mêmes idées à ce sujet-là, je m'en dissocie totalement puisque, en ce qui a trait à Radio-Canada, au réseau français, bien sûr, personnellement, j'en suis très fier; je crois qu'il est d'avant-garde et, comme tel, il peut soulever des problèmes qui peuvent choquer, cela est tout à fait normal.

J'écoute Radio-Canada régulièrement et, bien entendu, de temps à autre, certains propos me choquent, mais ce n'est pas parce qu'il en est ainsi que je dois conclure que cet organisme n'est pas bon et qu'il ne joue pas un rôle très utile. Si Radio-Canada a pour mission de maintenir l'unité canadienne, j'en suis, mais, au moment où dans tout le pays, et particulièrement dans le Québec, on met en doute la Constitution, il est bien normal que le réseau national soit le véhicule des différentes opinions à ce sujet. Ainsi, lorsqu'on parle de séparatisme à Radio-Canada, je pense qu'il est tout à fait naturel qu'il reflète l'effervescence qu'il y a actuellement au pays.

En ce qui a trait aux autres courants d'opinions, bien sûr que je pourrais ici en profiter pour dire qu'il y a certainement des manqueper ces bandes, qui sont du domaine public, de façon qu'elles enrichissent ou qu'elles complètent les services qui existaient déjà.

Une étude de la modulation de fréquence sera entreprise pour assurer son développement rationnel, au cours d'une étude des demandes d'établissement de nouveaux postes FM, où des modifications aux permis existants soient examinées pour voir s'ils contribuent au développement des programmes que recherche le Conseil.

Depuis lors, le Conseil n'a délivré aucun permis en ce qui concerne les postes FM.

Le président: Monsieur Matte.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Mongrain's questions have suggested a number of questions to me and I would like to return to the point he raised. There is, of course, a great deal of protest about CBC programming. I think we should be glad of that. It would have been fortunate, I think, for the CBC to be colourless that nobody would choose to talk about them.

Secondly, Mr. Mongrain states, that generally speaking Parliamentarians would share views. Here I disagree absolutely. I am very proud of the French language broadcasting of the CBC. I believe that the CBC is an avant garde organization and it is perfectly normal that it should bring up subjects that shock.

I do listen to the CBC fairly often and certain things I see shock me but this does not mean that the CBC is not a good broadcasting agency and does not play a very useful role. If the role of the CBC is to defend Canadian unity that is fine. But, at a time when throughout this country, and more particularly in Quebec, there is a great deal of talk about the validity of the constitution it is natural that the controversy be aired on a national net-work. It is only normal for the national broadcasting system to reflect those views. When we speak of separatism on the CBC there is nothing abnormal about that. It is perfectly normal for the CBC to report on the present effervescence in this country.

I think I could avail myself of this opportunity to say that there have been certain obvious weaknesses and indeed mistakes as ments, sinon des erreurs, entre autres, comme l'a déjà souligné à la Chambre, le chef du Ralliement créditiste, M. Caouette, on ne semble pas donner la quote-part désirée aux créditistes. Je déplore, moi aussi, cette situation-là mais, d'une façon générale, je crois que Radio-Canada joue très bien son rôle. Je n'ai reçu aucune protestation à ce sujet, mais j'aimerais demander à M. Juneau si le Conseil de la radio et de la télévision canadienne reçoit autant de protestations, tel que l'a indiqué tout à l'heure M. Mongrain?

• 1610

M. Juneau: Il n'en vient pas beaucoup à notre connaissance. Évidemment, il y a des protestations exprimées par la voie des journaux, des membres du Parlement ou des personnalités publiques, quant à nous, il ne nous en parvient pas beaucoup.

The Chairman: I would suggest, Mr. Matte, that that is a question that properly would be directed toward the CBC.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, j'ai une question de privilège. Me permettriez-vous d'expliquer pourquoi M. Matte ne reçoit pas de protestations, c'est parce que ses électeurs écoutent un poste de radio, sur les ondes duquel je parle tous les jours, ils ont l'air très heureux et ils ne protestent pas.

Le président: Monsieur De Bané.

M. De Bané: Je voudrais vous demander, monsieur Juneau, à quoi réfère, grosso modo, le poste «paiements, services professionnels et spéciaux, $229,000».

M. Juneau: Cela couvre toutes sortes de choses, monsieur De Bané.

The Chairman: I wonder, Mr. Juneau, if I might interrupt? We are dealing with the topic of programming at this time. I thought I had mentioned it.

M. De Bané: Alors, au sujet de la programmation, je voudrais savoir si le CRTC peut s'intéresser, par exemple, à l'allocation du budget de Radio-Canada. C'est ainsi que, quant à moi, j'estime que le réseau français ne reçoit pas le pourcentage auquel il a droit, à même le montant total. Est-ce une question qui peut vous intéresser ou est-ce en dehors de votre compétence?

M. Juneau: Oh! Je pense qu'il faudrait que la situation devienne, de façon générale, très, très détériorée pour que le CRTC soit amené à s'en occuper dans la mesure où la Loi réfère d'une façon très spécifique à la nécessité d'un réseau français et anglais. Mais je pense qu'il y aurait bien d'autres façons: d'abord, la Loi was already pointed out by the Leader of the Ralliement des Creditistes. For instance as Mr. Caouette pointed out in the House, the Creditiste Party does not feel it gets its fair share of free time. I deplore this situation but I do think that it can be fairly stated that the CBC does do the job expected of it. I have heard nothing to the contrary but I would like Mr. Juneau to tell me if the Commission has received as many protests as Mr. Mongrain would have us believe.

Mr. Juneau: We do not have too many protests that are brought to our attention. Some protests of course are expressed in the press, by public figures members of Parliament, through public officials. We do not get that many.

Le président: il me semble que cette question devrait être posée à Radio-Canada.

Mr. Mongrain: On a question of privilege may I explain why Mr. Matte received no correct answers? Because his constituents listen to a radio station on which I appear every day and they seem very satisfied and have no complaints.

The Chairman: Mr. De Bané?

Mr. De Bané: I would like to ask you, Mr. Juneau, a question with respect to the item "Professional and Special Services"—$229,000. What is the purpose of this payment generally speaking?

Mr. Juneau: Mr. De Bané, this covers a great many things.

Le président: Puis-je me permettre de vous interrompre, monsieur Juneau? Nous parlons de programmation en ce moment. Je croyais l'avoir précisé.

Mr. De Bané: With regard to programming, then, I would like to know if the Commission can for example concern itself with the budget of the CBC or the way it uses its money. The French network does not, to my mind, receive a fair share of the total amount. Is that a matter which would be of concern to you or is it outside your terms of reference?

Mr. Juneau: I think the situation would have to be extremely bad. It would have to deteriorate to the nth degree for the Commission to involve itself in this respect. To the extent that the legislation specifically refers to the need for a French and English service I think we could look into the matter. But aussi donne des obligations très précises à Radio-Canada dans ce domaine-là et je pense que le moyen le plus pratique, ce serait de procéder à l'examen des crédits de la Société, qui sont sous l'autorité du ministre, en tout cas à l'heure actuelle, et ils le demeureront toujours d'une certaine manière.

M. De Bané: Voici, si vous vous intéressez à ce problème, comme vous dites, dans la mesure où il atteint un point critique assez exceptionnel, je pense que cette situation est assez évidente. En effet, le service français de Radio-Canada est le centre de production français le plus important dans le monde, tandis que le service anglais de Radio-Canada en est un qui s'alimente énormément aux réseaux américains. Malgré cela, il est facile de se rendre compte, en examinant le budget de Radio-Canada, que le service français reçoit proportionnellement un montant égal à celui de la population, de la proportion de la population. Alors, partant du postulat que la situation est critique, j'en ai discuté avec beaucoup de gens du service français, je crois donc, si je ne me trompe pas, que cela vaudrait la peine que vous étudiez la situation.

Pour vous donner un exemple, à l'occasion de la soirée des élections américaines, le service français de Radio-Canada a dû faire quatre ou cinq heures d'émission en direct. Et, le réseau anglais de Radio-Canada, évidemment, a pu s'alimenter directement. Pourtant, si vous examinez le budget de cette soirée-là, vous allez vous rendre compte que le service anglais de Radio-Canada avait un budget beaucoup plus élevé. En d'autres termes, il faut prendre en considération que le service français de Radio-Canada, en Amérique du Nord, doit créer des émissions originales en nombre beaucoup plus important.

M. Juneau: Je dirais, monsieur De Bané, que je serais porté à aborder ce problème-là de la façon suivante. Je me demanderais—et là on revient à une question générale qui a été soulevée très souvent au moment où la loi a été discutée par les membres du Comité de l'époque et par le Parlement—quelle est la meilleure façon d'agencer les rapports entre Radio-Canada et le CRTC. C'est une question d'intérêt très général, qui doit nous préoccuper à chaque fois que le CRTC se demande s'il doit agir et comment il doit faire telle ou telle chose.

Relativement à la question que vous soulevez, il me semble qu'il serait beaucoup plus intéressant que le CRT se dise: c'est une question qui peut être réglée par la haute direction de Radio-Canada, par le conseil d'administration. Si c'est nécessaire, il peut there are other ways. For instance, the Act puts very specific obligations on the CBC in this connection. The most practical way, I think, to proceed would be by examining the estimates of the CBC which come under the Minister's authority at the present time and will remain so.

Mr. De Bané: But you are concerned—yourself with the problem if, as you say, it reached a critical degree. I think this is a fairly obvious position. The French service of the French network is the largest French-speaking system in the world whereas the English service of the CBC calls for a great many of its programs on American networks. Yet in spite of that if you will look at the CBC we will note the French-speaking receives proportionately the amount equal to that proportionately equal to the per capita distribution of population. I believe that the situation is critical. I have discussed this matter with a great many people on the French Network. If I am right in what I am saying I think it might be proper for you to look into the matter.

I will give you an example. This is on the night of the American Election. The French Network of the CBC offered four or five hours of live programming whereas the English network transmitted American programs and yet if you had the money spent on that occasion you will see that the English network of the CBC had a much larger amount to spend. In other words, we should take into account the fact that in this continent in North America this French network of the CBC must create a proportionately much larger number of live programs.

Mr. Juneau: To that I might say that the way I would be tempted to look at that problem would be this. I would wonder (and we now return to a very general question which was discussed generally when the Act was before this Committee and before Parliament)—we should ask ourselves, as I say, how are we going to deal with the relationship between the Commission and the CRTC. This is a very important matter, it is a matter which comes to mind anytime the Commission wonders if it should act, and in what way it should act.

To answer your question I think it would be far better for the Commission to say this is a matter which can be solved by the senior management of the CBC, and by its Board of Directors. If necessary there could be public pressure and pressure on the part of labour s'exercer des pressions de la part du public, des syndicats, et les membres du Parlement ont tout à fait le droit, je pense, d'exprimer leurs vues là-dessus, à n'importe quel moment. Finalement, le secrétaire d'État, à l'heure actuelle, en tout cas, a autorité sur le budget annuel de Radio-Canada.

Par conséquent, il me semblerait que, du point de vue de la politique fédérale de la radiodiffusion, il serait beaucoup plus pratique d'essayer de laisser ce problème se régler par la direction de Radio-Canada, grâce aux diverses expressions d'opinions qui lui parviennent de toutes parts, et aussi de nous, à l'occasion. Il me semble que ce serait une façon plus réaliste d'aborder la question et que le CRTC, à l'avenir, ne devrait, dans des questions comme celle-là, être appelé à intervenir, que si c'est le seul moyen d'obtenir des résultats. Il me semble que cela devrait se présenter assez rarement dans un cas comme celui-là.

M. De Bané: D'accord, alors je me référerai à eux. Mais, si je comprends bien, vous ne voulez en rien laisser entendre que vous dégagez votre responsabilité, mais vous pensez qu'avant de se rendre à ce stade...

M. Juneau: En théorie, non, parce que, par exemple, quand le CRTC dit: nous croyons qu'il vaut mieux autoriser un permis de Radio-Canada à tel endroit plutôt qu'à tel autre, il pose un jugement de ce genre-là. Et, dans des cas d'attribution de permis pour des questions d'ordre pratique qui relèvent du genre de raisonnement auquel j'ai fait allusion tantôt, le CRTC a été appelé à prendre des décisions. Et il sera appelé à le faire de nouveau dans l'avenir. Question de jugement pratique, je pense.

M. De Bané: Maintenant quant à la programmation des postes privés, je pense que dans ce cas, il ne faudrait pas trop généraliser. Il y a des postes privés qui, à mon avis, font un effort sérieux; je pense, au réseau de CJMS qui, dans certains domaines, fait des efforts très louables. Mais je pense à d'autres qui semblent se soucier très peu de faire un choix éclectique d'émissions d'une qualité assez soutenue. Le CRTC, que vous présidez, s'intéresse-t-il à ce problème et quelle va être sa politique dans les mois à venir?

M. Juneau: Le CRTC s'y intéresse sûrement et c'est vraiment une responsabilité qu'il n'a absolument pas le droit d'abdiquer. J'ai dit au début de mes remarques, et peut-être en réponse à certaines questions, que tout le problème de la politique en matière de programmation, je parle bien de la politique générale unions, pressure from Members of Parliament, Members of Parliament are perfectly free to express their views in this connection at anytime. The Secretary of State at the present time has authority over the annual budget of the CBC.

It does seem to me that from the point of view of general broadcasting policy it would be far more practical to let that problem be solved by the CBC management through the various expressions of views which are transmitted to it on all quarters, including the CRTC on occasion. Indeed we can express our own views it does seem that that would be a more practical approach to that problem. The Commission should not be called upon to act in future if it is only—if there is no other recourse. I think this should not happen too often.

Mr. De Bané: O.K. I will go direct to them then, but you do not mean to say that you are denying your responsibility, you feel however that before acting.

Mr. Juneau: In theory, no. For instance, when the Commission says: We feel that it would be better to issue a CBC license in one place rather than another, it is acting in accordance with its responsibilities. Reasoning in the way I described later the Commission has been called upon to make some decisions along and will be called upon to do so again in future. This is a matter of practical judgment I think.

Mr. De Bané: What about programming by private stations, I think we should not make sweeping generalizations here, some private stations are doing very good work in this connection, the CGMS network, for instance, is doing very commendable work in certain areas. But what I am thinking about here is that not sufficient account is taken of the need for having varied programming of consistent quality. They do not appear to be overly concerned with things like that. Is the Commission concerned with that, has it got any policy in this connection?

Mr. Juneau: The Commission is obviously concerned with the coming months and it certainly cannot abdicate that responsibility. I said at the outset of my remarks perhaps in answer to certain questions that the whole problem of programming policy—general policy that is, I am not speaking of the details en matière de programmation et non pas d'une intervention dans le détail des programmes ou la gérance des programmes, que toute cette question-là était d'un abord très difficile et que nous étions en train d'étudier les nouvelles politiques dans ces domaines-là, mais que, malheureusement, nous n'avons pas réussi encore à compléter des projets de règlements nouveaux.

M. De Bané: Les crédits pour l'an prochain vont-ils vous permettre de vous occuper d'une façon efficace de ce problème qui, à première vue, me semble très complexe?

M. Juneau: Je pense qu'au cours de l'année prochaine, oui, si c'est une question de crédits, mais ce n'est pas uniquement cela. Il va de soi que nous aurions bien aimé avoir un petit peu plus d'argent, mais en aurions-nous eu trois fois plus cette année, que nous n'eussions pas fait trois fois plus de travail. Nous aurions peut-être pu dépenser, je ne sais pas, moi, $200,000 de plus, de cet ordre-là, vous savez. Même avec $1,000,000 de plus, nous n'aurions pas su quoi en faire. En somme, un organisme comme le nôtre peut se développer à un certain rythme, mais pas plus.

M. De Bané: Est-ce que le problème de la promotion du talent canadien, comme on dit, en est un qui vous intéresse?

M. Juneau: Oui.

M. De Bané: Je veux dire, et quel serait alors...

M. Juneau: Parce qu'on n'a pas le choix. La loi nous oblige à nous y intéresser et en termes très fermes.

• 1620

M. De Bané: Que pensez-vous de l'idée de rendre obligatoire l'affectation d'un certain pourcentage des profits, après ou avant l'impôt, au paiement de cachets à des artistes. Est-ce une idée valable?

M. Juneau: Je m'excuse. L'attribution d'une partie des...

M. De Bané: ...des profits, avant ou après l'impôt, comme paiement de cachets aux artistes canadiens.

M. Juneau: Quant à moi, je préférerais un système plus souple, que nous établissions des critères quant à la quantité et la qualité des programmes et que nous le fassions en tenant compte de l'effet que cela aura sur l'équilibre financier des postes; nous connaissons assez of programming, or of program management, I said then that this whole matter of programming was very difficult. I added that we were discussing the new policy to be applied in this field. I said that we had not, unfortunately, succeeded in completing new projected rules.

Mr. De Bané: Are your estimates for next year such as to make it possible for you to deal with that matter properly?

Mr. Juneau: As far as next year is concerned, yes, this is a matter of estimates to some extent, but wholly so. We would have liked to have a little more money this year, of course, but that is only natural. But if we would have had three times more money I do not think we would have done three times as much work. We could have used perhaps a couple of hundred thousand dollars more. If we had had $1 million more, we would not have known what to do with it. An organization such as ours is like an organism that can develop at certain rates, but it cannot develop any faster.

Mr. De Bané: What about the problem of promotion of Canadian talent, is that a matter with which you have been concerned also?

Mr. Juneau: Yes.

Mr. De Bané: I see. What then would. . .

Mr. Juneau: We have no choice in the matter at all. The Act makes it incumbent upon us to look into the matter, and is very categorical in this regard.

Mr. De Bané: What about making it obligatory to have a certain percentage of profit before or after taxes reserved for the payment of artist's fees? Do you think that is a sound idea?

Mr. Juneau: Excuse me. The attribution of some...

Mr. De Bané: . . . of profits before or after taxes. Is it a certain part of these profits has to be reserved for the employment of Canadian talent?

Mr. Juneau: As far as I am concerned I would prefer a more flexible system. I would prefer establishment of standards of quantity and quality in regard to programming. I believe we should do so by taking into account the effect this might have on the bien la situation financière de ceux-ci par les rapports annuels vérifiés qu'ils nous envoient. Et la loi nous donne aussi le droit de vérifier et de contre-vérifier si ces chiffres-là sont exacts.

Par conséquent, nous pouvons, dans une très large mesure, essayer de jauger l'effet de telle ou telle réglementation sur l'équilibre financier des postes.

M. De Bané: Je voudrais vous demander...

M. Juneau: Alors, si vous augmentez les exigences en matière d'utilisation de comédiens, de production de programmes canadiens par rapport à l'importation de programmes étrangers, vous pouvez calculer, dans une certaine mesure, l'effet que cela va avoir sur les coûts des postes, y compris ceux de Radio-Canada. Et, vous pouvez aller plus ou moins loin dans cette direction-là. Remarquez que nous n'avons pas poussé nos études assez loin encore pour que je puisse répondre de façon définitive à votre question, mais, je vous dis que je serais plutôt incliné à adopter cette attitude-là, plutôt qu'une espèce de règle mathématique disant que tel pourcentage des profits bruts ou nets doit être affecté à...

Car, à ce moment-là, il faudrait calculer quel pourcentage des dépenses a été affecté et cela varierait selon le montant de dépenses qui a déjà été affecté au genre de programmes dont vous parlez.

Un poste qui n'aurait rien dépensé, pourrait se voir taxé au même pourcentage que celui qui aurait agi autrement. Alors il faudrait entrer dans des systèmes de comptabilité extrêmement compliqués, je pense.

M. De Bané: Mais non. A première vue, je pense que ce serait très simple si l'on établissait un tel système. Si l'on dit par exemple 10 p. 100 des profits doit être alloué à la promotion de talents canadiens en paiement de cachets. Alors, on va arrêter le scandale de certains postes qui ne prévoient aucun argent sous ce chef-là. Mais, je ne suis pas prêt à dire que cette suggestion est la seule valable. Et, je voulais seulement savoir si le CRTC...

M. Juneau: Sur le principe, nous sommes tout à fait d'accord, je ne parle que du mécanisme précis. Vous proposez comme mécanisme, et je vous réponds en toute candeur, puisque vous me demandez mon opinion, que c'en serait un dont l'application me semblerait difficile.

M. De Bané: Une dernière question. Le public a-t-il accès à la lecture des états financiers des postes qui vous sont envoyés?

M. Juneau: Non, pas à l'heure actuelle.

[Interpretation]

financial balance of stations. We know fairly well what the financial positions of stations is through the audited financial reports we receive from them every year. The Act gives us authority to verify if the facts brought to our attention are correct. We can gauge, to a great extent, the effect of such a rule on the financial position of stations.

Mr. De Bané: I would like to ask you.

Mr. Juneau: If you increase your requirements with regard to the production of Canadian programs, the employment of Canadian actors for instance, it is possible for you to calculate to some extent the effect this will have on operating costs of stations including CBC stations by the way, and you may go a certain distance in this direction. I—we have not carried out our study in this connection far enough for me to answer your question definitely but I might say that I rather feel as I said I felt I would much rather like to adopt that attitude than by saying such and such a part of the gross or net profits shall be given over to pay Canadian talent and so on. It means these figures would vary according to that amount of expenses incurred in the production of the programs of which you speak.

A station which had spent nothing would be taxed the same as one which had. I think this would be a very complicated accounting matter.

Mr. De Bané: On the contrary this appears very simple to me. We could say that 10 per cent of profits must be used for the promotion of Canadian talent by payment of artists fees. This I think would put an end to the shocking tradition of certain stations which do not give a red cent for that purpose. I do not say it is the only valid solution but I would simply like to know if the Commission feels it has authority in this regard?

Mr. Juneau: As far as the principle is concerned I agree wholeheartedly with you. I am just saying, and I am speaking most sincerely, I am saying that the formula you have suggested appears rather difficult of application.

Mr. De Bané: Are the financial statements of the stations which are turned over to you available to the public.

Mr. Juneau: No, not at the present time.

[Texte]

M. De Bané: A un moment donné, nous avons parlé de journaux. Or, la fondation d'un journal, évidemment, est une chose strictement privée, n'importe qui au Canada peut, demain matin, fonder un journal, tandis que l'octroi d'un permis de radiodiffusion, de télédiffusion est réellement d'ordre public. Donc, étant donné que vous émettez des permis qui, en somme, appartiennent au domaine public, ne pensez-vous pas que les citoyens canadiens pourraient être intéressés à savoir si on utilise ces permis à bon escient?

The Chairman: Mr. De Bané, you are skating rather far away from the subject of programming which is what is under discussion.

I think perhaps I had better recognize Mr. Givens.

M. Osler: May I ask a supplementary?

The Chairman: I will put you down after Mr. McCleave.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Chairman, I wish to clarify something relative to programming.

When answering a previous question, Mr. Juneau, in passing you said something about it not being our function to be police or censors.

• 1625

Mr. Juneau: I said I would hate to be pushed in that direction.

Mr. Givens: That is correct. In the course of a political election in this country, with which I have become familiar, a doctrine of fairness is applied; is that not correct?

Mr. Juneau: Yes.

Mr. Givens: In other words, if you expose a liberal candidate you have got to get one from every other party. Therefore, there is policing in that respect. In peace time you do the same thing. Is that correct? I mean, outside of an election, if I appear on radio or television as a liberal you could expect that there would be balance; is that correct?

Mr. Juneau: Yes; that is right.

Mr. Givens: Does that doctrine apply to any other function of the community, social or otherwise? For instance, if a Toronto radio station were to extol the virtues of violence on university campuses would you consider it

[Interprétation]

Mr. De Bané: We were speaking of newspapers, a while ago. Obviously the founding of a newspaper is a strictly private matter. Anybody in this country may found a newspaper tomorrow morning if he feels like it whereas a broadcasting permit is something which really belongs to the public domain. So, as you issue permits which are after all public property, do you not feel that Canadian citizens might be interested in knowing that those permits are being properly used?

Le président: Monsieur De Bané, nous nous éloignons peut-être un peu trop de la programmation qui doit nous intéresser, en ce moment. Il vaudrait mieux donner la parole à M. Givens.

M. Osler: Puis-je poser une question supplémentaire?

Le président: Je vous inscris après M. McCleave.

M. Givens: Monsieur le président, je voudrais des précisions sur la programmation.

Avant de répondre à la question, en passant, vous avez dit que ce n'était pas votre fonction d'être des censeurs ou des agents de police.

M. Juneau: J'ai dit que je détesterais être acculé jusque là.

M. Givens: Au cours des élections politiques dans ce pays et je connais assez cela, on cherche à être loyal, n'est-ce pas?

M. Juneau: Oui.

M. Givens: Il y a certainement une doctrine d'équité qui entre en cause. Autrement dit, si vous avez un libéral il faut que vous ayez, également, quelqu'un d'autre, quelqu'un d'un autre parti. Donc, autrement dit, vous faites une organisation dans ce genre. Mais, en temps de paix c'est la même chose. C'est-à-dire en dehors, en temps de paix, c'est-à-dire en dehors des élections, c'est la même chose. Vrai? Si je me présente comme libéral à la radio ou à la télévision, eh bien, il faut vous attendre à ce que vous fassiez un équilibre, n'est-ce pas? Ça, c'est la chose normale.

M. Juneau: Oui, parfaitement.

M. Givens: Est-ce que c'est une doctrine qui s'applique en ce qui concerne les autres rôles de la collectivité? Par exemple, si c'est une station de Toronto, une station de radio, elle doit, d'elle-même s'occuper des questions your function to interfere to bring about a sense of balance? This is somewhat analogous to what Mr. Mongrain said about separatism being exposed to a greater extent than any other point of view. Would you consider it your function to intervene in a matter of that kind?

[Text]

Mr. Juneau: There are many areas where the Commission intervenes. The whole problem is that when you so intervene it is more practical and more related to fairness and justice to have rules. The more you are dealing with an area where rules are difficult to establish the more I would say I would be reluctant to become involved. I would be much more cautious about becoming involved.

For instance, in time of elections we do intervene, as you say, in the direction you have indicated, because there are all kinds of rules in elections. Parties are well identified and well established, and so on.

We also intervene in the calculation of commercial content, the amount of advertising that takes place either on television or radio, and if there is too much we sometimes even prosecute people if they do it too often. We have a certain procedure which we follow.

There, again, it is difficult enough, but not too difficult to establish rules. They can be good or bad, but they tend to be more objective.

Of course, one could give other examples such as in the advertising of wines and liquor. We intervene, and usually follow the rules established either by the federal or by the various provincial legislations. But in the other fields to which you are referring you know, and we all know, that rules are extremely difficult to establish.

Mr. Givens: But this does not prevent your having jurisdiction if you should choose to have it?

Mr. Juneau: That is right.

Mr. Givens: Suppose someone other than Juneau comes along and he is an arbitrary character. He has the power to step in and do this. If he considers that, in his opinion, something is socially undesirable he can invoke and establish criteria at his own whim.

[Interpretation]

de la violence sur l'Université de Toronto. Est-ce que vous pensez que c'est une ingérence, s'il y a un sentiment d'équilibre semblable, en quelque sorte, analogue à ce que M. Mongrain a mis en évidence tout à l'heure, lorsqu'il parle de sympathie que l'on manifeste à un point de vue plutôt qu'à un autre. Est-ce que vous pensez que votre rôle pourrait être de ce genre?

M. Juneau: Effectivement il y a un grand nombre de cas où la commission intervient. Je pense que tout le problème, c'est que lorsque vous intervenez comme cela, c'est une situation plus pratique qui est beaucoup plus juste, équitable, lorsque vous avez des règlements, mais plus vous œuvrez dans un domaine où il est difficile de faire des règlements, plus, disons, je serais hésitant à m'y mêler. Je serais beaucoup plus prudent dans mon intervention. Par exemple, nous intervenons, comme vous l'avez dit, en période électorale, dans le sens que vous avez indiqué parce que, effectivement, il y a un certain nombre de règlements fixés aux cas d'élection, il y a des partis, il y a des partis bien identifiés, bien établis, etc.

De même, nous intervenons dans le calcul de la teneur publicitaire, la quantité de publicité qu'il peut y avoir, soit à la radio, soit à la télévision, et s'il y en a trop, on peut même poursuivre les gens en justice, par exemple. Si c'est trop répété, trop fréquent, nous avons, disons, une procédure que nous suivons. Mais, encore une fois, c'est assez difficile, mais non trop difficile, de faire des règlements, ça peut être notre rôle de faire des règlements mais disons qu'ils ont tendance à être un peu plus objectifs.

Et, bien sûr, on pourrait citer encore d'autres exemples, dans le domaine de la publicité, enfin, qui concernent les vins, et les alcools par exemple. Nous intervenons, et en général, nous suivons les règlements fixés par la loi fédérale ou les diverses lois provinciales. Et dans les autres domaines auxquels vous faites allusion, vous savez et nous savons tous très bien qu'il est très difficile de faire des règlements.

M. Givens: Mais est-ce que cela ne vous empêche pas d'avoir la compétence que vous pourriez avoir si vous en décidiez ainsi?

M. Juneau: C'est juste.

M. Givens: Supposons que quelqu'un vienne et soit d'un caractère un peu abrupt. Il a la possibilité d'intervenir et de faire quelque chose s'il considère que, d'après lui, c'est là quelque chose qui est socialement indésirable: il peut fixer des critères capricieux en fonction desquels il peut agir.

[Texte]

Mr. Juneau: He can; but I suppose he has the rest of his colleagues to work with, and presumably this would tend to establish a balance.

I also think that is why the commissioners are appointed by government. I suppose that in choosing them they determine the general policy they want to follow. When my term is up, if the government of the day wishes a chairman who will move more forcefully in the direction of control they can appoint one.

Mr. Givens: But some of these decisions, Mr. Juneau, are made peremptorily. You do not call your Board together every time?

Mr. Juneau: For one thing, we have five full-time members.

Mr. Givens: Who are always within call?

Mr. Juneau: There are five full-time commissioners, as you have three full-time commissioners of the Public Service Commission, five full-time members of the National Energy Board and five full-time members of the Quebec Hydro.

• 1630

Mr. Givens: It is expected that that will provide the balance; but if these five turn out to be doctrinaire, dogmatic people it is conceivable that, having been given this power, they could utilize it?

Mr. Juneau: Certainly if five doctrinaire persons were appointed you would presumably get the result that ought to be expected in a circumstance of that kind. I do not think that one can ever totally replace the personality of people by making better rules.

Mr. Givens: Please believe me when I say that I am not trying to cross-examine you.

Mr. Juneau: No, no; I do not get any such feeling at all.

Mr. Givens: As you are presently constituted, there is a quasi-censorship board, in a sense. You have the power to do it if you so choose?

Mr. Juneau: Many things have also to be done by regulation, and regulations are subject to a very complicated procedure: they have to be announced publicly; time has to be provided for possible opponents of that regu-

[Interprétation]

M. Juneau: Eh bien, effectivement, il a cette possibilité, il a également, bien sûr, le reste de ses collègues dont il faut qu'il tienne compte et peut-être que cela servirait à créer un équilibre. Également, je pense que c'est pour cette raison que les membres du Conseil sont nommés par le gouvernement.

Et je pense que c'est pour cette raison qu'en les choisissant, on peut déterminer la ligne d'action générale qu'ils doivent suivre. Je suppose que lorsque mon mandat sera terminé, si le gouvernement de l'époque veut un président qui sera plus catégorique dans le sens du contrôle ils pourront nommer quelqu'un en ce sens.

M. Givens: Mais parfois, ces choses sont faites délibérément. Chaque fois que vous prenez une décision, vous ne réunissez pas votre conseil?

M. Juneau: D'abord, nous avons cinq membres à temps plein...

M. Givens: .. qui sont toujours disponibles?

M. Juneau: Oui, cinq commissaires à temps plein comme vous en avez trois pour la Commission de la fonction publique. Je pense qu'il y a aussi cinq membres à part entière du Conseil de l'énergie, il y en a cinq pour l'Hydro-Québec.

M. Givens: Autrement dit, d'après vous, cela permet d'obtenir un équilibre. Même si ces personnes se trouvent à être des dogmatiques et des doctrinaires, il est concevable, que, ayant reçu le pouvoir, ils s'en serviront.

M. Juneau: Bien sûr, si vous avez cinq doctrinaires qui soient nommés, vous aurez certainement le résultat auquel il fallait s'attendre. Je ne pense pas que vous puissiez remplacer complètement le caractère des gens en améliorant les règlements.

M. Givens: Je ne cherche pas à faire votre contre-interrogatoire, non.

M. Juneau: Non, bien sûr.

M. Givens: Dans le cadre actuel de votre constitution, vous êtes en quelque sorte un organisme de censure. Vous avez pouvoir de le faire si vous voulez.

M. Juneau: Il y a beaucoup de choses qui doivent également être régies par des règlements et les règlements peuvent être soumis à une procédure très compliquée. Il faut d'abord qu'ils soient annoncés publiquement, et lation to file their opposition; then there has to be a public hearing; and so on.

What do we mean by "intervening"? Do we mean cancellation of the licence? If we do, it is a very complicated process which, again, involves a public hearing.

Mr. Givens: Is there any appeal from your interpretation of any regulation which you yourself draw up?

Mr. Juneau: On matters of law only.

The Chairman: Mr. Dinsdale, on programming?

Mr. Dinsdale: Along the same line as Mr. Givens, as I understand it, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Juneau has no specific guidelines for measuring program-content other than the broad outline in the Broadcasting Act, for example?

Mr. Juneau: Oh, yes, there are guidelines on Canadian-content, on commercial content, and on advertisement of liquor, wines and beer and so on. There are very general guidelines on good taste and obscenity, but they are of a very general nature. There are also very general guidelines relative to equity in the representation of opinion. They are not very precise; they are of a very general nature.

The BBG produced in 1964 or 1965 what it called a White Paper. It was really a paper of about 10 pages—and it is, of course, available—giving very general guidelines to broadcasters on the representation of various views in matters of controversy. There are also regulations on political broadcasting. There are, however, no guidelines on how much nudity one can show.

Mr. Dinsdale: You have switched from guidelines to regulations. You say there are regulations on political matters and guidelines on these other matters. Was that done deliberately? Is Canadian-content, for example, not determined by specific regulations?

Mr. Juneau: Yes; that is determined by very specific regulation.

[Interpretation]

donner la possibilité aux adversaires éventuels de ces règlements, de faire connaître l'opposition, on sait qu'il faut une audience publique etc...

Alors, qu'est-ce que nous entendons par «intervention»? Est-ce que nous voulons parler d'annulation de la licence? Si c'est le cas, c'est un processus particulièrement compliqué qui, encore une fois, suppose audition publique.

M. Givens: Est-ce qu'il y a des appels sur les interprétations d'un règlement que vous établissez vous-même?

M. Juneau: Seulement sur des points de droit.

Le président: Monsieur Dinsdale, sur la programmation.

M. Dinsdale: Eh bien oui, encore une fois, comme dans le sens qu'a suivi M. Givens, d'après ce que j'ai cru comprendre, monsieur le président, M. Juneau n'a pas de ligne directrice particulière qui lui permette d'apprécier le contenu des programmes autre que les lignes directrices mentionnées dans la Loi sur la radiodiffusion.

M. Juneau: Oh! bien sûr, si. Il y a les lignes directrices sur le contenu canadien, la portion canadienne sur la portion publicitaire du programme; il y a des principes directeurs concernant la publicité sur les vins, sur les alcools, sur les bières etc., il y a, disons, des principes très généraux concernant le bon goût et l'obscénité, mais des principes très généraux et également certains principes très généraux sur les questions d'équité en matière de présentation des opinions. Ce n'est pas très précis.

Le BGR a produit, je crois, en 1964 ou 1965, ce qu'ils ont appelé le Livre blanc qui, en fait, était un document de dix pages qui, bien sûr, est à votre disposition et on y trouvait des lignes directrices très générales à l'intention des radiodiffuseurs pour des questions qui pouvaient soulever des controverses. Il y a également des règlements concernant la radiodiffusion politique, les émissions politiques, les spectacles où il y a des nus, etc.

M. Dinsdale: Vous êtes passé de l'idée de principe directeur à l'idée de règlements en matière politique et de ligne directrice pour d'autres. Est-ce que c'était délibéré? Par exemple, la partie canadienne des émissions, est-ce que cette partie n'est pas déterminée par des règlements précis?

M. Juneau: Si.

[Texte]

Mr. Dinsdale: And are all these other categories covered by regulations, as well?

Mr. Juneau: At the moment we are administering the regulations that were passed by the Board of Broadcast Governors. We have not changed those regulations for the time being, for the simple reason that we have not had time to do it; we have had too much other work. We are studying these regulations to determine whether they have to be changed, and in what direction.

• 1635

Coming back to what there is and what there is not, there are no directions on controversial programs; there are only general guidelines. Neither are there very precise regulations on matters of taste; there are only guidelines. For instance, it would be difficult to prosecute a station on matters of good taste. You could, but probably by using the criminal law; and I am sure many of you in this room are much more competent on this matter than am I. You would have to base it on the definition of "obscenity", and that sort of thing.

The Chairman: You would not get very far.

Mr. Juneau: And probably would not get very far.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Juneau states that the CRTC is operating under the same regulations as did the BBG.

The Chairman: No; he said that they had carried on the regulations of the BBG.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes.

The Chairman: That they had not had time to make any changes in them.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes; that is what I was trying to say. Is the BBG's White Paper on regulations available?

Mr. Juneau: Oh, yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: It is available for public scrutiny?

Mr. Juneau: Yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: All we need do is apply to the CRTC for a copy?

Mr. Juneau: All you need do is ask for one now and you will have it tomorrow.

[Interprétation]

M. Dinsdale: Et le reste?

M. Juneau: Actuellement nous sommes en train d'administrer les règlements qui ont été votés par le Bureau des gouverneurs de la radiodiffusion et nous n'avons pas encore modifié ces règlements pour la simple raison que nous n'avons pas eu le temps de le faire, parce que nous avons trop de travaux. Nous sommes en train d'étudier les règlements pour vérifier ce qui doit être changé et dans quel sens.

Et maintenant, pour en revenir à ce qu'il y a et ce qu'il n'y a pas, il n'y a pas de direction donnée en matière de programmes controversés; il y a là que des principes directeurs. Je ne pense pas qu'il y ait de règlements précis sur les questions de goût. Il y a simplement là des principes directeurs. Par conséquent, il serait difficile de poursuivre une station en justice sur des questions de bon goût; ce serait possible, certes, mais il faudrait se servir à ce moment-là du code criminel et je suis certain que beaucoup de gens autour de la table sont beaucoup plus compétents que moi dans ce domaine. Il faudrait se fonder sur la définition de l'«obscénité», etc.

Le président: On n'irait pas loin.

M. Juneau: Certes.

M. Dinsdale: M. Juneau déclare que le Conseil a les mêmes règlements que l'ancien Conseil des gouverneurs.

Le président: Non, il n'a pas dit cela. Il a dit qu'il a poursuivi l'usage des règlements du Conseil des gouverneurs.

M. Dinsdale: Oui.

Le président: Et qu'il a manqué le temps pour y apporter des modifications.

M. Dinsdale: Oui. Le Livre blanc sur les règlements qui avait été publié par le conseil des gouverneurs est-il disponible?

M. Juneau: Bien sûr.

M. Dinsdale: Est-ce que c'est un document public?

M. Juneau: Oui.

M. Dinsdale: Donc, ce qu'il suffit de faire, c'est demander un exemplaire au Conseil.

M. Juneau: Demandez-en maintenant et puis vous en aurez un demain.

[Text]

The Chairman: Perhaps we could ask your staff to provide all Members of the Committee with a copy of these regulations.

Mr. Juneau: Yes. When I referred to the White Paper on matters of controversy, it only has to do with fairness in matters of social, political and public controversy.

Mr. Mongrain: A supplementary, Mr Chairman. Is the document that Mr. Dinsdale is asking for a long one?

Mr. Juneau: All the regulations of the CRTC will be a pretty long document.

Mr. Mongrain: But how many pages would there be in the document that Mr. Dinsdale is asking for?

Mr. Juneau: My understanding is that Mr. Dinsdale was ultimately asking for all the regulations of the CRTC. His questions ranged over a varied field.

Mr. Dinsdale: Are these available?

Mr. Juneau: Yes; they are supposed to be in the hands of all broadcasters.

The Chairman: Mr. Foster, the secretary, has agreed to provide members with copies.

Mr. Osler: I do not want one.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, if they are available...

The Chairman: Perhaps we might ask for three copies which could be kept in the Clerk's office. Members wishing to examine them could get them there.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, may I ask Mr. Juneau if this document is in the Parliamentary Library?

Mr. Juneau: I do not know how the Parliamentary Library works.

Mr. Mongrain: Would you please check that? If it is there I do not need any copy.

The Chairman: We are in your hands.

Mr. Dinsdale: To continue with the supplementary, I would conclude that the CRTC would tend, as opportunity is provided and as time permits, to move a little more forcibly into control of Canadian-content and these other matters? In other words, you want to exercise more power than has hitherto been exercised by the BBG?

[Interpretation]

Le président: Peut-être précisément pourrions-nous demander à vos collaborateurs de nous en faire parvenir un exemplaire.

M. Juneau: Lorsque j'ai parlé des questions controversées du Livre blanc, je ne pensais qu'aux questions d'ordre politique, sociale, économique et controversée.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, est-ce que c'est quelque chose de long? Quelle est la longueur de ce document?

M. Juneau: Tous les règlements du Conseil sont assez longs.

M. Mongrain: Combien de pages y a-t-il?

M. Juneau: Je pense que M. Dinsdale voulait avoir connaissance de tous les règlements du Conseil parce que c'est là quelque chose qui touche à beaucoup de domaines.

M. Dinsdale: Peut-on en disposer?

M. Juneau: Absolument, théoriquement, tous les radiodiffuseurs doivent l'avoir en leur possession.

Le président: M. Foster, le secrétaire a donné son accord pour que vous l'ayez tous.

M. Osler: Je n'en veux pas.

M. Stanbury: Si c'est disponible...

Le président: On pourrait peut-être nous en envoyer trois exemplaires au bureau et ceux qui voudraient les consulter pourraient le faire.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, est-ce que je pourrais poser une question à M. Juneau? Est-ce que ce document est dans la bibliothèque du Parlement?

M. Juneau: Aucune idée, je ne sais pas comment fonctionne la bibliothèque du Parlement.

M. Mongrain: On pourrait vérifier, s'il vous plaît. Si c'est là-bas, je n'ai pas besoin d'un exemplaire.

Le président: Nous sommes entre vos mains.

M. Dinsdale: Maintenant, pour poursuivre ma question supplémentaire, je dois en conclure alors que le Conseil a tendance au fur et à mesure que le temps le permet et où l'occasion le permet à se montrer un peu plus énergique dans la teneur canadienne des émissions.

[Texte]

Mr. Juneau: I do not think I would put it that way, if you left me free to use my own words. For one thing—and I have said this a number of times—I feel that Canadian broadcasting will develop if initiatives are taken. It is very difficult to replace initiatives by regulations. You can try, and you may even be more or less successful, but offhand I think the best way to produce initiatives is not necessarily to establish more regulations and exercise "more power".

On the other hand, I think that some of the things I have said have meant that certain of the regulations of the BBG can be changed, not to exercise more power but perhaps to change the systems that were established by the BBG, and which I know as a member of the BBG for two years, the BBG intended to change. Because some of these regulations, with experience, appear to be less adequate than was thought several years before.

• 1640

There is, for instance, a great deal of questioning of the mechanism of the 55 per cent Canadian content. Many people have questioned it; and many of those in Parliament have questioned the system. For one thing, it is not very effective relative to prime time, and it also tends to emphasize quantity is against quality. You can fill up your 55 per cent Canadian-content with any kind of program you care to use.

Whether or not that would mean more rigorous regulations, I do not know. We would hope that it would be more effective.

We also wish to find systems, and I would emphasize that we can do that only by a great deal of consultation with the broadcasters. Because they have to be effective. It is to use making new regulations if they will not work.

We hope to find systems to encourage not only quantity but quality in excellence.

How to do that is difficult. If it were easy, we could not be forgiven for not having done it one month after the passing of the law. The reason we have not done it is that we think it is very difficult.

Mr. Dinsdale: In commenting on regulations a little earlier you made a passing reference to the possibility of regulations applying

[Interprétation]

M. Juneau: Ce n'est pas cela. D'une part, j'ai dit à maintes reprises que personnellement, je pense que la radiodiffusion canadienne doit se développer à l'aide d'initiatives et il est difficile de remplacer les initiatives par des règlements. On peut essayer, cela peut réussir parfois, mais disons que la meilleure manière d'obtenir des initiatives ce n'est pas de créer de nouveaux règlements ni d'exercer «plus de pouvoir».

D'autre part, je pense, que dans ce que j'ai dit, j'entendais que certains des règlements du Conseil des gouverneurs pourraient être changés de telle sorte, non pas qu'on exerce plus de pouvoir, mais disons plutôt qu'on change le système qui avait été créé par le conseil des gouverneurs. Et en tant que membre du Conseil, je sais que pendant deux ans, le Conseil avait cherché à les changer parce que certaines expériences avaient amené le Conseil à considérer que ces règlements étaient moins adéquats qu'ils ne le pensaient avant.

Il y avait également des questions en ce qui concerne le pourcentage de 55 p. 100 sur la partie canadienne. Beaucoup de personnes au Parlement, notamment, ont mis le système en question, ont demandé si cela était valable parce que d'une part, ce n'est pas très efficace au point de vue du temps par exemple. D'autre part, cela tend à mettre l'accent plutôt sur la quantité que sur la qualité parce qu'on veut obtenir 55 p. 100 de partie canadienne dans une émission simplement en ayant 55 p. 100 du temps.

Je ne sais pas si cela signifie des règlements plus rigoureux, mais nous espérons plus d'efficacité. Nous aimerions espérer également pouvoir trouver des systèmes et j'aimerais souligner le fait que nous ne pouvons agir ainsi qu'en consultant les radiodiffuseurs parce qu'évidemment, cela doit être efficace et on ne peut pas faire de règlements si ces règlements ne marchent pas.

Alors, il est à espérer que nous trouverons un système qui permettra d'encourager non seulement la quantité mais la qualité, l'excellence des programmes, des émissions. Et comment procéder? C'est une chose difficile. Si c'était facile à faire, eh bien, on ne pourrait pas nous pardonner de ne pas l'avoir fait un mois après ce vote de la loi et si nous ne l'avons pas fait, c'est parce que nous pensons que c'est difficile.

M. Dinsdale: Vous avez, en passant, fait allusion précédemment, lorsque vous parliez des règlements, vous avez parlé de la possibito media other than the mass-media of radio and television. Do you have this in mind, or was that just a passing reference?

Mr. Juneau: I would be very surprised if I had referred to regulating other media. What I may have said—and what I think I have said—is that in licensing a particular group for a broadcasting operation we would have to take into account ownership of other broadcasting stations, or other broadcasting undertakings, and also ownership of other communications media.

Mr. Dinsdale: This gets us into the area of ownership. Perhaps it would be faster to ask one final question.

The Chairman: On programming?

Mr. Dinsdale: On programming, yes. A strong anti-American bias prevails in the CBC from time to time, particularly during election campaigns, and with reference to certain candidates. Is the CRTC concerned about these attitudes towards a friendly nation?

Mr. Juneau: The only comment I can make on that, Mr. Dinsdale, is one I have made on other, similar topics. Considering the balance of representation of opinions in Canada I do not think we can abdicate all responsibility for fairness in the field of ideas.

The question is: How do you do it? The rules are very difficult to establish. They are very difficult to establish even for the management of an organization; they probably would be very difficult to establish for the management of a newspaper; and I know they are very difficult to establish for the management of a broadcasting organization or a film production organization. Therefore, for a regulatory agency they are difficult, too.

I do not think I can say that the CRTC can plead that it has no responsibility in that direction.

Mr. Dinsdale: Does the CRTC get any fan mail from Americans living along the border?

• 1645

Mr. Juneau: We do occasionally receive letters, yes, usually favourable, I might say. We do get letters from American citizens across the border.

[Interpretation]

lité d'avoir des règlements qui s'appliquent à d'autres moyens d'information en dehors des moyens de masse comme la radio et la télévision. Est-ce que vous en parliez en passant ou c'était quelque chose de précis dans votre esprit?

M. Juneau: Oh! je ne pense pas avoir parlé de réglementation des autres moyens d'information. Ce que j'ai pu dire en passant, c'est que dans l'octroi des permis, dans l'octroi des licences à un groupe donné de radiodiffuseurs, nous devons tenir compte du propriétaire, de la notion de propriété dans les autres sociétés d'émissions et également des autres moyens de communication.

M. Dinsdale: Peut-être pourrais-je poser une dernière question en ce qui concerne la propriété.

Le président: Sur la programmation?

M. Dinsdale: Oui. Le sentiment anti-américain est très fort de temps en temps à Radio-Canada, qui se manifeste notamment au moment de la campagne électorale et notamment en ce qui concerne certains candidats. Est-ce que le conseil ne s'inquiète pas de ses problèmes et de l'attitude vis-à-vis d'un pays ami?

M. Juneau: Eh bien, je pense que le seul commentaire que je puisse faire à ce sujet, M. Dinsdale, c'est le même commentaire que j'ai fait à d'autres occasions, dans des cas semblables; l'équilibre de la représentation des opinions au Canada. Je pense que nous ne pouvons pas abdiquer toutes nos responsabilités dans ce domaine en toute honnêteté, c'est un élément important dans le domaine des idées.

La question reste à savoir comment faire et il est très difficile de faire une règle, d'établir une règle dans ce domaine; de même qu'il est très difficile de les établir même pour la gestion d'une organisation. Et je pense qu'elle serait très difficile par exemple, pour la gestion d'un journal et je sais que c'est très difficile dans la direction d'une station de radio ou d'une société de film.

Donc, c'est là quelque chose de difficile et je ne pense pas que je puisse dire que le conseil peut dire qu'il n'a aucune responsabilité dans ce sens.

M. Dinsdale: Est-ce que le Conseil reçoit du courrier de la part d'Américains qui vivent le long de la frontière?

M. Juneau: Nous en recevons parfois. Il nous est favorable, je dois dire.

[Texte]

Mr. Dinsdale: Both Democrats and Republicans?

Mr. Juneau: No. Persons who watch Canadian television or listen to Canadian radio.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am speaking of this particular problem, anti-American bias.

Mr. Juneau: I do not remember ever having read a letter complaining. Maybe they write directly to the station.

Mr. Dinsdale: The conclusion seems to be that it is difficult to regulate these elusive matters by any manner or means when you are talking about content of programming.

Mr. Juneau: Yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: But I would think it is not impossible.

Mr. Juneau: I would not want to give you the impression that we are just washing our hands of problems of that kind. On the other hand, I would not want to give the impression that we will be able to come out with wonderful solutions, rapidly.

Mr. McCleave: My question concerns the use of more Canadian talent. I suppose that this is an issue that arises when people come back to have their licences renewed, Mr. Juneau. Is this correct?

Mr. Juneau: Canadian talent. Yes, or it can also come up through the patching of regulations.

Mr. McCleave: I was wondering if any other steps are being taken, or might be considered by the Commission. Is there much liaison with the broadcasting industry about the solution to the requests of ACTRA and the like? You have undoubtedly read the broadcasting debate and how many of us were concerned in that debate about the greater development of Canadian talent.

Mr. Juneau: Well, we have not had very much representation. Really, comments on that subject have started coming in only during the last two or three months. We have had meetings with unions who have asked to have meetings with us, and at the last hearing of the Commission here in Ottawa last week, we heard representations from ACTRA. Up until that time we had not had very many comments, but, of course, we were aware of the concern of Members of Parliament, of the various unions, and of a great number of personalities.

[Interprétation]

M. Dinsdale: Démocrates, républicains?

M. Juneau: Non. Ce sont des gens qui regardent la télévision canadienne ou écoutent la radio canadienne.

M. Dinsdale: Je parle de ce problème particulier, c'est-à-dire le préjugé anti-américain.

M. Juneau: Je ne me souviens pas avoir lu une lettre où on se plaignait. Il est possible qu'on écrive directement au poste.

M. Dinsdale: En conclusion, il semble être assez difficile de régler ces questions, lorsqu'il s'agit du contenu des émissions.

M. Juneau: Oui.

M. Dinsdale: Mais ce n'est pas impossible.

M. Juneau: Je ne voudrais pas vous donner l'impression que nous nous lavons les mains de tout cela. D'autre part, je ne veux pas donner l'impression que nous pourrions proposer des solutions magiques et rapides.

M. McCleave: Ma question a trait à l'utilisation des talents canadiens. C'est une question qui se pose, je pense, lorsque l'on vous demande de renouveler les permis, n'est-ce pas, monsieur Juneau?

M. Juneau: La question des talents canadiens? Oui. Ceci peut se poser aussi lorsque nous pensons à changer les règlements.

M. McCleave: Est-ce que le Conseil pourrait envisager d'autres mesures? Une plus grande liaison avec l'industrie faciliterait la solution de ce problème. Pour donner suite, par exemple, aux demandes faites par l'ACTRA et autres associations semblables. Vous avez certainement lu le débat sur la radio et la télévision. Vous avez pu constater comme nous nous préoccupons de cette question de la mise en valeur des talents canadiens.

M. Juneau: Nous n'avons pas reçu tellement d'observations à ce sujet. Nous avons commencé à en recevoir depuis 2 ou 3 mois. Nous avons eu des réunions avec des syndicats qui ont demandé à se réunir avec nous. A la dernière réunion du Conseil, la semaine dernière, à Ottawa, nous avons entendu les observations de l'ACTRA. Jusqu'à ce moment-là, nous n'avions pas entendu d'observations. Nous n'étions pas évidemment insensibles aux préoccupations, à ce sujet, des députés et des syndicats ou d'un certain nombre de personnalités.

[Text]

Mr. McCleave: Really, Mr. Chairman, I was asking if there had been discussions by the Commission with the broadcasters themselves with regard to this.

Mr. Juneau: Not systematically. We have not sat down with the broadcasters yet to discuss that particular subject. No.

Mr. McCleave: I take it, though, that this would be an objective.

Mr. Juneau: Oh, yes. I think that we will be able to come to grips with that problem in the spring.

Mr. McCleave: I know you have a great deal to do, Mr. Juneau, and I think your organization should be complimented for its vigor and industry, so I make no quarrel with that.

Mr. Juneau: We hope to be able to schedule that issue for the spring if we are successful enough in issuing the various decisions that are facing us at the moment, particularly on licensing. As I tried to explain in my introductory remarks, licensing is only one word, but there are many policy issues involved in it. If we are successful in arriving at decisions on all these matters, including the ownership problem, we could start some time in the spring to deal methodically and systematically with the question of program policies. In the meantime, we have people working on these matters.

• 1650

The Chairman: Mr. Osler, on a further supplementary on programming.

Mr. Osler: We have been talking about Canadian content in programming and help to ACTRA and to other talent. I wonder if any consideration is going to be given by the CRTC to the problem of dumping foreign products here.

I am not trying to be restrictive in any way. I do not believe that we should fence in our borders, even if we could, and allow nothing but full-blooded Canadian drama and this sort of thing. I think that would be disastrous. However, I think it is rather difficult to talk seriously about the on-going development of Canadian talent when we have situations where very expensive programs are dumped into the country for practically nothing. I do not know of any other industry that would allow this to happen.

[Interpretation]

M. McCleave: Je voulais savoir si le Conseil avait discuté cette question avec les personnalités du monde de la radio-télévision à ce sujet.

M. Juneau: Non. Vous me demandez si nous avons discuté cette chose directement avec eux, la réponse est non.

M. McCleave: C'est quand même votre but.

M. Juneau: Nous pourrions nous attaquer à ce problème le printemps prochain.

M. McCleave: Je pense que votre Conseil doit être félicité pour son dynamisme, monsieur Juneau.

M. Juneau: Nous pensons organiser une audience à ce sujet à l'automne. Nous pourrions discuter des décisions difficiles que nous allons prendre. En ce qui concerne notamment la délivrance des permis. J'ai essayé de l'expliquer dans mes remarques préliminaires. La délivrance du permis est une chose, mais toutes sortes de questions de principe se posent lorsqu'il s'agit de délivrer des permis. Si nous réussissons à en arriver à des décisions sur toutes les questions, y compris les questions de la propriété, il serait possible pour nous de commencer le printemps prochain à nous occuper méthodiquement, systématiquement, de la question des principes de programmation. Dans l'intervalle, disons que certains d'entre nous travaillent à cette question.

Le président: D'autres questions sur la programmation. Monsieur Osler.

M. Osler: On a parlé du contenu canadien des émissions, de l'aide qu'on pouvait donner à l'ACTRA, etc., et je me demande si le Conseil pourrait envisager la question du dumping de certains produits étrangers ici.

Je n'essaie pas d'être restrictif. Je ne pense pas qu'on devrait fermer nos frontières, même si nous le pouvions, pour ne permettre la diffusion, par exemple, que d'œuvres dramatiques purement canadiennes. Ce serait un désastre. Mais il est difficile de parler sérieusement de la mise en valeur des talents canadiens lorsque des programmes qui ont coûté très cher, arrivent au Canada et sont diffusés à peu près gratuitement. C'est du dumping.

[Texte]

The program Bonanza costs $100,000 in the United States. The CBC picks it up for $8,000 or $10,000 to be shown as a retread on its network—I do not mean a retread, but a supplementary use in another country. The fact is that nobody can compete with that. It might cost $50,000 to produce a very good program that would somehow fill that slot.

I have nothing against Bonanza, but should one be allowed to dump programs at less than an honest cost? Its costs have been taken care of in the United States. It is dumped in Canada and whatever they get for it is gravy and, naturally, that is attractive to the advertiser, and Canada cannot compete.

Mr. Juneau: We are all preoccupied with the problem you raise. If you want me to comment on the implied mechanism, then it becomes more difficult. If you use the term "dumping" in the legal sense...

Mr. Osler: I do not because I am not a lawyer.

Mr. Juneau: ...or if the implication is that we could use anti-dumping techniques to deal with that problem, then I do not think that particular mechanism could be used. I doubt it anyway. Perhaps lawyers around the table could offer some advice to us on that. But I doubt that we could. I do not think it would be in our power. I think, as in any other industry, it would be under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Revenue. We would have to find other ways of dealing with that problem.

One thing that happens more and more and which preoccupies the Commission is that some of the CATV systems are carrying American stations into Canada through CATV. Those stations, since they reach a Canadian market which is becoming of certain interests, are selling advertising in Canada.

There is a mechanism which we could probably use to do something about that, but I do not know any country where an anti-dumping system has been used to reduce the impact of American films. There are other techniques that are used.

Mr. Osler: You use quotas, and this sort of thing.

Mr. Juneau: Yes.

Mr. Osler: One other question about programming. Have you as yet set up, or are you setting up, an effective monitoring system to see that advertising regulations are not grossly ignored?

[Interprétation]

Prenez «Bonanza» par exemple; ça leur coûte $100,000 aux États-Unis, et Radio-Canada paye $8,000 ou $10,000. Personne ne peut concurrencer cela. Il pourrait, il me semble, être possible de dépenser $50,000 pour une bonne émission qui pourrait occuper le temps. On passe «Bonanza».

Je n'ai rien contre «Bonanza», mais est-ce qu'il ne serait pas possible de produire des programmes à des prix raisonnables. La diffusion de «Bonanza» au Canada représente un bénéfice net pour les producteurs.

M. Juneau: Vous savez évidemment que je suis conscient du problème que vous évoquez, et, je pense, de ce que nous pourrions faire, des modalités de notre action. Cela est difficile. Si vous employez le mot «dumping» au sens juridique...

M. Osler: Ce n'est pas mon cas. Je ne suis pas juriste.

M. Juneau: Vous pensez que nous pourrions peut-être employer des techniques antidumping pour régler le problème. Je doute que nous puissions les utiliser. Peut-être les juristes qui sont ici pourraient-ils nous donner de bons conseils à cet égard. Mais je ne pense pas que nous puissions le faire. Cela dépendrait, je crois, du ministère du Revenu national. Il faudrait que nous trouvions d'autres moyens de régler la question.

Ce qui nous préoccupe de plus en plus, c'est que quelques-uns des systèmes de télévision à antenne collective retransmettent les programmes américains au Canada. Ces postes permettent d'exploiter un marché canadien qui n'est pas sans intérêt. Ces postes vendent donc de la publicité au Canada. Il y a donc là un mécanisme qu'il nous sera éventuellement possible d'utiliser. Je ne connais pas de pays où on essaie de minimiser l'influence des films américains.

M. Osler: Vous vous servez de quotas ou quelque chose de semblable.

M. Juneau: Oui.

M. Osler: Avez-vous constitué un système d'écoute convenable, de façon à vous assurer que les règlements relatifs à la publicité ne sont pas systématiquement violés?

[Text]

Mr. Juneau: We have said that we have to set up a monitoring system. I think it can be done without too much work. This is not as difficult a matter as some of the others we have discussed here. I think that we could have a monitoring system based on a sampling system which would validate, as the information specialists say, the logs which we already get from the stations. We could do that and we intend to do it. It is only a matter of organizing the system.

The Chairman: Mr. Matte, on a further supplementary on programming.

M. Matte: J'ai deux questions. Dans les ententes qui existent entre les postes privés et Radio-Canada, est-ce votre organisme qui décide quels seront les programmes qui passeront dans ces postes affiliés à Radio-Canada?

M. Juneau: En pratique, non, monsieur Matte. Je ne sais pas si nous recevons les ententes de façon systématique, mais nous les recevons quand nous les demandons à Radio-Canada. Jusqu'à maintenant, il n'a pas été nécessaire, pour le BGR auparavant ou pour nous maintenant, d'intervenir dans ces ententes.

M. Matte: Voici ma deuxième question. On parle souvent des séparatistes qui seraient à Radio-Canada. On met des doutes, mais il n'y a pas beaucoup de noms qui sont mentionnés, même si M. Mongrain a fait allusion qu'il pouvait en avoir. Il y a un fédéraliste extrêmement dangereux sur les ondes de la radio montréalaise, qui a nom de «Pat Burns». Je me demande pourquoi on ne s'est pas encore préoccupé de ce cas particulier.

M. Juneau: Je pense qu'il est un peu exagéré de dire qu'on s'en n'est pas préoccupé, monsieur Matte. C'est encore un domaine d'opinion. Je pourrais vous répondre de la même façon que j'ai répondu à M. Mongrain.

Quand il est question d'opinion, toutes les interventions sont des interventions très délicates et très difficiles, parce que si on intervient dans un cas, on crée une espèce de précédent, une jurisprudence. Ceci nous entraîne à intervenir dans d'autres cas. Si on n'est pas très judicieux, très prudents, on peut-être appelé à jouer ce rôle de police de l'opinion dont je parlais précédemment et qui est un domaine que nous essayons d'éviter.

Cependant, dans le cas dont vous parlez, je pense que vous faites allusion au poste CKGM à Montréal. Dans ce cas, nous sommes préoccupés. Nous avons exprimé, à quelques

[Interpretation]

M. Juneau: Nous avons dit effectivement que nous mettions au point un système d'écoute. Ce n'est pas une question aussi difficile que certaines des questions dont nous avons parlé cet après-midi. Il s'agit d'un système d'échantillonnage, en somme, qui pourrait valider—comme disent les spécialistes en information—valider les registres que nous transmettent les postes. Il s'agit là simplement d'une question d'organisation.

Le président: Monsieur Matte, une question supplémentaire sur la programmation.

Mr. Matte: I have two questions. In the agreements reached between private stations and the CBC, is it your body that decides what programs will be broadcast over these stations affiliated with CBC?

Mr. Juneau: In practice, no, Mr. Matte. I do not know whether we receive the agreements systematically, but we receive them whenever we ask the CBC for them. To date, it has not been necessary for the former Board of Broadcast Governors, nor for us now, to intervene in these agreements.

Mr. Matte: Here is my second question. Reference is often made to the separatists supposedly within the CBC. A great many things are said, but not many names are mentioned in spite of Mr. Mongrain saying he could obtain some.

There is a very dangerous federalist on the air in Montreal, called Pat Burns. I wonder why no account has been taken so far of that specific case.

Mr. Juneau: I think it is a little exaggerated to say that no account has been taken of that. Here again, we are dealing with matters of opinion. I could answer you in exactly the same way I answered Mr. Mongrain. When we are dealing with opinions, any interference is a very delicate and very difficult matter, because if we intervene in one case, it brings about a kind of precedent. This might draw us into intervening in other cases. And if we are not very discreet and prudent, we might be called upon to act as a policeman of public opinion about which I spoke earlier, and that is something we want to avoid.

However, in the case to which you referred—I think you are speaking of Station CKGM in Montreal—yes, we are concerned with this particular case. We have indicated reprises, aux responsables du poste que cette situation nous préoccupait. M. Osler demandait tantôt si nous faisons du «monitoring». Dans ce cas, nous faisons une surveillance, c'est-à-dire que nous faisons du «monitoring» quotidiennement depuis le mois de juillet et que nous étudions tous les programmes en question depuis le mois de juillet. Pourquoi? Parce qu'il y a une question, non pas d'intervention particulière, mais d'équilibre général dans un cas bien particulier et bien précis, qui ne porte pas sur l'ensemble de la programmation d'un réseau, mais sur 3, 4, 5, et, dans certains cas, 7 heures de programmation par jour de la part d'un seul individu. Cela tend à préciser un peu plus le problème et nous avons décidé de l'étudier très attentivement.

The Chairman: I wonder if I might point out to the Committee that we have an hour to go until our time of adjournment and that we have spent something like an hour and a half on the question of programming. There are other people with other subjects to introduce, and I wonder if I might end the discussion on this.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. Is there any way that one parliamentary standing committee can alert another committee of something they have discussed which the other committee should take under consideration.

For instance, the Finance Committee is now considering the White Paper on anti-dumping. That legislation must come to the House in January. They have dealt with the dumping of goods, wares and merchandise. I do not think the question of the dumping of the fruits of talents has even come up. I think it is a very interesting thing.

The thought struck my mind as Mr. Osler was speaking. I wonder whether this Committee or the Chairman of the CRTC or someone should indicate to the Finance Committee that this subject has come up and that they should pay some attention to it, because up until now I do not think it has even crossed their minds.

The Chairman: The answer to that enquiry is that this is one reason why members have the power to sit on all committees without necessarily being a member of them, and they can bring these items up as they see fit.

Mr. Givens: Well, the problem is to bifurcate yourself into enough pieces so that you can sit on committees that are sitting simultaneously. I have been unable to achieve that so far.

[Interprétation]

to the authorities of that station on more than one occasion, that we were concerned about this situation. Mr. Osler asked a while ago if we were doing any monitoring. Yes, we are monitoring in this case. We have been monitoring daily since last July, and we have been studying all the programs in question since last July. Why? Because this is a matter, not of special intervention, but of general balance in one particular and very specific case, which has no bearing on the overall programming of the network, but on three, four, five and in some cases, seven hours of programming a day on the part of one single individual. This tends to define the problem somewhat more, and we have decided to study it very closely.

Le président: Il nous reste une heure jusqu'à la levée de la séance et nous avons passé une heure et demie sur la programmation. Il y a peut-être d'autres personnes ici qui voudraient aborder d'autres sujets.

M. Givens: Monsieur le président, j'en appelle au Règlement. Est-ce qu'un comité parlementaire peut prévenir un autre comité qu'il aura à discuter un point quelconque? Le comité des Finances examine actuellement le Livre blanc sur l'antidumping. Et ces mesures législatives doivent être présentées à la Chambre en janvier. On a parlé du dumping des marchandises. Je pense que nous pourrions parler là du «dumping des talents».

La question de M. Osler est très intéressante. Je me demande si notre Comité, ou le président du Conseil, pourrait signaler au comité des Finances qu'il s'agit là d'une question dont il devrait se saisir. C'est une question à laquelle il n'a même pas songé.

Le président: Les députés peuvent siéger à n'importe quel comité, même s'ils n'en sont pas membres, et poser toutes les questions voulues.

M. Givens: On devrait essayer de se couper en petits morceaux de façon à siéger dans plus d'un comité à la fois, mais je n'ai pas le don d'ubiquité.

[Text]

The Chairman: It is also possible for private members...

Mr. Givens: No, no; seriously, I mean in an official way. Is there a method of doing this in an official way without making it the obligation of any one member like me or anybody else?

The Chairman: That is what Mr. Dinsdale tried to do by means of motion. This is why we have the other mechanisms. For example, you in your private capacity as a member or I could be instructed by agreement to write a letter to the Chairman pointing out this fact to him, but normally this is what members of Parliament are for.

• 1700

Mr. Dinsdale: Interim reports would help, too.

The Chairman: Interim reports could be of assistance. I have Mr. Corbin on a new subject.

Mr. De Bané: On the same subject as Mr. Matte I have just one or two questions.

The Chairman: Well, if I recognize you I have to recognize three others before you and we would like to get off programming so we can discuss new subjects. If the Committee wishes we can continue with the discussion of programming but we have only an hour remaining.

Mr. Givens: Do you intend to take a vote on anything before this session is over?

The Chairman: Yes, we have to deal with the items that we were unable to pass before so that the steering committee can meet to draft a first report. The Committee would then meet in camera to discuss the report and make amendments as they saw fit.

Mr. Givens: I do not think we have a quorum.

The Chairman: Yes, we do have a quorum. We have 11 members.

Mr. Givens: I understand one member across the aisle is not a member.

The Chairman: I am sorry, yes. Mr. Stewart is coming back.

Mr. Givens: No, sir, he is not; he is going to Kingston.

The Chairman: Mr. Schumacher is coming back.

Mr. Givens: He told me he was leaving for Kingston.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Il est possible pour les députés...

M. Givens: Est-ce qu'il y a moyen d'en saisir officiellement les comités, sans obliger à le faire, un député, moi ou un autre?

Le président: C'est ce que M. Dinsdale a essayé de faire au moyen d'une motion. C'est pourquoi il existe les autres mécanismes. Vous, par exemple, dans votre simple qualité de député pourriez agir, ou pourriez me demander, par exemple, d'écrire au président pour lui signaler le fait. Mais normalement, c'est ce pourquoi existent les députés.

M. Dinsdale: Les rapports intérimaires constituent un autre moyen.

Le président: Ils peuvent être utiles aussi.

M. De Bané: Sur la même question, seulement une ou deux questions.

Le président: Mais si je vous donne la parole il faudra que je donne la parole à ceux que j'ai vus avant vous. Si le comité le désire, nous pouvons continuer à discuter de la programmation. Il ne nous reste guère qu'une heure.

M. Givens: Avez-vous l'intention de voter sur quelque chose avant la fin de la séance?

Le président: Oui. Nous avons à traiter des questions que nous n'avons pas pu passer jusqu'ici de façon à ce que le comité de direction puisse rédiger son premier rapport. Mais le comité pourra alors se réunir à huis clos.

M. Givens: Je ne crois pas que nous ayons quorum.

Le président: Oui, oui, nous sommes onze.

M. Givens: Mais je crois comprendre qu'un député ici, enfin, n'est pas membre.

Le président: C'est vrai, mais M. Stewart va revenir.

M. Givens: Non monsieur, il part pour Kingston.

Le président: M. Schumacher va revenir.

M. Givens: Il m'a dit qu'il partait pour Kingston.

[Texte]

The Chairman: Mr. Osler said that he would come back if Mr. Stewart did not come back.

Mr. Givens: I am locked in.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Chairman, I understand that you put a limit to the discussion of each topic.

The Chairman: I cannot do that. I am asking the Committee, what is their will? We have an hour left; we have about five members with new topics to discuss; we have spent about one hour and a half on this particular topic.

Mr. Mongrain: We could come back afterwards.

The Chairman: After we do the others you would be willing to come back on this?

Mr. Mongrain: Yes.

The Chairman: Mr. Corbin, on a new subject.

M. Corbin: Monsieur le président, je veux d'abord féliciter M. Juneau et le Conseil pour avoir pris leurs responsabilités en ce qui a trait à l'extension des services de radio et de télévision de langue française dans les provinces Maritimes. A mon avis, il était temps qu'on examine les priorités dans cette région, et même si, pour un, je crois que vous auriez pu aller beaucoup plus loin dans le sens des recommandations, j'admets qu'il y a eu un pas important de fait, et de nouveau je vous en félicite. Non pas parce que vous avez fait une faveur aux gens des Maritimes, mais bien parce que vous avez fait votre devoir, que vous avez corrigé une grave lacune, sinon une injustice qui persistait depuis quelques années, pour ne pas dire plus, et qu'on ne semblait pas vouloir regarder en face.

Il y a cependant des zones qui méritent d'être reconsidérées et j'espère que lorsque des citoyens de ces régions vous présenteront de nouveau des demandes, que vous les recevrez avec la même ouverture d'esprit que vous avez manifestée à votre audience de Moncton, les 25, 26 et 27 septembre, et dans les recommandations qui ont suivi, le 16 octobre. Et quand je dis tout ceci, je ne parle pas seulement en mon propre nom, mais je suis sûr de le faire également pour tous les francophones des Maritimes, et même pour un nombre assez important de citoyens des Maritimes, qui sont de langue anglaise.

[Interprétation]

Le président: Il a dit qu'il reviendrait si M. Stewart ne revenait pas.

M. Givens: Voilà.

M. De Bané: Avez-vous l'intention de limiter la discussion sur telle ou telle question?

Le président: Je ne peux pas le faire. Il nous reste une heure. Il y en a cinq d'entre nous qui veulent poser d'autres questions. Nous avons passé sur cette question environ une heure et demie.

M. Mongrain: Nous pourrions revenir sur cette question après.

Le président: Vous voulez bien qu'on y revienne plus tard?

M. Mongrain: D'accord.

Le président: M. Corbin.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Chairman, at the outset, I would like to congratulate Mr. Juneau and the Commission for having taken this responsibility with regard to the extension of radio and TV broadcasting services in the Maritime provinces, that is, French-speaking services. It is high time, I felt, that priorities should be considered in that area.

However, I do think that you might even have gone a great deal further were the recommendations are concerned, but I do recognize that a very important step has been taken, and I would like to congratulate you again on that score. It is not because you have done a favour for the people of the Maritime Provinces, but because you have simply done your duty. You have corrected a serious shortcoming, if not an injustice, which had existed for a number of years, to say the very least, and which no one seemed to want to face.

However, there are some areas which I believe should be reconsidered and I do hope that when the citizens of those areas put their requests before you once again, you will receive them with the same broadness of mind as was shown by you during your hearing on September 25, 26 and 27 in Moncton, and in the recommendations which followed on October 16. In mentioning all this I am not speaking only on my own behalf, but I am sure of speaking also for all French-speaking people in the Maritimes Provinces, and indeed for a fairly substantial group of English-speaking Maritimers.

[Text]

Maintenant, j'ai quelques questions spécifiques se rapportant à certaines choses que vous avez dites ou publiées, sous ce rapport. En premier lieu: considérez-vous qu'un service de radio doit nécessairement précéder celui de télévision dans une région qui en réclame un, de langue française, et qui n'en a pas?

Si vous voulez, je peux élaborer. Le 16 septembre, en effet, vous recommandiez l'établissement d'un poste émetteur de langue française dans la région de Fredericton-St-Jean. Considérez-vous dans ce cas-là, que le service de la radio doit nécessairement précéder celui de télévision? A mon sens, si vraiment on veut rendre service aux francophones de ces régions-là et d'autres, dans l'état actuel des choses, le service de télévision de langue française aurait été beaucoup plus apprécié, et je crois plus nécessaire même.

Auriez-vous des commentaires à nous faire à ce sujet?

• 1705

M. Juneau: Je pense, pour répondre très précisément à votre question, que nous n'avons pas de politique déterminée à ce sujet-là, qu'il faut absolument que le service de radio précède celui de la télévision. Non, nous n'avons pas de politique rigide. Dans le cas des priorités que nous avons énoncées, pour ce qui est des Maritimes, nous en avons signalé trois. Il est bien possible qu'il y ait des vues divergentes à ce sujet-là.

Maintenant, ce n'est pas un plan général pour les Maritimes que nous avons énoncé dans cette décision qui a suivi l'audience de Moncton. Nous avons dit, au contraire, qu'après les trois audiences de Moncton, Regina et Ottawa, nous allons émettre des décisions de politique intéressantes, bien sûr les Maritimes, et dans les cas où ce pourra être des décisions accordant des permis, car, pour ce faire, il faut évidemment qu'il y ait une demande, mais dans le cas où les décisions pourront porter sur des permis spécifiques, nous énonçons des décisions dans ces cas-là aussi.

Mais il se peut que le Conseil ait des vues plus précises après ces trois audiences, sur l'ensemble de la politique à appliquer envers les Maritimes.

M. Corbin: Avez-vous l'intention d'aller beaucoup plus loin que vous ne l'avez fait à date, et recommander que Radio-Canada étende son réseau de radio de langue française à toutes les régions du Nouveau-Brunswick, comme le réseau de langue anglaise l'a fait? Seriez-vous prêt à faire cette recommandation à Radio-Canada, parce qu'il y a un

[Interpretation]

Now, I do have a few specific questions relating to some of the things which you have said or published in this connection. First, do you consider that a radio service should necessarily precede a television service in an area which has been asking for a French-speaking service and which does not as of now have one?

I could elaborate on this point if you like.

On September 16, you recommended the establishment of a French-speaking radio station in the Fredericton-St. John area. Do you feel, in this specific case, that radio should necessarily precede television? I feel that if we really want to do a favour to the French-speaking people of that area, in the present context, the French-speaking TV service would have been much more appreciated, and I really think it would have been much more necessary.

Do you have any comments on that?

Mr. Juneau: To answer your question, I should say to begin with that we have no rigid policy in this regard to the effect that radio stations should always precede TV stations. Now with regard to those priorities indicated by us with regard to the Maritime provinces, we have spoken of three priorities. It is quite possible that these views might not be shared by everybody.

Now, it is not a general plan for the Maritimes that we put forth in the decision following the Moncton hearing. What we have said, on the contrary, is that after the three hearings held in Moncton, Regina and Ottawa, we would make policy decisions concerning the Maritime provinces, and in those cases where it is possible, we would make decisions for the issuing of licences—such licences could only be issued following an application—but we also make decisions regarding specific licences.

However, it may be possible that the Commission has clearer views of its overall policy in the Maritimes after these three hearings.

Mr. Corbin: Do you intend going much further than you have done so far, and recommend that the CBC extend its French-speaking radio network to all areas in New Brunswick, as has been done by the English-speaking network? Would you be ready to make this recommendation to the CBC, because there is an urgent need for this besoin urgent de ce service dans toutes les régions francophones du Nouveau-Brunswick.

[Texte]

M. Juneau: Vous pensez au nord du Nouveau-Brunswick?

M. Corbin: Au nord, au nord-ouest et puis, disons, dans certains îlots où sont littéralement perdus les francophones. D'ailleurs, je comprends très bien la situation, ayant moi-même habité Fredericton, la capitale, et que j'ai œuvré dans ce sens-là, depuis déjà douze ans.

M. Juneau: Il est sûr que la situation du nord du Nouveau-Brunswick est très pénible à l'heure actuelle parce qu'il n'y a pas dans le nord de poste de langue française. Il y a deux postes privés de langue anglaise, il n'y a pas de poste de langue française du tout. Il y a les postes de la province de Québec, évidemment, qui rejoignent cette région en passant au-dessus de la Baie-des-Chaleurs. C'est un problème aigu et vous comprendrez qu'il est difficile pour moi d'exprimer ici des opinions sur ce que le Conseil doit décider à ce sujet-là, évidemment. Je ne peux que reconnaître l'existence d'un problème réel.

M. Corbin: A mon avis, monsieur Juneau, je crois que vous solutionneriez une foule de problèmes, non pas seulement aux Maritimes, dans les provinces Atlantique, mais partout ailleurs au Canada, si vous établissiez comme politique, ou enfin, comme ligne de conduite, d'insister auprès de la Société d'État pour qu'elle étende, au moins pour commencer, son réseau de radio de langue française dans les principales villes du pays. De cette façon lorsqu'un francophone se déplacera d'un océan à l'autre, il ne se sentira pas perdu, comme c'est le cas présentement, dès qu'il pénètre dans certaines provinces de l'Ouest ou dans certaines régions de l'Ontario. Cela serait-il possible de votre part?

M. Juneau: Remarquez que la Société a pris des mesures vigoureuses dans bien des cas à ce sujet-là. Il y a maintenant un poste à Vancouver, à Toronto et la Société a annoncé il y a déjà quelque temps, et il y a une décision du CRTC à ce sujet-là, qu'il y aurait un poste de radio à Windsor. Il y a quelques postes de radio qui sont des postes privés; cependant, des espèces de postes communautaires dans l'Ouest, il y en a quatre. Tout indique que la Société a l'intention de prendre des mesures vigoureuses à cet effet. Lors de la dernière audience du CRTC, la Société a aussi annoncé qu'elle avait l'intention de faire une demande pour un poste de télévision de langue française à Toronto et à Windsor.

service in all French-speaking areas of New Brunswick.

Mr. Juneau: You are speaking of the northern part of New Brunswick?

Mr. Corbin: The north, the north-west and in certain little isolated pockets of French-speaking people. Moreover, I have a full understanding of the situation, having lived in Fredericton myself and having worked towards achieving this for the past twelve years.

Mr. Juneau: It is clear that the situation in northern New Brunswick in this regard is very distressing at the present time because there is no French-speaking station in that area. There are two English-speaking private stations, but there is no French-speaking station. Of course, certain French-speaking Quebec stations can be heard over the Baie-des-Chaleurs. This is a very acute problem and, of course, you will appreciate that it is difficult for me to express my views with regard to what the Commission must decide in this matter. All I can do is state the existence of a real problem.

Mr. Corbin: In my opinion, Mr. Juneau, I believe that you would be solving a large number of problems, not only in the Maritimes or in the Atlantic provinces, but everywhere else in Canada if you established as a policy, or as a guideline, that the CBC should be urged to extend, at least as a start, its French-speaking radio network to all main cities of this country, so that when a French-speaking person moves from one ocean to the other in this country, he will not feel lost, as is the case at present when he moves into certain provinces of Western Canada or into certain areas of Ontario. Could you bring this about?

Mr. Juneau: You might note that the CBC has taken vigorous action in this connection on more than one occasion. There is now a station in Vancouver, and there is one in Toronto. Furthermore, the CBC announced some time back, on the strength of the Commission's decision in this regard, that there would be a radio station in Windsor. There are a few radio stations, which are private stations, though. In Western Canada there are four of these local stations. We have every reason to believe that the CBC intends taking vigorous action in this respect. At its last hearing the CRTC, the CBC also stated that it intended asking for the establishment of a French-speaking TV station in Toronto, and in Windsor.

M. Corbin: Ce sont de bonnes nouvelles que vous nous dites là.

M. Juneau: Je m'excuse, il faut donner le crédit où il se trouve. La nouvelle a été annoncée, dans ces cas-là, par Radio-Canada à l'audience du CRTC, la semaine dernière.

M. Corbin: Si vous me permettez, je reviens pour un moment aux problèmes du nord du Nouveau-Brunswick et dont vous êtes parfaitement au courant. Je doute fort moi-même que des intérêts privés soient intéressés, pour de simples raisons économiques à établir un poste de langue française dans le nord du Nouveau-Brunswick, du moins, j'entretiens des réserves, des doutes à cet égard. Par contre, pourriez-vous nous dire si, depuis le 16 octobre, ou enfin depuis vos audiences à Moncton, des gens représentant certains intérêts vous ont approchés pour vous faire une demande dans ce sens-là?

M. Juneau: Une demande spécifique? Non.

M. Corbin: Pour l'établissement d'un poste dans le Nord?

M. Juneau: Oui, j'ai bien compris. Une demande spécifique, non. Mais nous avons été approchés et nous avons eu des conversations avec quelques groupes...

M. Corbin: Sans nommer personne...

M. Juneau: Non bien sûr, avec quelques groupes qui ont manifesté de l'intérêt à ce sujet. Et il nous est parvenu aussi, comme cela arrive toujours dans ce métier, des rumeurs au sujet de groupes qui songent à établir des postes dans le nord du Nouveau-Brunswick.

M. Corbin: Ça reste quand même des rumeurs?

M. Juneau: C'est-à-dire, non, pas toujours, dans au moins deux cas, ce sont des conversations que nous avons eues directement avec des groupes. Dans d'autres cas, ce ne sont pas des rumeurs, mais enfin, des oui-dire, disons.

M. Corbin: J'ai été particulièrement touché, tout à l'heure, lorsque vous avez mentionné que le premier ministre du Nouveau-Brunswick insistait pour avoir un centre de production à l'intérieur de sa province, et dans le cas, à Moncton. J'ai lu dans le journal l'Évangeline, de Moncton, le seul quotidien de langue française aux Maritimes, que la Société est présentement à la recherche d'un endroit afin d'y établir un studio de production, alors tout cela est bien. Maintenant, à quoi servira le centre de production si on

[Interpretation]

Mr. Corbin: That is welcome news.

Mr. Juneau: I think credit should be given where it is due. The announcement was made last week at the Commission's hearing by the CBC itself.

Mr. Corbin: Well, I will return to the problem of northern New Brunswick about which you are fully aware. I doubt very much that private interests are really interested, for simple economic reasons, in setting up a French-speaking station in northern New Brunswick, at least, I have my doubts about this matter. However, could you tell us whether, since October 16, or more precisely since your Moncton hearings, you have been approached in view of making an application by people representing certain interests?

Mr. Juneau: A specific application? No....

Mr. Corbin: For the setting up of a station in the north?

Mr. Juneau: A specific request to establish a station in the north, no. However, we have been approached and we have had talks with a number of groups—

Mr. Corbin: Without naming anyone—

Mr. Juneau: Of course not. We were approached by a few groups who showed interest in the subject. We also heard rumors, as is always the case in our business, that certain groups were thinking of setting up radio stations in northern New Brunswick.

Mr. Corbin: But these are only rumours, are they not?

Mr. Juneau: Not always. In at least two cases, these are conversations we had with interested parties. In other cases, these are not rumours, well, let's say, hear-say.

Mr. Corbin: I was happy to hear you say that the Premier of New Brunswick was urging the setting up of a production centre in his province, in Moncton. I read in the only French-speaking newspaper in the Maritimes, l'Évangeline, of Moncton, that the CBC is now looking for premises in order to set up a production studio there. All this is very good. But what use will this production centre be if we do not establish a broadcasting network at the same time?

n'établit pas en même temps un réseau de diffusion?

Il se pose un problème. Dans le nord-ouest du Nouveau-Brunswick, nous sommes alimentés en fait de télévision par le poste CJBR, de Rimouski, et puis c'est le seul poste, à part CHAU-TN, qui nous vient de la Gaspésie encore, ce sont les deux seuls postes, à part CBAFT, de Moncton, qui nous procurent des émissions de langue française à la télévision. Cependant, ces postes-là, dans leur territoire de diffusion, ne couvrent pas toutes les régions habitées par une majorité de francophones; alors il se pose un problème de diffusion. La Société a-t-elle manifesté son intention de le solutionner? Avez-vous fait des représentations auprès de la Société Radio-Canada pour assurer un service complet à tous les francophones du Nouveau-Brunswick et ce, dans la mesure du possible?

M. Juneau: Vous avez raison, il y a un problème grave pour le nord, car, présentement, il est desservi par trois postes de relais du poste privé de Moncton, qui est affilié à Radio-Canada. Donc, il y a dans le nord du Nouveau-Brunswick, dans le nord-est, un réseau de Radio-Canada, en langue anglaise, assuré par le poste affilié de Moncton. Et le poste français de Moncton n'atteint le nord en aucune façon, bien sûr, et s'il y avait un poste de production en langue française, à Moncton, il resterait à desservir la région du nord, de la province, ce qui constitue un problème grave, étant donné surtout l'état économique de cette région.

• 1715

Comme je vous le disais, nous n'avons pas la prétention d'avoir annoncé une politique complète, définitive, totale, pour les Maritimes, à la suite de notre audience de Moncton. Nous avons énoncé trois priorités, trois urgences...

M. Corbin: Et vous êtes conscients de...

M. Juneau: Nous continuons à étudier l'ensemble de la gestion des Maritimes du côté français, comme du côté anglais. Du côté anglais, c'est surtout une question de services secondaires, de services alternatifs.

M. Corbin: Monsieur le président, si vous ne le permettez, j'ai une autre question dans un autre domaine, que j'adresserai également à M. Juneau. Depuis quelques années, au Nouveau-Brunswick, on se préoccupe tant chez les français que chez les citoyens de langue anglaise, de l'étendue et de l'influence de ce qu'on est convenu d'appeler l'empire

There is a problem. In northwestern New Brunswick, we pick up CJBR Rimouski, that is the Rimouski TV station. That is the only station apart from CHAU-TV, which is a Gaspé station, well, these are the only two stations, apart from CBAFT, in Moncton, from which we obtain French language TV broadcasting. Now, these two stations do not include within their broadcasting range the entire area inhabited by French-speaking people. So, we have a broadcasting problem here. Has the CBC indicated that it was going to solve that problem? Have you made representations to the CBC to ensure complete service to all French-speaking New Brunswickers, as far as practicable?

Mr. Juneau: Yes, there is a serious problem as far as the north shore is concerned. At the present time, that area has been served by three relay stations from the private Moncton station which is affiliated to the CBC. On the north shore then, and in north-eastern New Brunswick, we have an English-speaking CBC network, thanks to the affiliated Moncton station. The French Moncton station does not reach the north shore at any rate. If there were a French-speaking production station in Moncton, the problem of northern coverage would remain. It is a very serious problem especially if one takes into account the economic position of the area.

As I said, we do not feel we have announced a comprehensive, definitive policy for the Maritime Provinces, following our Moncton hearing. We have announced three urgent points, three priority matters...

Mr. Corbin: And you are conscious of the fact that...

Mr. Juneau: We are continuing to look into the Maritime problem, from both the French-speaking and the English-speaking points of view. From the English-speaking point of view, it is essentially a question of alternative, or secondary services.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Chairman, there is another question, in another field, that I would like to put to Mr. Juneau at this point. Over the last few years, in New Brunswick, both among English-speaking people and among French-speaking people, great concern has been shown for the extent and the influence of what is called the Irving empire, with regard

[Text]

Irving, en matière de radio, télévision, tableauvision, presse, etc.

Vous avez été saisis de ce problème à l'audience de Moncton et je crois que vous êtes en train de l'étudier. Avez-vous l'intention de donner un verdict prochainement dans toute cette affaire?

M. Juneau: Si vous me permettez, monsieur Corbin, les décisions du CRTC sont publiques et je préférerais me limiter aux décisions qui ont déjà été annoncées par le CRTC sur ces questions.

M. Corbin: Merci. Je n'ai pas d'autres questions, monsieur le président.

The Chairman: A supplementary, Mr. Matte, on the provision of French TV and radio service on the north shore of New Brunswick.

M. Matte: C'est seulement une question de renseignement. Quel est le nombre précis de postes de radio de langue anglaise et de langue française dans la province de Québec?

M. Juneau: De radio et de télévision?

M. Matte: De radio, d'abord.

M. Juneau: Est-ce que je pourrais, monsieur le président, fournir ces statistiques au comité? J'avoue que je ne suis pas très habile à retenir ce genre de statistiques, mais je pourrais dès demain vous les fournir.

Le président: Monsieur Béchard.

M. Béchard: Monsieur le président, comme M. Matte a posé une question qui n'a aucune relation avec le nord du Nouveau-Brunswick ou avec le service de la télévision dans le nord du Nouveau-Brunswick, est-ce que je pourrais poser une question sur l'extension du service dans mon comté de Bonaventure, et spécialement dans cette partie qui s'appelle les îles de la Madeleine? Cette fois, on ne parle pas de Radio-Canada, mais de CBC.

Il existe une population assez importante de langue anglaise aux îles de la Madeleine. La population française au complet est desservie par la télévision de Radio-Canada depuis 1964 ou 1965, si je ne me trompe pas. Mais la population anglaise est assez isolée; une île en particulier, l'île-d'Entrée, est isolée des autres îles. Elle est à dix milles et n'a aucun service de télévision. On me dit que depuis quelques années, depuis 1963 en particulier, des représentations sont faites en vue de doter cette population de ce service important pour eux. Ils sont déjà assez isolés, pour qu'ils puissent au moins jouir de ce service to radio, TV, cable vision, newspapers, et cetera.

I think you were apprised of this problem at your Moncton hearings and I think you are at the present time looking into the matter. Do you intend making a decision in the near future about this matter?

Mr. Juneau: If I may, Mr. Corbin, I might say here that the CRTC's decision are public, and I would like to deal only with those decisions which have already been taken by the Commission on those matters.

Mr. Corbin: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, I have no more questions.

Le président: Une question supplémentaire, monsieur Matte, seulement en ce qui concerne les services de radio et de télévision en français sur la Côte-Nord du Nouveau-Brunswick.

Mr. Matte: Just one question. How many French-speaking radio stations are there in the Province of Quebec and how many English-speaking?

Mr. Juneau: Radio or TV?

Mr. Matte: Radio, first.

Mr. Juneau: Mr. Chairman, could I provide the Committee with these figures? My memory is not very good but I could provide you with those figures, as early as tomorrow, if you like.

The Chairman: Mr. Béchard.

Mr. Béchard: Since Mr. Matte's further question had no relationship with Northern New Brunswick or with the TV service in northern New Brunswick, may I in turn put a question with regard to extension of service in my own constituency of Bonaventure, and more particularly to that area which we call the Magdalen Islands? This would refer not to Radio-Canada (French network of the CBC), but to the CBC.

There is a fairly substantial group of English-speaking islanders in the Magdalen Islands. The entire French-speaking population of the area has been served by French TV (Radio-Canada) since 1964 or 1965, I believe. However, the English-speaking people there are fairly isolated. One island in particular Ile-d'Entrée, is isolated from the other islands. It is ten miles away from the nearest island and has no television service whatever. I have been told that, especially since 1963, representations have been made to extend that service to those people. It is a very important service as far as they are pour lequel ils paient comme tous les autres. Est-ce que vous avez prévu, dans votre programme immédiat, l'extension du service de langue anglaise aux îles de la Madeleine?

[Texte]

M. Osler: Il y a combien d'Anglais?

M. Bécharde: Disons quelque mille.

M. Juneau: Dans ce cas, vous voyez tout de suite la différence avec le problème de la population francophone qui n'est pas desservie à l'heure actuelle et qui se chiffre dans les centaines de mille actuellement. Je parle d'une production originale locale. Quant à un service tout court, ça ne se chiffre peut-être pas dans les centaines de mille, mais, dans plusieurs endroits, dans les dizaines de mille; on trouve des poches de dizaines de mille de population. Je pense que le cas de la population de langue anglaise des îles de la Madeleine ressemble à celui de 5 p. 100 de la population canadienne qui ne reçoit pas à l'heure actuelle le service de télévision de Radio-Canada. Cette population est composée de groupes qui varient, je pense, entre précisément 2,000 et 50.

Puisque c'est nous qui sommes sur la sellette, je pourrais obtenir, de la part de Radio-Canada, l'information sur ses plans actuels par rapport à cette région et les remettre au président demain. De mémoire, je ne sais pas à quel endroit se situe, dans le calendrier de Radio-Canada, le service de télévision pour cette population.

M. Mongrain: J'invoque le Règlement, monsieur le président.

The Chairman: I have Mr. De Bané on a supplementary first.

M. De Bané: Une question de privilège.

M. Mongrain: J'ai invoqué le Règlement.

M. Matte: Une question de privilège.

Le président: Pardon, une question de privilège par monsieur Matte.

M. Matte: Mon voisin, M. Bécharde, a fait mention que la question posée n'avait pas de lien avec le nord du Nouveau-Brunswick. Il y avait un lien très étroit. Monsieur venait tout juste de souligner que les postes de Québec desservient le nord du Nouveau-Brunswick. Il y avait un lien.

M. Bécharde: Monsieur Matte, je ne voulais pas vous empêcher de poser votre question, mais j'ai vu que le champ des questions était très restreint. J'ai alors demandé si je pou-concerned. They are very isolated. It seems to me they should enjoy service for which they pay as well as anybody else. Do your present plans include an extension of English-speaking service to the Magdalen Islands?

Mr. Osler: How many English-speaking inhabitants are there?

Mr. Bécharde: A few thousand.

Mr. Juneau: In this case, you can see the difference with the problem of the French-speaking population which is not served at the present time although it numbers some hundreds of thousands. I am speaking of local origin production. As far as service itself is concerned, the figure might not be in the hundreds of thousands, but in several places, at least a few tens of thousands. Now as far as the English-speaking people in the Magdalen Islands are concerned, I might say that their position appears to be similar to that of 5 p. 100 of the Canadian people who do not at the present time benefit from CBC television programming. These people are made up of groups that vary between 2,000 and 50.

Since we are being questioned, I think I might say that I could obtain from the CBC the information on its present plans for that area and I could give it to your Chairman tomorrow, if you like. However, I could not really say when the CBC intends extending TV service for that area.

Mr. Mongrain: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Le président: M. De Bané aurait une question supplémentaire.

M. De Bané: On a question of privilege.

Mr. Mongrain: On a point of order.

Mr. Matte: On a question of privilege.

The Chairman: Excuse me, Mr. Matte, on a question of privilege.

Mr. Matte: My neighbor, Mr. Bécharde, mentioned that my question had no relationship with Northern New Brunswick. There was a very close relationship, though. It had just been pointed out by Mr. Juneau that Quebec stations serve the north shore of New Brunswick. There was a relationship.

Mr. Becharde: Mr. Matte, I did not want to prevent you from putting your question, but since I noticed that the range of the questions was very limited, I asked whether I would be vais, en vertu de la question que vous aviez posée...

[Text]

The Chairman: Mr. Bechard was using your question as an opening to get in his own question.

Mr. De Bané did you have a question on this particular matter?

Mr. De Bané: I cannot use Mr. Bechard's questioning as an opening.

The Chairman: I would say, Mr. De Bané, that of all the members you are the most skilled in making openings where there are none.

Mr. Mongrain, on a directly related supplementary.

Mr. Mongrain: No, it is a point of order.

The Chairman: A point of order, yes.

M. Mongrain: C'est pour faire suite à la demande de M. Matte. Il a posé une question qui serait intéressante. Je me demande si on ne pourrait pas, d'une façon ou d'une autre, l'incorporer au rapport de notre comité. Si M. Juneau pouvait vous fournir le renseignement de très bonne heure demain matin, on pourrait l'incorporer au rapport de nos délibérations, parce que c'est une réponse qui pourrait être intéressante.

The Chairman: Yes. We will do that.

Mr. Mongrain: I have another question but it is on another subject.

The Chairman: Well, in that case you just happen to be the next man on the list.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, je voudrais demander à M. Juneau combien il y a de commissaires sur le Conseil de la radio-télévision?

M. Juneau: Quinze, monsieur.

M. Mongrain: Quel personnel dépend de votre juridiction, à part de ces quinze?

M. Juneau: Le personnel total?

M. Mongrain: Total, oui. Le personnel qui relève de votre juridiction.

M. Juneau: A peu près 164, plus un certain nombre de gens qui sont à contrat.

M. Mongrain: A temps partiel. Vos quartiers généraux sont à quelle adresse?

M. Juneau: A 48, rue Rideau.

allowed, in views of the question you had asked...

Le président: M. Béchard a utilisé votre question comme prétexte pour poser la sienne.

Monsieur De Bané, vous avez une question sur cette question?

M. De Bané: Je ne veux pas me servir de la question de M. Béchard comme prétexte pour poser la mienne.

Le président: Je pense, monsieur De Bané, de tous ceux d'entre nous, vous êtes le plus habile à vous faire des ouvertures lorsqu'il n'y en a pas.

Monsieur Mongrain...

M. Mongrain: J'invoque le règlement.

Le président: Oui.

Mr. Mongrain: To follow up on Mr. Matte's request. His question was interesting. I wonder if it would not be possible in one way or another to have it incorporated in the minutes of our Committee. If Mr. Juneau could provide that information very early tomorrow, for instance, it could be incorporated in the minutes of our proceedings, because this might be an interesting reply.

Le président: Oui nous le ferons.

M. Mongrain: J'ai une autre question, mais c'est sur un autre sujet.

Le président: Vous êtes justement l'orateur suivant sur la liste.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Mr. Juneau how many commissioners we have on the Commission?

Mr. Juneau: Fifteen, sir.

Mr. Mongrain: What is the staff that comes under your jurisdiction, apart from these 15 people?

Mr. Juneau: The total number of staff?

Mr. Mongrain: Yes. The staff under your jurisdiction.

Mr. Juneau: Approximately 164, plus a certain number of employees working on contract.

Mr. Mongrain: Part-time employees. Where are your headquarters?

Mr. Juneau: 48, Rideau Street.

[Texte]

M. Mongrain: Il n'est pas question que vous déménagiez à Montréal, quand l'édifice de Radio-Canada sera établi.

M. Juneau: Il n'en est pas question, ni...

M. Mongrain: Est-ce que je peux vous poser une autre question? Parmi vos commissaires, quelle est la proportion de ceux qui sont bilingues? Quand je dis bilingues, je veux dire raisonnablement bilingues, non pas parfaitement bilingues. Je veux dire ceux qui peuvent comprendre la langue qui n'est pas la leur, et se débrouiller passablement.

M. Juneau: Vous introduisez des critères difficiles à utiliser.

M. Mongrain: Je simplifie la question. Je ne demande pas qu'ils soient parfaitement bilingues. Je veux savoir ceux de langue anglaise qui peuvent comprendre le français et dire quelques mots, ou ceux de langue française qui peuvent comprendre raisonnablement l'anglais et pouvoir dire quelques mots. Je ne vous demande pas un chiffre exact.

M. Juneau: Je pense que ce doit être à peu près 50 p. 100. Sur quinze membres, nous en avons cinq de langue française, ce qui fait tout de suite le tiers. Ensuite, nous avons un autre membre qui parle parfaitement le français, ce qui fait six. Je pense qu'on atteindrait facilement les 50 p. 100, si on utilise le critère que vous avez utilisé vous-même.

M. Mongrain: Au cours de vos délibérations, est-ce que vous avez l'avantage de la traduction simultanée?

M. Juneau: Toujours.

M. Mongrain: Dans le reste du personnel que vous avez mentionné tantôt, quelle serait la proportion des employés qui sont raisonnablement bilingues? Je ne veux pas parler de parfaitement bilingues, mais de ceux qui peuvent se débrouiller.

M. Juneau: Je pourrais vous fournir des renseignements plus précis, si je pouvais le faire demain. Mais, sur le champ, j'ai l'impression que ça doit atteindre facilement 75 p. 100.

M. Mongrain: Cela me suffit. Je vous remercie.

The Chairman: Mr. De Bané, on a supplementary.

Mr. De Bané: No, it is not.

• 1725

The Chairman: That is fine. I have you down here. Following Mr. McCleave you

[Interprétation]

Mr. Mongrain: Is there any question of moving to Montreal in the near future when the CBC building will be built there?

Mr. Juneau: Not at all.

Mr. Mongrain: Can I put another question to you? Among your commissioners, what proportion is bilingual? When I say bilingual I mean reasonably bilingual, not perfectly bilingual. I mean people who can understand a language other than their own, and manage to make themselves understood.

Mr. Juneau: You are introducing criteria that are difficult to apply.

Mr. Mongrain: To simplify matters, I am not asking them to be perfectly bilingual. I want to have an idea of the number of English-speaking commissioners who can understand French and can say a few words in French, or if they are French-speaking, the number of those that can understand English reasonably well and speak a few words. I am not asking you for exact figures.

Mr. Juneau: I think approximately 50 p. 100. Out of 15 members, we have five French-speaking members, so you have one-third right away. Then there is another member who speaks French perfectly. That is six. I think it would be fairly easy to reach 50 p. 100 if we used the criteria you use yourself.

Mr. Mongrain: In your deliberations, do you have the benefit of simultaneous translation?

Mr. Juneau: Invariably.

Mr. Mongrain: In the rest of the staff you mentioned a while ago, what is the proportion of employees who are reasonably bilingual? I am not speaking here of people who are perfectly bilingual. I am speaking of those people who can manage.

Mr. Juneau: I could give you more precise information tomorrow, but right off the bat, I would say that it must be approximately 75 per cent.

Mr. Mongrain: I am satisfied. Thank you.

Le président: Monsieur De Bané, une question supplémentaire.

M. De Bané: Non.

Le président: Je vous avais inscrit à la suite de M. McCleave, monsieur McCleave.

[Text]

would be next on a new subject. Mr. McCleave, on a new subject.

Mr. McCleave: No, you had it before. Thank you, very much.

The Chairman: Mr. De Bané on a new subject.

Mr. Dinsdale: I will try a new subject.

The Chairman: No, you are on next.

M. De Bané: Monsieur le président, au sujet du point qu'a touché M. Matte, notamment celui d'un commentateur d'un poste anglophone de Montréal, j'ai écouté attentivement les critères que vous avez soumis et vous avez expliqué le danger que cela peut jouer dans les deux sens. Je me demande si réellement il faut avoir quelque scrupule pour restreindre la liberté de parole, lorsqu'elle a pour objet et pour fin d'insulter une collectivité. Je pense qu'à ce sujet vos scrupules ne sont pas tellement justifiés.

Je suis obsédé par la liberté d'expression; je tiens à la mienne et je tiens à ce que les autres aient la leur. Mais, je ne vois pas comment vous pourriez avoir quelque scrupule pour la restreindre, lorsqu'un homme se permet, de temps en temps d'une façon explicite, et souvent, avec une toile de fond constante, de laisser percer son mépris pour une collectivité, nommément pour la majorité canadienne-française de la province de Québec. J'ai l'impression que si le CRTC, que vous présidez, ne se montre pas extrêmement énergique sur cette question, je ne peux pas concourir à votre point de vue là-dessus.

M. Juneau: Monsieur De Bané, je ne peux que vous demander de relire, quand vous l'aurez, la transcription de ce que j'ai dit. J'ai dit qu'un organisme comme le nôtre, quand il pense devoir faire quelque chose dans un domaine comme celui-là, doit être très scrupuleux dans les méthodes et les procédures qu'il prend. C'est tout ce que j'ai dit.

Je pense que vous serez d'accord avec moi que, quand on a un rôle judiciaire ou quasi judiciaire, il faut toujours être scrupuleux à l'égard de n'importe qui. Les cours sont scrupuleuses même à l'égard des criminels. Par conséquent, dans une question d'opinion, il faut encore être plus scrupuleux quant aux méthodes, aux procédures et aux critères de jugement qu'on emploie. C'est tout ce que j'ai dit et je pèse mes mots avec beaucoup de soin. Je vous invitais à peser mes mots aussi avec beaucoup de soin.

[Interpretation]

M. McCleave: Non, merci j'ai fini mes questions.

Le président: Monsieur De Bané, alors, sur un nouveau sujet.

M. Dinsdale: J'aimerais aborder un nouveau sujet.

Le président: Vous êtes le suivant; patientez un peu.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the matter raised by Mr. Matte, particularly that of the Montreal announcer of an English-speaking station, I listened very carefully to the criteria that you mentioned and the danger that might be involved in both ways. I wonder if it is really necessary to have any scruples about restraining freedom of speech when its purpose is to insult a whole collectivity. I believe that in this case your scruples are not quite justified.

I am observed by freedom of speech; I cherish my own freedom of speech and I want others to have theirs. But I do not see why you should have any scruples about restraining it when a man takes the liberty, in an explicit way occasionally, and often, with a background of constantly, to show his contempt for a collectivity; i.e. the French-speaking majority in Quebec. I believe that if the CRTC which you chair, does not show itself very forceful in this question, I cannot share your view in this matter.

Mr. Juneau: Mr. De Bané, I can only ask you to read again, when you have it, the transcript of what I said. I said that a body such as ours, when it considers it to be its duty to do something in a field like this one, should be very scrupulous in the means and ways it uses. That is all I said.

I believe that you would agree with me that when you have to play a judicial or semi-judicial role you always have to be scrupulous with every body. Courts are even scrupulous with criminals. Therefore, in a matter of opinion, you should be even more scrupulous as to methods, procedures and the criteria of judgement used. That is all I said, and I weigh my words with great care. I would like to ask you also to weigh my words with great care.

[Texte]

M. De Bané: Je trouve cela absolument parfait; je m'excuse si j'ai mal compris. Je comprends bien que le scrupule que l'on peut mettre à juger une question ne nous empêchera pas quand même de prendre une solution radicale s'il le faut. Il faut quand même le faire d'une façon très scrupuleuse. Je m'excuse si j'ai mal compris.

Voici l'autre question que je voulais vous poser. Au sujet des postes dans les petites localités, je pense qu'il est irréaliste d'espérer que ces postes de télévision ou de radio aient un standard de qualité élevée, si l'on considère leurs moyens financiers actuels et potentiels. Je voudrais vous demander ce que vous pensez de la valeur de la suggestion suivante, soit celle de taxer ou de prélever un pourcentage des profits des postes les plus importants pour le consacrer exclusivement à la création d'émissions originales dans les postes qui sont dans les petits centres. On ne peut réellement pas demander à un petit poste de télévision dans une petite localité de faire des émissions originales.

• 1730

M. Juneau: Puis-je faire quelques commentaires généraux sur cette question-là, qui est très intéressante.

Encore une fois, je vous demanderais d'être tolérants à notre égard si, quand vous faites allusion à des mécanismes précis, nous disons que nous ne sommes pas en mesure de nous prononcer sur des mécanismes précis et très compliqués, comme celui auquel vous avez fait allusion.

Cependant, je crois que peut-être votre suggestion a du bon, nous allons sûrement l'étudier. Comme vous le savez, elle a été mentionnée de temps à autre.

Cependant, au sujet des petits postes, il y a quelques remarques à faire. Plusieurs, la plupart en fait, dans le cas de la télévision en tout cas, et un grand nombre dans le cas de la radio, sont desservis par le réseau de Radio-Canada. Très peu peuvent se prévaloir du service de CTV, parce que ça n'a pas été possible jusqu'à maintenant.

Donc, les productions ambitieuses et coûteuses, il est impossible de prévoir qu'elles soient fournies par les petits postes, mais elles le sont par le réseau, et c'est, dans une grande mesure, la raison pour laquelle le réseau de Radio-Canada existe. D'autre part, le reste du service que ces postes-là sont appelés à fournir n'exige pas nécessairement des dépenses exorbitantes; il est possible qu'ils puissent rendre des services très intéressants sur le plan local, avec des moyens de production relativement restreints.

[Interprétation]

Mr. De Bané: Well that you said is perfect. I apologize if I misunderstood you. I understand quite well that the scruples one can have in assessing a matter will not prevent us from taking radical action if necessary. However, this must be done in a very scrupulous manner. I am sorry if I misunderstood you.

Now the other question I would like to ask you. With regard to stations in small communities, I believe that it is not realistic to hope that these TV or radio stations have a high quality standard, given their financial means, present and potential. So, I would like to ask you what you would think of the following suggestion, i.e. to tax or to levy a percentage on the profits of the most important stations to assign them exclusively to the establishment of original programs in the small community stations. We cannot really ask of TV stations in small communities to have original programs.

Mr. Juneau: May I make a few comments on this question which is very interesting indeed.

Once again, I would like to ask you to be tolerant with us if, when you are referring to specific machinery, we say that we are not in a position to make a decision on specific and highly sophisticated machinery such as the one you just referred to.

However, I think perhaps that your suggestion might be worthwhile. We shall certainly consider it. As you know, it has been mentioned on several occasions.

However, regarding the small stations, several remarks have to be made. Most of these stations, in any case in so far as TV is concerned, and a good number where radio is concerned, benefit from the services of CBC network. Very few can benefit from the CTV service because this has not been possible so far.

Therefore, with regard to costly and ambitious programs, we cannot expect them to be provided by the small stations, but they are provided by the network. And that is to a large extent, why the CBC exists. On the other hand, the rest of the service these stations are called upon to provide does not necessarily require enormous expenditures. It is possible for these stations to provide highly interesting local services with relatively limited means of production.

[Text]

Il m'est souvent, arrivé surtout quand j'étais dans le domaine du cinéma, de recevoir des étrangers au Canada et de les envoyer visiter les petits postes de télévision aux régions frontalières, et à leur retour, je les retrouvais tout à fait émerveillés de l'ingéniosité qu'ils y avaient constatée. Par conséquent, je pense que naturellement, ils ne sont pas capables de produire des émissions de grande envergure, mais ce n'est pas ce qu'ils sont censés faire non plus, ils sont là pour rendre un service local, et beaucoup d'entre eux y arrivent.

M. De Bané: Prenons un exemple. Pouvez-vous me dire combien les postes de télévision privés, affiliés à Radio-Canada, dépensent pour les artistes locaux, pour leur épanouissement, dans leur budget?

M. Juneau: Je ne pense pas qu'ils puissent dépenser beaucoup à cet égard; comme vous le disiez tantôt, ils n'ont pas les budgets non plus pour faire cela.

M. Mongrain: Ils ont des contributions bénévoles, beaucoup.

M. Juneau: Je pense que dans le cas de talent, M. De Bané fait allusion surtout au domaine artistique, disons, au domaine des performances artistiques, et là, bien sûr, les petits postes locaux n'ont pas de gros budgets et il est imprévisible qu'ils en aient bientôt pour ce genre d'activités.

M. De Bané: Il est évident que toutes les émissions de prestige viennent de Radio-Canada, ceci est inévitable, je ne vois pas d'autres solutions. Mais toute région a ses troupes de théâtre, etc, et à ma connaissance, les petits postes ne font rien parce qu'ils ne sont pas capables de faire quoi que ce soit. Alors, partant de ce point de vue, si vous le partagez je me demande s'il ne faudrait pas essayer de trouver un moyen pour les aider, je veux dire, trouver quelques moyens par lesquels une certaine somme leur serait affectée exclusivement pour ces fins précises.

M. Juneau: Nous pouvons sûrement retenir la suggestion, je regrette de ne pas pouvoir vous dire si elle me semble possible ou non, mais c'en est sûrement une qui devrait être prise en considération par le Conseil.

M. De Bané: Dans votre rapport annuel, celui qui sera publié prochainement, y mentionnez-vous une étude assez détaillée des problèmes auxquels font face la radiodiffusion et la télédiffusion au Canada? Envisagez-vous la possibilité de faire une pareille étude?

[Interpretation]

When I was in the cinema industry, I often received foreigners in Canada and sent them on a tour of the small border TV stations, and I would see them coming back amazed by the resourcefulness of these small stations. Consequently, I believe that naturally they are not capable of producing ambitious programs, but they are not expected to do that. What they are supposed to do, is provide local service and they do so in most cases.

Mr. De Bané: Well, let us take an example. Can you tell me how much private TV stations affiliated with the CBC spend for local talent, or how much money they provide for the development of local talent in their own budget?

Mr. Juneau: I do not think they can spend much for the promotion of local talent. As you said earlier, they do not have a sufficient budget to do that.

Mr. Mongrain: But they still have a lot of voluntary contributions.

Mr. Juneau: Well I believe that in the case of talent, Mr. De Bané is mostly referring to the artistic field, that is, the field of artistic performance, and there, of course, small local stations do not have large budgets, and it is very unlikely that they will have them shortly for this type of activity.

Mr. De Bané: It is obvious that all top notch broadcasts originate with the CBC. This is inevitable. I do not see any other solution. But any region has its local theatre groups, et cetera, and to my knowledge, the small stations do not do anything simply because they are not capable of doing any thing. So, starting from this, if you agree with this viewpoint, I wonder if we should not look for a way to assist them by means through which a given amount would be allotted to them exclusively for this specific purpose.

Mr. Juneau: Well, we could certainly keep your suggestion in mind. I am sorry not to be able to tell you whether or not it seems possible to me, but it certainly is a suggestion that should be taken into consideration by the Commission.

Mr. De Bané: Now, in your yearly report, the one to be published shortly, will you include a detailed study of the problems that radio and television broadcasting have to face in Canada? Have you considered the possibility of making a study of this nature?

[Texte]

M. Juneau: Nous aimerions bien que notre prochain rapport annuel fasse autre chose que donner les statistiques conventionnelles qui sont données d'habitude et porte à l'attention du Parlement, et du public que celui-ci représente, les principaux aspects de la radiodiffusion qui nous occupent à l'heure actuelle et qui, bien sûr, préoccupent le Parlement et le public.

M. De Bané: Je vous remercie.

M. Juneau: Dans quelle mesure nous allons réussir, vous jugerez vous-mêmes.

The Chairman: On a new subject, Mr. Dinsdale.

Mr. Dinsdale: I would like to ask a few questions about CATV because I believe the CRTC is charged with this responsibility. Has the freeze been lifted on the expansion of CATV broadcasting or is there still no action possible in this regard?

Mr. Juneau: It is not really a freeze, Mr. Dinsdale. It is really an administrative decision, if I may use a more complicated phrase.

Mr. Dinsdale: The effect is the same.

Mr. Juneau: Yes, you are quite right. The word "freeze" has usually been used by the BBG to express a policy. The BBG will not do this until—you know. But in the case of CATV we just thought that until we had succeeded in dealing with the applications of the existing CATV systems it would be unrealistic to take on the consideration of licences for new systems, and the last time I was discussing it with our people I think we estimated that by the end of the spring, probably, we would start considering new CATV applications.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is there any restriction under the existing policy with respect to multiple ownership for a company already in the broadcasting field through a normal transmitter becoming involved in CATV programming?

Mr. Juneau: No policy restriction has been established by the Commission yet, and if I may just comment off-hand it does not seem to me that there should be any rigid prohibition for broadcasters who want to get involved in CATV. There may be problems in

[Interprétation]

Mr. Juneau: We would like our next yearly report to do something else than give the ordinary statistics that are usually given, and draw the attention of Parliament, and of the general public which the latter represents, to the main features of radio broadcasting with which we are concerned now, and which surely are also of concern to Parliament and the public.

Mr. De Bané: Thank you.

Mr. Juneau: It will be up to you to judge to what extent we shall be successful.

Le président: M. Dinsdale, sur un sujet différent.

M. Dinsdale: Je voudrais poser quelques questions au sujet du système de télévision à antenne collective, car je crois que le CRTC en est chargé.

Est-ce que l'on a levé le gel qui avait été imposé à l'extension de la diffusion par ce système, ou reste-t-il impossible d'agir dans ce sens?

M. Juneau: En fait, ce n'est pas réellement un gel, monsieur Dinsdale. C'est plutôt une décision d'ordre administratif, pour employer une expression plus compliquée.

M. Dinsdale: Le résultat est le même.

M. Juneau: Oui, vous avez parfaitement raison. Le terme «gel» a généralement été utilisé par le BGR pour désigner une politique. Il ne mettra en pratique que . . . vous savez. Mais, dans le cas des systèmes de télévision à antenne collective, nous avons jugé que, tant que nous n'aurions pas fini de nous occuper des demandes des systèmes existants, il serait inutile d'envisager de donner des licences pour de nouveaux systèmes. La dernière fois que j'ai parlé de la question avec mes collègues, nous avons estimé que d'ici la fin du printemps prochain, probablement, nous pourrions commencer à examiner les nouvelles demandes.

M. Dinsdale: Est-ce qu'il y a des restrictions selon la politique actuelle, sur la propriété multiple, dans le cas d'une société déjà établie dans la radiodiffusion par émetteur ordinaire qui voudrait se lancer dans les programmes par système de télévision à antenne collective.

M. Juneau: Il n'y a eu aucune restriction de fixée jusqu'à présent par le Conseil, et, si je peux simplement me permettre une réflexion du passage, il ne me semble pas qu'il doive y avoir d'interdictions rigides à l'intention des sociétés de radiodiffusion qui veulent se lan-individual cases but I do not think there should be a general rule. That is my feeling.

[Text]

Mr. Dinsdale: Is there any policy stiffening, if I may use that phrase, contemplated with respect to multiple ownership of the medium?

Mr. Juneau: I think the CRTC is familiar with the expressions of concern by members of Parliament through reports of Parliamentary committees and by the government in the White Paper on Broadcasting about the general problem of multiple ownership or possible monopolies in the field of broadcasting, and because of that we have been sensitive to any application which seems to present a problem of multiple ownership.

However, we have been careful not to rule rigidly on matters of that kind; that is, to remain as flexible as possible until there is a more precise policy.

Mr. Dinsdale: With respect to the CATV problem would there be any prohibition in licensing if the CATV company came under the category of foreign control or non-Canadian control? Is there any policy in this regard?

Mr. Juneau: At the moment, as you know, the directive which the Governor in Council has sent to us and promulgated does not apply to CATV companies. There was an indication, though, by the Secretary of State that there would be a directive on CATV ownership coming to the Commission—shortly, I suppose.

Mr. Dinsdale: This directive does deal specifically with foreign ownership of other broadcasting facilities?

• 1740

Mr. Juneau: It does deal formally with the foreign ownership of broadcasting companies, yes; broadcasting stations, not broadcasting undertakings which is the technical term for CATV systems.

Mr. Dinsdale: When was that issued?

Mr. Juneau: It was issued in the middle of September.

[Interpretation]

cer dans la télévision à antenne collective. Il y a peut-être des problèmes dans certains cas particuliers, mais je ne pense pas qu'il doive y avoir de règle générale. Du moins, c'est ce que je pense.

M. Dinsdale: Est-ce que l'on envisage un raidissement, disons, de la politique en ce qui concerne la propriété multiple.

M. Juneau: Je pense que le Conseil est parfaitement au courant de l'inquiétude exprimée par les députés dans les rapports des comités parlementaires, et par le gouvernement dans son Livre blanc sur la radiodiffusion en ce qui concerne le problème général de la propriété multiple ou des monopoles éventuels dans le domaine de la radiodiffusion, et c'est pour cette raison que nous avons été très sensibilisés à toute demande qui semble présenter un problème de propriété multiple.

Toutefois, nous avons veillé à ne pas prendre de décisions rigides dans les cas de ce genre, c'est-à-dire à rester aussi souples que possible jusqu'à ce que l'on ait établi une politique plus précise.

M. Dinsdale: En ce qui concerne le problème de la télévision à antenne collective, est-ce qu'il y aurait des interdictions en matière de licences si les sociétés possédant ce système entraient dans la catégorie des sociétés sous dépendance étrangère? Y a-t-il une politique à cet égard?

M. Juneau: Pour le moment, comme vous le savez, les directives que le gouverneur en conseil nous a transmises et a promulguées ne s'appliquent pas aux sociétés de télévision à antenne collective. Le secrétaire d'État nous a laissé entendre, toutefois, qu'une directive serait—bientôt, je suppose—transmise au Conseil au sujet de la propriété de ces systèmes de télévision.

M. Dinsdale: Cette directive traite particulièrement de la possession étrangère d'autres installations de radiodiffusion?

M. Juneau: Oui, elle traite formellement de la possession étrangère de sociétés de radiodiffusion—de stations de radiodiffusion, mais pas d'entreprises de radiodiffusion, qui est le terme technique employé pour désigner les systèmes de télévision à antenne collective.

M. Dinsdale: Quand est-ce que cette directive a été émise?

M. Juneau: A la mi-septembre.

[Texte]

Mr. Dinsdale: The middle of September?

Mr. Juneau: It leaves out CATV systems.

The Chairman: I believe the CRTC information is circulated to members.

Mr. Juneau: Yes, it was in the papers.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I suggest that if we have any vote to take we had better take it now while we have a quorum, because we might lose some of our members.

The Chairman: Mr. Mongrain, the only thing I can say to that is that we have to wait until after we have finished with the questions so we can take a vote on the CRTC item.

Mr. Mongrain: See, there is one going now.

The Chairman: He is coming back; I think we will be all right. Mr. Schumacher, on a new subject.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Chairman I do not know whether this is new, because I was out for a little while. Before I ask my question, I would like to say that I realize the CRTC is a new body but I am in complete sympathy with the views that have been expressed by Mr. Mongrain and Mr. De Bané about certain types of programs that the CBC air in their province.

I believe that the legislation must have had some meaning when Parliament passed it and will be very disappointed if there has not been some progress made by the Commission in using that legislation when it comes back next year or whenever we next have the pleasure of their presence before the Committee. While it may be very difficult, I think that is one of the jobs of the Commission and for one want to see some headway made in that regard. Now, I wonder...

The Chairman: Do you want to impose your taste on the country, Mr. Schumacher?

Mr. Schumacher: No; I want to see the Commission do its job, and if we do not agree with their taste, no doubt you will hear something about it. I think it is better to take a step even if it might be a wrong step; it can always be retrieved. So far as I am concerned

[Interprétation]

M. Dinsdale: Mi-septembre?

M. Juneau: Oui, c'était dans les journaux.

Le président: Je pense que l'on fait circuler parmi les membres du Comité les renseignements fournis par le CRTC.

M. Juneau: Mais on n'y parle pas des systèmes de télévision à antenne collective.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, un rappel au Règlement. Je propose que, si nous avons à voter, nous le fassions tout de suite, tant que nous avons encore le quorum, car il se peut que quelques-uns des membres s'en aillent.

Le président: Monsieur Mongrain, tout ce que je peux répondre, c'est qu'il faut attendre d'en avoir fini avec les questions, afin que nous puissions voter les crédits du CRTC.

M. Mongrain: Vous voyez, il y a déjà quelqu'un qui s'en va.

Le président: Il va revenir; je pense que tout ira bien. Monsieur Schumacher, sur un sujet différent.

M. Schumacher: Monsieur le président, je ne sais pas si c'est quelque chose de nouveau, car je suis parti un instant. Avant de poser ma question, j'aimerais dire que je me rends parfaitement compte du fait que le CRTC est un organisme de création récente, mais je suis tout à fait d'accord avec les opinions exprimées par MM. Mongrain et De Bané en ce qui concerne certaines émissions de Radio-Canada dans leur province.

Je pense que la loi devait avoir une certaine importance au moment où le Parlement l'a adoptée, et je serais très déçu s'il n'y avait pas eu de progrès de réalisé par le Conseil dans l'utilisation de cette loi lorsqu'il reviendra témoigner devant le Comité l'an prochain, ou du moins lors que nous aurons le plaisir de l'avoir de nouveau parmi nous. C'est peut-être très difficile, mais j'estime que c'est l'une des tâches du Conseil, et j'aimerais—et je ne suis sans doute pas le seul—que l'on fasse des progrès dans ce sens. Je me demande...

Le président: Vous voulez imposer vos opinions au pays, monsieur Schumacher?

M. Schumacher: Non, je veux que le Conseil joue son rôle, et, si nous ne sommes pas d'accord avec eux, vous en entendrez certainement parler. Je pense qu'il est préférable de faire un pas, car, même si c'est un faux pas, on peut toujours reculer. A mon avis, il there are things that are wrong going on now and some effort should be made to correct them.

My question really has to do with the estimates we are dealing with and I wonder whether Mr. Juneau could explain whether any new functions have been adopted by the Commission beyond those previously performed by the BBG which would give us some explanation of why the establishment should increase from 94 to 164, and what method was adopted for getting around the freeze in the Public Service. The freeze has been mentioned before and I always understood that there was a freeze, but it would not appear that it has been effective in this particular instance.

Mr. Juneau: I think the explanation in answer to the first question is that the CRTC has taken on a number of new responsibilities which are really responsibilities spelled out, or perhaps not spelled out but quite precisely given in the Act, and the increase in staff has been possible because, I presume, the Treasury Board wanted the Act implemented and had a choice between seeing that Act implemented and not seeing it implemented.

Mr. Schumacher: So there was an exception made in the freeze in regard to your Commission?

Mr. Juneau: Some exemption certainly, because it could not have been done otherwise.

Mr. Osler: You are not civil servants anyway.

Mr. Juneau: Yes, we are. We come under all the controls, which is a problem because in order to deal with an industry which develops at a very rapid pace, we come under controls which make rapid development quite difficult. But anyway, we do operate under the same rules as any other government department.

• 1745

As to the new responsibilities that come with the Act, I can enumerate a few; for instance, all the CATV systems. There are about 500 at the moment operating in the country, which did not come under the BBG and which now come under the CRTC. The mere handling of paper to receive these applications, to deal with them, study them and so on, is considerable.

[Interpretation]

y a des choses qui vont mal en ce moment, et il faudrait faire un effort pour y remédier.

Mais ma question porte, en fait, sur les prévisions budgétaires que nous sommes en train d'étudier. Je me demande si M. Juneau pourrait nous dire s'il y a eu de nouvelles fonctions qui ont été acceptées par le Conseil, en plus de ce que faisait le Bureau des gouverneurs, ce qui nous permettrait peut-être de comprendre pourquoi l'effectif est passé de 94 à 164, et comment l'on a réussi à détourner le gel imposé à la Fonction publique. On a déjà parlé du gel, et j'avais toujours cru comprendre qu'il y avait en effet une situation de gel, mais il semblerait qu'on n'eût pas appliqué la règle dans ce cas particulier.

M. Juneau: Je pense que la réponse à la première question est que le Conseil a assumé un certain nombre de nouvelles fonctions, qui, en fait, sont énoncées—ou, sinon énoncées, du moins clairement indiquées dans la Loi. Et l'augmentation de personnel a été possible parce que le Conseil du Trésor voulait que la Loi soit appliquée, et il avait le choix entre la voir appliquée ou non appliquée.

M. Schumacher: Autrement dit, on a fait exception à la règle du gel dans le cas de votre conseil.

M. Juneau: Disons, oui. Il y a eu certaines exemptions, parce qu'il ne pouvait en être autrement.

M. Osler: De toute façon, vous n'êtes pas fonctionnaires.

M. Juneau: Oui, certainement. Nous sommes soumis à tous les contrôles. C'est évidemment un problème, car pour traiter convenablement avec une industrie qui se développe très rapidement, nous rencontrons des difficultés qui, justement, rendent difficile ce développement rapide. Quoiqu'il en soit, nous sommes nous-mêmes soumis aux mêmes règlements que tous les autres ministères du gouvernement.

En ce qui concerne les autres responsabilités prescrites par la loi, je pourrais en énumérer quelques-unes. D'abord, tous les systèmes de télévision à antenne collective. Il y en a environ 500 au pays qui, autrefois, n'étaient pas soumis au Bureau des gouverneurs de la radiodiffusion, mais qui actuellement, tombent sous la juridiction du CRTC. Simplement la paperasserie que comportent la réception de ces demandes, leur traitement, leur examen, etc., est énorme.

[Texte]

Then under the BBG the licensing function was not carried out by the BBG but by the Department of Transport. The BBG only made recommendations to the Minister of Transport; the Minister of Transport went to Cabinet, obtained approval, and then actually licensed, the stations and there was a fair amount of work involved in the licensing. Under the new Act that is done by the CRTC. I would like to point out, as an example, that there was just about as many people doing that work in the Department of Transport as there were people in the whole Board of Broadcast Governors.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Juneau, would some of these increases be made up of transfers from the Department of Transport to your Commission?

Mr. Juneau: Yes, we transferred 30 people from the Department of Transport.

Regarding other additional programs, the new Act providing for research, so we have set up the beginning of a research group in the CRTC where there did not exist anything before, and you see in the Estimates of this year, 11 people in that area.

The demands in the field of programming have been considerable. The discussion we have just had is an example of the expectations that have been expressed by Parliament and by public opinion in general, so that we have tended to develop our program branch. I must say that we have not succeeded in developing it to carry out all the responsibilities that are expected of us, but we have started and this explains part of the addition.

We have not increased the economic branch very much, although we certainly need more help in that field. But as you know, it is very difficult to recruit economists. We have not increased the technical branch very much, and we have not increased the legal branch. We have increased the secretariat and the administration branch.

Mr. Schumacher: I have only one further question, and that relates to the description "administrative and foreign service personnel". What foreign service activities do you have?

Mr. Juneau: We do not have any. This is a general administrative category which is applied to us.

[Interprétation]

Autrefois, du temps du BGR, la délivrance des permis ne se faisait pas par le Bureau des gouverneurs, mais par le ministère des Transports. Le BGR faisait seulement les recommandations au ministre des Transports qui se rendait au Cabinet, obtenait son approbation et délivrait effectivement le permis aux postes. Cette tâche comportait une bonne somme de travail. Au terme de la nouvelle loi, ce travail est confié au CRTC. Je voudrais signaler ici un simple exemple: au ministère des Transports, il y avait presque autant de personnes pour accomplir ce travail qu'il y avait d'employés au Bureau des gouverneurs de la radiodiffusion.

M. Schumacher: Monsieur Juneau, une bonne partie de votre personnel vient du ministère des Transports, n'est-ce pas?

M. Juneau: Oui, nous avons reçu 30 personnes du ministère des Transports.

Pour ce qui est des autres programmes, la nouvelle Loi prévoit des travaux de recherche. Nous avons donc créé l'embryon d'un groupe de recherche au Conseil où il n'y avait rien d'autre avant. Vous voyez donc dans les Prévisions budgétaires de cette année, onze nouveaux postes dans ce domaine.

La demande a été forte dans le domaine de la programmation. La discussion que nous venons d'avoir montre un peu ce que le Parlement et le public attendent de nous. Nous avons donc eu tendance à accroître la direction de nos programmes. Je dois dire que nous n'y sommes pas encore tout à fait parvenus. Nous ne pouvons pas nous acquitter entièrement de nos responsabilités à ce point de vue, mais nous avons commencé. C'est ce qui explique une partie du nombre des nouveaux postes.

Nous n'avons pas augmenté sensiblement notre direction de l'économie bien que nous ayons sûrement besoin de plus d'aide dans ce domaine. Mais vous n'êtes pas sans savoir que le recrutement des économistes est difficile. Nous n'avons pas beaucoup augmenté les directions technique et juridique. Nous avons augmenté le secrétariat et la direction de l'administration.

M. Schumacher: Une autre question seulement. Vous parlez de personnel administratif et de service étranger. En quoi consiste ce service étranger?

M. Juneau: Nous n'en avons pas. Je pense qu'il s'agit là d'une catégorie administrative générale qui s'applique à nous.

Mr. Schumacher: I am sorry, I did not understand.

The Chairman: Mr. Juneau, do you have the information which Mr. Matte requested. on the number of stations in Quebec?

Mr. Juneau: Yes, we have.

En réponse à la question de M. Matte, monsieur le président, il y a dans la province de Québec 51 postes de radio AM de langue française et 7 de langue anglaise. Il y a 45 postes de télévision, y compris les postes de relais, dont certains sont très petits. Donc au total 45 de langue française, 5 de langue anglaise, y compris les postes de relais. Il y a 10 postes de modulation de fréquence, de langue française, et quatre de langue anglaise.

The Chairman: If that is all, I will thank Mr. Juneau and Mr. Boyle on your behalf for a very excellent presentation. I think we all learned a great deal from it. We look forward to seeing them some time in the new year, and continuing this very interesting discussion.

I will now call Items No. 40 and No. 70.

Department of the Secretary of State

E—CANADIAN RADIO- TELEVISION COMMISSION

Items 40 and 70 carried.

The Chairman: I will call Items 55 and 60, and then Item 50.

Department of the Secretary of State

I—NATIONAL FILM BOARD

- 55 Administration, Production and Distribution of Films and other Visual Materials... 9,426,300
60 Acquisition of Equipment... 573,700
10,000,000

[Interpretation]

M. Schumacher: Je regrette, je n'ai pas compris.

Le président: Monsieur Juneau, avez-vous les renseignements que M. Matte vous avait demandés sur le nombre de postes au Québec?

M. Juneau: Oui, nous les avons.

Mr. Matte, to answer the question you put a while ago, we have in the Province of Quebec 51 French-speaking AM radio stations and 7 English-speaking stations. There are 45 TV stations, including relay stations, some of which are very small. That is a total of 45 French-speaking, and 5 English-speaking, including relay stations. We have 10 French-speaking FM stations, and 4 English-speaking stations.

Le président: Si c'est tout, je vais remercier MM. Juneau et Boyle en votre nom de leur très excellente présentation. Ils nous ont beaucoup instruits. J'espère que nous pourrions vous revoir l'an prochain pour continuer cette intéressante discussion.

Je vais maintenant mettre en délibération les crédits 40 et 70.

Secrétariat d'État

E—Conseil de la radio-télévision canadienne

- 40 Traitements et autres

- 50 Payments to the National Arts Centre Corporation to be used for the purposes set out in the National Arts Centre Act... 1,078,000

Items 55 and 60 carried.

Item 50 carried, on division.

The Chairman: I would like to call Item No. 30, which is the CBC. We did not call the CBC here on the agreement that they would be the first to come in the new year.

Department of the Secretary of State

C—CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

- 30 Grant in respect of the net operating amount required to discharge the responsibilities of the broadcasting service (Details, page 449)... 151,100,000

—Appropriation not required for 1968-69 (Details, page 449)... 151,100,000

Item 30 carried.

The Chairman: The items of the Secretary of State, Item No. 1.

Mr. Dinsdale: One question, Mr. Chairman. The appearance of the CBC in the new year, presume, will be a part of our interim report recommendations.

The Chairman: When we discussed whether or not to have the CBC, they said that they would not be ready until the new year because of the reorganizations they were carrying out, and they agreed to make themselves available at the beginning of the new year when we have the Estimates for the next year. They have already agreed to this, so there is no problem at all.

Mr. Dinsdale: But we could make it a recommendation of the Committee.

The Chairman: If the Committee wishes.

Mr. Dinsdale: It does not have to be recommended, if it has already been settled.

Mr. Stanbury: The Committee has the right to call whom it wishes. We do not have to commend to Parliament every time we do something.

The Chairman: It has already been settled.

national des arts

- 50 Paiements à la Corporation du Centre national des arts devant servir aux fins prévues dans la Loi sur le Centre national des arts: 1,078,000.

Credits 55 et 60 adoptés.

Crédit 50 adopté sur division.

Le président: Je voudrais mettre en délibération le crédit 30, Radio-Canada. Nous n'avons pas fait venir ses représentants à condition qu'ils soient les premiers à comparaître l'année prochaine.

Secrétariat d'État

C—Société-Radio-Canada

- 30 Subvention à l'égard des frais d'exploitation nets nécessaires au Service national de radiodiffusion pour que la Société s'acquitte de ses obligations: 151,100,000

Crédit 30 adopté.

Les crédits du secrétariat d'État, crédit 1..

M. Dinsdale: Une question, monsieur le président, nous recommanderons, je pense, que Radio-Canada compareisse au début de l'an prochain, dans notre rapport intérimaire.

Le président: Lorsque nous avons parlé de faire venir Radio-Canada, on nous a dit que ses représentants ne seraient pas prêts à comparaître avant l'an prochain à cause des réorganisations en cours. Ils ont promis cependant de venir devant nous au début de l'an prochain, lorsque nous aurons en main les Prévisions budgétaires de l'an prochain. Radio-Canada s'est déjà mis d'accord avec nous là-dessus. Il n'y a donc aucun problème.

M. Dinsdale: Nous pourrions en faire une recommandation du Comité.

Le président: Si le Comité le désire.

M. Dinsdale: Nous n'avons pas à le proposer puisque c'est déjà fait.

M. Stanbury: Le Comité a le droit de citer qui il veut. Nous n'avons pas besoin de faire de recommandation au Parlement chaque fois que nous faisons quelque chose.

Le président: C'est déjà fait.

[Text]

Mr. Dinsdale: This Committee makes no decisions at all. It just goes through the motions, round and round and round.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Dinsdale keeps going round and round.

The Chairman: Item No. 2, the Secretary of State. Shall it carry?

Mr. Dinsdale: I wish the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister would not make personal references. It is not customary even in the House of Commons to make personal references to Members, and I think we should practise the same rules of courtesy here.

Mr. Stanbury: I would look forward to that.

Mr. Dinsdale: It lowers the standard.

Mr. Stanbury: It is customary too, Mr. Chairman, to stick to facts here and not to put forward statements like the one that was put forward last week at the last meeting, full of misstatements by the so-called chief critic for the Opposition.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I think we are bound by the same rules of procedure and courtesy that apply in the House of Commons. And I think I must insist that they be followed.

The Chairman: I think Mr. Dinsdale's point about personal references is well taken.

Mr. Stanbury: I would not make any personal references.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I would be interested to hear what Mr. Dinsdale has to say now. He has a recommendation.

The Chairman: We have one complication here which we have to get over which was just drawn to my attention about five minutes ago by the Clerk. Unbeknownst to me, we also have an item of a loan for the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation amounting to $10,500,000, which was thrown in quite by accident. It is in our original order of reference.

An hon. Member: The poor taxpayer.

The Chairman: It is only a loan. I wonder if I might call that item too. It is Item No. L1.

An hon. Member: What page?

The Chairman: In the Revised Estimates, page 576.

Mr. Mongrain: A loan to the CBC?

[Interpretation]

M. Dinsdale: Ce Comité ne prend aucune décision. Il se contente d'étudier et de réétudier les propositions.

M. Stanbury: Comme M. Dinsdale qui tourne toujours en rond.

Le président: Crédit 2, le Secrétariat d'État. Sera-t-il adopté?

M. Dinsdale: J'aimerais bien que le secrétaire parlementaire du secrétaire d'État ne fasse pas d'allusions personnelles. Ce n'est pas d'usage d'agir ainsi, même à la Chambre des communes, et je crois que nous devrions observer ici les mêmes règles de courtoisie.

M. Stanbury: J'aimerais bien voir cela.

M. Dinsdale: Cela diminue la qualité.

M. Stanbury: Il est également d'usage, monsieur le président, d'en rester aux faits. Je ne pense pas que nous devrions accepter ici des déclarations aussi inexactes que celle qui a été présentée ici la semaine dernière, à la dernière réunion par celui qu'on appelle «le grand critique de l'Opposition».

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, nous sommes soumis aux mêmes règles de procédure et de courtoisie qui s'appliquent à la Chambre des communes. Je pense que je dois exiger qu'on les observe.

Le président: M. Dinsdale n'a peut-être pas tout à fait tort.

M. Stanbury: Mes déclarations n'avaient rien de personnel.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, cela m'intéresserait d'entendre ce que M. Dinsdale a à dire. Il veut faire une recommandation.

Le président: Il y a une complication ici que vient de me signaler le secrétaire il y a environ 5 minutes. J'ignorais que nous avons un prêt pour la Société canadienne des télécommunications transmarines, qui se chiffre à $10,500,000, qui revient sur le sujet par pur hasard. C'est dans notre ordonnance constitutive originale.

Un député: Pauvres contribuables!

Le président: Ce n'est qu'un prêt. Je me demande si je peux aussi mettre ce crédit aux voix: c'est le crédit L1.

Un député: A quelle page?

Le président: A la page 576 des Prévisions budgétaires.

M. Mongrain: Un prêt à Radio-Canada?

[Texte]

The Chairman: No, Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Givens: How is that secured, is there any interest?

The Chairman: If I may read the whole Item, it says:

Loans to the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation in accordance with Section 14 of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act for additions and betterments to facilities.

Mr. Givens: Could I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman? Would it be possible in future meetings to be provided with an agenda, with the relevant material pertaining to the items on the agenda, to indicate to us in the agenda what votes you intend to put to us and what decisions we are supposed to make.

We are talking about a $10 million loan. I have not the faintest idea of what you are talking about. If I were advising a client to sign a mortgage for $10 million without giving him more facts than what I have right now, I would tell him to go to the insane asylum.

• 1755

The Chairman: Mr. Givens, our problem has been that we have usually reached a point where we had a quorum in our proceedings and by the end of the meeting our quorum has evaporated, and we have not been able to call the Item to have a vote on it.

Mr. Givens: Forget about the quorum for the moment.

The Chairman: You are well aware of the difficulties we had rounding up a quorum, and particularly in the person of yourself.

Mr. Givens: I am well rounded, Mr. Chairman. Can we have an agenda at future meetings telling us in advance, for instance 24 hours, what we are supposed to talk about? For instance, I would have liked to have had with Mr. Juneau and Mr. Boyle here, the regulations and other things pertaining to the CRTC. It is a new outfit; I am new. I think we could have asked more intelligent questions than some of us asked, perhaps, if we had had this information previously. Is this possible? And if it is possible, could we do it?

The Chairman: There is no difficulty about it, and if members like, we will prepare a

[Interprétation]

Le président: Non, un prêt à la Société canadienne des télécommunications transmarines.

Un député: Expliquez-vous.

M. Givens: Comment est-ce garanti? Y a-t-il de l'intérêt?

Le président: Je vais vous lire le crédit en entier:

Prêts à la Société canadienne des télécommunications transmarines, en conformité de l'article 14 de la Loi sur la Société canadienne des télécommunications transmarines, pour acquisition d'autres biens et améliorations.

M. Givens: Point d'ordre, monsieur le président. Serait-il possible à l'avenir, qu'on nous donne un ordre du jour avec la documentation relative aux articles qu'il contient, et de nous indiquer sur l'ordre du jour les crédits que vous entendez mettre aux voix et les décisions que nous sommes censés prendre?

Nous parlons d'un prêt d'environ $10 millions et je ne sais même pas de quoi vous parlez. Je n'oserais conseiller à un client de signer une hypothèque de $10 millions sans plus de documentation que j'en ai à présent. Je ferais aussi bien de l'envoyer à l'asile d'aliénés.

Le président: Monsieur Givens, le problème a été qu'à un moment, nous avons eu le quorum à nos délibérations, mais avant la fin de la réunion, nous n'avions plus le quorum et nous ne pouvions mettre le crédit en délibération pour le faire voter.

M. Givens: Nous ne parlons pas du quorum pour le moment.

Le président: Vous savez que nous avons du mal à atteindre le quorum, surtout lorsqu'il s'agit de vous rejoindre.

M. Givens: Je suis facile à rejoindre, monsieur le président. Pourriez-vous nous donner un ordre du jour aux prochaines réunions pour nous dire 24 heures à l'avance de quoi nous sommes censés parler?

Puisque M. Boyle et M. Juneau étaient ici, j'aurais aimé avoir les règlements et autres documents relatifs au CRTC. Je suis nouveau ici. Je pense que nous aurions pu poser des questions plus intelligentes si nous avions eu ces renseignements. Est-ce possible, et si oui, pourrions-nous le faire?

Le président: Cela ne présente aucune difficulté. Si les députés le veulent, nous préweekly agenda and we will prepare a meeting agenda.

Mr. Givens: I so move.

Mr. Stanbury: Documents usually are the responsibility of the members, since most of them are circulated and most of them are available.

Mr. Givens: Could you guide us as to where we can find them?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Givens: I would like to know where to find some of these things.

The Chairman: Perhaps you can see the Chairman afterwards, Mr. Givens.

Mr. Givens: No, put it on a piece of paper when you have the agenda that such and such a document can be obtained in the Library or somewhere, to save us time.

The Chairman: Yes, we can do this.

Mr. De Bané: Is it understood that we approved the credits?

The Chairman: Yes, we have done the CBC.

Mr. Stanbury: It is all spent, anyway.

Mr. Chairman: We ran into difficulties with the CBC because of the internal reorganizations which they are going through. We discussed it in the Steering Meeting and discussed it in the Committee, and the agreement was reached that they would be the first to come in the new year when we received the next year's estimates.

Mr. De Bané: Are we approving them now?

The Chairman: Yes, we must approve them.

Mr. De Bané: Why must we?

The Chairman: Well, the Estimates must be reported back, and therefore we have to...

Mr. De Bané: They have to be reported back. But now?

The Chairman: This will conclude our hearing, not by the choice of the Chairman of the Steering Committee, but because there is no more time left.

M. Givens: J'en fais une proposition.

M. Stanbury: La question des documents, d'ordinaire, dépend des députés. La plupart sont distribués et on peut facilement se les procurer.

M. Givens: Pouvez-vous nous indiquer où les trouver?

Le président: Oui.

M. Givens: J'aimerais savoir où nous pouvons trouver certains de ces documents.

Le président: Ne pourriez-vous pas voir le président après, monsieur Givens?

M. Givens: Non. Quand vous avez en main l'ordre du jour, vous n'avez qu'à noter que nous pouvons trouver tel ou tel document à la Bibliothèque ou ailleurs, pour nous sauver du temps.

Le président: Oui, nous pouvons faire cela.

M. De Bané: Nous avons bien adopté les crédits, n'est-ce pas?

Le président: Oui, nous l'avons fait pour Radio-Canada.

M. Stanbury: Radio-Canada a-t-il tout dépensé?

Le président: Nous avons eu certaines difficultés avec Radio-Canada à cause de sa réorganisation interne. Nous avons discuté la chose au comité de direction et au Comité, et Radio-Canada a promis de comparaître dès que nous aurons reçu les Prévisions budgétaires de l'an prochain.

M. De Bané: Faut-il les approuver maintenant?

Le président: Oui, il le faut.

M. De Bané: Pourquoi?

Le président: Nous devons faire rapport des prévisions budgétaires, et nous devons donc...

M. De Bané: Nous devons en faire rapport maintenant?

Le président: Ceci mettra fin à notre audience, non pas parce que le président du comité de direction le veut, mais parce qu'il ne nous reste plus de temps.

mates were prepared, which is getting to be quite a long time ago now. About 80 per cent of them at least have been spent, and I would say that 100 per cent of them have been committed. So that while it would be very nice to be able to go over them, it would be a very academic exercise. If by accident we are not able to go over them and we can take a poke at it in the new year, we will be dealing with much more current material anyway, and when the new management is straightened out and has its philosophy, it will be able to talk to us intelligently.

The Chairman: This is the reason why we did not request them to appear.

M. De Bané: Monsieur le président, le rôle des parlementaires est de légiférer et de contrôler les deniers publics. Et si nous faisons ce travail de façon académique, aussi bien dire que nous sommes absolument inutiles. Je comprends très bien que certains facteurs qui nous empêchent de faire notre travail, mais il faut qu'on sache que nous ne pouvons faire notre travail. Non, moi franchement, je...

The Chairman: This item, Mr. De Bané, was brought up in the Steering Committee and it was discussed and it was reported back to the Committee and ...

Mr. Mongrain: What was the wish of the Committee?

The Chairman: The Committee agreed that we would pass their item on the condition that they would be the first ones to appear with the 1969-1970 Estimates.

Mr. Mongrain: You were speaking of this loan? Ten million?

The Chairman: No, no. This is the CBC.

Mr. Mongrain: The CBC.

The Chairman: Like most of the Committees we only have so much time available for sitting and we must make a decision as to how we are going to spend it. This Committee chose to spend a great deal of time investigating the construction of the National Arts Centre.

I have one item left to call and I am going to call it again: this is the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation loans. These are loans for the betterment of facilities and are done under statute.

Mr. Dinsdale: How does it come under this Committee?

Canada au moment où ont été préparées les dernières prévisions budgétaires. Et cela remonte assez loin. Environ 80 p. 100 de cette somme-là a été dépensé et 100 p. 100 de ces crédits ont été engagés. Il serait très bon de pouvoir les revoir, mais ce serait parfaitement inutile. Si, par hasard, nous ne pouvons pas examiner les crédits et que nous pouvons y revenir l'an prochain, nous parlerons de chiffres beaucoup plus courants. Lorsque la nouvelle direction de Radio-Canada aura régularisé ses affaires et établi sa politique, elle pourra traiter avec nous intelligemment.

Le président: C'est pourquoi nous ne lui avons pas demandé de comparaître. Well, this is the reason ...

Mr. De Bané: The role of parliamentarians is to legislate and control public moneys. If we do this in an academic way we might as well say that we are absolutely useless. I have no trouble at all in understanding that some things prevent us from doing our work properly, but we should be told about them. Frankly, I ...

Le président: Monsieur De Bané, cette question a été soulevée au comité de direction et discutée. Il en a été fait rapport au Comité.

M. Mongrain: Quel était le désir du Comité?

Le président: Le Comité a promis d'adopter le crédit sur la promesse que lui a faite la direction de Radio-Canada d'être la première à comparaître pour les prévisions budgétaires de 1969-1970.

M. Mongrain: Vous parliez de ce prêt? Dix millions de dollars?

Le président: Non. Il s'agit de Radio-Canada.

M. Mongrain: Radio-Canada.

Le président: Comme la plupart des comités, nous n'avons qu'un certain nombre d'heures pour siéger, et il nous faut décider comment nous allons les employer. Notre Comité a jugé préférable de passer beaucoup de temps à faire enquête sur la construction du Centre national des Arts.

Il me reste un crédit à mettre en délibération: les prêts à la Société canadienne des télécommunications transmarines. Ce sont des prêts en vue de l'amélioration des installations, et ils sont faits conformément à la loi.

M. Dinsdale: Comment se fait-il que cela relève de notre Comité?

[Text]

The Chairman: It was referred in the order of the House of Commons on October 16 and I must apologize to the Committee that I did not pick it up when I was going through the items which I presented to the Steering Committee to discuss.

Mr. Givens: What is this, a federal agency?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Corbin: Should that not be under Transport and Communications?

The Chairman: There were a number of items, Mr. Corbin, which were supposed to be under our Committee which were removed. For example, we are supposed to have all the items under the Secretary of State but I note that one item, the Company of Young Canadians, was diverted to Miscellaneous Estimates...

Mr. McCleave: You have to be lucky sometimes.

• 1800

The Chairman: I note also that the Chief Electoral Officer was diverted to Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Dinsdale: We have been diverted all over the place.

Mr. Mongrain: I feel we should have more detail than this, but bearing in mind these estimates will come back to the House of Commons where we can discuss them and ask questions of the Minister concerned, I agree that we vote this loan. It seems to be Government policy and we can ask questions in the House when it comes back.

The Chairman: May I call this item? L1. Carried?

Mr. Mongrain: Yes, carried.

The Chairman: This meeting stands adjourned. Yes?

M. De Bané: Je voudrais que nous prenions la décision ferme que dorénavant les séances seront précédées d'un ordre du jour et, si possible, de documents. Cet après-midi, nous avons M. Juneau avec nous. Moi, je m'intéresse à cette question mais je n'y ai aucune compétence particulière...

The Chairman: Yes, we have already agreed to do that.

[Interpretation]

Le président: C'était dans l'ordre de renvoi de la Chambre des communes du 16 octobre, et je m'excuse auprès du Comité pour ne l'avoir pas mentionné lorsque je citais les crédits présentés au comité de direction aux fins des délibérations.

M. Givens: S'agit-il d'un organisme fédéral?

Le président: Oui.

M. Corbin: Cela ne devrait-il pas relever des Transports et des Communications?

Le président: Monsieur Corbin, il y a plusieurs crédits qui devaient être étudiés par notre Comité et que l'on nous a retirés. Par exemple, nous sommes censés être chargés de tous les crédits du secrétariat d'État, mais je vois que ceux de la Compagnie des jeunes Canadiens, par exemple, ont été confiés au Comité des Prévisions budgétaires en général...

M. McCleave: Il faut bien être chanceux de temps à autre.

Le président: Je vois aussi que les crédits du directeur général des élections ont été renvoyés au Comité des Privilèges et Elections.

M. Dinsdale: On nous a éparpillés un peu partout.

M. Mongrain: J'estime que nous devrions avoir davantage de détails, mais, étant donné que ces prévisions budgétaires seront de nouveau présentées à la Chambre des communes, où nous pourrons en discuter et poser des questions au ministre intéressé, je suis d'accord pour que nous votions ce prêt. Ceci semble être la politique du gouvernement, et nous pourrons toujours poser des questions à la Chambre lorsque les crédits seront de nouveau examinés.

Le président: Puis-je mettre le crédit L1 en délibération? Adopté?

M. Mongrain: Oui, adopté.

Le président: La séance est levée. Oui?

Mr. De Bané: Could we in future have an agenda and documentation? This afternoon we had Mr. Juneau with us and I, for one, am interested in that subject but I have not any particular knowledge of it.

Le président: Oui, nous nous sommes déjà mis d'accord là-dessus.

[Texte]

Mr. De Bané: This is a firm decision?

The Chairman: This is a firm decision by the Chair and the Clerk has the honour of carrying it out.

Mr. De Bané: When will we receive the agenda?

The Chairman: As early as possible. The only other item of business I have is this: I would like to ask Mr. Matte and Mr. Dinsdale when it would be convenient to meet to start work on our report as part of the agenda committee?

Mr. Dinsdale: Early next week would be fine.

The Chairman: Early next week.

M. Matte: Je serai aux Nations Unies du 1<sup>er</sup> au 15 décembre, malheureusement.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, notre collègue pourrait demander au chef de son partie de déléguer quelqu'un à sa place pour lire la procédure et se faire une idée du rapport.

The Chairman: Perhaps I will meet with the other members and we will set a mutually accommodating time early next week. Then, when the Committee has come up with its first draft, we will call a meeting in camera to discuss it.

Mr. Mongrain: Do not make it Monday, if that is possible.

The Chairman: All right. This meeting stands adjourned. Thank you all very much.

[Interprétation]

M. De Bané: Est-ce une décision ferme?

Le président: C'est une décision ferme prise par le président, et c'est au secrétaire que revient l'honneur de l'exécuter.

M. De Bané: Quand recevrons-nous l'ordre du jour?

Le président: Le plus tôt possible. Une chose encore: j'aimerais demander à M. Matte et à M. Dinsdale quand il serait commode de nous réunir, en tant que partie du Comité du programme et de la procédure, pour commencer à travailler à notre rapport.

M. Dinsdale: Cela me conviendrait au début de la semaine prochaine.

Le président: Au début de la semaine prochaine?

Mr. Matte: I will be at the United Nations from December 1 to 15.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, our colleague might ask his party leader to delegate someone in his stead to read the minutes and get an idea of this report.

Le président: J'aurai peut-être une réunion avec les autres membres, et nous fixerons un moment qui convienne à tout le monde au début de la semaine prochaine. Puis, lorsque le Comité aura rédigé son premier projet de rapport, nous aurons une séance à huis clos pour en discuter.

M. Mongrain: Pas lundi, si possible.

Le président: Entendu. La séance est levée. Je vous remercie tous infiniment.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

(Visit to CBC and NFB—Montreal)

MONDAY, February 10, 1969

The Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts met this day at the Ottawa Station at 12.10 p.m. and left by train for Montreal.

Members present in Montreal: Messrs. Barrett, Broadbent, Comeau, Corbin, Dinsdale, Guilbault, Matte, Mongrain, Osler, Reid, Schumacher, Stafford, Stanbury, Stewart (Cochrane), Valade—(15).

The Committee met at 3.15 p.m. at the Windsor Hotel in an informal meeting with the Montreal Branch of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers.

Statements were made by Messrs. Wally Gentleman, Chairman, National Brief Committee, Bob Brooks, Vice-President, and Arthur Lamothe, Association des Producteurs de Québec; they dealt with their present conditions and problems and submitted recommendations for improving the film industry.

The witnesses were examined on their statements and supplied additional information.

The questioning of the witnesses being concluded, at 4.45 p.m., the Committee dispersed.

The Committee then met at 5.15 p.m., in the Windsor Hotel, together with the officers of the Quebec Division of the French networks, and heard addresses of welcome from Dr. George Davidson, President of the C.B.C. and Mr. John Reid, Chairman of the Committee.

After dinner, the Committee witnessed a broadcast recording of "Chez Miville" on the French Radio Network, and later, a broadcast recording of "Comedy Cafe" on the English television network.

At 9.45 p.m., the Committee dispersed.

PROCÈS-VERBAUX

(Visite de CBC et ONF—Montréal)

Le LUNDI le 10 février 1969

Le Comité permanent de la radiodiffusion, des films et de l'assistance aux arts s'est réuni aujourd'hui à 12 h. 10 à la Gare d'Ottawa et s'est rendu à Montréal par le train.

Étaient présents à Montréal: MM. Barrett, Broadbent, Comeau, Corbin, Dinsdale, Guilbault, Matte, Mongrain, Osler, Reid, Schumacher, Stafford, Stanbury, Stewart (Cochrane), Valade—(15).

Le Comité s'est réuni à 15 h. 15 à l'Hôtel Windsor pour entendre les membres de la Société canadienne des cinéastes, section de Montréal.

Des mémoires ont été présentés par MM. Wally Gentleman, président du National Brief Committee, Bob Brooks, vice-président, et Arthur Lamothe, de l'Association des producteurs du Québec; ces mémoires se rapportent aux conditions actuelles et aux problèmes que rencontre l'industrie du film, et proposent des recommandations pour l'amélioration de ces conditions.

Les témoins ont été questionnés en rapport avec leurs mémoires et ont fourni des renseignements supplémentaires.

La période de questions étant terminée, le comité s'est dispersé à 16 h. 45.

Le Comité s'est réuni à nouveau à 17 h. 15 pour entendre les directeurs de la division du Québec des réseaux français. Le président de la Société Radio-Canada, M. George Davidson, et M. John Reid, président du Comité ont prononcé une allocution de bienvenue.

Après le dîner, le Comité a assisté à l'enregistrement de l'émission «Chez Miville» du réseau français de radio, puis à l'enregistrement de «Comedy Café», une émission de télévision du réseau anglais de télévision.

A 21 h. 45 le Comité s'est dispersé.

TUESDAY, February 11, 1969.

Le MARDI 11 février 1969.

The Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts proceeded by bus at 9.00 a.m. to the C.B.C. workshops.

The Committee toured the C.B.C. workshops and viewed the set designs in construction stage and heard explanations of various operations involved in the creation of the sets. The Committee then proceeded to another warehouse and viewed a wide range of studio props and stores required for various studio productions.

The Committee then proceeded by bus to the Expo site and toured the International Broadcasting Centre where explanations were given on various phases of the studio operations including technical explanations of the Master Controls.

After lunch, the Committee proceeded to the Radio-Canada Building where the members toured various studios and saw test rehearsals, radio master control and recording studios and were given explanations on their operations.

The Committee then viewed the model of Place Radio-Canada, the major consolidation project of C.B.C. facilities in the Montreal area. Messrs. Cahoon, Grover, Ste-Marie and Sidney made statements concerning the planning and proposed facilities for this new C.B.C. complex; they were examined on their statements and supplied additional information.

At 4.45 p.m., the members dispersed.

WEDNESDAY, February 12, 1969.

The Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts proceeded by bus at 9.20 a.m. to the National Film Board.

In attendance: From the National Film Board: Messrs. H. McPherson, Government Film Commissioner; G. Bertrand, General Manager; R. Payne, Director of Technical and Production Services; J. Godbout, Director of Production (French); F. Spiller,

Le Comité permanent de la radiodiffusion, des films et de l'assistance aux arts s'est rendu par autobus aux ateliers de la Société Radio-Canada. Le Comité a visité les ateliers des décors en fabrication et a reçu de nombreuses explications sur la réalisation des décors. Le Comité a ensuite visité un autre magasin et a remarqué un appareillage considérable destiné aux diverses émissions en studio.

Le Comité s'est ensuite rendu sur le site de l'Expo et a visité le Centre international de Radiotélévision où il a reçu de nombreuses explications y compris le fonctionnement de la régie centrale.

Après le déjeuner, le Comité s'est rendu au siège de la Société Radio-Canada. Les membres du Comité ont visité de nombreux studios, ont assisté à des répétitions; lors de cette visite ils ont reçu des explications sur le fonctionnement de la régie centrale, et des studios d'enregistrement, etc. . . .

Le Comité a ensuite étudié la maquette de la Place Radio-Canada, le projet le plus important de centralisation des opérations de la Société Radio-Canada à Montréal. MM. Cahoon, Grover, Sainte-Marie et Sidney ont déposé des mémoires concernant la planification et les futures installations du nouvel édifice. Ils ont été interrogés sur les points pertinents de leurs mémoires et ont fourni des renseignements supplémentaires.

Le Comité s'est ajourné à 16 h. 45.

Le MERCREDI 12 février 1969.

Le Comité permanent de la Radiodiffusion, des films, et de l'assistance aux arts s'est rendu par autobus à l'Office national du film, à 9 h. 20 de l'avant-midi.

Étaient présents: De l'Office national du Film: MM. H. McPherson, Commissaire du gouvernement à la cinématographie; G. Bertrand, Directeur général, R. Payne, Directeur des services techniques et de la production, J. Godbout, Directeur de la Director of Production (English); W. S. Jobbins, Director of Distribution; G. Graham, Director of Planning and Research; D. B. E. Greenway, Director of Financial and Administrative Services; M. Devlin, Director of Personnel; E. S. Coristine, Secretary of the Board; I. MacNeill, English Program Director; J. Bobet, French Program Director.

Dr. Hugo McPherson, Film Commissioner, welcomed the Committee and then called Messrs. Spiller and Godbout who made introductory remarks on film program.

Five National Film Board productions were shown to members of the Committee, namely, "Challenge for Change", "King-Size"—anti smoking film, "le beau plaisir", "60 cycles" and "Flight".

Dr. McPherson was then questioned on the operations of the National Film Board, assisted by Messrs. Spiller, Jobbins, MacNeill and Bertrand.

After lunch, the Committee toured the National Film Board production facilities, including a sound effects demonstration, sound division, animation, experimental camera driven by a computer, and the optical room. Tour Guides were Messrs. Frank Spiller, Jacques Godbout and Ron Payne.

The tour being completed, Mr. Reid thanked the Commissioner and his officials for their efforts and hospitality.

At 4.30 p.m., the Committee dispersed.

At 8.45 p.m., the Committee left Montreal by train, arriving in Ottawa at 1.15 p.m.

*Le secrétaire du Comité, production française, F. Spiller, Directeur de la production anglaise; W. S. Jobbins, Directeur de la distribution; G. Graham, Directeur de la planification et de la recherche; D. B. E. Greenway, directeur des services financiers et administratifs; M. Devlin, directeur du personnel; E. S. Coristine, secrétaire du conseil; I. MacNeill, directeur de la programmation anglaise; J. Bobet, directeur de la programmation française.

M. Hugo McPherson, le Commissaire du gouvernement à la cinématographie, a souhaité la bienvenue au Comité et a ensuite donné la parole à MM. Spiller et Godbout dont les remarques d'ouverture portaient sur la programmation de films.

Cinq films de l'ONF ont été projetés pour les membres du Comité, notamment «Challenge for Change», «King-Size», un film contre l'usage du tabac, «le beau plaisir», «60 cycles» et «Flight».

M. McPherson a ensuite répondu aux questions sur l'activité de l'ONF, avec l'aide de MM. Spiller, Jobbins, MacNeill et Bertrand.

Après le déjeuner, le Comité a visité les installations de production de l'ONF, y compris la salle des effets sonores, la division de la sonorisation, l'animation, une caméra de télévision expérimentale à cerveau électronique, et la salle d'optique. MM. Frank Spiller, Jacques Godbout et Ron Payne ont servi de guides lors de cette visite.

La visite étant terminée, M. Reid a remercié le Commissaire et ses fonctionnaires de leurs efforts et de leur accueil.

A 16 h. 30, les membres du comité se sont dispersés.

A 20 h. 45, le Comité a quitté Montréal par train à destination d'Ottawa où ils sont arrivés à 23 h. 15.

Le MARDI 18 février 1969.
(15)

Le Comité permanent de la radiodiffusion, des films et de l'assistance aux arts this day at 9.45 a.m. The Chairman, Mr. John M. Reid, presided.

Members present: Messrs. Broadbent, Comeau, Dinsdale, Givens, Guilbaut, McCleave, Mongrain, Osler, Reid, Schreyer, Schumacher, Stafford, Stanbury, Stewart (Cochrane)—(14).

Members also present: Messrs. Danson, Deachman, Deakon and Jerome.

Witness: Dr. George F. Davidson, President, C.B.C.

The Chairman read the Committee's Order of Reference dated January 31, 1969.

The Committee proceeded to the consideration of the C.B.C. Annual Report (1967-68).

The Chairman and Mr. Dinsdale expressed the appreciation of the Committee to Dr. Davidson and his officials for the arrangements made for the Committee to visit the C.B.C. facilities in Montreal last week.

The Chairman called Dr. Davidson, who after introducing his senior colleagues, made a statement concerning the Annual Report of the C.B.C. (1967-68), commenting on various sections of the Report including programming activities, extension of broadcast coverage, consolidation of facilities in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver, and the C.B.C. financial position.

Dr. Davidson was examined on matters relating to separatists in the C.B.C. French networks, and the witness also referred to Miss LaMarsh's book, particularly relating to the C.B.C., and also commented on letters received by the Corporation containing various allegations.

The examination of Dr. Davidson still continuing, at 1.05 p.m., the Committee adjourned until 8.00 p.m. this evening.

EVENING SITTING (16)

The Committee resumed at 8.10 p.m. The Chairman, Mr. John M. Reid presided.

se réunit ce matin à 9 h. 45, sous la présidence de M. John M. Reid, président.

Présents: MM. Broadbent, Comeau, Dinsdale, Givens, Guilbaut, McCleave, Mongrain, Osler, Reid, Schreyer, Schumacher, Stafford, Stanbury, Stewart (Cochrane)—(14).

De même que: MM. Danson, Deachman, Deakon et Jerome.

Témoin: M. George F. Davidson, président de la Société Radio-Canada.

Le président lit l'ordre de renvoi du Comité, en date du 31 janvier 1969.

Le Comité entreprend l'étude du rapport annuel (1967-1968) de la Société Radio-Canada.

Le président et M. Dinsdale expriment à M. Davidson et à ses collègues la reconnaissance du Comité pour lui avoir permis de visiter les installations de Radio-Canada à Montréal, la semaine dernière.

Le président donne la parole à M. Davidson, qui, après avoir présenté ses collègues, fait une déclaration au sujet du Rapport annuel de la Société Radio-Canada (1967-1968), au cours de laquelle il commente divers aspects du rapport, dont le travail de programmation, l'expansion du territoire desservi par les réseaux, le regroupement des installations à Montréal, Toronto et Vancouver, et la situation financière de Radio-Canada.

M. Davidson est interrogé sur des questions relatives aux séparatistes dans les réseaux français de Radio-Canada. Le témoin parle du livre de M<sup>lle</sup> LaMarsh en particulier des réflexions relatives à Radio-Canada, et il fait aussi des observations sur des lettres reçues par la Société et renfermant diverses allégations.

L'interrogation de M. Davidson se poursuivant, à 13 h. 05, le Comité suspend la séance jusqu'à 20 h. ce soir.

SÉANCE DU SOIR (16)

Le Comité reprend ses délibérations à 20 h. 10, sous la présidence de M. Reid, président.

Members present: Messrs. Barrett, Broadbent, DeBané, Dinsdale, Givens, McCleave, Mongrain, Osler, Reid, Schumacher, Stafford, Stanbury, Stewart (Cochrane)—(13).

Members also present: Messrs. Emard and Yewchuk.

Witnesses: From the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation: Dr. George F. Davidson, President; Mr. Laurent Picard, Executive Vice-President; Mr. Eugene Hallman, Vice-President and General Manager, English Networks; Mr. Raymond David, Vice-President and General Manager, French Networks; Mr. James Gilmore, Vice-President, Planning and Assistant Chief Operating Officer.

The Committee resumed consideration of the C.B.C. Annual Report (1967-68).

Messrs. Davidson and Picard were examined on matters relating to commercial revenues from imported U.S. programs scheduled in prime time, general administration and decentralization, C.B.C. marketing policies and budget items. Messrs. David, Hallman and Gilmore assisted Messrs. Davidson and Picard.

The questioning of the witnesses still continuing, the Chairman announced that the witnesses would return on March 11th.

At 10.05 p.m., the Committee adjourned until 9.30 a.m. on Thursday, February 20.

Présents: MM. Barrett, Broadbent, DeBané, Dinsdale, Givens, McCleave, Mongrain, Osler, Reid, Schumacher, Stafford, Stanbury, Stewart (Cochrane)—(13).

De même que: MM. Emard et Yewchuk.

Témoins: De la Société Radio-Canada: M. George F. Davidson, président; M. Laurent Picard, vice-président exécutif; M. Eugene Hallman, vice-président et directeur général de la radiodiffusion (réseaux anglais); M. Raymond David, vice-président et directeur général de la radiodiffusion française; M. James Gilmore, vice-président à la planification et chef adjoint de l'exploitation.

Le Comité reprend l'examen du Rapport annuel de la Société Radio-Canada (1967-1968).

On pose à MM. Davidson et Picard des questions relatives aux revenus commerciaux provenant de programmes importés des États-Unis et diffusés aux heures d'écoute privilégiées, à l'administration générale et à la décentralisation, à la politique de commercialisation de Radio-Canada, et à divers articles du budget de cette dernière. MM. David, Hallman, et Gilmore aident MM. Davidson et Picard à répondre aux questions.

L'interrogation des témoins se poursuivant, le président annonce qu'ils comparaitront de nouveau devant le Comité le 11 mars.

A 22 h. 05, le Comité s'ajourne jusqu'au jeudi 20 février, à 9 h. 30 du matin.

EVIDENCE

Tuesday, February 18, 1969

• 0942

The Chairman: I think we can begin now. We are here to discuss the Order of Reference from the House of Commons.

That the Report of the National Film Board of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1968, tabled on January 27, 1969, and the Report of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1968, tabled on January 30, 1969, be referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, and that, for the purposes of its inquiry, the Committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place within Canada and the Clerk and the necessary supporting staff be authorized to accompany the Committee.

Apropos of that, on behalf of the Committee I would like to thank Dr. Davidson and his staff and Mr. David of Radio-Canada for the excellent show they put on for us. I think we all gained a great deal of knowledge of the house-keeping operations that you have and also were informed about the type of technical work that has to go on in the production of a program.

In addition, we all appreciate the opportunity of meeting your staff personally on an informal basis and getting to understand some of the problems that they have directly.

At this time I shall call on Dr. Davidson for a short statement and after that we will have questions from the members.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, just before your calling upon Dr. Davidson, may I join with you in expressing appreciation for the hospitality extended to the members of the Committee who were privileged to visit Montreal last week? I think this is the sort of face-to-face contact with the actual operational process that is helpful to Committee members. It is one of the useful functions of the Committee set-up.

I had not visited the Montreal CBC facilities since back in the early fifties and it was a

TÉMOIGNAGES

[Enregistrement électronique]

Le mardi 18 février 1969

Le président: Nous allons commencer. Nous sommes ici pour étudier l'ordre de renvoi de la Chambre:

Que le rapport de l'Office national du film du Canada pour l'année financière s'étant terminée le 31 mars 1968, déposé le 27 janvier 1969, et le rapport de la Société Radio-Canada pour l'année financière s'étant terminée le 31 mars 1968, déposé le 30 janvier 1969, soient renvoyés au Comité permanent de la radiodiffusion des films et de l'assistance aux arts et que, aux fins de son enquête, le Comité soit autorisé à se rendre à différents endroits au Canada et que le greffier ainsi que le personnel de soutien nécessaire soient autorisés à accompagner le Comité.

A ce sujet, au nom du Comité, je voudrais remercier M. Davidson et son personnel et M. David, de Radio-Canada, de l'excellent spectacle qu'ils nous ont offert. Je pense que nous avons beaucoup appris sur le fonctionnement de la Société et sur le genre de travail technique qu'exige la préparation d'un programme.

Nous sommes très heureux aussi d'avoir eu l'occasion de rencontrer personnellement les membres du personnel de Radio-Canada, afin de comprendre un peu mieux les problèmes qui les concernent directement.

Je crois que je vais demander maintenant à M. Davidson de nous faire une courte déclaration d'ouverture, après quoi les députés pourront lui poser des questions.

M. Dinsdale: Monsieur le président, avant de demander au docteur Davidson de prendre la parole, laissez-moi d'abord le remercier, avec vous, de l'accueil qui a été réservé aux membres du Comité lors de leur visite à Montréal, la semaine dernière.

Je pense que c'est le genre de contact direct avec les rouages du fonctionnement que les membres du Comité apprécient beaucoup. J'avais visité les studios de Radio-Canada à Montréal au début des années cinquante et j'en ai profité. Nous n'avons pas souvent l'oc-good relearning process for me. I do not think committees have gone into the field too frequently as we did last week to visit these facilities.

• 0945

There is just one point I would like to raise on this matter. Will there be an official statement on the visit or some official record in our reports that will be available to members of the Committee and to those reading the reports of the Committee who are interested in the subject of broadcasting? I feel this would be important and useful. There is another point I would like to raise. When a committee is outside Ottawa, I notice there is no reference to the activities of that particular committee. Would it not be possible to have stated in the official agenda of committee meetings where these committees are travelling outside Ottawa?

The Chairman: Yes, this has already been done. Minutes have been taken. There will be a statement in the Minutes that we went there, describing what we did and a copy of our agenda as well.

Mr. Dinsdale: That answers the first query. My second point is that when the committee is actually in the field travelling there is no reference anywhere in any journals concerning the activities of that committee.

The Chairman: There is in the Minutes of the Committee. There will be a record that we were there and probably also in the Minutes that will come out of this meeting.

Mr. Dinsdale: But this is not public. The point I am trying to make is that the Committee meetings taking place in Ottawa are invariably listed in the roster for the day, but when committees meet outside Ottawa there is no reference to the activities or the whereabouts of the members of Parliament that are associated with the activities of that particular committee.

Under the new arrangements we are trying to increase the responsibilities of backbencher members of Parliament in scrutiny of public affairs and I think if this is so we should recognize that when we are not actually sitting in Ottawa we are just as busily and conscientiously engaged in the pursuit of public business as we are when we are located in Ottawa.

Sometimes these trips are referred to as "junkets" and I think if we are going to destroy that image we should be quite specific in emphasizing that these are working activities of the committees.

[Interpretation]

casion de le faire comme nous l'avons eue la semaine dernière.

Il y a seulement un point que je voudrais soulever. Est-ce qu'il y aura une déclaration officielle au sujet de notre visite ou un compte rendu officiel de notre visite dans nos rapports qui serait distribué aux membres du Comité ou aux personnes intéressées à la radiodiffusion? J'estime que ce serait important et utile. Une autre question que je tiens à poser à ce sujet. Lorsqu'un Comité s'absente d'Ottawa, je constate que l'on ne mentionne pas l'activité du Comité en cause. Est-ce qu'il ne serait pas possible d'inscrire au compte rendu officiel ou à l'ordre du jour des réunions du Comité où les comités se rendent à l'extérieur d'Ottawa?

Le président: On l'a déjà fait. Il y a le procès-verbal, où il sera indiqué que nous nous sommes rendus à Montréal et ce que nous y avons fait, ainsi que l'ordre du jour.

M. Dinsdale: Oui, mais lorsque le Comité voyage on ne dit rien dans aucun journal sur l'activité du Comité en question.

Le président: Dans le procès-verbal du Comité lui-même, on indiquera que nous nous y sommes rendus et ce sera indiqué probablement dans le compte-rendu de la présente réunion.

M. Dinsdale: Oui, mais ce n'est pas public. Ce à quoi je veux en venir c'est que les réunions du Comité à Ottawa sont toujours inscrites à la liste des réunions de comités de ce jour, mais lorsque le Comité se rend en dehors d'Ottawa, il n'y a aucune mention des activités des députés qui sont associés au comité en question.

Aux termes de nos nouveaux règlements, nous essayons d'augmenter les responsabilités des députés de l'arrière-banc dans les affaires publiques et, à mon avis, si tel est le cas, nous devrions reconnaître que, lorsque nous ne siégeons pas effectivement à Ottawa, nous sommes sérieusement et consciencieusement engagés à des activités d'intérêt public, comme nous le faisons lorsque nous sommes à Ottawa. On nous accuse souvent de ne pas être assez sérieux et je pense que nous devrions redresser notre réputation.

[Texte]

The Chairman: We will take that under advisement, Mr. Dinsdale. I do not see any difficulty at all. The normal procedure is that when you are on the road taking evidence your committee is listed on the usual roster. Ours was more along the lines of an informal visit to give members an opportunity to find out what actually goes on on the housekeeping side of things.

We were not there for the purpose of hearing evidence but I think your suggestion is a good one and I will instruct the Clerk to ensure the next time we go on a similar trip, which will probably be to Toronto, that it will be properly posted and put in Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Dinsdale: It could apply to other committees as well, because I think it is all a part of the agenda for the day. I do not want to take up too much time but I think we should get the preliminaries out of the way. Have we reported the results of our steering committee deliberations?

The Chairman: We will be circulating the agenda that we had decided upon.

Mr. Dinsdale: Have we resolved the quorum problem?

The Chairman: I thought the idea on the quorum was that we would leave it and find out how it works out; then, if necessary, we would set a figure. We have nine members here now who are on the Committee.

Mr. Dinsdale: Have we decided to sit without a quorum?

The Chairman: The new rules are vague on this.

Mr. Dinsdale: I realize that.

The Chairman: They provide that a committee may set any number it wishes as a quorum for the purpose of hearing witnesses or it may set no quorum. The conclusion at the steering committee meeting was that we would allow the matter to rest and if we found that our quorum was getting below what we considered to be an acceptable limit we would pass a resolution stating precisely what the quorum should be.

• 0950

Mr. Dinsdale: I believe the conclusion of all three members who attended the steering committee meeting was that we would leave it up to the general Committee to determine how this problem should be resolved. I do not want to be straining at gnats and swallowing

[Interprétation]

Le président: Monsieur Dinsdale, nous allons nous en occuper et je ne vois aucune difficulté en perspective. La procédure normale, lorsque vous êtes en voyage et que vous entendez des témoignages, est que vous êtes inscrits officiellement sur la liste des comités qui siègent. Malheureusement, nous n'avions pas fait une visite officielle. Nous n'étions pas là pour entendre des témoignages ou des dépositions. Toutefois, votre argument est excellent et je dirai au greffier que la prochaine fois que nous sortirons d'Ottawa, ce sera probablement à Toronto, ce sera officiellement inscrit dans le compte rendu des procès-verbaux et témoignages.

M. Dinsdale: Oui, je trouve que ceci devrait être appliqué à tous les comités parce que c'est important. Maintenant, je ne tiens pas à vous retarder, il faut en terminer avec des préliminaires, avons-nous les rapports des délibérations du sous-comité de direction?

Le président: Nous allons faire distribuer l'ordre du jour que nous avons accepté.

M. Dinsdale: Est-ce qu'on a résolu la question du quorum?

Le président: J'ai pensé que le mieux serait de laisser la question de côté. Si on avait des difficultés, on pourrait peut-être déterminer un chiffre ou un nombre de députés. Dans le moment, nous avons 9 députés qui siègent au Comité.

M. Dinsdale: Est-ce qu'on a décidé de siéger sans quorum?

Le président: Le nouveau règlement est vague à ce sujet.

M. Dinsdale: Je m'en rends compte.

Le président: Le Comité peut avoir le nombre minimum de députés qu'il veut pour entendre les dépositions d'un témoin et peut ne pas déterminer de nombre minimum aussi. Le sous-comité a décidé d'attendre et de voir si le nombre de députés serait insuffisant à un moment donné; à ce moment-là on pourra tout simplement décider du quorum.

M. Dinsdale: A la réunion du comité de direction, les trois députés qui étaient présents ont décidé de laisser l'ensemble du Comité régler la question.

Je ne veux pas exagérer, mais j'ai l'impression que nous entrons dans une ère d'activités camels, but we are moving into an era of parliamentary activity which is unexplored and, speaking from the standpoint of a member of the opposition, we have sacrificed many of the privileges that were ours when we had the opportunity of discussing Estimates and other matters in the Supply Committee.

If we are going to make the committee system work properly, if we are going to expand the opportunities for participation by the backbench members of the House, which is one of the main points in the amendments to the rules, I think we should be quite specific about the terms of reference and the guidelines. We are operating, as you say, in a very unprecise situation at the moment.

The guidelines laid down in the new rules of the House are not specific by any manner or means; we have not had any additional research staff added for the benefit of the private members of Parliament; our responsibilities are expanding without any change in the amenities and facilities available I think, in reference to the quorum situation, that we should set down the guidelines in fairly precise terms.

For example the quorum, I believe, is 11 out of 20 members...

The Chairman: For business meetings.

Mr. Dinsdale: ...and if we do not have some sort of working agreement we could reach the ridiculous situation where we have one or two members sitting in a committee to hear evidence. We might face a situation, for example, where there was no member of the opposition present and I think for happy relationships and for the successful operation of the new committee system we should at least establish some basic floor and have some specifications that there be more than one party, for example, represented in the committee if we are going to have the normal parliamentary process take place. You could not run Parliament without an opposition. I do not think you can run a committee system without an opposition.

Mr. Osler: I have a comment relevant to this point. We were over this whole matter in the Fisheries Committee ad nauseam a few days ago and it seems to me that the answer is clear in the rules. We checked it with Dr. Ollivier and I think we have wasted 25 minutes on this subject now.

Mr. Dinsdale: What is the answer in the rules?

[Interpretation]

parlementaires qui est tout à fait nouvelle et, me plaçant dans la perspective des députés de l'opposition, je dois signaler que nous avons sacrifié beaucoup de nos privilèges antérieurs lorsque nous avons discuté des subsides et d'autres questions au comité des subsides.

Nous avons l'intention de faire fonctionner, comme il se doit, l'appareil des comités. Il faudrait de plus offrir plus d'occasions de participation aux députés de l'arrière-ban à la Chambre.

C'est un des points le plus importants dans les amendements aux règlements et j'estime que nous devrions être très précis quant au mandat aux directives pour ce Comité. Comme vous l'avez dit, dans le moment, notre situation est loin d'être précise.

Les directives qui ont été énoncées dans le nouveau Règlement de la Chambre ne sont pas précises; loin de là. Nous n'avons pas de nouveau personnel de recherche à la disposition des députés du Parlement. Nos responsabilités s'étendent sans avoir aucun changement dans les facilités dont nous nous servons et je pense que, pour ce qui est du quorum, nous devrions énoncer en termes assez précis quelles seront les lignes directrices.

Je m'explique: je pense que le quorum devrait être de 11 députés sur 20...

Le président: Pour les réunions de travail?

M. Dinsdale: ...et si nous n'avons pas d'accord dans ce sens, nous risquons de tomber dans une situation ridicule où un ou deux députés siègeraient dans un comité pour entendre des témoignages. Par exemple, il pourrait arriver qu'aucun député de l'opposition ne soit présent.

Et, je pense que dans le meilleur intérêt de nos relations et pour le succès des réunions des comités, nous devrions avoir un règlement de base et préciser clairement qu'il faut qu'il y ait plus d'un parti représenté au sein d'un comité, si nous voulons que le système parlementaire fonctionne bien. Vous ne pouvez pas diriger les débats d'un parlement sans opposition, et la même situation prévaut pour les comités.

M. Osler: J'aimerais faire un commentaire pertinent. Nous avons étudié la question il y a quelques jours, au Comité des pêcheries au point d'en avoir la nausée, et d'après moi tout est clair dans le Règlement. Nous avons tout vérifié avec M. Ollivier. Et il me semble que nous venons de perdre déjà 25 minutes sur cette question.

M. Dinsdale: Quelle est la réponse du Règlement?

[Texte]

Mr. Osler: The answer to the rules roughly—I am not a lawyer—is that you can do anything you like as long as it is ratified sooner or later by the committee. The committee does not function as a committee unless there is a quorum, but you can hear evidence and you can do anything else. The only danger is that the evidence might not be allowed by the full committee later on.

The Chairman: There are two kinds of meetings contemplated by the new rules; one is a business meeting where resolutions, and so on, will be passed and the other is for the purpose of hearing evidence. We did hold a business meeting—or we tried to hold a business meeting—earlier in early February, but unfortunately we did not have a quorum, at which this matter was scheduled to be discussed.

Would the Committee agree to have a business meeting on February 27 to discuss this matter, and that in the meantime the Chair would ensure that there would be no meeting of the Committee for the purpose of hearing witnesses unless there were a minimum of seven members with a maximum of three parties represented?

Mr. Dinsdale: Those are at least some guidelines; a reasonable set of guidelines.

The Chairman: I think, then, perhaps we can move to the purpose of this meeting which is to hear Dr. Davidson and for us to question the CBC. Dr. Davidson?

● 0955

Dr. George F. Davidson (President, CBC): Thank you, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen. I am going to begin by thanking you, Mr. Chairman, and also Mr. Dinsdale for your references to the visit that you made to our headquarters in Montreal.

Au sujet de votre visite officielle au siège social du réseau français à Montréal, je vous remercie, au nom de la Société Radio-Canada, de vous être exprimés dans la langue parlée par ceux qui travaillent dans cette ville-là.

I appreciate this opportunity, I assure you, Mr. Chairman, to appear before the Parliamentary Committee on Broadcasting for the purpose of introducing a discussion on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's Annual Report for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. I have taken the liberty of bringing with me to this meeting a number of my senior colleagues and I should like to begin

M. Osler: La voici: n'étant pas avocat, je vous le dis en gros, vous pouvez faire ce que vous voulez du moment que les membres du Comité le ratifient un jour ou l'autre. Et, le Comité ne peut pas siéger en tant que tel quand il n'y a pas de quorum, mais vous pouvez entendre des témoignages et entendre n'importe quelle déposition. Le seul danger c'est que les témoignages peuvent être refusés plus tard par l'ensemble du Comité.

Le président: Le nouveau Règlement prévoit deux sortes de réunions: l'une peut être une réunion de travail, où des résolutions et d'autres actes seront entérinés, et une autre réunion où l'on recueillerait les témoignages. Nous avons essayé de tenir une réunion de travail plus tôt au cours du mois de février, mais nous n'avons pas eu de quorum. Je me demande si on ne pourrait pas convenir d'avoir une réunion le 27 février pour discuter de cette question qui alors n'avait pas été étudiée. Entre temps, le président s'assurerait qu'il n'y aurait pas de réunion du comité aux fins d'entendre des témoins, à moins qu'il y ait un minimum de 7 députés et un maximum de 3 partis représentés.

M. Dinsdale: Ce sont déjà des lignes directrices raisonnables.

Le président: Ceci dit, je pense qu'on pourrait peut-être passer à l'objet même de notre réunion et entendre la déposition de M. Davidson, le président de Radio-Canada. Je vous cède la parole, monsieur Davidson.

M. George F. Davidson (président de Radio-Canada): Je vous remercie, monsieur le président.

Messieurs, je vais commencer par vous remercier, monsieur le président, et vous aussi monsieur Dinsdale, de la mention que vous avez faite de votre visite à notre siège de Montréal.

With respect to your official visit to the headquarters of the French network in Montreal I thank you on behalf of the CBC for having spoken in the language that is spoken by the people who work in that city.

Monsieur le président, je vous suis très reconnaissant de m'avoir invité à témoigner devant le Comité, afin d'introduire la discussion au sujet du rapport annuel de la Société Radio-Canada pour l'exercice financier qui s'est terminé le 31 mars 1968. J'ai pris la liberté d'amener avec moi quelques-uns de mes collaborateurs à Radio-Canada, et vous me permettez de vous les présenter. Je comby introducing them to you. First of all, may I present my colleague on my right, the Executive Vice-President of the Corporation, Mr. Laurent Picard who entered the service of the Corporation on the same day that I did, namely February 1, 1968. The scars that you see are fresh scars dating from that date on the calendar a little more than a year ago.

Mr. McCleave: None left over from Treasury Board, Dr. Davidson?

Dr. Davidson: There are a few angry red marks, gentlemen, at present representing my past service stripes.

The Chairman: I might say you do not really look that bad.

Dr. Davidson: That is the first compliment I have had paid to me, Mr. Chairman, since I became President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

More seriously, I think it is particularly appropriate that I should take this opportunity to present my colleague, Mr. Picard, to you because he was away on business for the Corporation at the time of our visit to Montreal and the members of the Committee did not have an opportunity of meeting him. I hope that you will have an opportunity of meeting him and hearing from him in the course of the testimony given today. He and I have, as I say, been on the job just over a year and this is our first appearance before a committee of the House of Commons on the subject of broadcasting.

I, myself, had the privilege of appearing before a Senate committee to hear evidence on the new broadcasting legislation almost a year ago and, of course, it has been my privilege to appear on a number of occasions before a variety of parliamentary committees when I was serving in other capacities.

About all that I am prepared to say, Mr. Chairman, on behalf of Mr. Picard and myself at this stage is that we know more about the business of broadcasting as a public service today than we did a year ago.

Many of the problems, many of the questions have emerged clearly during this first year of our apprenticeship in our new trade. I am not at all certain, I must add, about the number of answers and solutions we have found to these problems and these questions which confront the national broadcasting service in Canada at this particular stage of our country's history.

I should like also, if I may, to take a moment to introduce to members of the Committee a number of the senior officers of the mence, à ma droite, par le vice-président exécutif de la Société, M. Laurent Picard, qui est entré en fonction à la Société le même jour que moi, soit le 1<sup>er</sup> février 1968. Les cicatrices que vous voyez sont toutes fraîches; elles datent de ce jour mémorable, il y a un petit peu plus d'un an.

M. McCleave: Il n'en reste aucune qui soit une réminiscence du Conseil du Trésor, M. Davidson?

M. Davidson: Il y a quelques marques rouges de colère, messieurs, qui sont les restants des marques de mes états de service passés.

Le président: Je dois dire que vous n'avez pas l'air si mal en point.

M. Davidson: C'est le premier compliment qu'on me fait depuis que je suis président de la Société Radio-Canada, monsieur le président.

Pour passer à un ordre d'idées plus sérieux, j'estime qu'il serait approprié de saisir cette occasion pour vous présenter M. Picard, qui avait dû s'absenter pour représenter la Société à l'extérieur lors de votre visite à Montréal; c'est pourquoi vous n'avez pas eu l'occasion de le rencontrer. J'espère que vous aurez la chance de le faire et de le rencontrer au cours de la réunion d'aujourd'hui. Nous sommes tous les deux à notre poste depuis à peine un an et c'est la première fois que nous témoignons devant un Comité de la Chambre sur la question de la radiodiffusion.

J'ai, moi-même, eu le privilège de comparaître devant un Comité du Sénat, pur entendre des témoignages sur la nouvelle Loi sur la Radiodiffusion, il y a environ un an. Et, à plusieurs occasions, j'ai aussi eu le privilège de témoigner devant plusieurs comités parlementaires alors que je remplissais d'autres fonctions.

Au nom de M. Picard et du mien, je suis tout à fait disposé à vous dire maintenant que nous sommes beaucoup plus renseignés au sujet de la radiodiffusion que nous l'étions, il y a un an.

La lumière s'est faite sur bien des choses pendant cette première année d'apprentissage dans notre nouveau métier. Je ne sais pas, cependant, combien de solutions et de réponses nous avons trouvées aux problèmes et aux questions que les services nationaux de radiodiffusion doivent affronter au Canada, en cette période de notre histoire.

Je voudrais aussi vous présenter d'autres hauts fonctionnaires de la Société Radio-Canada, qui ont chacun plusieurs années d'expérience en radiodiffusion.

Corporation, each of whom has to his credit many years of experience in the world of broadcasting.

I will present them in turn, and ask each one to stand. First of all, Mr. James Gilmore, Vice-President of Planning and Assistant Chief Operating Officer to Mr. Picard; Mr. Ronald Fraser, Vice-President of Corporate Affairs and Special Assistant to the President; Mr. Marcel Ouimet, Vice-President Programming; Mr. Raymond David, Vice-President & General Manager, French Networks; Mr. Eugene Hallman, Vice-President and General Manager, English Networks.

With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I will call upon these gentlemen as required to assist me in answering any questions that may be put to me by members of the Committee. I should also add that I have asked a number of our other senior officers, the officers responsible in the fields of finance, administration, engineering and regional broadcasting, to hold themselves available for this Committee later on this morning or at later sessions today should questions relating to their particular areas of responsibility be raised by individual Committee members.

Mr. Chairman, the annual report of the corporation for 1967-68, the year of Expo and the year of our Centennial, is now before the Committee. This report covers that period of stewardship, most of which was the responsibility of the former President of the Corporation and the management which preceded the nominations of Mr. Picard and me to the two senior management posts in the Corporation.

You would not expect Mr. Picard and me for this reason to be as familiar with all of the details of the Corporation's activities during the period covered by this annual report as we hope to be with respect to the current fiscal year 1968-69.

I wish, in a sense, that we who have come so recently to the Corporation could claim some of the credit for the activities of the year which is covered by this report because this, as I say, was the year of Centennial and of Expo, and frankly I doubt whether there has ever been a year in the history of the Corporation which reflects as much credit on the public national broadcasting service as the variety of special programming related to Expo and to the Centennial which it was possible to produce in the year 1967.

The annual report for 1967-68 devotes fully one-half of its 90 pages to the all-important question of programs produced and or distributed by the CBC. As you glance through the report and look at the lists of programs beginning with page 6 and following of both

[Interprétation]

Je les présente à tour de rôle et leur demanderais de se lever chacun leur tour. M. James Gilmore, vice-président à la planification et Chef adjoint de l'exploitation, adjoint de M. Picard, M. Ronald Fraser, vice-président aux affaires générales et adjoint spécial au président; M. Marcel Ouimet, vice-président aux programmes; M. Raymond David, vice-président et directeur général de la radiodiffusion française et M. Eugene Hallman, vice président et directeur général de la Radiodiffusion (réseaux anglais).

Avec votre permission, monsieur le président, j'aimerais demander à ces messieurs, à tour de rôle de m'aider à répondre aux questions que les députés pourront me poser plus tard. J'ajoute que j'ai demandé à plusieurs autres hauts fonctionnaires, les responsables du secteur des finances, de l'administration, du génie et de la radiodiffusion régionale, de se mettre à la disposition du Comité, ce matin, ou pour d'autres séances aujourd'hui, au cas où des questions concernant leur propre domaine de responsabilités, seraient posées.

Monsieur le président, le rapport annuel de la Société pour 1967-1968, l'année de l'Expo et de notre Centenaire, a été déposé devant le Comité. C'est une période de question qui était en grande partie, la responsabilité de l'ancien président de la Société et de l'administration qui nous a précédés, M. Picard et moi, aux postes supérieurs de l'administration de Radio-Canada.

Vous ne pouvez pas vous attendre à ce que, pour cette raison, nous connaissions tous les détails de l'activité de la Société pour la période visée par ce rapport annuel, au même point que l'activité de l'exercice en cours, soit 1968-1969.

Dans un sens, j'aimerais que nous, qui venons d'accéder aux postes supérieurs de la Société, puissions réclamer le mérite des activités de l'année visée par le rapport, soit l'année du Centenaire et de l'Expo, et je doute que depuis la création de la Société, il y ait eu une année qui reflète autant de mérites sur les services nationaux de radiodiffusion vu la variété d'émissions spéciales relatives à l'Expo et au Centenaire, que 1967.

Le rapport annuel de 1967-1968 consacre la moitié de ses 90 pages aux émissions produites ou distribuées par Radio-Canada. Si vous jetez un coup d'œil sur le rapport et que vous voyez la liste des émissions, à partir de la page 6, dans le texte français et anglais, qui the French and English texts, covering English, French and regional programming for both radio and television you will recognize, I am sure, quite a number of programs that you saw or listened to and enjoyed, as well as a few about which you have received and voiced less favorable comments. A good many of these programs are productions of which Canadians, including those Canadians who worked for the CBC, can properly be proud.

Unfortunately, our more popular, less controversial programs tend to get passed over in silence—largely ignored. On the other hand, a one-half hour program of a controversial nature once a week, whether it be public affairs, or drama or whatever you want to mention, can fill our mail bags full of sharply critical correspondence—our mail bags and yours, gentlemen—and light-up our switchboards—you have not got a switchboard so I can use that in reference to ourselves—literally from coast to coast like the proverbial Christmas tree.

In this preoccupation with particular programs which somehow or other stir up heat and controversy, we tend to forget, Mr. Chairman, that in the year 1967 the CBC put out over the airwaves some 75,000 hours of radio programming, together with some 27,000 hours of television, a volume equal to 12 continuous years of round-the-clock programming, 24 hours a day, 365 days each year, or 12 whole years transmitted continuously over a single channel. Relevant statistics to support that statement are to be found on page 81 of both the French and English texts.

It is perhaps not too surprising, in the light of that fact, that certain individual programs attract more than their share of unfavorable attention. It does not take very many of these, probably not more than one a week, to leave the public with the impression that the CBC is under constant attack for all of its programs. This, I am rapidly learning, is a hazard in the life of the broadcaster that one has to learn to live with.

Unfortunately, it tends to obscure the fact that while the occasional CBC program may be bad to poor, and some more of it indifferently good or even mediocre, most of our CBC programs on radio and television both French and English succeed, in fact, in doing the job the CBC was set up to do.

This, in the words of the Broadcasting Act, approved by Parliament last year, is to:

(i) be a balanced service of information, enlightenment and entertainment for people of different ages, interests and tastes

[Interpretation]

embrasse les émissions de la radio et de la télévision en français et en anglais, vous reconnaîtrez, probablement, plusieurs émissions que vous avez vues ou entendues et que vous avez appréciées, ainsi que certaines émissions au sujet desquelles vous avez reçu ou exprimé des commentaires moins favorables. Bon nombre de ces émissions sont des productions dont les Canadiens, y compris ceux qui travaillent à Radio-Canada, peuvent être fiers.

Malheureusement, les émissions plus populaires, moins controversées, passent sous silence et souvent méconnues. D'autre part, une émission hebdomadaire d'une demi-heure, qui porte à controverse sur les affaires publiques, le théâtre ou quoi que ce soit, peut gonfler notre courrier de lettres acerbes, notre courrier et le vôtre il va sans dire et les tableaux des téléphonistes d'un bout à l'autre du pays, sont éclairés comme des arbres de Noël.

Dans notre préoccupation pour les émissions qui d'une façon ou d'une autre échauffent les esprits et soulèvent des controverses, nous oublions, monsieur le président, qu'en 1967, Radio-Canada a mis sur les ondes 75,000 heures d'émissions à la radio et quelque 27,000 heures d'émissions à la télévision, ce qui représente 12 années d'émissions à 24 heures par jour 365 jours par année ou 12 années d'émissions continues sur un seul canal. Vous verrez des données statistiques à l'appui à la page 81 du rapport tant du texte français que du texte anglais.

Il ne faudrait donc pas se surprendre que certaines émissions attirent plus que leur part d'attention défavorable. Il n'en faut pas beaucoup, probablement pas plus d'une émission par semaine, pour donner au public l'impression que Radio-Canada est constamment attaqué pour chacune de ses émissions. Je constate rapidement que c'est là un danger de la vie d'un radiodiffuseur avec lequel il faut apprendre à vivre.

Malheureusement, cette situation tend à jeter de l'ombre sur le fait que bien que certaines émissions de Radio-Canada soient mauvaises ou médiocres, la plupart des émissions à la radio et à la télévision, tant au réseau français qu'au réseau anglais, réussissent, en fait, à satisfaire le mandat de Radio-Canada. Ceci, en conformité de la Loi sur la Radiodiffusion, adoptée l'an dernier, est:

i) être un service équilibré qui renseigne, éclaire, et divertisse des personnes de tous âges, aux intérêts et aux goûts covering the whole range of programming in fair proportion,

A moment's reflection on the meaning of the words I have just quoted from the Act will indicate, I believe, why it can hardly be expected that all CBC programming will please or interest all CBC viewers or listeners all of the time. That is not, in fact, the job we set out to do. Our job, according to the Broadcasting Act, is to produce and distribute different kinds of programs to different kinds of audiences in fair balance and proportion, so that the great variety of tastes and interests of the 20 million Canadians within the range of our transmitters can be recognized and catered to in fair degree.

Now, naturally enough this does not always please or satisfy the individual viewer who judges what he sees or hears over CBC by his own personal tastes and interests rather than the possible tastes and interests of others. Football or hockey fans do not like to have their program periods preempted by political conventions and they tell us so.

Television viewers in Cape Breton cannot be blamed for being less than mildly interested in a Western Football Conference game relayed over the national network. French language television viewers in St. Boniface can hardly be expected to follow avidly public affairs programs centered on provincial political developments in the Quebec legislature, and so it goes.

Naturally enough the individual frequently tends to judge the CBC by what he can see and hear on his local CBC television or radio station. The size and the scope of the national broadcasting service tends to be invisible and ignored by the individual viewer. An extension of service or of local or regional programming in another part of the country is not apparent on the local outlet. The fact that CBC takes over and enters a new period of broadcasting through a CBC station in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, cuts little ice with the viewers in Vancouver or in Edmonton.

Where there is unilingual service only, viewers and listeners cannot be aware of the CBC's programming output in the other language.

Canadians at home do not as a rule listen to broadcasts in 11 different languages put out over our International Services facilities, which are aimed to countries in Europe and on other continents. The audience in Toronto or Montreal will never see or hear any of the programs of the Northern Service, produced and distributed in the Eskimo or Indian diadivers, et qui offre une répartition équitable de toute la gamme de la programmation.

Un instant de réflexion sur le sens de cette citation indiquera, je crois, qu'on peut difficilement s'attendre à ce que toute la programmation de Radio-Canada satisfasse ou intéresse tous les auditeurs et les téléspectateurs de Radio-Canada. Ce n'est pas du tout ce que nous avons entrepris. Aux termes de la Loi, nous sommes censés produire et distribuer différentes sortes d'émissions, à différents auditoires, de façon équilibrée, et proportionnée, de sorte que tous les goûts et intérêts des 20 millions de Canadiens qui sont atteints par nos transmetteurs, soient reconnus et satisfaits dans une juste mesure.

Il est naturel que chaque individu ne soit pas toujours satisfait de ce qu'il voit ou entend à Radio-Canada parce qu'il juge d'après ses propres goûts et intérêts, sans tenir compte de ceux des autres. Les amateurs de hockey ou de football n'aiment pas qu'on remplace leurs émissions favorites par des conventions politiques, et ils nous le disent. Il ne faut pas blâmer les téléspectateurs du Cap Breton s'ils ne sont pas enthousiasmés par une partie de football de la conférence de l'Ouest qui passe sur le réseau national. Il ne faut pas s'attendre que les téléspectateurs de la télévision française à Saint-Boniface écoutent avidement les émissions d'affaires publiques qui traitent des événements politiques de la législature québécoise, et ainsi de suite.

Naturellement, un auditeur a fréquemment tendance à juger Radio-Canada par ce qu'il voit et entend sur son poste local de radio et de télévision. L'envergure et la portée des services nationaux de radiodiffusion tendent à passer inaperçues ou à être méconnues par le téléspectateur. L'extension d'un service ou les émissions locales ou régionales visant d'autres parties du pays, ne se font pas sentir au niveau local. Le fait que Radio-Canada entre dans une nouvelle phase de radiodiffusion en établissant une station à Charlottetown dans l'île du Prince-Édouard, n'enthousiasme pas beaucoup les gens d'Edmonton ou de Vancouver. S'il n'y a qu'un service unilingue, les auditeurs et les téléspectateurs de l'autre langue ne peuvent pas être au courant de ce que l'on produit dans l'autre langue.

Les auditeurs canadiens se préoccupent très peu du Service international qui émet en onze langues vers d'autres pays du monde. À Toronto ou à Montréal, les auditeurs ne verront ou n'entendront jamais les programmes du Service du Nord canadien, qui sont produits et distribués en langues esquimaudes ou indiennes. Par exemple, le coût de l'établisse-lects. The cost of including a Frontier Coverage Package in Yellowknife makes little impact on those who are living within the sound of our urban radio and television transmitters.

In the year under review, Mr. Chairman, we have had, as I pointed out from the few statistics I have mentioned, a greater amount of programming and production than has ever been the case before. This was the year of the Centennial, of Expo and of the Pan-American Games. This was the year in which we built and operated the International Broadcasting Centre that the majority of the members of the committee had the opportunity of seeing for themselves last week. Demands on staff, equipment and facilities were unprecedented in the Corporation's history.

As our Annual Report states, CBC radio and television broadcast nearly 1,500 hours of Centennial and special programming during the year of Centennial and of Expo. This would work out to an average of four hours' production a day, every day of the year.

You will find on pages six to eight of the Report a list of some of the Centennial programs and this may refresh the memory of members as to the wide variety and scope of the programming carried out during Centennial year.

I respectfully remind the committee members at this point, Mr. Chairman, that what we are considering is not the annual report on programming or financing of a single unilingual television network covering a limited number of communities across the country.

Rather the report we are concerned with is a report dealing with the program activities of no less than nine distinctive services. Here they are: English language television, French language television, English radio AM, French radio AM, English radio FM, French radio FM, Northern Service, Armed Forces Service and the International Service.

I will not elaborate on this point beyond saying that when the expenditures of the CBC are being discussed, whether we talk of $185 million gross as reported in 1967-68, or $140 million net after commercial revenues are taken account of, these considerable amounts of money should be seen, I suggest to you, in the perspective of the ninefold service that the Corporation is responsible for providing.

May I draw your attention, Mr. Chairman, to another table set out in the Corporation's Annual Report on page 13 of the English text ment d'un rayonnement dans tout le nord à partir de Yellowknife a peu d'importance pour les gens qui habitent dans les limites de portée de nos émetteurs urbains de radio et de télévision.

Monsieur le président, comme je l'ai fait remarquer à partir des quelques statistiques que j'ai mentionnées, nous avons eu au cours de la dernière année, plus de programmes et de productions que jamais auparavant. Ce fût l'année du Centenaire, de l'Expo et des Jeux Pan-américains. Ce fût l'année où nous avons construit et fait fonctionner le Centre international de radiodiffusion, que bien des députés, membres du Comité, ont eu l'occasion de voir, la semaine dernière. Les besoins en personnel, en équipement et en installations ont été les plus importants de l'histoire de la Société.

Comme le dit notre rapport annuel, la radio et la télévision ont diffusé 1,500 heures de programmes spéciaux ou relatifs au Centenaire pendant l'année de l'Expo et du Centenaire. Ce qui donne une moyenne de diffusion de quatre heures par jour, tous les jours de l'année.

Aux pages six à huit du rapport, que vous avez sous les yeux, vous trouverez la liste de certains programmes du Centenaire et ceci pourra rafraîchir la mémoire de certains députés et leur montrer la grande variété et la grande portée des programmes réalisés pendant l'année du Centenaire. En toute déférence, monsieur le président, je rappelle aux membres du Comité, que ce que nous étudions n'est pas le rapport annuel sur les programmes et le financement d'un réseau de télévision ou de radiodiffusion unilingue s'adressant à un nombre limité de régions.

Au contraire, c'est un rapport qui s'occupe de toutes les activités de neuf services différents: télévision de langue anglaise, télévision de langue française, radio A-M en français, radio A-M en anglais, F-M en français, F-M en anglais, Service du Nord canadien, Service des Forces armées et Service international. Je ne m'étendrai pas sur ce point, je me borne à dire que l'on discute des dépenses de Radio-Canada, que l'on parle des 185 millions bruts de 1967-1968 ou des 140 millions nets après avoir tenu compte des revenus commerciaux. Ces considérables sommes d'argent doivent être vues à la lumière des neuf services différents dont la Société est responsable.

Maintenant, monsieur le président, permettez-moi d'attirer votre attention sur un autre tableau qui se trouve dans le Rapport annuel and on page 14 of the French text. This table illustrates very clearly the essence of what we are up against. We live and work alongside the United States of America, the most powerful, the most versatile, in many ways the most creative, and certainly the wealthiest complex of broadcasting services to be found anywhere in the world.

• 1010

What we are up against in our Canadian programming is the continued popularity with Canadian viewers of United States light entertainment programs, which find their way across to our Canadian viewing audiences whether the CBC chooses to broadcast them or not. This table, which indicates the relative viewing audiences attracted to the different programs, Canadian and non-Canadian, put out by the CBC, pinpoints one of our major problems. One must place these audience figures against our commercial needs.

In seeking to fulfil the requirements of our mandate we are obliged each year to strive for commercial revenues of the order of $40 million gross, and to reach this objective some of the hard facts of broadcasting, particularly the commercial aspects of it, have to be faced. In spite of this I say that we in the Corporation are determined that in the CBC's fall schedule for 1969-70 we will have more Canadian programming in prime time than we have had before—and I mean by that good programming in every sense of the word.

Turning next to a further feature of the Annual Report I might mention the section on audience research referred to on page 23 of the English text. It describes how the CBC measures not just the size of audiences but also the extent to which the viewing audiences appreciate, or do not appreciate, its various programs. It is important, I think, that we should recognize that there are qualitative as well as quantitative means of judging the receptivity of our programs. I think we are the only broadcasting agency in the world which is endeavouring to develop what we call an appreciation index relative to our viewing audience in the particular way that we attempt to do it. The index of enjoyment, as we call it, assists us in program planning, in detecting trends in program performance, in forecasting and evaluating the effects of schedule changes and in various other ways.

May I also draw your attention, Mr. Chairman to the fact that the CBC continued in 1967-68 to have a creditable record of awards at home and abroad. Pages 51 and 52 of the à la page 13 du texte anglais et à la page 14 du texte français. Ce tableau illustre clairement ce à quoi nous nous opposons. Nous vivons en bordure des États-Unis d'Amérique, le pays où se trouve le plus puissant, le plus varié, le plus créateur dans beaucoup de domaines et certainement le plus riche de tous les réseaux de radio et de télévision du monde.

Nous sommes contre la popularité des programmes de divertissements américains auprès des auditeurs canadiens qui pénètrent au Canada, que nous acceptions ou non de les diffuser. Le tableau que vous avez sous les yeux, indique le pourcentage d'auditeurs qui suivent différents programmes canadiens et non canadiens mis en ondes par le réseau de Radio-Canada; vous voyez tout de suite où sont nos principaux problèmes. Ces chiffres d'écoute doivent être rapprochés de nos besoins financiers. Pour remplir notre mandat, nous devons, chaque année, recueillir environ $40,000,000 de revenus bruts; pour atteindre cet objectif il faut affronter les dures réalités de la profession et plus particulièrement les aspects commerciaux. En dépit de cela, je vous dirai que nous, au sein de la Société, nous sommes décidés à introduire dans nos programmes pour 1969-70 plus de programmes canadiens aux heures de forte écoute que nous n'en avions précédemment et je veux dire, des bons programmes dans tous les sens du terme.

Un autre trait saillant de ce rapport, c'est le Service de recherches sur l'écoute dont on parle à la page 23 du texte anglais. On y décrit comment Radio-Canada évalue le nombre d'auditeurs et la mesure dans laquelle ils apprécient ou non ses divers programmes. Je pense qu'il est important de reconnaître qu'il y a des critères qualitatifs et quantitatifs pour juger de la réceptivité de nos programmes. Je pense que nous sommes la seule agence de diffusion au monde qui essaie de mettre au point ce que nous appelons un indice d'appréciation de notre auditoire de la façon dont nous le faisons. L'indice d'appréciation nous aide à établir nos programmes, car il nous permet de déterminer les tendances et de prévoir et d'évaluer les effets de changements de programme.

Je signale aussi, monsieur le président, que Radio-Canada a continué, en 1967-68, à recevoir des prix tant au Canada qu'à l'étranger. Vous trouverez aux pages 51 et 52 les diffé-

English text show some of the awards that have been received by CBC for programs in the course of the year 1967-68. I feel that I can draw attention to this without being accused of a lack of modesty inasmuch as these awards were received during the year 1967-68 which was a year for which Mr. Picard and myself had very little actual managerial responsibility.

That is about all that I need to say, Mr. Chairman, on the subject of programs at this stage. I want to turn now to another aspect of the Corporation's mandate as laid down in the Broadcasting Act. That is the part of our mandate set out in the Broadcasting Act which says that the CBC service must be provided both in English and in French serving the special needs of the geographic regions and actively contributing to the flow and exchange of cultural and regional information and entertainment.

If you will look at page 59 of the English text of the Report you will see that there are still appreciable gaps to fill in before we can say that we are bringing all Canadians broadcasting services in their own language. The CBC has continued to work at filling these gaps and in 1967-68 added 21 new television transmitters and 25 new radio stations to its networks.

The Frontier Coverage Package is a CBC television development which meets a public need such as the LPRT's (the Low Power Relay Transmitters) do in radio. The Frontier Coverage Packages are unattended television stations which transmit four hours of programming on tape. They have proved themselves in the field and are now being extended to many remote communities which can be served in no other way.

We have, therefore, extended broadcasting coverage of the CBC service in 1967-68 to no less than 46 communities which prior to that year had not been receiving the CBC service in the language of the population group being served by these new facilities.

● 1015

I realize that members of Parliament are often plagued with two kinds of complaints by their constituents. First of all, there are those complainants among the 20 million Canadians who get CBC programming and complain about a few of the CBC programs they get; then there are the complaints of those among the one million Canadians who do not get CBC programming at all and who are complaining because they do not receive any CBC programs about which they can complain.

In discussing coverage I should tell you that from the Corporation's point of view we rents prix, que les programmes de Radio-Canada ont reçus en 1967-68. Je pense que je peux attirer l'attention sur ce fait sans qu'on m'accuse de manquer de modestie, étant donné que ces prix ont été reçus en 1967-68, année où M. Picard et moi-même n'avons eu que très peu de responsabilités administratives.

C'est à peu près tout ce que j'ai à dire sur les programmes. Maintenant, monsieur le président, je voudrais passer à un autre aspect du mandat de la Société tel qu'il figure dans la Loi sur la Radiodiffusion. Il s'agit de la partie de notre mandat qui est stipulée par la Loi et dit que nos services doivent être de langue anglaise et de langue française, répondre aux besoins particuliers des diverses régions et contribuer activement à la fourniture et à l'échange d'informations et de divertissements d'ordre culturel et régional.

Si vous vous reportez à la page 59 du rapport vous verrez qu'il y a encore des lacunes assez considérables à combler avant de dire que nous pouvons vraiment atteindre tous les Canadiens et leur fournir des programmes dans leur langue. Nous travaillons sans relâche à combler ces lacunes et en 1967-1968 nous avons ajouté à notre réseau 21 émetteurs de télévision et 25 émetteurs de radio.

Nous avons de nouveaux programmes de diffusion dans les régions les plus reculées, nos avant-postes transmettent 4 heures de télévision enregistrées sans surveillance. Vu leur succès, nous allons les étendre à des régions qu'on ne peut atteindre autrement. En 1967-1968, nous avons étendu notre service à pas moins de 46 nouvelles communautés qui, jusque-là ne recevaient pas les services de Radio-Canada dans la langue du groupe habitant la région.

Je me rends compte que les députés reçoivent des plaintes de deux sortes de gens. D'abord, parmi les 20 millions de Canadiens il y a ceux qui reçoivent les programmes de la Société Radio-Canada et qui se plaignent des programmes qu'ils reçoivent. Ensuite, il y a les plaintes émanant de ce million de Canadiens qui ne reçoivent pas les programmes de Radio-Canada et s'en plaignent.

A propos de régions desservies, je dois dire que la Société vise plusieurs objectifs. La are concerned about a number of things. The absolute first priority as far as we are concerned continues to be the priority attached to the extension of service to people who receive no service at all in their own language. As you see from the figures on page 59, although the percentages are small they are still significant. We have something of the order of 500,000 persons of English language expression who do not at the present time receive CBC service in their own language; we have something of the order of 400,000 of French expression who do not receive service in their own language, and it is our objective, as Parliament permits us to do so with the funds that are made available, to extend coverage in the two official languages to these small but still very significant elements in our population.

The provision of 46 new outfits that I have already referred to in the year under review is, I think, the most impressive record of extension of service to these smaller population groups that the CBC has ever attained in any given year. But, of course, Mr. Chairman, this extension of primary coverage cannot be allowed to take complete control of our energies and resources. We have to be concerned also with the needs of the 20,000,000 Canadians who live within the reach of our transmitters.

We have to reserve some of our energies and resources for improvement of our present radio and television services to the great majority of Canadians who, after all, are entitled to as good a broadcasting service as can be provided. We are concerned with the future of FM radio broadcasting. We are also deeply involved, along with the CRTC, in the development of alternative television service which the White Paper of 1966 described as almost a necessity, and certainly an amenity of life for all Canadians.

We are very much concerned with the development of satellite broadcasting and the possibilities this may open up for reaching remote communities in the Canadian far North and in the western parts of Canada. Meanwhile, we must plan to continue establishing through Frontier Coverage Packages the means of serving the pressing needs of these people who do not have the advantage of broadcasting services at least until the satellite system becomes available.

May I turn for a moment, Mr. Chairman, to the chart on page 60, which speaks for itself. This illustrates, I think quite graphically, the growth of CBC television coverage, the composite in French and English network.

[Interprétation]

priorité la plus urgente en ce qui nous concerne doit consister à desservir ceux qui ne reçoivent aucune émission dans leur propre langue. Et d'après les chiffres du tableau 59, bien que les pourcentages soient faibles, ils sont tout de même importants. Nous avons environ 500,000 personnes de langue anglaise qui actuellement ne reçoivent pas les émissions de Radio-Canada dans leur langue et environ 400,000 francophones qui ne reçoivent pas d'émissions dans la leur; notre objectif, avec les fonds que le Parlement met à notre disposition, est de desservir dans les deux langues officielles ces groupes minoritaires mais tout de même importants.

L'établissement de 46 nouveaux relais pensant l'année en cours est à mon avis le record le plus impressionnant que Radio-Canada ait jamais atteint dans l'intérêt des groupes minoritaires. Cependant, cette extension du réseau primaire ne doit évidemment pas mobiliser toutes nos énergies et nos ressources. Il nous faut tenir compte également des besoins des 20 millions de Canadiens qui sont desservis par nos émetteurs.

Il nous faut consacrer une partie de nos énergies et de nos ressources à l'amélioration des programmes de radio et de télévision destinés à une majorité de Canadiens qui, en définitive, ont droit au meilleur service possible. Nous nous préoccupons de l'avenir de la radio FM. Nous envisageons également, en collaboration avec le CRTC, l'établissement d'un autre réseau de télévision, que le Livre blanc de 1966 qualifie de nécessaire et qui constituerait un agrément bien normal pour les Canadiens.

Nous nous intéressons vivement aux communications par satellite et aux possibilités que cela représente pour les régions éloignées du nord et de l'ouest du pays. Nous devons également continuer de diffuser les programmes destinés aux régions du Nord pour desservir les populations qui ne bénéficieront pas des services de radiodiffusion tant qu'il n'y aura pas de système de communication par satellite.

Jetons un bref coup d'œil sur le tableau de la page 60, qui se passe de commentaires. Il illustre assez bien, je pense, l'agrandissement des zones desservies par la télévision de Radio-Canada et la disposition des réseaux français et anglais.

[Text]

I am constrained here to comment on the fact that in a recent speech in the other place by an honourable senator reference was made to the fact that the broadcasting services of the Corporation cost the public of Canada about $24 million in 1952, 1953 and 1954—a level of expenditure of that order—and that it is now costing the people of Canada something of the order of $150 million. One has only to look at the chart on page 60 of the English text and French text to understand clearly why that growth in expenditure has taken place.

It is one thing to be providing in 1952 a limited service in a few Canadian urban communities to three, four or five million Canadians out of the total population. It is quite another thing to extend that service, as we have done over the years since 1952, to cover 96 per cent of the Canadian population and to cover them with programming that extends over 100 hours of the week rather than the very limited number of hours that were broadcast in the early years of radio and television.

● 1020

Another point touched upon in the Annual Report is, of course, the question of consolidation of our facilities, having reference particularly to the needs of consolidation in our three major urban centres of Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver. Members of the Committee, for the most part, have already formed some idea of the Montreal situation during their visit there last week, and we are hoping that the members of the Committee will also decide, Mr. Chairman, to visit our facilities in Toronto at some date convenient to themselves so that they can see what our existing facilities in Toronto are and what our hopes and plans are for improving the very unsatisfactory circumstances in which our English network headquarters is obliged to operate.

I am getting very close to the end now, Mr. Chairman, and I ask the indulgence of the Committee members for a moment or two to discuss a few aspects of our financial situation. The financial statistics relating to the Corporation's activities for the year 1967-68 are before the Committee in the pages beginning on page 71 of the English text. In financial terms it will be seen that we are examining a Corporation an operating budget for 1967-68 of $186 million approximately, and that figure includes the gross commercial revenues of $40 million which were earned by the Corporation in the course of this fiscal year. I think it is worth emphasizing that the CBC stayed within its budget for the 1967-68 fiscal year. The budget was approved by Parliament and refunded, as you can see if you look at the

[Interpretation]

Dans un récent discours au Sénat, un honorable sénateur observait que le service de radiodiffusion avait coûté aux Canadiens quelque 24 millions de dollars en 1952, 1953 et 1954, et qu'il coûte maintenant dans les 150 millions de dollars. Il suffit d'examiner le tableau de la page 60 des versions anglaise et française pour comprendre la raison de cet accroissement des dépenses.

En 1952 il ne s'agissait de desservir que quelques communautés urbaines, soit 4 ou 5 millions d'habitants en tout; tandis que maintenant, il s'agit de desservir 96 p. 100 de la population canadienne et de lui offrir des programmes de plus de cent heures par semaine, ce qui est bien plus qu'au début.

Le rapport annuel fait également mention du développement des installations actuelles, celles de Montréal, de Toronto et de Vancouver en particulier. Des membres du comité se sont fait une idée de la situation à Montréal, lors de leur visite la semaine dernière, et j'espère que les membres visiteront également nos installations à Toronto à une date qui leur conviendra afin qu'ils puissent se rendre compte de nos projets, qui ont pour but d'améliorer les conditions médiocres dans lesquelles le siège social du réseau anglais se trouve.

J'ai presque fini, monsieur le président. Je demanderai aux membres du Comité de bien vouloir m'accorder encore quelques instants pour traiter de certains aspects de notre situation financière. Les statistiques financières se rapportant à l'activité de la Société en 1967-1968 ont été présentées au comité à partir de la page 71 du rapport. Vous constaterez que la Société dispose pour 1967-1968 d'un budget d'exploitation d'environ 186 millions de dollars et que ce chiffre comprend 40 millions de dollars de recettes publicitaires brutes pour l'année financière en cours. Le budget a reçu l'approbation du Parlement, et, comme vous le voyez dans l'état financier, 600,000 dollars environ ont été remboursés au Trésor fédéral.

[Texte]

financial statement, approximately $600,000 as an unspent balance to the federal Treasury.

I think it is also worth noting, Mr. Chairman, that the Corporation, I think I can say without exception always stays within the budget that the Parliament of Canada makes available to it. There may have been one exception in one year when the Corporation was obliged, for a particular reason, to come back and request a supplementary appropriation but I think it is worth noting that the Corporation, one of the Crown corporations which receive a grant from Parliament, considers it its responsibility to live within the fund that Parliament appropriates at the beginning of the year in the Main Estimates and does not consider that it has really any basis for returning to Parliament half way through the year or the latter part of the year with a request for supplementary estimates. I make that assertion with the particular confidence that I do at this stage of our fiscal year because I know that this fiscal year we will not be obliged to come back to Parliament for a supplementary appropriation between now and the end of March. I may have to come back and swallow these words a year hence if our finances for next year do not prove adequate for the purpose.

I would like to go back to the Annual Report and make a final observation. This Annual Report which is presented to Parliament each year is the major means that we have of presenting to Parliament an account of the discharge of our responsibilities under our mandate during the the fiscal year under review. If most of my remarks and much of the Report has been devoted to programs, it is because the CBC Annual Report is and has to be a report on our stewardship, not just of the grant of money but on the exercise of our mandate and on the way in which we have carried this out in the programming provided to the Canadian people. Our mandate, of course, is the provision to the Canadian people of good programs, a variety of programs by standards worked out over the year and now set out under the new Broadcasting Act, and we know that we have a responsibility to you gentlemen and to Parliament as a whole for meeting our responsibilities, not merely in respect of staying within our budget but also in respect of measuring up to the requirements of good programming as set out in the terms of the Broadcasting Act.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that this is the sum and substance of what I have to say by way of introduction of the report that is before the Committee now. I would merely draw your attention finally to the fact that there are a couple of maps shown at the end of the

[Interprétation]

On remarquera également que la Société s'en tient presque toujours au budget que lui confie le Parlement. Il n'y a eu qu'une exception, où la Société, pour des raisons spéciales, a dû demander une allocation supplémentaire. Cette société de la Couronne estime qu'elle doit s'en tenir aux fonds qui lui sont alloués par le gouvernement dans le budget principal et qu'il n'est pas opportun de revenir devant la Chambre au milieu ou vers la fin de l'année pour avoir des fonds supplémentaires. J'affirme cela en toute quiétude, car je sais que cette année nous n'aurons pas besoin de nous adresser au Parlement pour avoir des fonds supplémentaires d'ici mars. Peut-être que dans un an je regretterai d'avoir dit cela, si notre budget pour l'année prochaine n'est pas suffisant.

Une dernière observation au sujet du rapport annuel. Ce rapport, que nous présentons chaque année à la Chambre, est le principal moyen que nous avons de rendre compte des responsabilités que nous confère notre mandat. Si j'ai surtout insisté, à l'instar du rapport, sur les programmes, c'est que le rapport annuel de Radio-Canada porte sur notre régie, et non seulement sur des fonds qui nous sont accordés; il s'agit de l'exercice de notre mandat et de la manière dont nous présentons nos programmes au public. Notre mandat est de donner une série de bons programmes conformes aux normes établies par la Loi sur la radiodiffusion. Nous sommes responsables devant vous, messieurs et devant tout le pays, et nous devons nous en tenir au budget voté, en respectant les règles d'une bonne programmation, telles qu'énumérées dans la Loi.

Je crois, monsieur le président, que c'est tout ce que j'avais à dire pour la présentation du rapport que voici. Je vous ferai remarquer qu'il y a à la fin du rapport quelques cartes représentant le réseau national de radio et de télévision de Radio-Canada. Notez que les Report which endeavour to display the scope of our CBC national service in radio and television. You are, of course, aware that in presenting our material, both statistical and graphically, we are presenting material that relates to a network that is made up not only of a number of CBC-owned and operated television and radio stations but that we have in addition to that the facilities provided through a much larger number of affiliated television and radio stations through which we endeavour to reach those sections of the country which are not served at the present time directly by CBC-owned and operated stations. It is this that enables us to provide the nationwide service that the Corporation—and the Corporation alone, I suggest to you—is in a position to provide to the Canadian people at the present time.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Thank you, Dr. Davidson. We will now have questions. Mr. Dinsdale. Mr. Comeau.

• 1025

Mr. Comeau: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank Dr. Davidson, the President of the CBC, for his resumé of the work of the Corporation. He has said that members of Parliament, as well as himself, hear only about the things that are not good within the CBC and the things that are controversial in nature, and I wish to deal with one of these controversial matters. It is the matter of separatism within the Corporation. There have been a number of charges the former Secretary of State, Miss LaMarsh, has made some—what I call charges within the Corporation. For example, Miss LaMarsh charged in a report that Radio-Canada was infested with separatism. She said it was controlled by people who wanted to break up the country.

Another news item in The Globe and Mail on January 21, reports that:

Neither...nor CBC president George Davidson listened to the CBC Quebec-France radio program at the weekend. Yet even secondhand accounts of it have alarmed them sufficiently to order an immediate study of the tapes.

There are other reports as well that separatists' control of CBC appears to have some substance.

I am wondering whether you have investigated these charges, Dr. Davidson, and whether you have anything to report on this matter? I realize again that it is only about 7 per cent of last year's coverage...

données statistiques et graphiques que nous présentons sont celles d'un réseau composé non seulement des postes de radio et de télévision appartenant à Radio-Canada, mais encore des postes affiliés qui nous permettent d'atteindre les régions du pays qui ne sont pas directement desservies par Radio-Canada. C'est ce qui permet à la Société—et à la Société seulement—de desservir tout le pays.

Merci, monsieur le président.

Le président: Merci, monsieur Davidson. Passons maintenant aux questions. Monsieur Dinsdale? Monsieur Comeau.

M. Comeau: Merci, monsieur le président. Je tiens à remercier monsieur Davidson, président de Radio-Canada, pour le résumé qu'il a fait de l'activité de la Société.

Il a dit que les députés, et lui-même, n'entendent parler que de ce qui va mal à Radio-Canada, que de questions controversées. En voici une. Il s'agit de la question du séparatisme à l'intérieur de la Société. Il y a eu un certain nombre d'accusations; l'ex-secrétaire d'État, M<sup>lle</sup> LaMarsh, a porté ce que j'appelle des accusations à l'intérieur-même de la Société. M<sup>lle</sup> LaMarsh a dit entre autres, que la Société Radio-Canada était infestée de séparatistes et contrôlée par des gens qui voulaient briser l'unité du pays. le Globe and Mail du 21 janvier, on pouvait lire:

Ni...ni le président de la Société Radio-Canada, M. George Davidson n'ont entendu le programme France-Québec durant la fin de semaine. Cependant les comptes rendus de ce programme les ont alarmés suffisamment pour qu'ils étudient immédiatement les rubans magnétiques.

Il y eut aussi d'autres rapports concernant le contrôle de Radio-Canada par des séparatistes qui semblent fondés.

Je me demande, monsieur Davidson, si vous avez fait enquête et si vous pouvez nous dire quelque chose à ce sujet? Je me rends compte que cela ne couvre que 7 p. 100 de la couverture de l'année dernière...

[Texte]

Dr. Davidson: This is a question that relates to a matter on which the portion of the year to which I made reference has no real relevance, because we either have a problem here or we have not a problem here—and I propose to deal with it quite frankly and openly with members of the Committee.

In the first place I repudiate the suggestion that separatists are in control of the Corporation. I am not a separatist. Mr. Picard, the Executive Vice-President is not a separatist. None of the gentlemen that you see ranged behind the benches here are separatists, and I repudiate the suggestion that anybody except the officers responsible for the management of the affairs of the Corporation are in control so far as the affairs of the Corporation are concerned.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, est-ce que le témoin pourrait faire la même affirmation au sujet de M. Marc Thibault?

Dr. Davidson: Yes, I make the same assertion in respect of Marc Thibault, the Director of our News and Public Affairs in the French network, Radio-Canada whom I assert is not a separatist and in whom, I assert further, Mr. Mongrain, with great respect, I have full confidence as a person who will do his part in exercising managerial responsibility in his section of the French network as responsibly as anyone could expect him to do.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, je voudrais poser une question supplémentaire pour continuer dans le même sujet.

Aurons-nous l'occasion d'entendre ou de voir M. Thibault devant ce Comité.

The Chairman: Do you have any objection?

Dr. Davidson: The Committee, of course is free to call whatever witnesses it wishes to call.

M. Mongrain: J'en fais la demande, monsieur le président.

The Chairman: I think we could take this up in the steering committee. I personally would have no objection.

Mr. Mongrain: I was of the impression he was supposed to be here today. You told me that yourself.

The Chairman: I thought that he might be here with some of the senior executives from Radio-Canada—and this is possible.

Mr. Comeau: If I might be allowed to continue. . .

[Interprétation]

M. Davidson: C'est une question dont le fonds ne repose pas sur une question de temps, car ou nous avons un problème, ou nous n'en avons pas. Et j'ai l'intention d'en traiter très franchement avec les membres du Comité.

D'abord je nie le fait que les séparatistes contrôlent la Société Radio-Canada. Je ne suis pas séparatiste. M. Picard, le vice-président exécutif ne l'est pas non plus. Aucune des personnes que vous voyez derrière ces bancs ne sont des séparatistes. Et je nie que quiconque excepté les responsables de la direction des opérations de la Société puisse exercer un contrôle sur le fonctionnement de la Société.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, could the witness make the same assertion as far as Mr. Marc Thibault is concerned?

M. Davidson: Oui, je fais la même affirmation en ce qui concerne M. Marc Thibault, le directeur de notre service de nouvelles et d'affaires publiques du réseau français. A mon avis, il n'est pas séparatiste et, M. Mongrain, j'ai pleine confiance en lui, dans son rôle de gestionnaire de sa section du réseau français, qu'il administre du reste d'une façon aussi responsable qu'on puisse l'exiger.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a supplementary question on this same subject. Will we have the opportunity of hearing Mr. Thibault as a witness before this Committee?

Le président: Avez-vous une objection?

M. Davidson: Le Comité est libre de faire appel à n'importe quel témoin.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I am making a request for this.

Le président: Je crois que nous pourrions discuter de cela au comité directeur. Personnellement, je n'ai pas d'objection.

M. Mongrain: Je croyais qu'il devrait être ici aujourd'hui; vous me l'avez affirmé vous-même.

Le président: J'avais pensé qu'il serait peut-être présent au milieu d'autres directeurs de la Société Radio-Canada.

M. Comeau: Puis-je continuer. . .

[Text]

The Chairman: Mr. Comeau, we operate a different system in this Committee. Somebody is allowed to introduce a major subject, which you have, separatism, and put questions on it, and then those who have valid questions of a supplementary nature are permitted to interject. We will return to you now.

Mr. Comeau: All right.

Mr. McCleave: I have a supplementary, Mr. Chairman.

Dr. Davidson: Perhaps I could go on and say something further on this.

The Chairman: Yes sir.

• 1030

Dr. Davidson: When I replied, as I did to Mr. Comeau, I did not mean to suggest for a moment that I was putting to the Committee the proposition that there are no separatists in the CBC. I would be prepared to make that assertion.

I do not make it my business—I do not propose to make it my business to examine the political affiliations of every last member of the staff of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I am not concerned whether they are Liberals, Conservatives, Creditistes, members of the NDP, or any party that is legally allowed to exercise its political rights and functions in our democratic society.

Therefore, if there are people within the Corporation who hold the political views that we describe as Separatists—and I am not really sure that we are altogether clear on the distinction between separatists, indépendantistes and nationalists—they hold them as persons who have a perfect right to hold them and there is no reason, as far as I am concerned, why their employment with the CBC should be interfered with as long as they do not endeavour to make use of and abuse their position within the Corporation to propagandize in their own right the political views which they hold.

If there are Liberals, or Conservatives, or Creditistes, or New Democratic Party members, or Separatist members of the CBC staff who abuse their positions in the Corporation by endeavouring to use that position to expound and propagandize to the Canadian public their particular brand of political ideology, they are all to be dealt with in some way. As far as I am concerned, it is the Corporation's responsibility to make every effort possible to ensure that these individuals who are in our pay, regardless of their political affiliations, do not take advantage of their

[Interpretation]

Le président: Nous suivons une procédure différente dans ce comité, monsieur Comeau. On a le droit d'introduire un sujet principal, par exemple le séparatisme, et poser des questions à ce sujet. Puis, ceux qui ont des questions supplémentaires valables peuvent alors poser ces questions. Vous avez la parole.

M. Comeau: Bien.

M. McCleave: J'ai une question supplémentaire monsieur le président.

M. Davidson: Je pourrais peut-être poursuivre...

Le président: Oui, monsieur.

M. Davidson: Lorsque j'ai répondu à M. Comeau je ne voulais pas laisser entendre au Comité qu'il n'y avait pas de séparatistes à Radio-Canada. Je ne suis pas prêt à dire cela. Mais ce ne sont pas mes affaires. Je n'ai pas l'intention d'examiner les affiliations politiques de tous les membres du personnel de la Société. Cela m'est égal qu'ils soient libéraux, conservateurs, créditistes, néo-démocrates ou de tout autre parti qui a juridiquement le droit d'exercer ses fonctions dans notre société démocratique.

Et, par conséquent, s'il y a des gens au sein de la Société qui ont des points de vue que l'on peut appeler séparatistes—et je ne suis pas tout à fait sûr que nous fassions très clairement la distinction entre nationalistes, séparatistes, indépendantistes, etc. . Et si ces personnes ont de telles convictions, elles en ont parfaitement le droit. Et, en ce qui me concerne, je ne vois pas pourquoi cela nuirait à leur emploi à la Société Radio-Canada dans la mesure où ils ne s'efforcent pas à se servir, et à abuser de leur position au sein de la Société pour propager des idées qui sont les leurs.

S'il y a des membres du personnel, libéraux, conservateurs, créditistes ou néo-démocrates... ou séparatistes, qui abusent de leur situation au sein de la Société pour faire de la propagande et exposer leur idéologie politique particulière, il faut traiter tous ces gens de la même façon. Et en ce qui nous concerne, la Société doit s'assurer que les personnes que nous payons, quelle que soit leur affiliation politique, ne doivent pas se servir de leur position pour exploiter les ondes en diffusant de la propagande politique.

position to exploit the air waves by the dissemination of their own political brand of propaganda.

That is the basic position of the Corporation. It is to that objective that the Corporation hews. The Corporation, I do not pretend for a moment, is entirely successful in achieving its objective in every last instance. This is a very difficult matter to control. When there are poets who read their poetry over the air waves, when there are singers who sing their songs over the air waves, when there are journalists and writers who through the written word or the spoken word express their views over the air waves, it is very difficult to give an ironclad assurance that in every last instance, in every last program there is going to be nothing to which Members of Parliament and members of the Canadian public might legitimately take exception.

The Corporation is doing everything that it is reasonable and proper for it to do to maintain a proper degree of self-discipline within the Corporation on this point. It is this objective that Mr. Picard and I, and the management of the Corporation, with the backing and support of our board of directors have set for ourselves so far as the abuse of the facilities of the Corporation are concerned by persons employed by the CBC who, regardless of their political affiliations, try to make unfair use of the position in which they find themselves.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, je voudrais poser deux objections à ce que vient de dire le président de Radio-Canada.

D'abord, le président de Radio-Canada semble vouloir identifier nos séparatistes et les révolutionnaires. Je vais même plus loin que M. Comeau, je ne parle pas seulement des séparatistes, je parle des révolutionnaires professionnels. M. Davidson semble admettre que ces gens-là forment un parti politique qui ressemblerait au parti libéral, au parti conservateur, ou au parti créditiste. Il y a une nuance.

• 1035

Je pense que les libéraux, les conservateurs, les créditistes, tous les partis qui existent actuellement au Canada, veulent au moins une chose: la Confédération vive et avec le moins de divisions possible. Or ces gens-là sont des propagandistes, enfin des gens qui poursuivent l'effritement de la Confédération. Moi, je refuse d'être identifié aux séparatistes comme parti politique. Et je pense que mes amis les conservateurs ou mes amis les créditistes aussi, ne veulent avoir aucune affinité au point de vue politique avec

[Interprétation]

Voilà la position fondamentale de la Société. Et la Société s'en tient là. Je ne dis pas que la Société atteint pleinement ce but dans chaque cas. C'est une question extrêmement difficile à contrôler. Lorsqu'un poète lit ses poèmes, lorsqu'un chanteur chante ses chansons, lorsque des journalistes ou des écrivains expriment leurs points de vue sur les ondes, il est extrêmement difficile de s'assurer que dans chaque cas, il n'y aura rien qui fera critiquer certains députés ou certaines parties du public canadien.

La Société fait de son mieux pour maintenir un certain degré d'autodiscipline au sein de la Société. Et c'est là l'objectif que M. Picard et moi-même, et la Direction de Radio-Canada, avec le support de notre conseil d'administration essayons de mettre en œuvre en ce qui concerne l'utilisation abusive des installations de la Société par des employés qui, quelle que soit leur affiliation politique, s'en servent d'une façon déloyale.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I have two objections to what the president of the CBC has just said.

First of all, the president of the CBC seems to want to consider our separatists and the revolutionaries as being identical. I go even farther than Mr. Comeau, I am not only talking about separatists, but about professional revolutionaries.

Mr. Davidson seems to admit that these people form a political party such as the Creditistes or the Liberals, or the Conservative Party. There is a slight difference.

I believe that the Liberals, the Creditistes, the Conservatives, all parties existing at the present time in Canada, want at least one thing: that Confederation be able to survive with the least amount of divisiveness possible. Whereas these people are propagandists, people who are working towards the breaking up of Confederation.

I refuse to be identified with the separatists as a political party. And I think that my Conservative or Creditistes friends do not want to be associated politically with the les séparatistes. Les séparatistes sont des gens qui, de l'opinion unanime, je crois, de tous ceux qui sont ici, cherchent à briser les liens qui unissent les provinces et tous les Canadiens. C'est la même chose pour les révolutionnaires qu'on s'amuse à faire comparaître à Radio-Canada en toutes sortes d'occasions.

J'ai ici, par exemple, une découpe de journal qui va vous donner une idée de ce que je veux dire. On pourrait nommer des douzaines et des douzaines de cas semblables. Je lis:

Le soir de la mise à sac de Sir George, l'émission «Aujourd'hui» déployait le tapis rouge pour accueillir le jeune Rolfe, l'un des leaders de la révolte étudiante d'Allemagne. Rolfe s'est dit déçu du fait que les étudiants de Sir George n'aient pas fait l'unanimité contre la police.

Pourquoi invite-t-on ces gens-là? On pourrait dire aux nouvelles: «Il s'est produit telle chose ou M. Untel est là.» Mais pourquoi leur donne-t-on la tribune de Radio-Canada? Et la même chose se produit pour les séparatistes. Il y a quelques jours à l'émission «Aujourd'hui», on faisait comparaître M. Bourgault. Pourquoi? Pour nous annoncer qu'il ouvrirait une école d'art oratoire. Alors, pourquoi Radio-Canada ne fait-il pas cela pour tous les candidats battus du parti conservateur ou du parti libéral? Où vont-ils gagner leur vie lorsqu'ils ont été battus?

C'est justement à cause de cette tendance systématique qu'on observe à Radio-Canada, et qui est voulue par certains officiers. Bien sûr, ces gens-là n'arrivent pas là de but en blanc, et c'est justement ce qui laisse croire au public canadien que systématiquement, au sein de Radio-Canada, il y a des gens qui aiment à semer la propagande du séparatisme et de la révolution systématique.

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, I think it is open to question, if I may say so to Mr. Mongrain, as to whether the appearance of Mr. Bourgault on television the other night in which he was interviewed in connection with his new vocation of running a school of oratory—I think it is open to question, I say, as to whether this constituted propaganda very favorable to the separatist cause or not. Here is a man who, until recently, was the leader of a political party which received I think nine per cent of the votes in the last provincial election, and which was at least of sufficient degree of importance to justify, under the rules of the game, a certain amount of free-time political broadcasting on the occasion of the last political election.

[Interpretation]

separatists. I think I express the unanimous opinion of all those present that separatists are people who try to break up the relations that unite the provinces and all Canadians.

The same thing applies to the revolutionaries whom the CBC enjoys inviting to make appearances on all kinds of occasions.

I have here, for instance, press clippings that explain clearly what I want to say. I could give you dozens of similar cases. I quote:

On the evening that Sir George Williams University was wrecked, the program "Aujourd'hui" was giving the red carpet treatment to a young man named Rolfe who is one of the leaders of the student revolt in Germany. Rolfe said he was disappointed by the fact that the students at Sir George had not shown unanimous support against the police.

Why are such people invited? We could say during news: "Such a thing happened and Mr. So-and-so was there." But why invite these people on the CBC to speak? The same thing occurs where the separatists are concerned. Mr. Bourgault was asked to appear on the program "Aujourd'hui" to talk about his Public Speaking School that he was opening. Now, why does the CBC not do that for all the defeated candidates of the Conservative Party or the Liberal Party? How will they make a living when they are defeated?

It is precisely because of this systematic tendency that one notices in the CBC and which is deliberately chosen by certain officials. Of course, those people do not appear there out of the blue, and this is what leads the Canadian public to think that within CBC there are people who systematically want to make propaganda for the separatist movement and for systematic revolution.

M. Davidson: Monsieur le président, je pense qu'il est discutable, si je peux m'adresser ainsi à M. Mongrain, de savoir si l'apparition de M. Bourgault l'autre soir à la télévision, alors qu'on l'interviewait sur sa nouvelle vocation de directeur de cours d'art oratoire, je pense, dis-je, qu'il est discutable de savoir si oui ou non c'était une propagande très favorable à la cause séparatiste.

Voici un homme qui, jusqu'à tout récemment, recueillait neuf pour cent des votes aux dernières élections provinciales, ce qui, selon les règles du jeu, était suffisant pour obtenir à cette occasion une certaine tranche de temps gratuit d'émission politique à la radio ou à la télévision. Voici un homme qui se trouve maintenant à ne rien faire d'important,

[Texte]

Here is a man who now finds himself doing nothing of significance except running a school of oratory for which I think he hopes to recruit as many as 30 candidates. I would be hard put to decide, Mr. Chairman, whether this is a boost for separatism or whether this is perhaps an ironic commentary on what happens to the leaders of unsuccessful political parties, including the party of which Mr. Bourgault was the head.

Could I also go on to say that Mr. Mongrain made reference to revolutionaries. Certainly I would make a distinction between separatists who are affiliated with what is, after all, a legal political party in Canada, and those who are...

Mr. Mongrain: I do not make the distinction.

Dr. Davidson: ...who are advocating by violence, by violent action, the destruction of property and the upsetting of the peace and order of our Canadian communities. But it is not for me to say that the Parti Québécois, for example, is an illegal political party. It is not for the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to decide that there are certain illegal political parties that are not entitled to the use of the airwaves in the proper manner, and on the other hand that there are certain legal political parties that are entitled to the use of the Canadian airwaves.

The Canadian airwaves are open to the use of all political leaders of all political stripes who represent political movements that are legal in Canada and that play a part in the evolution of our political institutions. And while I am not a separatist, and while I am firmly opposed to all that the separatists have as their objectives, I must say to you in all frankness that as long as I am President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the responsibility for deciding that certain political parties are outside the law and are not entitled to the facilities that are provided by Canadians generally for the broadcasting of public information, entertainment and enlightenment, the responsibility is yours to determine that these political parties shall not be entitled to the use of the Canadian airwaves. If you make that determination, as the Parliament of Canada, the Corporation will abide by your decision.

excepté de diriger une école oratoire pour laquelle il compte bien recruter, je crois, dans les trente candidats. Je me demande vraiment, monsieur le président, s'il s'agit là d'une impulsion pour le séparatisme, ou si ce n'est pas plutôt un reportage ironique sur ce qui arrive aux chefs des partis politiques sans succès, y compris celui dont M. Bourgault est à la tête. M. Mongrain s'est référé aux révolutionnaires. J'établirais pourtant à coup sûr une distinction entre les séparatistes qui sont affiliés à ce qui, après tout, est un parti politique légal au Canada, et ceux qui sont...

M. Mongrain: Non, je ne fais pas la distinction.

M. Davidson: ...et ceux qui prônent la violence, l'action violente, la destruction des biens et le bouleversement de l'ordre et de la paix dans notre communauté canadienne. Mais ce n'est pas à moi de dire que le Parti Québécois, par exemple, est un parti politique illégal. Ce n'est pas au président de Radio-Canada de décider qu'il y a certains partis politiques illégaux qui n'ont pas qualité pour utiliser les ondes de la bonne façon, et, d'un autre côté, qu'il existe certains partis politiques légaux, habilités à se servir des ondes canadiennes.

Les ondes canadiennes sont à la disposition de tous les leaders de tous les partis politiques de toutes couleurs qui représentent des mouvements politiques légaux au Canada et qui jouent un rôle dans l'évolution de nos institutions politiques. Bien que je ne sois pas séparatiste, et bien que je sois fermement opposé à tous les objectifs des séparatistes, je dois vous dire en toute franchise que tant que je serai président de Radio-Canada, la responsabilité de décider du fait que certains partis politiques sont hors-la-loi et n'ont pas droit aux installations normalement à la disposition des Canadiens pour la radiodiffusion de l'information publique, que cette responsabilité est vôtre. C'est à vous de décider que ces partis n'ont pas le droit de se servir des ondes canadiennes. Si vous prenez une décision en ce sens comme Parlement du Canada, alors la Société la respectera.

But the Corporation is not going to take it upon itself to exercise in irresponsible fashion a kind of political censorship, because we might find ourselves in a position, if we start doing that, of exercising political censorship

Mais ce n'est pas à la Société Radio-Canada d'assumer d'une façon irresponsable une sorte de censure politique, parce que, si nous commençons à agir de la sorte, nous pourrions en fin de compte, finir par exercer aussi une over some of the political parties that you gentlemen around this table represent.

M. Mongrain: Monsieur le président, le président de Radio-Canada se place à l'extrême opposé de ma position. Évidemment, ce n'est pas à eux de décider que tel parti est légal ou que tel parti n'est pas légal. Seulement, ces gens qui sont responsables de tout ce secteur-là savent, par exemple, que M. Untel ou M. Untel est un séparatiste, et on a l'impression dans le public que Radio-Canada s'en fait le tribun. Je parle de séparatistes, de révolutionnaires, des tenants de toutes ces philosophies qu'on peut appeler marginales, et qui, en somme, représentent une très petite minorité de Canadiens. Il y a une nuance entre la position que vous venez d'exprimer et qui est juste, et celle-là.

Évidemment, les séparatistes et les révolutionnaires, il faut parfois en parler aux nouvelles, cela est sûr. Mais il y a une nuance entre en parler aux nouvelles et leur donner la tribune de Radio-Canada plus souvent qu'à leur tour. Il devrait y avoir plus de proportion entre le temps alloué à ces gens-là et le temps alloué aux tenants de philosophies non-marginales et qui représentent l'opinion publique des contribuables, des payeurs de taxes qui financent Radio-Canada. C'est là qu'est l'objection: le public a l'impression que ces tenants de philosophies marginales, ces hippies, enfin, tout ce que vous voudrez, ont la tribune de Radio-Canada plus souvent qu'à leur tour.

Dernièrement, j'ai eu l'occasion de voir une émission consacrée à la famille. Tout le monde est content: «c'est une émission sur la famille». L'animateur est l'un de nos révolutionnaires notoires dans le Québec, Michel Chartrand, animateur d'une émission sur la famille, mais cela, je l'accepte, il est père de famille. Tout de même, c'est déjà inquiétant. Je vois passer là une dizaine de jeunes gens qui disent toutes sortes de choses, évidemment, puis je vois une petite fille qui dit: «Mes parents ne me comprennent pas. Moi, je leur parle de l'amour libre, je leur parle de m'absenter pour une fin de semaine. Et ils ne comprennent pas cela, ils m'engueulent».

Voilà qui ne représente pas l'opinion générale des Canadiens; ça, c'est une philosophie marginale. Qu'on voie cela une fois par année en une occasion spéciale, d'accord, mais ils sont invités, ces gens-là, par les officiers de Radio-Canada. Et c'est ce qui justement inquiète le public: il a l'impression que systématiquement, des responsables de certains services de Radio-Canada—je ne veux pas les nommer et savoir quelle est leur responsabilité, invitent des tenants de philosophies marginales.

[Interpretation]

censure sur les partis politiques que vous, Messieurs, représentez dans cette enceinte.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, the president of the CBC stands at the extreme opposite of my own position. Of course, it is not up to them to decide if such and such a party is legal or not. Only, those who are responsible for that particular sector know, for instance, that so and so is a separatist, and the public is under the impression that the CBC champions them. I am talking about the separatists, the revolutionaries, about the adherents of all these marginal philosophies and who represent a very small minority in Canada. There is a slight difference between the position as you have just stated, and which is right, and that one.

Naturally, the separatists and the revolutionaries must be mentioned in the news. But there is a slight difference between speaking about them in the news and allowing them to express their views over the CBC more often than they should. There should be a better proportion between the time allocated to these people and the time allocated to the adherents of non-marginal philosophies which represent the public opinion of the taxpayers who finance the CBC. This is where the objection lies: the public has the impression that the adherents of these marginal philosophies, these hippies, or what have you, speak more often than they are entitled to on the CBC.

I remember a program a while ago concerning the family. Everyone was happy and said: This is a program on the family. The moderator of this program is a well-known Quebec separatist, Michel Chartrand, who is the moderator of a family program. I can accept this though, since he is a father himself and head of a family. Nevertheless, this is already cause for worry. Then you see about 10 young people saying all sorts of things and then a little girl, who says: "My parents do not understand me. I talk about free love, I talk about going away for the weekend, and they do not understand that, they are angry against me."

This does not represent the general opinion of Canadians. It is a marginal philosophy. If this viewpoint were presented only once a year it would be all right, but those people are invited by CBC officials. And this is precisely what worries the public: There is the impression that systematically, the officials of certain CBC services—I do not wish to name them and know what their responsibilities are—invite people representing marginal philosophies.

[Texte]

Dr. Davidson: If I understand your position correctly, Mr. Mongrain, what you are really saying now, and I appreciate the point you are making, is that it is not a question of objecting to the appearance of these people representing marginal points of view, political or otherwise, on the public airwaves. Rather it is your view, and that of a great many other people, that these marginal points of view are represented on the airwaves more frequently than in proportion to their importance as a party in public they are entitled to.

Mr. Mongrain: That is my point.

Dr. Davidson: This is obviously a matter of judgment. You may very well be right. I may very well agree with you.

Mr. Mongrain: I am not all alone.

Dr. Davidson: No, no. You say a great many people, and I have said, I repeat it, that you assert this, that a great many people agree with you. And I say you may very well be right, and I may very well agree with you. All I can say is that this is a very difficult matter to assess. There is evidence, I think, which I can cite if you wish, that the Corporation is making honest efforts to maintain a standard balance in this area. You may or may not have noted the recent incident, which I assure you was not staged deliberately in advance of my appearance before the Parliamentary Committee, the incident on the English network in which a certain French Canadian chanteuse of known separatist tendencies was allowed to sing one song but not allowed to sing another song for reasons that appeared good to the management of the English network, and this was a case of some public comment.

It is merely one indication among others I can give you of the fact that we are monitoring this aspect of our programming responsibility as carefully and as conscientiously as we can.

But I must say to you again that it is a matter in which we believe that judgment and good sense has to be exercised and that we must lean over backwards to ensure that we do not adopt a posture of rigid repression of the expression of free political beliefs. I think the Corporation has traditionally taken the position that if it must air on one side or the other of this question it should air on the side of those who represent the minority points of view at least their full share of opportunity to

[Interprétation]

M. Davidson: Si je comprends bien, votre position, monsieur Mongrain,—et je comprends votre point de vue,—c'est que la question n'est pas de s'objecter à la retransmission sur les ondes des points de vue marginaux, politiques ou autres. Vous pensez plutôt, comme bien d'autres que ces points de vue marginaux sont représentés sur les ondes plus fréquemment qu'ils ne devraient l'être en proportion de ceux qu'ils représentent.

M. Mongrain: Effectivement.

M. Davidson: C'est une question de jugement, de toute évidence. Vous pourriez très bien avoir raison; et il se peut très bien que je sois d'accord.

M. Mongrain: Je ne suis pas tout seul.

M. Davidson: Non, non. Vous dites «un grand nombre de gens», et je le répète, beaucoup de personnes sont d'accord avec vous; vous pouvez très bien avoir raison, et moi je peux très bien être d'accord avec vous. Mais tout ce que je peux vous dire, c'est que c'est une question très difficile à évaluer. Il y a une preuve, je pense, que je peux mentionner si vous le désirez, du fait que la Société Radio-Canada fait honnêtement des efforts pour maintenir un certain équilibre dans ce domaine. Vous avez peut-être noté un récent incident—qui, je vous l'assure, n'était pas prémédité en vue de ma venue au Comité parlementaire—alors qu'une certaine chanteuse canadienne-française se produisant sur le réseau anglais put interpréter une chanson mais non pas une seconde, ce pour des motifs particuliers à la direction de ce réseau, ce qui provoqua quelques commentaires.

Ce n'est qu'une indication parmi d'autres que je peux vous donner pour montrer que nous essayons de contrôler cet aspect de notre responsabilité en matière de programmes aussi attentivement et soigneusement que possible.

Mais je dois vous dire qu'il s'agit là d'une question au sujet de laquelle il faut faire preuve de jugement et de bon sens. Nous devons nous efforcer de ne pas réprimer l'expression libre des opinions politiques. La Société, dans le passé, a adopté l'attitude suivante: si elle diffusait une opinion, elle diffusait également l'opinion de la minorité qui supportait le point de vue opposé ou lui donnait tout au moins la chance d'exprimer son point de vue, ce qui a pu faire croire à plu-express themselves, and this may be seen by many Canadians as giving them more than they are entitled to.

The Chairman: On the same subject, I have Mr. Comeau, Mr. McCleave, Mr. Broadbent and Mr. Stafford.

M. Mongrain: Je voudrais donner une explication sur un fait personnel, monsieur le président, puis je laisserai la parole à mes collègues. Je ne voudrais pas que M. Davidson et ses collègues s'imaginent que les remarques que j'ai faites veulent exprimer un manque de confiance en eux. Au contraire, j'ai pleine confiance en la haute direction de Radio-Canada, et j'ai pleine conscience que Radio-Canada fait un travail extraordinaire dont tout le Canada est fier. Je voudrais que cela soit bien établi: J'ai pleine confiance que la nouvelle direction, qui inclut même des anciens officiers, va pouvoir réformer la programmation. C'est dans le but de les aider que je leur transmets des plaintes que nous recevons ici par milliers. Merci monsieur le président.

The Chairman: Mr. Comeau.

Mr. Comeau: Have you, Mr. Davidson, carried out any type of investigation since these charges have evolved and if so, are you yourself satisfied that there are not a great number of separatists working within the CBC itself?

Dr. Davidson: I am in no position to state, Mr. Comeau and Mr. Chairman, that I know the numbers of persons who adhere to the separatists' belief or to a particular political party in the French network or in the CBC as a whole. I state again that I really do not feel that the Corporation can concern itself with that as such. What I am concerned about, and what I assure you that the management of the Corporation is very sensitive to, is the danger that use may be made of the facilities which have been provided by the taxpaying public of Canada by persons who wish to expound their own political points of view—and this applies certainly to those who are of the separatists' point of view.

I have not made a formal investigation. I have been conscious of this problem since the weeks before I assumed my position. I was told by many people before I assumed my present position that the first thing I had to do when I became President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was to clean the separatists out of the CBC. I was told that by many people.

[Interpretation]

seurs Canadiens que nous leur accordions plus que ce à quoi ils avaient droit.

Le président: J'ai plusieurs orateurs inscrits, M. Comeau, M. McCleave, M. Broadbent, et M. Stafford.

Mr. Mongrain: I would like to raise a point of privilege first, Mr. Chairman, and then I let my colleagues have the floor. I would not want Mr. Davidson and his colleagues to believe that my comments here are the expression of a lack of confidence in them. On the contrary, I have full faith in the senior management of the CBC, and I am fully aware that the CBC is doing a splendid job of which Canada as a whole is proud. I want to make it quite clear that I am fully confident that the new management, which includes members of the old management, will be able to reform the programming. It is in order to help them that I am informing them about the complaints which we receive here by the thousands. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Le président: Monsieur Comeau.

M. Comeau: Ma question s'adresse à M. Davidson. Avez-vous fait une enquête de quelque nature que ce soit depuis ces accusations et êtes-vous vous-même convaincu qu'il n'y a pas un grand nombre de séparatistes qui travaillent au sein de Radio-Canada?

M. Davidson: Je ne suis pas en mesure, monsieur Comeau, de vous dire combien de personnes adhèrent à la croyance séparatiste ou à un parti politique au sein de Radio-Canada. Encore une fois je répète que je n'ai pas l'impression que la Société puisse s'inquiéter de pareilles questions.

Mais, je vous assure que l'administration de la Société Radio-Canada est très sensible au danger que pourrait entraîner l'utilisation des installations fournies par les contribuables du Canada, par des personnes qui veulent étendre leurs propres convictions politiques. Et dans ce cas-ci, bien sûr, nos craintes s'étendent à des gens qui sont de croyance séparatiste.

Je n'ai pas entrepris d'enquête officielle. J'étais au courant de ce problème durant les semaines qui ont précédé mon entrée en fonction. Bien des gens m'ont dit, avant que j'n'assume mes nouvelles fonctions, que la première chose à faire, au moment où je serai président de la Société Radio-Canada, c'était de balayer tous les séparatistes de Radio-Canada. On me l'a dit avant même que j'arrive.

[Texte]

I will tell you what my answer was. My answer was that if that was the kind of President they were looking for, one who would clean out the separatists from the CBC, merely because they were separatists, they had better look for somebody else because I do not consider that to be the responsibility of the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Broadbent: Good man.

Dr. Davidson: Separatism is a fact of political life in Canada. It is a malaise, if you like. I consider it to be a malaise, an illness, a disease, a problem affecting the political viability of our nation. But that is a problem for you gentlemen to solve—you gentlemen who represent the people of Canada. This is a political problem. You cannot expect separatism not to reflect itself in the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation or in the programming of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation if separatism exists in the body politic of Canada itself.

, 1050

My job is to see to it, and I assure you it is not an easy job—I am not as far away from Mr. Mongrain's point of view about balance as my remarks earlier might have suggested—but my job is to see to it, if I possibly can, that there is no greater reflection of the element of separatism as a political malaise or political phenomenon in the political spectrum of all political beliefs across Canada than exists in the real facts of Canadian life and Canadian society.

The effort that we are making is to try to maintain a proper balance so that the facts of separatism, the problem presented by separatism, will be reflected in proper political balance for the greater understanding of the Canadian people. And goodness knows, the people across Canada need to understand what is going on in the political developments in Quebec more than they have understood up to the present time. But my job is to see that this is presented to them in balance, in fairness and objectivity. We will be far from being completely successful in doing so, gentlemen. It is your task and your responsibility to criticize us for our failures to do it properly and it is our responsibility to listen to these criticisms and to endeavour to adjust what we are doing as best we can to the criticism that you have to offer.

An hon. Member: A supplementary Mr. Chairman?

29459—3½

[Interprétation]

Et, je vous dirai quelle était ma réponse. Je répondais que si c'était le genre de président qu'ils cherchaient, un président qui chasserait tous les séparatistes de Radio-Canada, simplement parce qu'ils étaient séparatistes, ils étaient mieux de s'adresser ailleurs parce que j'estimais que cela n'était pas du tout le rôle du président de Radio-Canada.

M. Broadbent: Bravo.

M. Davidson: Le séparatisme est une réalité de la vie politique au Canada. C'est un malaise, si vous voulez. Je considère que c'est un malaise, c'est une maladie, c'est un problème qui affecte la vie politique de notre nation et sa survie. Mais, c'est à vous, messieurs, de régler ce problème. C'est vous qui représentez la population du Canada. C'est un problème d'ordre politique. Vous ne pouvez pas vous attendre à ce que le séparatisme ne se traduise pas au sein de Radio-Canada ou dans la programmation de Radio-Canada, parce que le séparatisme existe sur le plan politique lui-même.

Mon travail c'est d'y voir et ce n'est pas un travail facile je vous assure. Je ne suis pas aussi éloigné du point de vue de M. Mongrain, que mes remarques antérieures ont pu vous le laisser croire, mais il m'appartient de voir, si c'est possible, à ce qu'il n'y ait pas plus d'importance accordée à l'élément séparatiste comme malaise politique ou comme phénomène politique, dans la gamme de toutes les opinions politiques qui existent au Canada, que ce qui existe en réalité.

L'effort que nous faisons consiste à maintenir l'équilibre afin que la réalité du séparatisme, le problème présenté par le séparatisme soit présenté de telle sorte que toute la population canadienne comprenne mieux la question. Et, Dieu sait que les gens à travers le Canada doivent comprendre ce qui se passe sur le plan politique au Québec plus qu'ils ne l'ont compris jusqu'ici. Et, mon travail c'est de voir à ce qu'on présente la situation d'une façon juste, équitable et objective. C'est à nous qu'il incombe de réussir et c'est à vous qu'il incombe de nous critiquer si nous ne réussissons pas. Et, nous devons écouter vos critiques et nous efforcer d'adapter ce que nous faisons pour répondre le mieux possible à vos critiques.

Une voix: J'aurais une question supplémentaire à poser.

[Text]

The Chairman: Well, Mr. McCleave has a supplementary, then Mr. Broadbent, Mr. Stafford, Mr. Dinsdale and Mr. Schreyer.

Mr. McCleave: Dr. Davidson, my understanding is that most of the people who espouse the separatist line on Radio-Canada are free-lancers. If I am correct in this information, which has been given to me by what seemed to be a reliable source, then the answer to this question on disproportion is to find out who is hiring them, bring that person in and ask him or her to justify their position. Would you not agree with that?

Dr. Davidson: I do not agree with the assumption on which you make your proposition, Mr. McCleave.

Mr. McCleave: You do not agree that these are outsiders who are hired to do free-lance assignments.

Dr. Davidson: Subject to a quick check with the Executive Vice-President and the Vice-President of the network, my impression is that it is not a question of free-lancers outside the Corporation any more than it is of persons who are in the employ of the Corporation who happen to hold these views.

Mr. McCleave: You are speaking about the people who actually go on the air and give these separatists' views.

Dr. Davidson: Oh no, not go on the air and give separatists' views. I am talking about people who are said to be separatists.

Mr. McCleave: I am talking about the program itself. I do not care whether they are Holy Rollers or the like. It is what goes out on the air that concerns me.

Dr. Davidson: We have some of those too, Mr. McCleave, but we have had no complaints about them.

Mr. McCleave: On the point raised by Mr. Mongrain, that the separatists' message on the air is in disproportion, it is my understanding that the cause of this disproportion is, by and large, the free-lancers. Now if this is so then the obvious remedy is to go to the person who hired them, gave them these public facilities to present their separatists' views, and say, "Why do you put them on in such disproportion?" Is that not a reasonable approach to it?

Dr. Davidson: If it is our opinion that too many persons representing separatists' point of view are being invited on to our programs for

[Interpretation]

Le président: Monsieur McCleave a une question supplémentaire. Ensuite M. Broadbent, M. Stafford, M. Dinsdale et M. Schreyer.

M. McCleave: Monsieur Davidson, je crois comprendre que la plupart des gens qui épousent la cause séparatiste à Radio-Canada sont des pigistes. Et, si on m'a bien informé—je crois que ma source est digne de foi—il s'agit de savoir qui les engage, de faire venir cette personne et de lui demander quel critère elle suit.

M. Davidson: Je ne suis pas d'accord avec votre hypothèse qui sert de base à la proposition.

M. McCleave: Vous n'êtes pas d'accord pour dire qu'il s'agit de personnes de l'extérieur?

M. Davidson: Je peux vérifier rapidement auprès du vice-président exécutif et du vice-président du réseau. Mais, j'ai l'impression qu'il s'agit tout autant de pigistes que d'employés de la Société.

M. McCleave: Vous parlez des gens qui, en fait, passent sur les ondes et présentent leur point de vue séparatiste?

M. Davidson: Non, non, pas ceux qui présentent leur point de vue séparatiste. Je parle de ces gens qu'on dit séparatistes.

M. McCleave: Et moi je parle des émissions. Je n'ai que faire de leurs convictions. C'est ce qui va en ondes qui m'intéresse.

M. Davidson: Ces gens existent également mais nous n'avons pas reçu de plaintes à leur sujet.

M. McCleave: Pour revenir au point soulevé par monsieur Mongrain, si le message séparatiste reçoit une publicité indue en ondes, je suis d'avis que cette disproportion vient de chez les pigistes. Si c'est le cas, le remède évident serait de s'adresser à ceux qui les a engagés pour leur permettre de servir des installations publiques pour présenter le point de vue séparatiste et de lui demander: «Pourquoi cette disproportion? Ne croyez-vous pas qu'il s'agit d'un procédé raisonnable?»

M. Davidson: Si nous croyons que trop de personnes qui épousent ce point de vue séparatiste sont invitées à venir, dans nos émi-

the purpose of expounding their separatists' philosophy, I agree with you. However, one of the problems, if I can just go on, is this. Take the case of singers for example, the chansonnier, the case of many of the poets, many of the best poets in the Province of Quebec at the present time.

Are we going to have to exercise censorship over the songs that people sing, over the poems that they write and read over the air? Much of the complaint that I understand is voiced of separatism turning up on the French network airwaves is that it infiltrates all through the programming, that you listen to a program of entertainment—it might be nightclub entertainment—and a French-Canadian chanteuse will sing a separatists' song. We had the recent example of this, which I referred to, on the English network.

Also, in terms of some of our literary programs, we have had allegations, and I think that they are probably justified, that some of the good French-Canadian poets who exist and are well respected as poets in the Province of Quebec at the present time have separatists' leanings and reflect these separatists' leanings in the poetry that they read over the air. We also have political leaders who are invited.

• 1055

The real question is not are they allowed to come on the airways to express their opinions but, are they being invited, Mr. McCleave, in disproportion to their significance and importance as an element in the political life of the nation? Now that is one problem.

If we decide that some of our producers or some of the sections of our programming on the French or English networks are providing in disproportionate ways opportunities for outsiders, not CBC employees, to propagandize their political views over the airwaves, I agree with you—we should do something about making certain that this imbalance is rectified.

But there is another aspect to the problem too, if I may say so. The counterpart of your question is the suggestion that I hear voiced on occasion, that some at least of the CBC employees themselves by their inflections, by their facial gestures, by their attitudes or in subtle ways are utilizing their position in the Corporation to get across a message of separatism to the people who are viewing. Now I regard that problem, frankly, as a much more serious problem and a much more difficult problem than the problem of the sions, diffuser leur philosophie, je suis d'accord avec vous. Mais, si vous me permettez de poursuivre, prenons un exemple. Celui des chansonniers, de nombreux poètes, de plusieurs des meilleurs poètes qu'a le Québec à l'heure actuelle.

Est-ce que nous serons forcés de censurer les chansons que chantent les gens, les poèmes qu'ils lisent sur les ondes? Je crois qu'une bonne partie des plaintes que nous recevons au sujet du séparatisme au réseau français sont centrées sur le fait que le séparatisme s'infiltré dans toute la programmation, qu'un programme de variétés, qui peut se dérouler dans un cabaret, présente une chanteuse canadienne-française qui interprète une chanson séparatiste. Nous en avons eu un exemple, récemment, au réseau anglais.

Au sujet de nos émissions littéraires, on s'est plaint, et les plaintes étaient probablement justifiées, que certains des bons poètes canadiens-français, qui sont respectés comme tels dans la province de Québec, dans le moment, ont des penchants séparatistes et que ceci se reflète dans la poésie qu'ils lisent sur les ondes. Nous avons aussi des leaders politiques qui sont invités.

Il ne s'agit pas de savoir si on leur permet de parler sur les ondes pour exprimer leur opinion, monsieur McCleave, mais de savoir s'ils reçoivent trop d'invitations par rapport à leur importance dans la vie politique de la nation. Voilà un problème. Je suis d'accord avec vous.

Si nous décidons que certains de nos réalisateurs ou certains des secteurs de notre programmation aux réseaux français ou anglais fournissent de façon disproportionnée des occasions à des étrangers, non des employés de Radio-Canada, de faire de la propagande sur les ondes, à ce moment-là, je suis d'accord qu'il faut faire quelque chose pour corriger ce déséquilibre.

Mais je m'empresse d'ajouter un autre point de vue. La contrepartie de votre question, c'est une suggestion que j'entends exprimée de temps à autre, du moins une partie des employés de Radio-Canada eux-mêmes par leurs inflexions, par leurs expressions faciales, par leur attitude ou de façon plus subtile se servent de leur situation pour transmettre un message de séparatisme aux gens qui écoutent l'émission. Franchement, je considère ce problème-là comme un problème beaucoup plus grave et beaucoup plus difficile person brought in from the outside who is given an opportunity to express his views.

If I have a political view to express and some radio broadcaster invites me to go on a program and express my political views, I should feel that I am not abusing the privilege of the airwaves if I am doing what I am invited there to do. But if I am employed by a radio broadcasting agency and I am expected to maintain certain standards of professional integrity and I begin to abuse my position in that particular capacity, I regard that as a much more serious problem than the former.

Mr. McCleave: Well your predecessors dealt with the lachrymose LaPierre when he wept tears on a certain program, so I suppose that you can deal with the shruggers and so on. However, I suggest that if you looked at this area as well as the area of hiring freelancers that you probably would go a long way toward solving your problems.

Dr. Davidson: This and recruitment, if I may say so.

The Chairman: Mr. Broadbent.

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I found myself in substantial agreement with Dr. Davidson's comments up to the point at which he said, for some reason I found peculiar, that separatism was in fact a malaise. Now it seems to me that this is a very undesirable extreme statement perhaps of your own position. I do not know if you really meant that, but that seems to me to put you exactly in a political position. It would be rather like me saying that the political attitude expressed by the Liberal and Conservative parties are malaises. Now I would not so describe them simply because I disagree with them.

I really find it unfortunate also that, perhaps for understandable reasons, you had to declare that you yourself were not a separatist. Frankly, I do not think it should matter a damn to us on the Committee whether you are or are not a separatist. I think the view that you expressed is the important one, that there should be some element of proportionality in the programming of the CBC, and we should not be interested in your religious or political views at all. In view of this maybe you would like to expand on your description of the separatist movement as being one that you could appropriately describe as being a malaise?

Dr. Davidson: Well, I do not take that back, Mr. Chairman. I think it is a malaise.

[Interpretation]

que celui des gens qui viennent de l'extérieur à qui on donne la chance d'exprimer leurs opinions.

Si j'ai un point de vue politique à exprimer et qu'un radiodiffuseur m'invite à me présenter à un programme pour exprimer mon opinion, cela n'exprime pas que j'abuse du privilège des ondes. Je fais ce qu'on m'invite à faire. Mais si je suis employé par une société de radiodiffusion et qu'on me demande de respecter certaines normes d'intégrité professionnelle et que je commence à abuser de mon poste, je considère que là le problème est beaucoup plus grave.

M. McCleave: Eh bien, vos prédécesseurs se sont occupé du larmoyant LaPierre lorsqu'il a versé des larmes à un certain programme, et je suppose que vous pouvez vous occuper des gesticulants et autres. Toutefois, je suggère que si vous examinez ce domaine ainsi que celui des pigistes, vous feriez des grands pas vers la solution de ce problème.

M. Davidson: Oui et le recrutement, si vous me le permettez.

Le président: Monsieur Broadbent.

M. Broadbent: Merci, monsieur le président. Je suis, en général, d'accord avec les commentaires de M. Davidson lorsqu'il dit pour quelque raison que je trouve drôle, que le séparatisme est en fait un malaise. Il me semble que c'est peut-être une déclaration assez indésirable de votre propre position, c'est trop extrême, d'après moi. Je ne sais pas si c'est ce que vous avez voulu dire, mais cela vous place dans une situation politique. C'est comme si je disais en fait que certaines attitudes des partis libéraux et conservateurs sont des malaises. Je ne suis pas d'accord avec leur point de vue, mais je ne les décrirais pas si simplement.

Ceci me semble aussi malheureux que peut-être, pour des raisons compréhensibles, il vous faudrait déclarer vous-mêmes que vous n'êtes pas séparatiste. Je pense que, franchement, cela n'aurait pas d'importance du tout pour le comité, de savoir si vous êtes ou non un séparatiste. Je pense que l'opinion que vous auriez exprimée est importante, mais il doit y avoir une certaine proportion à respecter dans la programmation de Radio-Canada, et nous ne devrions pas être intéressés à vos opinions religieuses ou politiques. Dans cette perspective, peut-être aimeriez-vous vous étendre un peu sur votre description du mouvement séparatiste, vu que vous le décrivez comme un malaise.

M. Davidson: Je ne le retire pas, monsieur le président. J'estime que c'est un malaise.

[Texte]

Perhaps it was an unnecessary remark for me to make. I would be foolish to repudiate or withdraw it because I have said it publicly on previous occasions.

• 1100

In defending the right of the separatists' spokesmen to have access to Canadian airwaves I have said in effect that I regard separatism as a malaise in the body politic of Canada. Anything that is in the body politic of Canada that has as its declared objective the breaking up of our country, I regard as a malaise. I am sorry if you do not agree with me, but I regard it as a malaise. Now I do not blame the microbes, I do not blame the germs, but I say that this is a malaise in the body politic of Canada. It has to be treated with understanding. Canadians who form part of the body politic have to understand what malaise they are suffering from. But I regard it as a malaise.

Mr. Broadbent: Well, Dr. Davidson, would you go further then and say that those many students in Quebec, those many poets, those many painters who take this view are also sick people?

Dr. Davidson: No.

Mr. Broadbent: But the views that they express are sick?

Dr. Davidson: What I am referring to is a malaise that is in the body politic.

Mr. Broadbent: Well, is it not associated with these people?

Dr. Davidson: If Canadian society is suffering from factors which tend to cause it to disintegrate and break up as a political entity, then I am referring to this as a malaise. I am not saying that separatists are sick people, I am not saying that the separatist movement is such is a movement of sick people, but I am saying that the fact that there is separatism in Canada represents very clearly an element of political and social malaise in our society, that it is very real and it is very dangerous to the future of our country, in my opinion.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes.

The Chairman: Are you saying that the terms are healthy but the patient may die?

Dr. Davidson: I am not an optimist on that, Mr. Chairman, but perhaps I should not be an optimist either.

[Interprétation]

C'était peut-être inutile pour moi de faire cette remarque. Je crois ridicule de répudier ce que j'ai dit ou de le retirer parce que je l'ai dit en public.

Pour défendre le droit des porte-parole des séparatistes, aux ondes canadiennes, j'ai dit effectivement que je considère le séparatisme comme un malaise dans l'entité politique du Canada. Quiconque dans l'entité politique du Canada, a comme objectif l'éclatement de notre pays crée un malaise. Je regrette que vous ne soyez pas d'accord, mais j'estime que c'est un malaise. Maintenant, je ne blâme pas les germes, mais je dis que c'est quand même un malaise du corps politique au Canada. Les gens qui font partie du corps politique doivent comprendre exactement quel est ce malaise dont ils souffrent.

M. Broadbent: Alors, monsieur Davidson, est-ce que vous iriez plus loin, jusqu'à dire que beaucoup de ces nombreux étudiants, poètes, chanteurs au Québec qui sont du même avis sont des malades?

M. Davidson: Non.

M. Broadbent: Mais les vues qu'ils expriment sont malades?

M. Davidson: Je parle d'un malaise qui existe au sein du corps politique.

M. Broadbent: Eh bien, n'est-il pas associé à ces gens?

M. Davidson: Si la société canadienne souffre de facteurs qui tendent à amener sa désintégration ou sa démolition comme entité politique, c'est de cela que je parle lorsque je parle d'un malaise. Je ne dis pas que les séparatistes sont des malades. Je ne dis pas que le gouvernement séparatiste comme tel est un mouvement de gens malades, mais je dis que le fait qu'il y ait quelque mouvement séparatiste au Canada représente clairement un élément de malaise politique et social dans notre société, qu'il est réel et qu'il est très dangereux pour l'avenir de notre pays, à mon avis.

M. Broadbent: Oui.

Le président: Autrement dit, les germes sont en vie, mais le malade peut mourir.

M. Davidson: Je ne suis pas optimiste à ce sujet, monsieur le président, mais peut-être que je ne devrais pas l'être non plus.

[Text]

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, he is also saying that he lives by his own definition, which he gave at some length a few minutes ago, that he does not fire other people for having ideas and views as long as they do not show on the airways. Perhaps his ideas about the separatists are irrelevant.

Dr. Davidson: Perhaps I should not have expressed my ideas but I have done it and it is on the record.

Mr. Broadbent: I respect the candor, Dr. Davidson, but I still find it an unfortunate position. Many people, for example, would regard socialism as a malaise in Canadian society. A number of people who sit in the place where I sit would. Now I personally do not take that view. Some of my friends think that capitalism should be described as a malaise, but I do not take that view.

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Broadbent, I do not regard all politicians as being sick people.

Mr. Mongrain: You are very generous.

Mr. Broadbent: But leaving that particular area, I would like to lend some political support to the other part of your statement which I agreed with.

It seems to me that a central contribution the CBC can make to Canadian society is one of ensuring that minority views, whether they are in aesthetic matters, religious matters, or political matters, find a clear expression across the country.

I think a fundamental problem of democratic culture that has been recognized for 100 years is that majority views tend to be all pervasive. We see it every day in our churches, in our magazines, especially if they are dependent upon commercial revenue, and I think it is a very important function of the CBC not only to give minority representation but to give it in fact more representation than their numbers would warrant so that those of us in particular areas who maybe do not agree with the minority will have the opportunity of having a full expression of a view that may run counter to our own. That is all I have on this matter, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Mr. Stafford.

Mr. Stafford: As a more senior member of the House of Commons than I just said, the political affiliation of CBC employees is unimportant—it is the programming. But if you

[Interpretation]

M. Osler: Monsieur le président, est-ce que par sa propre définition, qu'il a exprimée longuement il y a quelques instants, il ne congédie pas les gens parce qu'ils ont des idées et des vues du moment qu'ils ne les expriment pas sur les ondes. Ses idées au sujet des séparatistes manquent peut-être d'props.

M. Davidson: Je n'aurais peut-être pas dû exprimer mes idées comme je l'ai fait et c'est enregistré.

M. Broadbent: Je respecte, monsieur Davidson, la candeur avec laquelle vous vous exprimez, mais je trouve que c'est très malheureux d'adopter une pareille position. Par exemple, les gens estiment que le socialisme représente un malaise dans la société canadienne. Personnellement, je ne suis pas de cet avis. Certains de mes amis trouvent que le capitalisme devrait être considéré comme un malaise, mais je ne suis pas d'accord non plus.

M. Davidson: Monsieur Broadbent, je ne considère pas que tous les politiciens sont des malades, de toute façon.

M. Mongrain: Vous êtes très généreux.

M. Broadbent: Pour quitter ce même domaine, j'aimerais un certain soutien politique à l'autre partie de votre déclaration avec laquelle je suis d'accord. Il me semble qu'un apport central que la Société Radio-Canada peut faire à la société canadienne est d'assurer que les points de vue minoritaires sur le plan politique, esthétique et religieux soient exprimés clairement à travers tout le pays.

Je pense qu'un problème fondamental de la culture démocratique qui a été reconnu depuis cent ans, c'est que les opinions de la majorité semblent envahir tout. On le voit dans l'aspect religieux, dans les revues, surtout s'il s'agit de revenu commercial, et je pense que c'est une fonction importante de Radio-Canada de non seulement donner la représentation des minorités, mais, en fait, de donner une plus grande représentation de la majorité que la quantité de gens ne puisse le justifier. Il y a des gens qui ne sont pas d'accord que les minorités aient la chance d'avoir l'expression complète des vues qui s'opposent aux leurs. C'est tout ce que j'ai à dire sur cette question, monsieur le président.

Le président: Monsieur Stafford.

M. Stafford: Comme l'a dit un plus ancien député de la Chambre des communes que moi, l'affiliation politique des employés de Radio-Canada n'a pas d'importance.

[Texte]

look back at Hansard of 1935, the speech of Prime Minister Bennett, you will note that one of the reasons for forming the CBC in the original instance was the unity of this country—and I think that ranks high even in the new broadcasting bill.

• 1105

Now the separatist movement in Canada hardly promotes unity. It merely promotes their cause when heard over TV because many people think that the fact it is on TV makes it important. I think you can assume from the line of questioning here today that it is out of all proportion to their numbers in relation to the whole population of Canada.

Dr. Davidson, since you have mentioned something about proportionate time, you must have some idea how many separatists there are in Canada. How many are there?

Dr. Davidson: I have no idea.

Mr. Stafford: Well, if you have no idea how can you give it the proportionate time that you feel it should have? I mean if there are 10,000, say, and there are 20 million people in Canada, that would mean they should only get, if it does promote unity I say, only one two-thousands of the hours of political news in Canada. In other words, the hours of separatists' news over the hours of political news would match your formula if you feel that it promotes unity in this country, which I feel it does not.

First of all, do you feel that it promotes unity?

Dr. Davidson: I do not suggest to you for a moment, Mr. Stafford, that every broadcast put out over the CBC airwaves is intended or designed to promote unity.

Mr. Stafford: No, but the over-all is.

Dr. Davidson: It is designed, in a good many instances, to promote understanding of the problems that Canadians face, and I suggest to you—with great respect—that particularly in the English-speaking parts of Canada there needs to be a lot of programming about what separatism is all about, what are the causes, the underlying causes which lead to separatist attitudes being developed in the Province of Quebec, because only in that way will English-speaking Canadians in other provinces of Canada begin to get some glimmer of understanding of the political problem

[Interprétation]

C'est au niveau de la programmation. Si vous consultez Hansard de 1935, le discours du premier ministre Bennett, vous verrez qu'une des raisons de la création de la Société Radio-Canada était l'unité du pays et ceci, je pense, est une priorité parmi les premières parmi les nouveaux projets de loi sur la radiodiffusion.

Maintenant, le mouvement séparatiste au Canada est loin de promouvoir l'unité, c'est plutôt le démembrement de l'unité. Les gens pensent que tout ce qui passe à la télévision doit être important et ici on le sent très bien à la suite des questions. Est-ce qu'il faut tenir compte du nombre des séparatistes par rapport à la population du Canada. Si on parle de proportion. Combien de séparatistes y a-t-il au Canada.

M. Davidson: Je n'en ai pas la moindre idée.

M. Stafford: Eh bien si vous n'en avez pas la moindre idée, comment pouvez-vous accorder une certaine proportion de temps sur les heures que vous jugez nécessaires? Disons qu'il y en a 10,000 et que la population du Canada est de 20 millions, ils ne recevraient, si en fait vous voulez promouvoir l'unité, qu'un deux millièmes des heures de nouvelles politiques au Canada. C'est-à-dire que les heures des nouvelles séparatistes parmi les heures de nouvelles politiques cela serait conforme à votre formule si vous croyez qu'elles peuvent promouvoir l'unité dans ce pays, ce que je ne crois pas.

D'abord, croyez-vous qu'elles peuvent promouvoir l'unité?

M. Davidson: Monsieur Stafford, les émissions de Radio-Canada ne sont pas toutes destinées à promouvoir l'unité.

M. Stafford: D'accord, mais dans l'ensemble?

M. Davidson: Dans plusieurs cas, on les conçoit pour promouvoir la compréhension des problèmes des Canadiens. Et je vous dirai, en toute déférence, que, surtout dans la partie anglophone du Canada, il faut qu'il y ait beaucoup d'émissions portant sur l'objet même du séparatisme, sur les causes qui sous-tendent l'idéologie séparatiste au Québec. C'est la seule façon, pour les anglophones des autres provinces du Canada d'avoir une lueur de compréhension du problème politique qu'ils doivent affronter et du malaise qui menace l'unité de notre pays.

[Text]

that faces them, and what is the malaise that threatens the unity of our country.

Now, this I would argue is a service to the Canadian people that is needed—is required; it is quite apart from the question of Canadian unity.

Mr. Stafford: You have misunderstood my question. I am not talking about the reasons. When you allow Rene Levesque and others to expound on the news out of all proportion to the numbers, I feel you are promoting their cause; you are not giving the Canadian people the reasons why separatism exists in doing this. I feel, from what I see of the CBC News, there is just too much of it.

In other words, it is something like the CBS on Inauguration Day. On several occasions the cameras focused—and I think there were 120,000 people standing there—on a couple of hundred people waving Vietnam flags, I think out of all proportion. Of course, that has nothing to do with the CBC. The cameras focused on them to make, I suppose, the people think that this is more important than it really is.

You say separatism is a disease. I feel in this way you help to spread it. You are certainly not giving it an inoculation of any serum of disregard when it comes to the fact that you promote their cause rather than the reason separatism exists. Do you not feel you do actually promote their cause, and do you not feel this is the basis for these questions around this table today?

Dr. Davidson: I think it is quite clear, Mr. Chairman, that there is a very real concern in the minds of political representatives about the extent to which publicizing the views of the separatist leaders aids them and is a support to them. Certainly it is not the intention of the CBC...

Mr. Stafford: It might not be the intention but it happens; you admit that?

Dr. Davidson: ...to allow its facilities to be used to promote the separatist cause any more than any other political cause, but this is really very much a matter of judgment. The assertion is made that we are giving undue prominence to the leaders of the separatist movement. That is a matter of judgment. It may be correct, but it is one in which we have to exercise a variety of criteria—the news value of the situation.

I will bring out frankly a matter that I am sure is in the minds of some of you and I

[Interpretation]

J'estime que c'est rendre service à la population canadienne. Et c'est un service qui est nécessaire, qui n'a rien à voir avec la question de l'unité canadienne.

M. Stafford: Vous n'avez pas compris ma question. Je ne parle pas des raisons. Lorsque vous allouez à René Lévesque et à d'autres plus de temps pour exposer leur doctrine au moyen des émissions d'information, que cela ne se justifie, j'ai l'impression que vous travaillez pour leur cause, vous ne donnez pas à la population du Canada les raisons pour lesquelles existe le séparatisme. D'après ce que je peux voir aux nouvelles, à Radio-Canada, je trouve que vous exagérez.

Autrement dit, cela ressemble à la cérémonie d'investiture diffusée sur les ondes de CBS. A plusieurs reprises, les caméras ont convergé,—il y avait peut-être 120,000 personnes,—sur environ deux cents d'entre elles qui avaient des drapeaux vietnamiens. Cela n'a rien à voir avec Radio-Canada bien sûr, mais les caméras de CBS ont surtout montré l'image de cette minorité qui avait des drapeaux, pour faire croire à son importance.

De la même façon, je trouve que vous aidez à promouvoir et à étendre le séparatisme et que vous ne faites aucune inoculation, vaccination, contre la cause du séparatisme, lorsque vous vous étendez sur le séparatisme plutôt que sur les causes de son existence. Ne trouvez-vous pas que vous travaillez pour leur cause et que c'est justement pour ça que vous avez toutes ces questions, ici, aujourd'hui?

M. Davidson: Monsieur le président, je pense que c'est très clair qu'il y a vraiment un souci sérieux chez les représentants politiques quant à la portée de la publicité qu'on donne aux vues des leaders séparatistes; ça les aide, ça les appuie. Mais Radio-Canada n'a vraiment pas l'intention...

M. Stafford: Radio-Canada n'a peut-être pas l'intention, mais ça arrive quand même, vous le reconnaissez?

M. Davidson: ...de permettre qu'on se serve de ses installations pour promouvoir la cause du séparatisme, pas plus qu'aucune autre cause politique. Mais, c'est surtout une affaire de bons sens. On dit que nous donnons trop d'importance aux leaders du mouvement séparatiste. C'est une affaire de jugement. C'est peut-être exact, mais nous devons tenir compte de plusieurs critères dans la présentation de la situation.

Je vais vous donner un exemple auquel certains d'entre vous pensent probablement might as well bring it out and deal with it. We received a great deal of criticism in certain quarters last October because we gave so much more publicity to the Founding Convention of the Party Quebecois than we did to the Annual Convention of the Creditiste Party in Sherbrooke held at the same time. All right; does that mean that the CBC is espousing the separatist cause because if it does, The Globe and Mail had eight times as many column inches devoted to the Founding Convention of the Party Quebecois than it did to the Creditiste Convention...

Mr. Broadbent: It is a well-know separatist newspaper, though.

Dr. Davidson: ...so on this basis of measurement, The Globe and Mail is the outstanding separatist organ in all of Canada.

Mr. Stafford: You had far more than eight times as much on the CBC.

Dr. Davidson: No, we did not. I can give you the figures if you want. We had far more on the English network, frankly, based on Toronto than we did on the French network based in Montreal. All that I am saying, gentlemen, is that you cannot take a measurement of this kind and really make much of an argument out of it.

Mr. Stafford: I just want to go back to...

Dr. Davidson: I repeat that we are sensitive to this problem. We know full well that the political representatives generally are sensitive to the problem and we are doing what we think we can properly do to maintain the proper balance so that there will not be real grounds for accusing the CBC of having neglected its responsibility by allowing the separatist elements in the political field, or any other political elements, to get their undue share of use of the CBC airwaves.

The Chairman: When you speak of balance, Mr. Davidson, do you speak of it in terms of the total programming on the network or the total amount of information being provided by the various media, such as radio-television, newspapers and magazines?

Dr. Davidson: It is not our responsibility to rectify what we would regard as an imbalance in the other media. Our responsibility, it seems to me, is to endeavour to maintain a reasonable balance within the facilities that are available to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and this would include radio and television and all of our facilities.

[Interprétation]

Aussi bien en parler tout de suite. Nous avons beaucoup de critiques de certains milieux depuis octobre dernier, parce que nous avons donné beaucoup de publicité au congrès de fondation du Parti québécois et pas autant au congrès annuel du Parti créditiste, à Sherbrooke, qui avait lieu en même temps. Très bien. Mais, est-ce que cela signifie que Radio-Canada épouse ou embrasse la cause du séparatisme? Eh bien! dans ce cas, le Globe and Mail qui a consacré huit fois plus de colonnes à la fondation du Parti québécois qu'au congrès des créditistes...

M. Broadbent: Il est bien connu que c'est un journal séparatiste, vous savez.

M. Davidson: ...le Globe and Mail est l'organe le plus éminent du séparatisme au Canada.

M. Stafford: Mais, vous avez donné beaucoup plus que huit fois plus de temps, à Radio-Canada.

M. Davidson: Pas du tout. Je peux vous donner des chiffres, si vous voulez. Nous en avons consacré beaucoup plus sur le réseau anglais, à Toronto, que sur le réseau français, à Montréal. Tout ce que je dis, Messieurs, c'est que vous ne pouvez pas mesurer de cette façon et tirer des conclusions.

M. Stafford: Je veux en revenir au...

M. Davidson: Je répète que nous sommes sensibles au problème. Nous savons fort bien que les représentants politiques, en général, sont sensibles au problème et nous faisons ce que nous jugeons que nous pouvons faire pour maintenir un équilibre convenable, afin qu'il n'y ait pas de bonnes raisons qui portent à accuser Radio-Canada de ne pas remplir sa tâche en donnant trop de place à certains éléments politiques, à leur donner plus que leur place.

Le président: Lorsque vous parlez d'équilibre, monsieur Davidson, parlez-vous d'équilibre de l'ensemble de la programmation des réseaux ou de l'ensemble de l'information fournie par les différents organes d'information? Autrement dit, la radio, la télévision, les journaux, les revues, etc.?

M. Davidson: Ce n'est pas notre rôle de corriger ce que nous considérons comme un déséquilibre dans les autres organes d'information. Notre rôle, d'après moi, est de nous efforcer de maintenir un équilibre raisonnable dans les installations qui sont à la disposition de Radio-Canada: radio, télévision et toutes les autres installations.

Mr. Stafford: To go back to my former point just before you finish, do you agree with former Prime Minister Bennett and also the new Broadcasting Act that one of the aims of the Act and the original Corporation of the CBC was to promote unity?

Dr. Davidson: Yes, I accept the mandate for the CBC that is laid down by the Parliament of Canada in the Broadcasting Act of 1968.

Mr. Stafford: You think, then, that your hours of separatist news over the hours of total political news on the CBC in Canada reflects that opinion?

Dr. Davidson: If you are talking about news, Mr. Stafford, news is news.

Mr. Stafford: Well, political talk then; I am talking about political news. You cannot take the hours of separatist news over everything you say; it has to be on the total political news. I am just asking whether you think what the CBC is doing today keeps that principle in mind.

Dr. Davidson: Yes, I do.

Mr. Stafford: You really do? In other words, you think that you can best promote unity in Canada and the CBC by expounding the philosophy Rene Levesque and others as you did at his Convention of which you just spoke.

Dr. Davidson: I believe that political unity in Canada as a democratic country can best be preserved by avoiding like the plague undue censorship of our public means of communication. I do not accept the proposition that is implicit in the statements you have made, Mr. Stafford, that there is such a thing as separatist news; news makes itself.

Mr. Stafford: Separatist propaganda, I should say.

Dr. Davidson: I do not accept the implication in your revised statement that we are broadcasting separatist propaganda over CBC when we are covering, as a news event, a founding convention of a political party which, from the point of view of its straight news value, is a very significant event in the political life of this country—for better or for worse—and that news judgment was confirmed by every newspaper in Canada.

[Interpretation]

M. Stafford: Pour en revenir à mon argument antérieur, avant de terminer, M. Bennett disait, tout comme la nouvelle Loi sur la radiodiffusion, que l'objectif premier de Radio-Canada était de promouvoir l'unité nationale. Êtes-vous d'accord?

M. Davidson: Oui. J'accepte le mandat de Radio-Canada, tel qu'énoncé par le Parlement du Canada dans la Loi de 1968 sur la radiodiffusion.

M. Stafford: Et vous estimez que les heures consacrées aux nouvelles portant sur le séparatisme, et dépassant le total des heures consacrées aux nouvelles politiques, à Radio-Canada, reflètent cette opinion?

M. Davidson: Si vous parlez des nouvelles, monsieur Stafford, les nouvelles sont les nouvelles.

M. Stafford: Donc, prenons les affaires politiques. Je parle des nouvelles politiques. Vous dites qu'il faut considérer les nouvelles portant sur le séparatisme dans l'ensemble des nouvelles politiques. Est-ce que vous trouvez que ce que fait Radio-Canada aujourd'hui, respecte le principe?

M. Davidson: Oui.

M. Stafford: Vraiment? Autrement dit, vous pensez qu'il vaut mieux promouvoir l'unité canadienne en répandant la philosophie de René Lévesque, et d'autres, comme vous l'avez fait au cours de ce congrès dont vous avez parlé?

M. Davidson: Je crois que l'unité politique, au Canada, comme pays démocratique, peut mieux être sauvegardée si on évite comme la peste une censure indue de nos moyens publics d'information. Je n'accepte pas la proposition implicite dans la déclaration que vous avez faite, monsieur Stafford. Il n'y a pas de nouvelles séparatistes, il y a des nouvelles, c'est tout.

M. Stafford: Disons plutôt de la propagande.

M. Davidson: Je n'accepte pas les implications de votre déclaration révisée d'après laquelle nous diffusons sur les ondes de Radio-Canada de la propagande séparatiste lorsque nous présentons, comme éléments de nouvelles, la formation de nouveaux partis politiques, ce qui, du point de vue de l'information proprement dite, est très important pour la vie politique de notre pays, pour le meilleur ou pour le pire. Et cela a été confirmé, Messieurs, par tous les journaux, au Canada.

[Texte]

Mr. Stafford: Of course, the newspapers are not set up with the same aim in mind, though. Newspapers are far more free to do what they want to do than is the CBC.

Dr. Davidson: The CBC has no right to try to manipulate the news for special purposes. News is news, and our standards of journalism require us to broadcast news without fear or favour...

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Dr. Davidson: ...and without trying to achieve any particular objectives other than the honest presentation of news as it is. I distinguish in this regard news programming from other aspects of our programming.

Mr. Stafford: That may be so, but if you have never taken the trouble to find out the number of active separatists in Canada, you actually give it the proportionate time and you have no idea.

Dr. Davidson: Well, Mr. Stafford, do you think that the CBC President should regard it as part of his job to find out how many separatists there are in Canada?

Mr. Stafford: No, but of the 8,000 employees someone could do it.

Dr. Davidson: I should not be questioning you, but I am going to put this question—do you think it is part of the job and the responsibility of the CBC President to find out what are the political views of all the employees of the CBC?

Mr. Stafford: I did not say that; I said that has nothing to do with it.

Dr. Davidson: You did not say it, but you implied it.

Mr. Stafford: I said that has nothing to do with it. As Mr. McCleave said, the political affiliation of employees of the CBC is totally unimportant; it is merely what you put over the airwaves.

Dr. Davidson: That is right.

Mr. Stafford: For example, in your public affairs programs so many times there are sarcastic words to United States patriotic songs, insinuations of useless killings in Viet Nam. It seems to me there are so many occasions when there are things like this that actually should be no part, I think, of the CBC. For

[Interprétation]

M. Stafford: Mais les journaux n'ont pas le même objectif en vue. Les journaux sont beaucoup plus libres d'agir que Radio-Canada.

M. Davidson: Radio-Canada n'a pas le droit d'essayer de manipuler les nouvelles pour servir des fins spéciales. Les nouvelles sont les nouvelles. Et les normes du journalisme exigent que nous diffusions les nouvelles sans faveur particulière...

Une voix: Très bien!

M. Davidson: ...sans essayer de réaliser d'autres objectifs que la représentation honnête des nouvelles telles qu'elles sont. Et ici, je considère la programmation des nouvelles comme différente d'autres aspects de notre programmation.

M. Stafford: Peut-être, mais vous ne vous êtes jamais donné la peine de savoir quelle quantité de séparatistes actifs il y avait au Canada. Alors, comment pouvez-vous parler de proportions, alors que vous n'avez pas la moindre idée?

M. Davidson: Monsieur Stafford, pensez-vous qu'à l'heure actuelle le président de Radio-Canada doit considérer que c'est une partie de son travail de savoir combien il y a de séparatistes au Canada?

M. Stafford: Non, mais quelqu'un au sein du personnel devrait le faire.

M. Davidson: Je ne devrais pas vous interroger, mais croyez-vous que, dans le moment, ça fait partie des fonctions du président de Radio-Canada de savoir quels sont les points de vue politiques de ses employés?

M. Stafford: Je n'ai pas dit ça.

M. Davidson: Vous ne l'avez pas dit, mais vous l'avez laissé entendre.

M. Stafford: Comme M. McCleave l'a dit, l'affiliation politique des employés de Radio-Canada n'a aucune importance. Tout ce qui compte, c'est ce que vous diffusez.

M. Davidson: En effet.

M. Stafford: Par exemple, si vous avez une émission d'affaires publiques, vous avez toujours des mots sarcastiques, par exemple, au sujet des États-Unis, des morts inutiles au Vietnam. A tellement d'occasions, on a des points de vue personnels comme cela, qui vraiment n'ont rien à voir avec Radio-Canada.

example a Festival program built around a couple of homosexuals and someone getting in bed with someone else.

The Chairman: Mr. Stafford, you are straying from our subject.

Mr. Stafford: Going back to the same problem. This reflects on the same problem right here. It seems to be the common view of most people when they are talking about there being too much separatism, and you hear that everywhere.

Dr. Davidson: I hear it, I can tell you. I hear it loud and clear. I hear it not only in this Committee but I hear it everywhere, and I assure you that while I am trying to present what I regard as being a responsible point of view, we are certainly not insensitive and do not propose to be insensitive to the expressions of opinion which are presented by members of the Committee.

Mr. Stafford: Just one final question.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler on a short supplementary.

Mr. Schreyer: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I tried to get supplementaries and you have not allowed it. Now let us be consistent.

The Chairman: Mr. Stafford.

Mr. Stafford: Just one final question. If you are going to promote unity in Canada through the CBC, the only way you can do it is through the program that you put on the air.

Dr. Davidson: That is all we have.

The Chairman: I have Mr. Dinsdale, Mr. Schreyer, Mr. Stanbury, Mr. Osler and Mr. Givens. Mr. Dinsdale?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, we have been operating in the general area of programming this morning.

The Chairman: We have been dealing specifically with the question of separatism.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, but it covers the wider area of programming.

The Chairman: We are going to deal specifically with separatism, and then you can go on to programming in general afterwards.

Mr. Dinsdale: All right. Returning to the specific item of separatism that was raised by Mr. Comeau this morning, I have been listening with a great deal of interest to the comments of Dr. Davidson and I must say

[Interpretation]

Par exemple, une émission de Festival traitait d'un couple d'homosexuels et des gens qui couchent ensemble.

Le président: Monsieur Stafford, vous vous éloignez du sujet.

M. Stafford: Pour revenir au même problème. La plupart des gens semblent d'avis qu'il y a trop de séparatisme, et on le répète partout.

M. Davidson: Je l'entends, vous pouvez en être certains, et très nettement, non seulement à ce Comité, mais partout, et je peux vous assurer qu'en essayant de présenter ce que je considère un point de vue responsable, nous ne sommes pas insensibles aux opinions des membres du Comité.

M. Stafford: Une dernière question.

Le président: Monsieur Osler, a une question supplémentaire.

M. Schreyer: Sur un point d'ordre, monsieur le président. J'ai voulu poser une question supplémentaire et vous ne l'avez pas reçue. Soyons justes.

Le président: Monsieur Stafford.

M. Stafford: Si vous allez promouvoir l'unité canadienne par Radio-Canada, le seul moyen de le faire serait par les émissions que vous émettez.

M. Davidson: C'est tout ce que nous avons.

Le président: M. Dinsdale, M. Schreyer, M. Stanbury, M. Osler, M. Givens. Monsieur Dinsdale.

M. Dinsdale: Nous avons parlé ce matin de la programmation en général.

Le président: Et tout particulièrement de la question du séparatisme.

M. Dinsdale: Oui, mais elle comprend le domaine plus étendu de la programmation.

Le président: Nous allons nous en tenir au séparatisme en particulier et ensuite nous pourrions parler de la programmation en général.

M. Dinsdale: D'accord. Pour en revenir à la question du séparatisme entamée par M. Comeau ce matin, j'ai écouté avec beaucoup d'intérêt les remarques de M. Davidson, et, je dois dire que j'aime bien son interpréta-that I like his interpretation or reinterpretation of the functions of the CBC as a broadcasting facility.

If you insist on sticking with the question of separatism this morning, actually I suppose Dr. Davidson is not the man to deal specifically with this point because most of the complaints that I have heard arise from situations that occurred before Dr. Davidson took over the presidency.

I believe he has been on the job since last February only. Now this whole question of separatism came into the realm of the body politic I think as a result of the statements of the Honourable Judy LaMarsh who made the specific charge that there were separatists in the CBC.

I would like to suggest if we are going to consider hearing testimony on this point, and I believe this matter is being referred to the steering committee to consider with reference to a Mr. Thibeault, we might also consider the possibility of bringing before this Committee the Honourable Judy LaMarsh who has made public statements, who departed recently from the position of Cabinet responsibility for the CBC, and who certainly could give some pertinent information with reference to the period of complaint that has been under discussion here this morning.

• 1120

My question to Dr. Davidson is that—and I will stick to separatism. I think it was Mr. Fowler who said in his report that the main function—and I am paraphrasing now—of the CBC is broadcasting. All the rest is mere shopkeeping, and what goes out on the air is the point of contact with the body politic in Canada.

I think it was the Glassco Commission who raised the pertinent point that one of the reasons why the CBC gets involved so deeply from time to time in the area of controversy with reference to its programming, is the problem of overexposure of fringe groups. This is where the great complaints come from, and the point has already been raised here this morning concerning the extremists and fringe groups. It is a part of the total problem of sensational journalism that has been referred to with reference to some of the newspapers in Canada today.

The Glassco Report said that the difficulty arises because there seems to be a lack of direct control over broadcast programming. The managerial set-up of the CBC is such that there is almost a state of permissiveness with reference to programming and program content.

[Interprétation]

tion, sa nouvelle interprétation des fonctions de Radio-Canada, en tant qu'instrument de diffusion.

Si vous voulez vous en tenir à cette question du séparatisme, ce matin, j'estime, en fait, que le docteur Davidson n'est pas la personne désignée pour en traiter parce que la plupart des plaintes que j'ai entendues à ce sujet découlent de situations qui se sont produites avant que M. Davidson ne soit nommé président de Radio-Canada.

Il est président seulement depuis février dernier, je crois, et cette question du séparatisme a été soulevée dans l'arène politique à la suite des remarques de l'honorable Judy LaMarsh, qui a formulé une accusation contre la présence de séparatistes à Radio-Canada.

Si nous avons l'intention d'entendre des témoignages à ce sujet, et je crois que cette question a été renvoyée au Comité directeur, en ce qui concerne M. Thibeault, nous pourrions peut-être envisager de convoquer l'honorable Judy LaMarsh qui a fait des déclarations publiques, et qui a récemment quitté le poste du gouvernement où elle était responsable de Radio-Canada, et qui pourrait certainement nous donner des renseignements pertinents sur la question à l'étude ce matin.

Voici ma question, M. Davidson, et je vais m'en tenir au séparatisme. Je crois que M. Fowler dans son rapport avait dit que la fonction principale de Radio-Canada est la radiodiffusion. Tout le reste n'est qu'une question de gestion, et ce qui est mis sur les ondes constitue le point de contact avec le corps politique du Canada.

Je crois que c'est la Commission Glassco qui a fait remarquer qu'une des raisons pour lesquelles Radio-Canada est si profondément impliqué de temps à autres dans des controverses, en matière de programmation c'est qu'elle est trop exposée aux groupes marginaux; c'est de là que découlent les plaintes, et nous en avons parlé ce matin, touchant les extrémistes et les groupes marginaux. Ceci fait partie du problème global du journalisme à sensation dont on a parlé au sujet de certains journaux canadiens.

Selon le Rapport Glassco, la difficulté découle du fait qu'il semble y avoir un manque de contrôle direct sur la programmation. La direction de Radio-Canada est telle qu'il y a beaucoup de libertés en matière de programmation et du contenu des émissions.

[Text]

Would this be the explanation for the problem we are discussing here this morning, where fringe groups and marginal groups, extremists, who normally in a healthy democracy might be restricted to bughouse squares or Hyde Park Corners, are brought before the TV cameras and given a national audience with a powerful impact through the most powerful mass media that is available. Is it because there is no way, as Glassco suggested, of really coming to grips with this problem?

The Chairman: Perhaps Dr. Davidson might answer that with reference to the separatism problem?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, they are an extremist group, are they not?

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, in the realm of ideas, in a democracy, surely you have to accept the basic premise and principle of permissiveness. People must be free to think as they will. People must be free to stand up on a soap box in Hyde Park and say what they think. And public broadcasting in Canada is merely a twentieth century version of Hyde Park Corner. It is a means of ensuring that the person who has views to express on the soap box at Hyde Park, as long as they come within certain limits prescribed by law, has the right to express himself publicly.

I cannot think of a broadcasting system in a democracy that does not have a very large element of permissiveness in its program, certainly in the realm of public affairs, in the realm of political programming.

Mr. Broadbent: What about France?

Dr. Davidson: I did not say that I cannot think of a country which does not have it. I cannot think of a democracy with a public broadcasting system where this is not a fundamental premise on which it should be based.

• 1125

I recognize that there are certain limits. You cannot allow libellous or slanderous or subversive utterances to be broadcast over the public airwaves. Persons exposed on the public airwaves are in a much more exposed position than is your orator in Hyde Park, because a great many more people hear what is said and therefore that person is much more vulnerable to prosecution if he offends in any way against the laws of the country. But I must say that I think permissiveness rather than control of the expression of free political ideas must really be the principle on which our public broadcasting policies in the news and public affairs field must be based.

[Interpretation]

Est-ce que cela expliquerait le problème que nous discutons ce matin, à savoir que les extrémistes, les groupes marginaux et autres qui, normalement, dans une démocratie saine, seraient restreints aux maisons d'aliénés ou au coin des orateurs de Hyde Park, sont mis devant la télévision et on leur donne un auditoire national grâce à la plus puissante des grandes techniques de diffusion. Est-ce que c'est parce qu'il n'y a pas moyen, comme l'a dit Glassco, de faire face à ce problème?

Le président: Peut-être que M. Davidson pourrait répondre à cette question dans le contexte du séparatisme?

M. Dinsdale: Oui, ce sont des extrémistes, n'est-ce pas?

M. Davidson: Dans le domaine des idées, dans une démocratie, vous devez, bien sûr, accepter le principe fondamental d'une certaine liberté d'action. Les gens sont libres de penser comme ils veulent, de prendre la parole à Hyde Park et d'exprimer leurs opinions. Et la radiodiffusion n'est qu'une version moderne du coin des orateurs de Hyde Park. C'est une façon d'assurer que quiconque veut s'exprimer à Hyde Park, dans certaines limites prévues par la Loi, a le droit de s'exprimer publiquement.

Je ne peux pas imaginer un système de radiodiffusion dans une démocratie qui n'accorderait pas une large mesure de liberté, dans ses émissions, surtout dans le domaine des affaires publiques et des émissions de nature politique.

M. Broadbent: Qu'en est-il de la France?

M. Davidson: Je n'ai pas dit que je ne pouvais pas penser à un pays qui ne l'a pas, mais j'ai parlé d'une démocratie avec un système de radiodiffusion publique qui n'est pas fondé sur une telle prémisse.

J'admets qu'il y a des limites. On ne peut pas permettre sur les ondes des déclarations diffamatoires, calomnieuses ou subversives. Les personnes exposées aux émissions sur les ondes du réseau public sont beaucoup plus exposées qu'à Hyde Park, parce qu'il y a beaucoup plus de personnes aux écoutes, et l'orateur s'expose beaucoup plus aux poursuites s'il commet une infraction aux lois du pays. Je crois que cette liberté d'expression, plutôt que le contrôle de l'expression des idées politiques, est le principe sur lequel nous devons fonder notre politique de radiodiffusion relative aux nouvelles et aux affaires publiques.

[Texte]

Mr. Dinsdale: This gets us back to the question that has already been asked about a principal function of the CBC as a public broadcasting facility, its role in promoting national unity. We could go to other parts of Canada; there are separatist sentiments abroad in provinces other than the province of Quebec.

An hon. Member: There is no question of Ontario, for example.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am not going to specify any particular one, but you can get offbeat odd-balls in every part of this great diverse country of ours.

Mr. Stafford: Even in political parties.

Mr. Dinsdale: Even in political parties, yes, and the tendency of sensational journalism is to accentuate the extremist. For example, the tendency is to bring—I forget the name of the leader of the Nazi party in the States. What was his name? He was assassinated.

An hon. Member: Rockwell.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, Rockwell. He was making loud noises, and I think his following would be a very small percentage of the American body politic. But he was immediately rushed before the CBC cameras...

Dr. Davidson: Not immediately.

Mr. Dinsdale: Well, as quickly as possible.

Dr. Davidson: After several years.

Mr. Dinsdale: And he was given national exposure as the chap from Germany who was opposed to be bringing about a revival of the Nazi movement, and so forth. This is the sort of thing, I believe, that does not accentuate the positive. It accentuates the negative and, as Glassco indicated, resulted from a pretty loose managerial situation with reference to the basic function of broadcasting. Management is centralized in Ottawa in a fine building; broadcasting is scattered far and wide over the CBC network in rather dilapidated facilities, as we found out when we went to Montreal last week and as no doubt we will see when we go to Toronto.

Maybe this is a personal question, but was part of the thinking in your appointment as President, the rationalization or the sorting out of this Glassco criticism of CBC managerial operations?

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, I have never been able to guess at what went on in the

[Interprétation]

M. Dinsdale: Ce qui nous ramène à la question qui a déjà été soulevée, quant à la fonction principale de Radio-Canada, en tant que service public de radiodiffusion, son rôle pour encourager l'unité nationale. Nous pourrions aller dans d'autres parties du pays; il y a des sentiments séparatistes à l'étranger, dans d'autres provinces que la province de Québec.

Une voix: Il n'est pas question de l'Ontario cependant.

M. Dinsdale: Je ne veux pas préciser davantage, mais on trouve partout des types détachés aux idées bizarres, dans tous les coins de notre grand pays.

M. Stafford: Même dans les partis politiques.

M. Dinsdale: Oui, même dans les partis politiques, et la tendance de la presse à sensation est de mettre l'accent sur ces extrémistes. J'oublie le nom du chef du parti nazi aux États-Unis. Quel était son nom? On l'a assassiné.

Une voix: Rockwell.

M. Dinsdale: Oui, c'est ça. Il faisait beaucoup de bruit et je crois que les personnes qui l'appuyaient représentaient une infime partie de la population américaine. Néanmoins, on l'a fait passer immédiatement à la télévision.

M. Davidson: Par immédiatement.

M. Dinsdale: Aussi vite que possible.

M. Davidson: Après plusieurs années.

M. Dinsdale: Il y avait aussi cet homme qui était censé faire revivre le parti nazi en Allemagne. Je crois que cette sorte d'information accentue l'aspect négatif et non l'accent positif. Je crois que le rapport Glassco avait soulevé déjà ce problème, et l'avait attribué à un manque de gestion quant à la fonction de base de la radio. La direction est établie à Ottawa, dans un bel immeuble; les studios sont éparpillés au gré du réseau, comme on a pu s'en apercevoir à Montréal la semaine dernière et comme on s'en apercevra sans doute à Toronto. Je crois que les nouvelles fonctions en tant que président seraient de mettre un peu d'ordre dans la gestion de Radio-Canada.

M. Davidson: Monsieur le président, je ne sais pas vraiment ce qui s'est passé dans la minds of those people who picked George Davidson to be President of the CBC.

The Chairman: Perhaps now that we are dealing with the management of the CBC, we could go back to the question of separatism, and then we will go on to this.

Mr. Dinsdale: This is my last point. Perhaps when we have Miss LaMarsh before the Committee we will discover why you were recommended.

The Chairman: The proper phrase with respect to Miss LaMarsh is "if". Mr. Schreyer?

Mr. Schreyer: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Getting back to the question of the management of the CBC.

The Chairman: No, no. The question of separatism.

Mr. Schreyer: And separatism, right. Or the two together. Dr. Davidson, since becoming President, in your experience of the past year, would you say that the presence of x numbers of separatists within the CBC organization—whatever number they are—in any way impinges on your ability and those of the rest of the Board to direct the affairs of the CBC? It seems to me that is the only question that is important in the end.

• 1130

Dr. Davidson: I think I would be less than honest if I did not say to you that this is a problem of concern to us as a management group, that it is a problem of concern to us to some extent because of the prevailing impression in Parliament, as expressed countless times by Members of Parliament, that there is a problem that has to be safeguarded and watched here. We are not insensitive to that expression of point of view.

We are also of the opinion ourselves that there is a risk within the Corporation that individuals who are in positions of responsibility may take advantage of their positions to use the facilities for the promotion of separatist or other causes that they should not promote. We try to be vigilant in controlling and removing the opportunities for that wherever possible, or limiting the opportunities for that.

Mr. Schreyer: I asked that question because the former Secretary of State alleged that your predecessor at one time confessed that the matter of separatism within the organization had got out of control and was beyond his competence to deal with. So I asked you directly whether in any way you feel the tête de ceux qui ont choisi George Davidson en tant que président de Radio-Canada.

Le président: Nous traitons peut-être maintenant de l'administration de la Société. Revenons à la question du séparatisme.

M. Dinsdale: C'est mon dernier point. Peut-être que lorsque M<sup>lle</sup> LaMarsh viendra témoigner, on pourra savoir pourquoi vous avez été recommandé.

Le président: Le véritable mot vis-à-vis de M<sup>lle</sup> LaMarsh, est bien «si», monsieur Schreyer.

M. Schreyer: Si l'on revient à la question de l'administration de Radio-Canada...

Le président: Non, non; on parle de séparatisme.

M. Schreyer: ... et du séparatisme, c'est exact, ou des deux simultanément. Monsieur Davidson, depuis que vous êtes président, depuis un an, est-ce que vous pensez que la présence d'un nombre x de séparatistes à la Société Radio-Canada, quel qu'en soit le nombre, pensez-vous que cela vous empêche de diriger d'une façon ou d'une autre les affaires de Radio-Canada? Au fond, il me semble que c'est là, la seule question.

M. Davidson: Je vais être honnête, très certainement, ceci pose un problème en ce qui nous concerne. Surtout parce que cette question a été soulevée très souvent au Parlement, qu'il y a là un problème à surveiller, et nous ne sommes pas insensibles à ce point de vue. Nous pensons aussi qu'il y a un risque à l'intérieur de la Société car des personnes qui ont des postes de responsabilités, pourraient éventuellement se servir de leur position pour utiliser les installations pour promouvoir le séparatisme ou toute autre cause. Nous essayons d'être vigilants et de contrôler et d'enlever ou de limiter les possibilités de tels actes.

M. Schreyer: J'ai posé cette question parce que d'après l'ancien Secrétaire d'État, on prétendait que votre prédécesseur avait admis, à un moment donné, que la question de séparatisme à l'intérieur de l'organisation était devenue hors de contrôle, et que cela dépassait ses pouvoirs. Alors j'aimerais savoir presence of whatever number of separatists impinges on the ability of the Executive Board to direct the affairs of this organization in accordance with the Act.

Dr. Davidson: You have made it much easier for me to assert that as far as the present management is concerned, it does not consider that the problem has gotten out of control, and it does consider that it has both the competence and the responsibility for maintaining the situation under responsible control.

Mr. Schreyer: Dr. Davidson, do you subscribe to the view that as long as the Parliament of Canada allows a political movement to function in a country, the only attitude that you, as President, could have with respect to any political movement is one of respectful neutrality?

Dr. Davidson: Well, I do not think it is the part of the President of the Corporation to begin to make discriminating judgments between one or another political party.

Mr. Schreyer: Therefore, you regard it as unfair in the extreme if anyone were to ask you to make a special effort to deal with separatism within the organization...

Dr. Davidson: As such.

Mr. Schreyer: ...in as much as the Parliament of Canada has not seen fit to take any action in that regard.

Dr. Davidson: I think it is no part of the task of the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to begin to impose sanctions on one or another political party that is a recognized legal political status in the country.

Mr. Schreyer: I have a number of questions about finances, coloured television, and so on.

The Chairman: Fine. Mr. Stanbury, Mr. Osler, Mr. Givens and Mr. Mongrain, on separatism.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, the example the President gave about the excision of a song by Pauline Julien from an English network program disturbed me a little. I was wondering if he could indicate whether there has ever been such an action taken on a French network program, or whether, indeed, either the person who ordered that excision would dare to try such a thing on the French network?

Dr. Davidson: Well, I can cite you, Mr. Stanbury, an example, not of precisely the est-ce que vous pensez qu'un nombre donné de séparatistes empêchent le conseil d'administration de diriger la Société conformément à la Loi?

M. Davidson: Vous me facilitez la tâche pour affirmer qu'en ce qui concerne la direction actuelle, nous ne pensons pas que le problème est hors de notre contrôle et nous considérons que cela est tant de notre compétence, que de notre responsabilité de maintenir cette situation à l'intérieur des limites d'un contrôle responsable.

M. Schreyer: Est-ce qu'en ce qui concerne un mouvement politique, n'importe quel mouvement politique mérite une attitude de neutralité de la part du président de Radio-Canada?

M. Davidson: Je n'ai pas, en tant que président, à formuler de jugement discriminatoire envers l'un ou l'autre des partis politiques.

M. Schreyer: Ainsi, vous estimez profondément injuste qu'une personne vous demande de faire un effort spécial pour liquider le séparatisme à l'intérieur de la Société.

M. Davidson: En tant que telle.

M. Schreyer: ... en autant que le Parlement du Canada n'a pas cru agir à cet égard.

M. Davidson: Je ne pense pas que ce soit la tâche du président de Radio-Canada d'imposer des sanctions sur un ou un autre parti politique qui a statut reconnu, légal, dans le pays.

M. Schreyer: J'ai plusieurs questions visant les finances, la télévision en couleur, etc.

Le président: Toujours sur le séparatisme, MM. Stanbury, Osler, Givens et Mongrain.

M. Stanbury: L'exemple donné par le président concernant le retranchement d'une chanson de Pauline Julien au sein d'une émission du réseau anglais m'a quelque peu préoccupé. Je me demande s'il pourrait me dire si des mesures semblables ont été prises au réseau français ou si la personne qui a fait cela sur le réseau anglais oserait le faire sur le réseau français?

M. Davidson: Je peux citer à M. Stanbury un exemple, pas exactement dans le même same action having been taken, but of a disciplinary action that was taken in respect of a certain individual who appeared on a program on the French network. I do not wish to identify it specifically, and I would remind you that I did not use any person's name in the previous example.

Mr. Stanbury: No, I used it.

Dr. Davidson: You used it on your own responsibility. If you will look at the article by Joan Irwin in the Montreal Star for a date which I will have to give you, but within recent weeks, you will see two examples cited there of action that was taken by the French network in regard to what they regarded as situations involving separatism which required action to be taken by the French network manager.

• 1135

Mr. Stanbury: It seemed to me somehow a futile gesture to be protecting English-speaking Canadians from French Canadian separatism, and hardly a contribution to the kind of greater understanding of the problem that you indicated should be one of the functions of the CBC.

Dr. Davidson: I think that is a perfectly valid opinion to express. I, frankly, do not know which is the right position to take. All that I do know is that the decision was taken, not so much in terms of the content of the song, I should add, but in terms of the inappropriateness, on the part of the producing levels of that program, the inappropriateness of scheduling that song deliberately—and I use the word “deliberately”—on the eve of the opening of the important constitutional conference.

For my own part, it seems to me that that song, that particular song, like other programs to which reference could be made, and may yet be made today, that particular item in the program could well appear on some other occasion without justifiably resulting in any action being taken. But to present the particular song in question, in terms of timing, with what seemed clearly to be deliberate intent—not on the part of the singer—on the eve of an important constitutional conference, did seem to the management of the English network as being inappropriate. They took action and as far as I am concerned, that is an action which I, as President of the Corporation, am bound to support because I have confidence in the men who took that action.

Mr. Stanbury: Yes, I understand the reasoning a little better. It would seem that it was cas, mais de mesures disciplinaires qui ont été prises concernant un individu qui a participé à une émission du réseau français. Je ne veux pas l'identifier et je vous ferai remarquer que je n'ai pas utilisé le nom de la personne dans l'incident précédent qui a été cité.

M. Stanbury: C'est moi qui l'ai utilisé.

M. Davidson: Vous l'avez fait sous votre propre responsabilité. Si vous lisez l'article de Joan Irwin dans le Montreal Star, il faudra que je vérifie la date, au cours des récentes semaines, vous verrez qu'on y parle de deux exemples de mesures qui ont été prises par le réseau français vis-à-vis de situations qui ont trait au séparatisme et qui ont justifié l'intervention de la direction du réseau français.

M. Stanbury: Cela me paraît futile de protéger des Canadiens anglais du séparatisme Canadien-français et ceci serait difficilement une contribution à la compréhension du problème, ce que vous avez estimé être l'une des fonctions de Radio-Canada.

M. Davidson: Je pense que votre opinion est parfaitement valable. Très franchement je ne sais pas quelle est la bonne position à adopter. Tout ce que je peux vous dire c'est que la décision a été prise, non pas en ce qui concerne le contenu de la chanson, mais plutôt vis-à-vis l'inopportunité jugée par les responsables de la production de programmer cette chanson d'une façon délibérée et j'utilise le mot «délibérée» à la veille de l'ouverture de la conférence constitutionnelle.

A mon avis, il me semble que cette chanson en particulier comme d'autres programmes qu'on pourrait mentionner et qui seront peut-être mentionnés au cours de la journée, pouvait fort bien être diffusée à un autre moment sans qu'aucune mesure ne soit prise allant à l'encontre de cette chanson. Mais présentez cette chanson en particulier, surtout en ce qui concerne le moment choisi, aurait pu sembler une intention délibérée, non de la part de la chanteuse, à la veille d'une importante conférence constitutionnelle. Il a semblé à la direction du réseau anglais que cela n'était pas approprié et des mesures ont été prises et, tant que président de la Société, j'appuie cette décision, car j'ai confiance en ceux qui l'ont prise.

M. Stanbury: Je crois que je comprends maintenant un peu mieux le raisonnement.

an exercise of judgment based not on a desire to prevent an over-exposure or over-promotion of separatism but rather on the basis that this might be offensive to the listeners in the circumstances and in the context of time.

Dr. Davidson: It has already been stated, Mr. Chairman, by the Vice-President of the English network, that that song, I think I am correct in saying, Mr. Hallman, will be allowed to be put on the air in a subsequent program.

Mr. Stanbury: English-speaking Canadians are not likely to be sold into separatism by listening to that song?

Dr. Davidson: By listening to a song, the words of which they do not understand.

Mr. Stanbury: We hope more and more of them will understand the language at least. Just to return for a moment to my original question, do you think you could get away with doing the same thing on the French network?

Dr. Davidson: That is an "iffy" question, as President Roosevelt used to say. I really do not think it would be profitable to speculate publicly on what might happen if we try to do something.

Mr. Stanbury: Perhaps you could mull over the challenge and see whether or not it might be worth the candle some time. The criticism that I receive from my French-speaking constituents who listen to Radio Canada is that, as you indicated obliquely in your opening remarks, it sounds more to them like Radio Quebec than a Radio Canada, that it is so completely oriented to the local politics and local interests of Quebec that it is of little value to French Canadians outside of Quebec.

Secondly, the next greatest criticism that I hear is that it is not only preoccupied with separatist political interests but even more so, perhaps, it seems to be preoccupied with evolution of all kinds.

I do not want to offend Mr. Broadbent by getting into the area that he finds quite valid in the impression that my constituents convey to me is that more so than the English network, even the news, which you would want to see completely balanced and completely objective, is coloured, is dominated by the ideas of violence and of conflict. Perhaps this is in the nature of news judgment of a certain type.

We know that violence is considered to be more interesting from the standpoint of hold-me semble que c'est un exercice de jugement fondé non sur le désir d'empêcher une propagande à outrance pour le séparatisme, mais plutôt sur le fait que cela pourrait outrager les auditeurs, dans les circonstances.

M. Davidson: Il a déjà été dit, monsieur le président, par le vice-président du réseau anglais, que cette chanson sera—si je ne m'abuse, monsieur Hallman—diffusée lors d'un programme à venir.

M. Stanbury: Les Canadiens anglais ne risquent pas d'être gagnés à la cause du séparatisme en entendant cette chanson?

M. Davidson: Une chanson dont ils ne comprendront de toute façon pas les paroles.

M. Stanbury: Nous espérons qu'un nombre de plus en plus grand d'entre eux pourront du moins comprendre la langue. Pour en revenir un instant à ma question originale, est-ce que vous croyez que vous pourriez vous en tirer si vous faisiez la même chose sur le réseau français?

M. Davidson: Je ne pense vraiment pas qu'il soit bénéfique de formuler des hypothèses en public à ce sujet.

M. Stanbury: Peut-être pourriez-vous réfléchir à ce défi et vous demander si le jeu en vaudrait la chandelle? Ceux de mes mandants francophones qui écoutent Radio-Canada se plaignent de ce que, comme vous l'avez indiqué indirectement dans votre déclaration préliminaire, ils ont l'impression d'écouter Radio-Québec plutôt que Radio-Canada, car tout est tellement orienté vers la politique locale et les intérêts locaux du Québec que cela présente fort peu d'intérêt pour les Canadiens français à l'extérieur du Québec.

La deuxième grande critique que l'on formule, c'est que Radio-Canada ne se préoccupe pas seulement des intérêts politiques séparatistes, mais aussi, et encore plus, peut-être, de toutes sortes de révolutions.

Je ne voudrais pas vexer M. Broadbent, car ceci touche au domaine qu'il considère comme tout à fait valable, mais l'impression que retirent les gens de ma circonscription, c'est que, beaucoup plus que dans le réseau anglais, même les informations, que l'on voudrait pleinement objectives, sont teintées, sont dominées par l'idée de la violence et des conflits. Peut-être cela est-il inhérent à un certain type d'interprétation des informations.

Nous savons que la violence attire davantage l'attention que n'importe quoi d'autre, ing public attention than just about anything else, but on Radio Canada it seems to my constituents that they have a steady diet of revolution; whether it be labour tensions, student revolt, separatist, or war, their impression is that Radio Canada is a steady diet of revolution. That is a matter of judgment on the part of the listener. It arises out of an exercise of judgment by your news people but it might be a valid exercise of management to analyze whether or not this is the case and whether there is an over-emphasis of that violent nature of activity on the French network.

[Text]

Dr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, I have to say to Mr. Stanbury that this is the first time I have ever heard the particular suggestion made that violence, as such, in the broad panoramic way that he has described it, is any more characteristic of the French network than of broadcasting generally. I have heard criticisms about there being too much in the way of violence on television and we have been concerned about it. I have never heard, frankly, the French network singled out in any particular way, as you report has been done by your constituents. All I can say is that I would be glad to have our people run a test over a period of time and just see what impression or conclusion we come up with.

I would like to go back and deal with your first point which, if I may say so, is a very pertinent one and which, I think, has an explanation arising out of the nature of our French network itself. We talk about the English network as a nation-wide network and we sort of imply that we also have a French language nation-wide network in Canada.

The sad fact is that our French language nation-wide network, both radio and television, is sadly incomplete. We have the main part of the body centred, as you would expect, in Quebec Province where the heart-and-soul of the French Canadian people is, we have some rather feeble tentacles spreading out into New Brunswick and to some extent farther down into the Maritimes and into Ontario, but we do not have, in the truest sense of the word, a nation-wide French language broadcasting network.

• 1145

We have a radio station out in Vancouver which is non French language and it is having a very successful initial year of operation. We have a number of affiliated but no CBC-owned and operated French language radio stations in the Prairies. We have a french lan-mais, aux représentants de ma circonscription, il semble que Radio-Canada fait son pain quotidien de la révolution, qu'il s'agisse de tensions ouvrières, de révoltes estudiantines, de séparatisme, ou de guerre. C'est là un jugement de valeur de la part des auditeurs. Cela vient d'un exercice de jugement de la part de vos employés du service des informations, mais il serait peut-être bon que la direction se penche sur ces problèmes pour voir si tel est le cas et si l'on met en effet trop l'accent, dans le réseau français, sur les actes de caractère violent.

M. Davidson: Monsieur le président, je dois dire à M. Stanbury que c'est bien la première fois que j'entends dire que la violence en tant que telle, dans le sens général dans lequel il l'a décrite, est plus caractéristique du réseau français que de la radiodiffusion en général. J'ai entendu des gens se plaindre de ce que l'on donnait une trop grande place à la violence à la télévision, et nous nous soucions de ce problème. Je n'ai jamais entendu dire, franchement, que le réseau français était particulièrement notoire à cet égard, comme vous nous racontez que l'ont soutenu vos mandants. Je puis seulement dire que je serais heureux de faire faire une analyse par nos gens pendant une période donnée, pour voir à quelle conclusion on en arrive.

J'aimerais en revenir à la première partie de votre question qui est tout à fait pertinente, et dont l'explication découle de la nature même de notre réseau français. Nous parlons du réseau anglais comme étant un réseau national, et nous laissons entendre plus ou moins que nous avons aussi un réseau de langue française à l'échelle nationale au Canada.

Malheureusement, notre réseau national de langue française, qu'il s'agisse de la radio ou de la télévision, est très incomplet. Le centre de l'organisme se trouve, comme on peut s'y attendre, dans la province du Québec, là où se trouvent le cœur et l'âme de la population canadienne-française; nous avons quelques faibles tentacules qui s'étendent au Nouveau-Brunswick et, jusqu'à un certain point, un peu plus loin dans les Maritimes, ainsi que dans l'Ontario, mais nous n'avons pas, à proprement parler, de réseau national de radiodiffusion de langue française.

Nous avons une station de radio à Vancouver qui est maintenant de langue française et qui a beaucoup de succès dans sa première année d'exploitation. Nous avons plusieurs stations affiliées, mais pas de station de langue française appartenant à Radio-Canada et guage television station which we own and operate in Winnipeg, Manitoba which is cut off from the French network so far as microwave is concerned and only gets its programs on a transshipment basis and therefore cannot be said really to be an integral part of the total network. We have a French language radio station in Toronto.

I mention these to indicate that we really do not have the counterpart for the French-speaking population of Canada in terms of a nation-wide French language network of broadcasting that we have for the English speaking elements of the population, and this inevitably reflects itself in programming.

If the body of the French broadcasting enterprise is essentially in the Province of Quebec, with only a few symbolic elements of the network lying outside of the Quebec-Ontario-New Brunswick area, programming is going to reflect that situation. One of the things that I feel most strongly about, in terms of the need to expand the French network facilities across Canada, is the effect that such an expansion or extension will have inevitably on our program content.

When you get a nation-wide French language constituency stretching from coast to coast, the viewers in these other parts of Canada will register their views with the French network headquarters as to the kind of programming they want. They will not want a diet of programming that is 99 per cent Quebec or Montreal based. They will want something that is more representative of Canada-wide sentiment and I feel that these two things, Mr. Stanbury, definitely go together and that we will not be likely to have the counterpart in program content of a Canada-wide point of view in presentation of news and public affairs on the French network until we have facilities to serve a nation-wide audience that speaks and understands and listens in the French language.

Mr. Stanbury: I did not mean to draw you into a discussion of extension of service. We were supposed to be dealing with separatism, but I think perhaps you made your point. I would only say, in a last few words about the separatist question or the whole question of bias, that I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this Committee does not allow itself to be diverted into any witch-hunts by calling before this Committee those who are accused and their accusers whether the witch be Marc Thiébaud or Judy LaMarsh or anyone else.

exploitée par elle dans les Prairies. Nous avons une station de télévision de langue française qui nous appartient et que nous exploitons à Winnipeg, au Manitoba, qui est coupée du réseau français en ce qui concerne l'hyperfréquence, et qui n'a que des émissions que nous lui expédions; cette station n'est donc pas partie intégrante du réseau. Nous avons une station de radio de langue française à Toronto.

Je vous indique tout cela simplement pour vous montrer que nous n'avons réellement pas la contrepartie pour la population francophone du Canada, pour ce qui est d'un réseau national de radiodiffusion de langue française, de ce que nous avons pour les éléments anglophones de la population. Et, naturellement, la programmation reflète ce facteur.

Si la majorité même de l'entreprise française de la radiodiffusion est essentiellement dans la province de Québec, avec seulement quelques éléments symboliques du réseau à l'extérieur du Québec, au Nouveau-Brunswick et en Ontario, les programmes vont nécessairement refléter cette situation. Une des choses à laquelle je tiens énormément, c'est à l'expansion des installations de langue française au Canada. Cette expansion aura évidemment des répercussions sur nos programmes.

Lorsque le programme français rayonnera dans tout le pays, d'un océan à l'autre, les auditeurs des autres parties du Canada voudront exprimer leurs vues aux quartiers généraux du réseau français, c'est-à-dire qu'ils écriront pour dire ce qu'ils veulent comme programme. Ils ne voudront pas d'un programme axé à 98 ou 99 p. 100 sur Québec ou Montréal. Ils voudront quelque chose de plus représentatif du sentiment national et je pense, monsieur Stanbury, que ces deux choses vont de pair et que nous n'aurons pas un point de vue canadien dans la présentation des informations et des affaires publiques en français tant que nous n'aurons pas les installations pour desservir dans tout le pays un auditoire qui parle, comprend et écoute les programmes de langue française.

M. Stanbury: Je ne voulais pas vous lancer dans une discussion sur l'extension des services. Nous sommes censés parler de séparatisme, je crois, mais je pense que vous avez fort bien présenté votre argument. Je voudrais seulement dire, par quelques derniers mots sur la question du séparatisme ou sur l'ensemble de la question d'un préjugé, que j'espère, monsieur le président, que notre Comité ne se laissera pas détourner par une chasse aux sorcières au point de faire témoigner devant le Comité les gens que l'on accuse ainsi que leurs accusateurs, qu'il s'a-

I think this Committee of the last Parliament indicated very clearly that it did not feel that it was a proper function of this Committee or of Parliament to be constantly investigating the CBC, that we had already over the last few years investigated it to death, and that we should be creating a structure, as we did in the new Broadcasting Act, and appointing able executives as we did in appointing the gentlemen at your table, and then letting them get on with the job of managing the Corporation on our behalf, and let the function of this Committee be to make clear to them our views of what they should be doing differently if we think they should be, have them answer to us for the people over whom they have supervision, but surely not to drag up before this Committee individuals who may work for the CBC or individuals who may make vague and unsubstantiated charges against them.

• 1150

I hope that will not be the case on the subject of separatism or on any other subject. I, for one, think that the new President of the CBC and the new Executive Vice-President of the CBC are the best possible men we could have in Canada to fill those positions. If we do not convey to them effectively in these hearings our wishes, if we do not get the answers we want from them, we are not going to pursue our responsibilities any more effectively by going down into the organization and pulling people up, and, in effect, trying to do the job of management.

The Chairman: Mr. Osler?

Mr. Osler: I think we have almost flogged separatism to death. I would like to make something in the way of an observation perhaps, and if Dr. Davidson feels like commenting on it now, fine; if he does not, perhaps it will come up later.

There was a change of policy, certainly on the English network which I view with more ease than I view the French network, in relation to news and news commentary that has been quite detectable over a period of years. If this same policy applies in the French network perhaps this is a source of our possible worry. Hard news, as such, is increasingly difficult to delineate and it gets mixed up with semi-commentary, as it does in newspa-gisse de Marc Thibault ou de Judy LaMarsh ou d'un autre.

Je pense que lors de la dernière session parlementaire, ce Comité a clairement indiqué qu'il n'estimait pas du tout que ce soit une des tâches du Comité ou du Parlement que de passer son temps à enquêter sur les activités de Radio-Canada; qu'au cours des dernières années, nous avions déjà enquêté de façon circonstanciée, et que nous devrions créer une structure, ce que nous avons fait par la Loi sur la Radiodiffusion et nommer des administrateurs capables, ce que nous avons fait en nommant les messieurs qui se trouvent à votre table, et ensuite, les laisser prendre en mains l'administration et la gestion de la société en notre nom. Les fonctions de ce Comité doivent être de leur préciser notre opinion sur ce qu'ils doivent faire ou sur ce qu'il faut modifier le cas échéant. Eux, doivent répondre devant nous des gens qui relèvent de leur administration. Mais nous ne devons certainement pas faire venir devant ce Comité des gens qui peut-être travaillent pour Radio-Canada ou des gens qui peut-être peuvent porter des accusations vagues et sans fondement contre eux.

J'espère qu'on s'en tiendra à cette règle en matière de séparatisme ou autre. Je pense que le nouveau président de Radio-Canada et le nouveau vice-président exécutif de Radio-Canada sont les gens les mieux qualifiés pour remplir ces fonctions. Si au cours de ces audiences, nous ne leur accordons pas nos souhaits, si nous n'obtenons pas d'eux les réponses que nous voulons, nous n'agissons pas plus efficacement en allant extraire des gens de l'organisation et, ce faisant, essayer de nous substituer à l'administration.

Le président: Monsieur Osler?

M. Osler: Je pense que nous avons vraiment un peu trop parlé de séparatisme. Me sera-t-il permis néanmoins de faire une observation? Si M. Davidson pense qu'il doit faire des observations là-dessus, parfait, sinon, peut-être y reviendrons-nous plus tard.

Il y a eu un changement de principe, tout au moins au réseau anglais, où je le constate plus facilement qu'au réseau français, dans le domaine des nouvelles et des commentaires. C'est d'ailleurs très visible depuis quelques années. Si le même principe vaut pour le réseau français, il est peut-être à l'origine de nos ennuis. Il est de plus en plus difficile de préciser ce qu'est l'information pure et simple. Elle est souvent confondue avec les demipers and everywhere else. This is a trend throughout the world; it is not just CBC.

But there was a time when CBC gave the hard news, period. If there was a commentator, a commentator gave his personal opinions, period. You will probably remember that I wrote you about one particular example this fall that offended me slightly, and I do not really feel that the answer was satisfactory from a policy point of view. Without using any names, there was an example of a well-known newsman who can function as a commentator also, after covering a certain event in depth in news, came on one night, shortly after he has been associated with...

Dr. Davidson: Free lance or...

Mr. Osler: No a staff man; and gave an over-all commentary on his impressions and opinions about a certain event. I am not saying this is right policy or wrong policy, but if you have a touchy subject like separatism, it becomes very difficult for a man who might function well as a reporter, if he wears the other hat and becomes a news commentator, during the actual news period—not during the viewpoint period—who frankly gives an over-all impression of something that has happened in a week. If he happens to be a separatist, that view is going to show up because he is giving a viewpoint. Yet it is in the hard news period. I have no solution. I suggest you have a problem.

Dr. Davidson: Could I ask without, identifying the individual, was this one of our foreign correspondents back from...

Mr. Osler: No, it was not a foreign correspondent. He was a well known local political news figure who covers the political scene here locally quite often.

Dr. Davidson: We have no political figures.

Mr. Osler: No. But that is unimportant, Dr. Davidson. My point is that if the practice of news and commentary becomes mixed up, or used in a way, as they have in all news media—not just the CBC—then you have a difficulty because when a man is giving straight news, he is doing his line function, but when he gives you an over-all viewpoint, if he happens to have separatist leanings, he cannot help but show them.

[Interprétation]

commentaires. Comme pour la presse écrite et partout ailleurs. Ce n'est pas particulier à Radio-Canada.

Il fut une époque où Radio-Canada donnait des informations, un point c'est tout. S'il y avait un commentateur, il donnait son opinion, un point c'est tout. Vous vous souviendrez que je vous ai donné un exemple, l'automne dernier, qui m'avait assez vexé, mais je ne pense pas que la réponse était satisfaisante du point de vue de la politique adoptée. Je ne veux pas citer de noms, mais, il s'agissait d'un journaliste bien connu qui est également commentateur. Après avoir traité en profondeur d'un certain événement aux informations, il est réapparu quelques minutes plus tard.

M. Davidson: Un commentateur indépendant?

M. Osler: C'était un membre de votre personnel et il a un commentaire général de ses impressions et de ses opinions au sujet d'un certain événement. Je ne dis pas que ce soit un bon ou un mauvais principe, mais quand il s'agit d'un sujet aussi délicat que le séparatisme, il est peut-être assez difficile de jouer les deux rôles, soit de journaliste, puis de commentateur à l'heure des informations qui donne franchement ses impressions générales sur les événements de la semaine. S'il est séparatiste, son opinion transparaîtra évidemment parce qu'il présente ses impressions. Et pourtant, il s'agit d'une émission d'information pure et simple. Je n'ai pas de solution, c'est votre problème.

M. Davidson: Sans demander l'identité de cette personne, s'agissait-il d'un de nos correspondants étrangers qui venait de rentrer de l'étranger?

M. Osler: Non, non. Il s'agissait d'un journaliste bien connu sur le plan local qui vient souvent observer la situation politique ici.

M. Davidson: Nous n'avons pas de personnalités politiques à Radio-Canada.

M. Osler: Non. Ce n'est peut-être pas tellement important. Ce à quoi je veux en venir, c'est que si on finit par confondre information et commentaires, et c'est ce qui s'est produit du reste dans la presse écrite et dans la presse parlée en général, pas seulement à Radio-Canada, il arrive que celui qui donne les informations, remplit sa fonction, mais lorsqu'il fait un commentaire, s'il est séparatiste, il trahira certainement ses opinions séparatistes.

[Text]

Dr. Davidson: I recognize the problem that Mr. Osler refers to, and I do not mind saying that I have raised some questions about this in a completely neutral setting with my own colleagues because it seems to me that often-times within the Corporation we are inclined to make distinctions which are rather artificial in nature and which do not carry validity with the viewing public.

For example, we make a distinction between a news announcer who reads the news that is written for him, and the comments of a commentator which are inserted into the news but which may be comments of a full-time employee of the Corporation, and then we follow the 11 o'clock news by a viewpoint, which we know is different from what the people have just been listening to—and I am not sure to what extent the viewing public makes these fine distinctions—and then, of course, we have our public affairs programs which are the responsibility of another department.

Now, all of these are different categories of information presentation to which different rules apply. To my mind, most listeners probably see this as a blur of information programming without much distinction between the news announcer, the commentator and the viewpoint expressed by an individual outside the Corporation, and the editorial comment that you may get by one of our people acting as a moderator in a public affairs program.

The more you resort to all of these four types of information programming, with the use of full-time CBC personnel, the more you are bound to get into these conflicts as to the type of programming and the type of editorial attitude that they should take at any given point in time.

The reason I asked you whether or not the individual in question was a foreign correspondent, Mr. Osler, is because we have, overseas and in the USA, a number of people whom we describe as foreign correspondents, such as Knowlton Nash, who was our correspondent in Washington, and Michael McLearn and others—you know them by name. They are there for the purpose of picking up and presenting the news that is of interest to Canadians, as do other foreign correspondents for other countries.

They complain, with some justification, that when they come home for a tour of duty, or for a temporary period of time for some particular purpose, and a subject arises on which, by virtue of their having been over-

[Interpretation]

M. Davidson: Je reconnais le problème évoqué par M. Osler. J'ai moi-même évoqué cette question d'une façon d'ailleurs très neutre, avec certains de mes collègues, car il me semble en effet qu'il arrive souvent que, au sein de la société, nous sommes tentés de faire des distinctions qui sont assez artificielles et qui ne valent pas pour les téléspectateurs.

Nous faisons, par exemple, une distinction entre l'annonceur qui donne lecture des informations, à partir d'un texte écrit pour lui, et le commentateur dont les commentaires sont insérés à l'émission d'information, et qui sont peut-être les commentaires d'un employé à plein temps à Radio-Canada. Après l'émission d'information de 23 h., il y a View point, qui est une émission différente, mais je ne sais pas dans quelle mesure le public distingue entre le commentaire et les informations. Puis il y a aussi les émissions des affaires publiques qui tombent sous la responsabilité d'un autre service.

Autant, donc, de catégories diverses de présentation d'information auxquelles s'appliquent des règlements différents. Mais, en autant que je puisse constater, pour la plupart des auditeurs, tout ceci se confond. Il s'agit en somme d'émissions d'information en général; il n'y a pas beaucoup de distinctions entre l'annonceur, le commentateur ou le point de vue personnel exprimé par une personne qui ne fait pas partie de la Société, ou encore l'article de fond, si vous voulez, préparé par un membre de la Société, qui préside un groupe de discussion.

Plus on a recours à ces quatre types d'émissions d'information, en utilisant des employés à plein temps de la Société, plus cela risque de susciter des difficultés. On se demande vraiment jusqu'à quel point nos gens peuvent exprimer leur propre opinion sur les ondes.
